In the eleven years since Ramparts' gay lib book came out, homosexuality has become so accepted in America that one can become labeled a bigot, or worse, if one even hints that homosexuality might really be a perversion. Not only are most media personalities dead-fly afraid of offending any gays, many politicians rely on gay organizations to get elected. It is well known, for instance, that Mayor Bradley of Los Angeles has the large gay population and many gay organizations of that city as a power base. It is also well known that a good number of his top staff are gay. (One question for you. Why is it that even though he can't get one vote from Worldwidars because none of us vote, and even though he never cared much for Mr. Herbert Armstrong while he lived, Mayor Bradley now is very friendly toward the Ambassador Foundation and the church's new leaders?)

I think you folks at AR need to do some homework. Let me suggest a number of books: Shadow in the Land by U.S. Congressman William E. Danneneyer (Ignatius Press, 15 Oakland Ave., Harrison, NY 10528, copyright 1989), Gay Priests by James G. Wolf [Harper and Row, 1989], and Betrayal of Trust--Clergy Abuse of Children by Annie Laurie Gaylor (Freedom From Religion Foundation, Box 750, Madison, WI 53701).

You might also benefit from a GTA [Garner Ted Armstrong, P.O. Box 2530, Tyler, TX 75710] tape titled "Is Homosexuality a Sin?" The tape is from a broadcast he did in 1980 and, I have been told, was in response to conditions in Pasadena that he was aware of at the time. In spite of his own problems in those days Ted made a lot of sense in that broadcast.

I should make one more suggestion. There are some gays who not only deny they are gay, but hide the fact by actually going out of their way to attack homosexuality! I learned this from a book you may not have read. It is Citizen Cohn, the biography of lawyer Roy Cohn, by Nicholas Von Hoffman [Doubleday, 1988]. You can get a Bantam paperback edition in almost any bookstore. Cohn was one of the most influential conservative Republicans in America during the last forty years. Perhaps because he never married, some wondered if he was homosexual. But he not only vigorously denied he was gay, he publicly attacked the notion of gay rights and referred to all homosexuals as "fags." Yet, as Von Hoffman thoroughly documents, Cohn was not just gay. He was notoriously promiscuous, on one occasion even bringing a young male lover with him to the Reagan White House. He died of AIDS in 1986.

I mention all of this simply to point out that one can be publicly against the gay lib movement, yet secretly be a practicing homosexual, even secretly promoting the gay lib movement.

I simply am wondering: Are you just sitting on information that the rest of us are already well aware of? If so, why? Are you afraid of the GLAAD organization? Or are you just plain naive?

-City of Industry, Calif.

Editor: You've raised quite a few issues. I'll try to comment on each, even if only briefly.

Yes, AR is in possession of much information about homosexuality in the WCG hierarchy that is, as yet, unpublished. But there are good reasons why I do not immediately publish every scandalous WCG story that comes my way. First of all, unless I can independently verify such information, I do not publish anonymous letters containing serious allegations (and there seems to be an avalanche of such letters in WCG circles these days). Verifying such information is often very difficult, if not impossible. Second, I am very leery of information coming from sources who do not reveal how they obtained their information and then say "don't quote my name." Increasingly, I am getting shocking letters of that type. Again, if such information is not independently verifiable it's not usually usable.

Third, contrary to a widespread belief in the WCG, I simply do not believe all WCG news of a scandalous nature is fit to print. For instance in the mid-80s a number of readers informed me of how a certain minister had many years ago committed some serious immoral acts with church girls. I made inquiries and developed a file adequate for a story. Before I actually decided to run the story, however, the minister discovered I was investigating and phoned me. He was candid and upfront. He admitted the information I had was correct and he knew I had every legal right to run the story. But, he said, the conduct was repented of, not since repeated, and if I ran the story it would only hurt his family and the good he was able to accomplish as a minister. Maybe I was overly trusting, but I believed him then and still do. I never ran the story. To this day I am convinced that my decision was proper.

Now, with all of that stated, let me specifically address the issue of homosexuality in the WCG leadership. In addition to the three points expressed above, this topic has given me a number of very serious concerns. One has been that in delving into this matter for a number of weeks both with informants and with books some have asked me to study, I have found the whole business not just repulsive, but extremely depressing. I now wonder if a frank and thorough AR expose on the subject will not prove as repulsive and depressing to AR's readership as it has to me.

But there is a more serious ethical problem that I have been forced to confront. Even though the "gay lifestyle" is repulsive to me personally and even though I personally abhor the so-called "gay lib" movement (because it encourages people to experiment with morose practices many will find addictive), I sincerely do not have any built-in animosity toward gay people. Perhaps that is because during my lifetime I have known and gotten along reasonably well with many intelligent and talented gays both in my work and while at various colleges (including Ambassador). I also appreciate the accomplishments made over the centuries by gays in literature, music, the visual arts, and many other fields. For example, one of my favorite orchestral works is Variations and Fugue on a Theme by Purcell by Benjamin Britten, the late English composer who happened to be a life-long practicing homosexual. (Incidentally, that piece is the theme music for the Ambassador Foundation's Los Angeles area classical music broadcasts.)

But whatever my own moderate (at least, I think they are) views on the subject, I know that many people are far less understanding. In recent years there has been a tremendous increase in unprovoked violence directed at gays. And I have really wondered if a tell-all type of expose on the subject of homosexuality in the WCG would only inflame the hatreds of some who lack any Christian charity toward those whose heredity, upbringing, or whatever, has led them to adopt a self-hurting lifestyle. AR is unequivocally opposed to all forms of violence and hatred directed at gay people (as far as this goes, Dennis Luker's Good News article was at least correct up to a point). AR is also opposed to government intrusions into the bedrooms of private citizens (something some "conservatives" apparently favor).

Nevertheless, even with all the above caveats of compassion and moderation, we are still faced with a fundamental question: Where do we draw the line?

Lest anyone think I am some kind of a moral nihilist, let me just state for the record that I very much agree with the traditionalist views (on sex, family, and homosexuality) of attorney, Lutheran elder, and Congressman William E. Dannemeyer as expressed in the Congressional Record of June 29, 1989 (pp. H3511 -H3514). Those views - based, I feel, on a very straight forward reading of history, scripture, and the law - seems to be quite moderate and balanced. Yet Dannemeyer's concise statement, which not only defined homosexuality as contrary to the common law, natural law, and scripture, but also alleged that federal policy is now being heavily influenced by the gay lib movement, aroused such vehemence among leaders of that movement that one U.S. Congressman felt compelled to call for a House Ethics Committee investigation - not of the many Congressmen now promoting the agenda of the gay lib movement - but of Rep. Dannemeyer! (Los Angeles Times, July 11, 1990, p. E5.) I would strongly urge those interested in so-called gay rights issues to read the Dannemeyer statement. The Congressional Record can be found in most public libraries. For those who don't have access to a public library, Rep. Dannemeyer's office has kindly offered to send a copy of his Congressional Record statement on homosexuality to any AR reader who requests it. Write to: Hon. William E. Dannemeyer, 1235 N. Harbor Blvd. #100, Fullerton, CA 92632.

Regarding the GLAAD (Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation), organization, I'll just make a few comments. Most Americans would be dumbfounded if they knew how much influence GLAAD has over the American media. Members of that national homosexual organization monitor virtually all electronic and print media in the U.S. So-called "slurs against homosexuals" are reported to the various GLAAD hotlines. Then through its huge network of gay activists GLAAD responds against those individuals and companies it feels are not representing the gay lifestyle in a positive light. Increasingly, news editors, fearing lost advertising, product boycotts, subscriber cancellations, and even personal unemployment, are very reluctant to write or say anything critical of gays or homosexuality in general. Even television evangelists have to be careful of what they say about homosexuality. I understand that a few years ago evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong's television program was cancelled in a few markets because he made comments critical of homosexuality. Since then he seems to have toned down somewhat his public criticisms of homosexuality. AR has not yet had any pressure exerted on it by GLAAD (probably because we're too small). But even if we did, it would not affect our decisions regarding what we publish.

One final comment. Like the journalists that probably write for your local paper, I am not someone who claims to have all the answers to life's multitude of problems, paradoxes, and moral dilemmas. Some, or even many, of my views discussed above may be in error. But I hope I have, at least, candidly answered the City of Industry writer's questions (the same questions many others have also been asking me of late) and given you some idea of the journalistic and ethical problems with which I have been burdened for many months. I have not yet decided how much I will write on this matter (if at all) in the future. So any suggestions or criticisms I receive will be carefully considered and appreciated.

My thanks to those of you who are continuing to support Ambassador Report. And my best wishes to all of you for a healthy and happy 1991.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

AR47 March 25, 1991

Dear AR Reader:

Even though the next full issue of Ambassador Report has been written, publication of that issue has been delayed by at least five weeks. As editor of the Report, I am writing to let you know why.

For a number of years now, each new issue of the Report has required more time, more work, and more money to produce. At the same time, it seems, each new issue has generated ever decreasing financial contributions. It has really become almost impossible to continue publishing the Report. In trying to find a way to continue publishing, I contacted an accountant friend and asked him to review our situation and offer suggestions. After reviewing the Report's finances, he wrote me the following:

Dear John:

Fourteen years of having put out Ambassador Report has already cost you over $120,000 of your own money. Let's face it, it's the reason you don't own a home. You need to carefully look over your books again and face up to what your publishing efforts are costing you personally.

To be quite blunt, John, in looking over your records I noticed that you have a lot of deadbeats on your mailing list. Margaret [Zola] mentioned how you've even got some WCG ministers getting ARs for free. At the very least, you need to trim your mailing list....

As much as I hate to admit it, I think my accountant friend is right. Although we do have some very fine people on our mailing list, and although a handful are truly generous, the majority of our readers appear not to have the slightest idea of how much sacrifice on our part goes into turning out an issue. Furthermore, the great majority of our readers do not contribute anywhere near enough to justify our efforts.

A lot of AR readers seem to believe I am a millionaire (I am not) or that we have some wealthy benefactor or foundation backing the Report (we don't). I say this because of the many letters we receive from people who ask for so much, yet give so little. I can only conclude that many are not just misinformed, but are living in a private fantasyland. Let me give you a few examples.

A few days ago I received a letter from an Australian man who plaintively wrote how the WCG had cost him his wife and family, his health, and his job. Nevertheless, he wrote, he had recently rejoined the WCG after begging to be readmitted. This individual had the nerve to ask for free back issues of the Report (at airmail postal rates to Australia, no less) because he could not afford to contribute anything - to the Report that is. To the WCG, of course, he'll be giving 10% or more of everything he earns.

Another reader wrote to me complaining how he hadn't received an issue for some time. He didn't seem to recall that he had never contributed a dime to AR, or that he had moved numerous times without sending us a change of address (thus giving us added postal forwarding fees). His complaint letter was accompanied not by any kind of contribution, but by a list of freebies he expected from us in addition to being put back on the mailing list. He expected free back issues of AR, old issues of WCG booklets and magazines, a complete list of WCG spinoff groups, a copy of the Systematic Theology Project, etc., etc., etc.

Another individual, unfortunately typical of many WCG members, recently wrote how he'd been reading AR in South Africa for years and wanted to be put on our mailing list. He also sent along a list of 22 lengthy questions for me to answer. It was obviously of no consequence to him that for me to properly answer all his convoluted queries would require eight or nine hours of research and writing. He contributed not a penny toward the issues he had already read or the ones he wanted, nor did he provide anything to cover the high cost of postage to his country ($2.51 per three ounces). Yet, I was expected to drop everything for a day and provide him with answers to all of his problems!

A midwest family who recently lost their aging WCG-member father only to discover he had, over the years, given away the family's entire fortune to the WCG (leaving his wife and children with nothing) recently contacted me asking for help. Through back issues, letters, and long-distance phone calls, I was able to provide insights into the law of wills and WCG policies and was able to suggest how they might find the right attorney to assist them with their legal problems. No contribution was ever sent to AR.

Then there's the reader who wrote me demanding that I provide him with meticulously detailed documentation on the personal life of Joseph Tkack. This fellow, apparently another WCG member, actually wanted me to electronically bug the bedrooms of certain top WCG executives and to set up around-the-clock surveillance of all of Joseph Tkach's movements with all taped evidence to be mailed to him personally! Aside from the fact that what he was suggesting is illegal (and therefore I wouldn't do it), the cost of such an undercover operation (according to industrial espionage experts I talked to) would be well over $30,000 for just a few weeks. Naturally, our skeptical WCG reader has yet to come up with such a contribution. In fact, he has yet to contribute even one cent to AR.

A final example is one that, unfortunately, is all too common. I was contacted by an Ohio wife whose husband had been in Worldwide for a number of years giving $6,000 annually to the Tkach organization. (Incidentally, my accountant friend pointed out to me how it is not uncommon for people to stay in the WCG for twenty years. And that $6,000 times 20 years at 8% interest equals a future value of $275,000.) The wife's marriage was rapidly disintegrating because of the church and she wanted to know if there was any way AR could help. As I usually do in such cases, I immediately mailed off a few key back issues of the Report and phoned her. Within hours we were able to work out a marriage-saving strategy. A month later she wrote me:

Dear Mr. Trechak:

Our deepest thanks to you and the others at Ambassador Report. As a result of reading your wonderful newsletter and taking your advice, my husband has decided to leave the WCG for good. Doing so has saved his job and our marriage. With $6,000 a year more than we had before, it looks like we'll finally be able to give our three children some of the things we never thought we could ever afford. May God bless you! Enclosed is $10 for the five back issues you sent us.

That letter and the $10 (which didn't even cover the photocopying and postage costs of sending the back issues) was the last I ever heard from those folks. I guess they really didn't feel any need to help others gain the freedom that they had gained. And maybe what we gave was really worth only $10 to them.

Frankly, letters such as the one last quoted remind me of a memorable scene in George Steven's 1940 movie Vigil in the Night. The heroine in that film, a 19th century English nurse played by Carol Lombard, risks her career by forcefully speaking up during a surgical operation and telling a domineering surgeon he had just made a terrible mistake. The outraged surgeon finally realizes the nurse is correct just barely in time to correct his error and save the life of his patient, a wealthy industrialist. Later, when the convalescing industrialist discovers that the nurse's courage had saved his life, he presents her with a wrapped gift. After she exits the room, an understanding physician suggests that she open the package. And when she does, she discovers a handbag worth but a few pounds. The silence as the two stare at the bag is broken only when the physician cynically quips, "I just wanted to see how much he thinks his life is worth."

Perhaps after 14 years of AR I, too, am getting a bit cynical. But I really should not be surprised about the ingratitude of most people. A Bible-student friend recently reminded me of the incident described in Luke 17:11-19. It's the story of the ten lepers who approached Jesus, asking to be healed. The Lord told them they would get their wish if they simply presented themselves before the priest. They did so and all ten were miraculously healed. Yet, in spite of the magnitude of the blessing bestowed upon the ten, only one was appreciative enough to return to Jesus to offer his thanks. With what may be viewed as a bit of righteous cynicism, Jesus asked his disciples, "Were there not ten cleansed? But where are the other nine?"

I used to think that the story of the ten lepers was indicative only of the cold-hearted spirit of the times in which Jesus lived. Sadly, however, that kind of blind, unimaginative, self-centered ingratitude is just as much - if not more - with us today. Author David

Robinson, whose own personal sacrifices in publishing Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web have been appreciated by all too few, recently commented to me how he had come to see ingratitude as one of the worst and most prevalent sins of our times. I am beginning to believe his observation is quite correct.

I have never asked our readers to show their appreciation for the Report by truly sacrificing for its continuance. And I don't intend to now. I know there are many worthy churches, charities, and movements all vying for the public's limited discretionary income. And I am fully aware of today's high cost of living and the fact that we are in a recession.

Nevertheless, it does truly amaze and disappoint me that so many who were once in the WCG giving thousands of dollars yearly to an organization that held them in absolute bondage, will not give even a tenth of that amount to an organization that has helped them gain their freedom. It is even more disappointing when I think how many of those same people will write me, or even tell me to my face, how informative, helpful, well-written, and even entertaining they find each issue of Ambassador Report.

AR's meager finances are such that some changes - like thinning our mailing list - will have to be made if it is to survive. Some of our more enthusiastic subscribers have encouraged me to put a stiff subscription price on the Report. To those readers I have sent a two-page letter that explains why implementing such a policy would actually kill the Report. One suggestion that has been made, however, will be implemented. I will be compiling a list of the contents of all back issues of AR (along with a realistic suggested donation amount for each) for those wishing to obtain back issues.

On my book shelf sits the completed 80-page hand-written manuscript for the next Report. Beside it is a large box of filed research for the issue following. Those two issues will provide more insights into the real WCG than anything I have ever written. I am eager to publish those two issues, but the funds necessary for typesetting, printing, and postage are just not there. And, I refuse to go further into debt to provide information to many who don't seem to care to get it.

I will eventually get the next issue of the Report into print, but exactly when I cannot say. When it is printed, however, it will be sent only to those who are financially contributing to our efforts. If you've sent a contribution to AR during the last six months you are on our mailing list to receive the next issue when it comes out. If you haven't contributed, I'm sorry, but I simply cannot promise you any more issues.

My own philosophy is such that I would prefer to be generous. But there simply are limits to how much I personally can give.

Sincerely,

John Trechak

AMBASSADOR REPORT

AR48 May, 1991

Tkach: "I'm Born Again!"

Worldwide Church of God (WCG) Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach is continuing to implement his now not-so-secret agenda of transforming the church founded by the late Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA). In the January 28, 1991 issue of the church's newspaper The Worldwide News (WN), one of Tkach's ghostwriters, under Tkach's by-line, wrote how WCG members are already "born again." Summarizing the new doctrine, the WN article stated: "...when the Bible speaks of a person as being 'born again' it is speaking of Christian conversion, not of the ultimate Christian inheritance" (p. 6). While the new WCG position completely contradicts a major HWA teaching, Tkach's ghostwriter explained that HWA simply didn't understand the subtle difference between the Greek words gennao and sullambano. But Tkach does, supposedly.

Just how many HWA teachings have now been changed by the Tkach cabal is difficult to calculate. An article in the Nov./Dec. issue of Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Trumpet (P.O. Box 1787, Edmond, OK 73083) reported that Tkach had already changed 26 HWA doctrines and policies. But since that article appeared, there have been more changes. For instance, those now requesting the WCG booklet The United States and Britain in Prophecy are being informed that that booklet is no longer in print. And WCG public relations man Michael Snyder has predicted that within a year the doctrine found in that booklet will probably no longer be taught by the WCG.

Another HWA teaching that is being questioned is the WCG's nontrinitarian view of the Godhead. There is now an official "study paper" on that doctrine being circulated among WCG ministers. Official church spokesman Michael Snyder, interviewed on the religious radio program Talk From the Heart (broadcast Dec. 13 on WMUZ, Detroit), stated that all WCG doctrines are now under review. His comments regarding the WCG's God-is-not-a-trinity teaching seem to indicate there may be a change in that WCG doctrine in the near future.

With Tkach Sr., Michael Feazell, and Tkach Jr. making the WCG's public image their top priority, and with WCG public relations man Michael Snyder busily cooperating with mainstream Christian media around the world, it's no wonder so many think the WCG has become a nice organization. The announcer on Talk From the Heart referred to the WCG positively as "moving toward orthodoxy." Even former WCG minister Richard Wiedenheft, now the editor of The Sabbath Sentinel, was made hopeful by Snyder's performance. Wiedenheft ran edited excerpts of the Snyder interview in the February 1991 issue of the Sentinel (RD 1, Box 222, Fairview, OK 73737) and also published an editorial that praised the supposedly great courage of Joseph Tkach in bringing change to the WCG.

However, when we listened to a tape of the interview, we noticed Snyder admitted that WCG leaders were "preparing new doctrines on prophecy," but also said that a Christian baptized in a Protestant denomination did not necessarily have to be baptized in the WCG in order to join, denied the WCG was exclusivist, denied HWA was ever guilty of plagiarism, and denied Tkach uses ghostwriters. While the WCG has made some changes, one thing hasn't changed. The WCG hierarchy is still not being honest with the general public or even with its own members.

The WCG, the Buddhists, and the Quayles

The WCG's unquenchable hunger for acceptance by the world often puts its ministers into strange relationships. For example, the Feb. 11 issue of the WN reported (p. 8):

Monks in the Wat Thai (Thai Temple) in Los Angeles commemorated the fifth anniversary of the death of Herbert W. Armstrong here Jan. 16.

Attending the ceremony were evangelist Herman Hoeh, Plain Truth editor; Raymond Epperson from the Ambassador Foundation; [and WCG assistant pastor] Leon Sexton....

Isn't it odd that WCG members are forbidden to attend services at any Protestant or Catholic church, yet WCG ministers may openly participate in reincarnation rituals at an idol-filled Buddhist temple?

An important part of the WCG hierarchy's agenda has long been to develop contacts high in government. So when the June 4, 1990 issue of the WN briefly mentioned (p. 12) that WCG evangelist David Hulme met on April 26, 1990 with Marilyn Quayle, the wife of the U.S. Vice President, we didn't suspect there might be any special significance to such a meeting. But then we read Suzanne Nicole's article "Quayle & Armageddon" in The Freedom Writer (Sept./ Oct. 1990, published by Simon, Porteous & Associates, P.O. Box 589, Great Barrington, MA 01230). Nicole reports how Mrs. Quayle, her parents, and quite possibly her husband take a great interest in Bible prophecy and have come under the influence of "a far-right preacher named Colonel Robert B. Thieme, Jr. of Houston, Texas." Nicole wonders if Thieme's views are making inroads into the Bush administration via the Quayles. The theory that the Bush administration may be subject to the influence of certain religionists is not farfetched. The Los Angeles Times (Feb. 7, 1991, pp. E1 and E2) reported that the White House had ordered six copies of fundamentalist preacher John F. Walvoord's book Armageddon, Oil and the Middle East Crisis (Zondervan). According to Jonathan Peterson, a spokesman for the book's publisher, the six copies were "for the President and his men." With top government officials taking such a serious interest in Bible prophecy and with WCG evangelists regularly courting those officials, could it be that we will one day have a U.S. President who is influenced by the WCG's leaders?

More Evangelists Stifled

We have previously reported how WCG evangelist Roderick C. Meredith is no longer allowed to preach. Now, the Tkach cabal has stifled two more evangelists: Ellis LaRavia and Norman Smith. It is not yet entirely clear what they have done to deserve being banned from WCG pulpits, but we should find out by our next issue.

Ambassador Gets an Alumni Association - of Sorts

A number of AR readers have asked us what became of the Ambassador College alumni organization founded about five years ago by Bob Boyce (see AR38). We tried to find out. But letters sent to that organization's post office box and to Boyce's home have come back marked "undeliverable as addressed" and phone calls to Boyce's phone answering machine were never returned. Sources in Texas tell us Boyce's alumni association is no more.

A new Ambassador Alumni Association, however, was recently formed by Ambassador College. The premiere edition of its new Ambassadors quarterly newsletter ($15 per year for very little information) revealed that the association will be used to assist alumni in getting their employers to make donations to Ambassador. Not all Ambassador alumni, however, will get to join this unique alumni association. Jim Marion, AC-Pasadena's student body vice president in 1983, recently wrote us the following:

Here's a fine example of Ambassador "glasnost." At the home of one of my WCG relatives, I saw in The Worldwide News a short article about the new Ambassador Alumni Association. Thinking that joining this would give me a way to keep up with the accreditation drive, I sent in a letter asking for information. I'm interested in the accreditation drive because I have a faint hope that someday the college from which I graduated might become accredited and add somewhat more respect to my resume. Other than this, I have little desire to associate with WCG members.

The attached letter from Tom Delamater, public relations officer, is what I got in reply. It seems Ambassador has redefined the concept of an "alumnus" from "an Ambassador College graduate" to "an Ambassador College graduate that is a believing, practicing church member." Wouldn't it be a shame if intelligent, educated Ambassador College graduates became exposed to different philosophies of "wayward" alumni? Well, what did I expect?

Jim Marion
2305 Knighthood Ln.
Garland, TX 75042

Here is Ambassador's reply:

Dear Jim:

Thanks for your letter of January 22. We have, indeed, established an alumni association at the college.

In the organization of the alumni association, the college, in cooperation with the Worldwide Church of God, has established the following policy: To be considered for membership in the alumni association, an alum must be in harmony with the philosophies and principles of Ambassador College and its principal sponsor, the Worldwide Church of God. However, alumni shall not be required to adopt such philosophies or principles as their personal religious convictions.

You and Jan are listed in the Church's records as disfellowshipped. Therefore, we ask that you begin the process of applying for membership in the alumni association by contacting the pastor of the Worldwide Church of God congregation nearest you. His name is Allen Bullock, and his phone number is (214) 495-6659.

Thanks, Jim, for your interest. Say hello to Jan.

Sincerely,
Thomas R. Delamater

As "the church lady" of "Saturday Night Live" would say, "Now isn't that special?"

Actually, the letter Jim Marion (and many other nonWCG alumni) received was tame compared to what AR's editor got when he wrote to the alumni association. Not only would AC not take his $15 for a subscription to the association's newsletter, but they didn't even suggest he contact a local WCG minister.

Mystery Mailers Ask for $200 Million

During the last quarter of 1990, many Ambassador College alumni and WCG members received an unusual flyer in the mail. It was mailed by a mysterious Kansas City organization called Save the Pasadena Ambassador College Campus Fund (SPACCF). The mailers wrote that they wanted to "raise $200,000,000 as quickly as possible" (wouldn't we all!) supposedly "to buy the [Pasadena] campus from Joe Tkach...."

While saving the Pasadena campus may be a worthwhile goal, SPACCF's promise to open the campus "for all those who would enjoy visiting and possibly rooming on the campus for brief periods throughout the year" sounds a lot like what jailed evangelist Jim Bakker once promised those contributing to his Heritage USA theme park. Furthermore, while SPACCF hopes for individual contributions of $1000 and up, their flyer insists that contributions be made only via U.S. postal money orders.

Even more disturbing is the fact that the persons behind SPACCF refuse to identify themselves. Their flyer states that they cannot reveal their identities "for obvious reasons." SPACCF has no phone listing in the Kansas City metropolitan area and their flyer gives only P.O. Box 413186, Kansas City, MO 64141 as an address. When we wrote directly to SPACCF asking for information, we received no response. When we phoned Kansas City postal officials asking for the name(s) registered for that box, we were informed that Box 413186 was registered to an individual or individuals, not to an organization doing business with the public. Therefore, in conformance with postal regulations, the box holder's name(s) cannot be given out.

Suspecting that something was not "kosher" with SPACCF, we contacted the Post Office's Postal Inspection Service in Kansas City. After more than four months of investigation, the Service has still not been able or willing to provide us with the name(s) of the holder(s) of SPACCF's post office box.

The Office of the Secretary of State for Missouri told the Report that there is no Save the Pasadena College Campus Fund registered in Missouri as required by the fictitious name regulations of that state. The Missouri Attorney General's Office has told AR that anyone who contributed to SPACCF and has a complaint should contact the office of Mr. William L. Webster, Attorney General of Missouri, P.O. Box 899, Jefferson City, MO 65102 (tel. 816-531- 4207).

Plache Released From Prison

Former Ambassador College Dean of Students and WCG minister Richard Plache, convicted in 1988 of 18 counts of mail fraud and SEC violations (see AR41), has been released from the Federal minimum security prison at Lompoc, California. He is currently in a halfway house in the San Diego area. During the Christmas Season, Plache sent his friends and followers a six-page "prison epistle" that began with "....So let me begin by extending 'grace and peace to you from God our Father and His Son, Jesus Christ.' This is a gift which I give to you and is priceless in value." The letter ended with, "It is my prayer that you all will have a blessed holiday season and that the new year will truly be 1991-derful! May God richly bless you in all your ways. In His love, Richard."

The FBI Files on the WCG

Have you ever wondered what information on the WCG might be found in the files of the FBI? Kentuckian Gene Bailey has. And his curiosity prompted him to contact FBI offices around the country to request copies of their files on the WCG under provisions of the Freedom of Information Act ("FOIA," 5 USCA Sec. 552).

Unfortunately, while the FOIA seems to hold out much promise for investigators, utilizing it can be time consuming. Bailey has had to wait well over a year to receive the first release of documents since his initial request. And utilization of the FOIA is not without financial costs. The FBI has charged Bailey plenty just for photocopying and he has also incurred attorney's fees. Furthermore, the FOIA does not really make all government held information accessible. The FOIA provides numerous loopholes or exceptions whereby the government may withhold information at its own discretion. For example, the government may withhold information when it feels its release would jeopardize an ongoing investigation, national security, or the concealment of a confidential informant. The government may also withhold information which it feels impinges on a living citizen's privacy rights. Where files contain information about a living individual, the government generally will not release that information without the individual's permission. Thus, in order to get the FBI's files on Joseph W. Tkach, one would have to obtain Tkach's written permission. Bailey has written to Tkach requesting such permission, but "The Apostle" never responded or cooperated in any way.

In spite of the numerous exceptions and restrictions built into the law, Bailey has discovered much by utilizing the FOIA. For instance, the FBI's office in Los Angeles has admitted that they have seven main files pertaining to Herbert W. Armstrong and two main files pertaining to the WCG. One of those files originated in and was coordinated by the FBI's Atlanta office. Other filed investigations were reported to FBI headquarters in Washington, D.C.

So far, the FBI's Los Angeles office has given Bailey 72 pages of information. Most of those pages are heavily censored with blacked-out sections. The Los Angeles office also informed Bailey that they are withholding 164 pages of information in their entirety. The FBI has not even hinted what those 164 pages contain.

In addition to the Los Angeles office, other FBI offices have files on the WCG. The FBI's Washington, D.C. office has informed Bailey that their office has about 500 pages of information about HWA and the WCG. There is an additional 112 pages dealing with Ambassador College, the Plain Truth, the World Tomorrow, and Stanley R. Rader. The government originally told Bailey he should have all the documents he requested by March. But they have now informed him that it will take another three to four months for the government to decide how much, if any, of the remaining files can be released. The government has stated that the large file on HWA is designated as "classified" for national security reasons. Whether or not it will be declassified and released to Bailey remains to be seen.

It is not surprising that the FBI should have taken an interest in HWA. While we were never able to verify the allegation, it was rumored for years that certain members of HWA's entourage were smuggling illegal drugs into the U.S. by concealing the powdery substances in sealed canisters of World Tomorrow video tape and in the bulkheads of the WCG's corporate jet.

But Bailey has learned from the FBI that other federal investigative agencies have had files on the WCG. Those agencies, the FBI said, include the Air Force's Special Investigations Office and the Central Intelligence Agency. Regarding the latter, one CIA employee told Bailey that after each meeting with foreign leaders during the 1970s and early 1980s Herbert Armstrong and his Jewish attorney-accountant Stanley R. Rader had probably been debriefed by the CIA and that there would be files on those debriefings. But now, however - months after being told by the government that the CIA had files on the WCG - Bailey has been told by the CIA that no such files can be found!

In addition to contacting numerous federal agencies, Bailey has written to the secretaries of state for the 50 states in an attempt to ascertain exactly who the corporate agents of record are for the Worldwide Church of God, Inc. and the Church of God, International, Inc. in each of the separate states. As a result, Bailey made some startling discoveries. In a number of states, the agent for both the WCG and the CGI are the same individual - a current WCG minister. In one case the agent listed for the CGI was never in the CGI headed by Garner Ted Armstrong and is now deceased. For Minnesota, there are two agents listed for CGI: an individual who is no longer in either CGI or the WCG, and Ralph Helge who is actually the chief attorney for the WCG. Even more curious is the fact that in some states (Utah, for example, in a state filing dated April 19, 1982) the list of CGI directors includes the names of such WCG luminaries as Ralph Helge, Ellis LaRavia, and Raymond McNair and their addresses are all listed as 300 West Green Street, Pasadena, California. It is difficult to fathom what possible excuse can be given for the maintenance of such legal confusion. Certainly one has to suspect some kind of chicanery is involved. While we reported back in 1978 (AR 6) how the WCG was trying to tie up the name "Church of God, International" so that Garner Ted Armstrong's new church would be inconvenienced, since then GTA's Tyler, Texas organization has clearly become known everywhere as "the Church of God, International." With WCG people in Pasadena still registered as doing business under the same name it is quite conceivable that property left by will to Garner Ted's CGI could eventually wind up in one of Worldwide's CGI shells.

Bailey is continuing his investigations and says he hopes that by mid-September all his requests for documents from the various government agencies he has contacted will be processed. He also says he would be willing to provide a photocopy set of all those documents to anyone who will send him enough to cover his printing and mailing expenses. Ralph Helge has already sent in a check. Those interested should write to: Gene Bailey, P.O. Box 1144, Nicholasville, KY 40340-1144. However, Mr. Bailey emphasizes that at this time he has no way of knowing exactly how much information will be contained in the government files yet to be reviewed. It may turn out that very little will be released.

Hopefully, within four months we will have had a chance to look over those documents ourselves. We hope to provide our readers with a synopsis of their contents in a future issue of Ambassador Report.

HWA Remembered (Part IV)

One of the most intriguing aspects of the life of Herbert W. Armstrong was his frequent visits with the heads of state and/or top leaders of many nations: Israel (very often), Lebanon, Jordan, Egypt, India, Nepal, Singapore, Bangladesh, Sri Lanka, Ethiopia, Kenya, Thailand, South Vietnam, the Philippines, Japan, Belgium, Spain, Austria, West Germany, Great Britain, Romania, and Communist China.

Because HWA met with such communist leaders as Nicolae Ceausescu of Romania (in October 1971) and Deng Xiaoping of China (on Nov. 7, 1984), some have speculated that HWA was a communist sympathizer. There is not the slightest evidence that HWA was ever sympathetic to communist ideology. But whether he was sympathetic to the way totalitarian communist regimes actually operate is another matter.

HWA never hid the fact that he did not believe democracy to be God's form of government. In this regard, it is interesting to note HWA's long friendship with Leopold III of Belgium. According to the WN (Feb. 10, 1986, p. 2), Leopold was instrumental in arranging many of HWA's meetings with heads of state. But unknown to most Worldwidiers is the fact that Leopold, a staunch Roman Catholic, had been forced to abdicate his throne in 1950. The underlying reason was that Leopold had surrendered Belgium to the Nazis in 1940 and had refused to flee the country to set up a Belgian government-in-exile in France or England. He spent most of the war in Germany. One international relations expert told AR, "Deep down Leopold was really a f----- fascist." After Leopold died, his widow presented HWA with the Cross of the Veterans of King Leopold (WN, May 13, 1985, p. 1).

Because HWA was meeting regularly with powerful world leaders it is not surprising that the CIA would have taken an interest in HWA. During the Cold War years the CIA, not unlike the KGB, made extensive use of members of the clergy as sources for information. A prime example is the CIA's use of many in the Roman Catholic Church's hierarchical priesthood as informants in Western and Eastern Europe. The CIA would have been only too happy to have used HWA in a similar way.

But was HWA being used for more than just information gathering? Over the years, many noticed that in a number of cases, after HWA visited a country, that country's government would fall or there would be a major change of leadership. Examples: Ethiopia after HWA visited Haile Selassie, the Philippines after HWA visited Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos, India after HWA visited Indira Gandhi, and Egypt after HWA visited Anwar Sadat. (Some even recall how HWA was to have met with Allende of Chile but Allende was overthrown and killed - with CIA help, many say - shortly before HWA was to go to that country.)

Because of the above coincidences (and perhaps because Rader was reported to have had friends in the White House during Republican administrations beginning with Nixon), some at WCG headquarters kidded that HWA or someone close to him was somehow being used by the CIA to bring down governments. While the idea sounds like something out of a spy novel, such a theory should not be dismissed out of hand.

It will be interesting to see if the CIA ever finds its file on HWA's travels or if the FBI ever releases its large Washington file on the WCG.

McNair Case to be Retried

When Leona McNair filed her defamation lawsuit against the WCG in 1979, few would have thought the case would still be in the courts 12 years later, but that is exactly what has happened. The lawsuit has been a bitterly contested series of legal battles (see ARs

10, 29, 34, 35, 37, 40, and 41). While Leona was awarded $1.26 million by a jury in 1984, the California Court of Appeal reversed the decision in 1988 and ordered a new trial. In 1989, however, trial judge Richard Lavine prevented a jury from hearing the case by granting summary judgment to the WCG. WCG congregations were told the church had finally beaten Mrs. McNair "God's way." Not so. Antony Stuart and Michael L. Goldberg, attorneys for Leona, appealed Judge Lavine's decision and in March 1991 the three judge panel of the California Court of Appeal (second district, fifth division) ordered the Lavine decision reversed and granted Mrs. McNair a new jury trial. Presiding Judge Paul Turner's opinion (filed March 27 with the designation "Not To Be Published," that is, not to be cited as case law - an oddity of the California court system) shows that Judge Lavine had clearly been out of line in granting the WCG summary judgment and had made the Court of Appeal's earlier reversal look like a cruel hoax perpetrated against Mrs. McNair. Turner's opinion even seems to hint that he is not in sympathy with the legal reasoning found in Judge James Hastings' earlier Court of Appeal opinion (see AR 40). Nevertheless, Turner wrote that the court was unable to reinstate the first jury's award because of the so-called "rule of the case" principle. (In layman's terms, the rule means that once an appellate court sets down a rule for a lower court it will not later change the rule for that case.)

At the March 5 oral arguments on the appeal, WCG attorneys Ralph Helge, Bruce Armstrong, Jeffrey Lowrey, Daniel Gonzales, Roy G. Weatherup, and, of course, Allan Browne of Beverly Hills should have realized things were not going well for them when Judge Turner pointedly asked, "How do you know who's telling the truth here?... Could it be that Dr. Meredith is a liar?... Is there any way that we can tell who's telling the truth? I know it's a tough question.... When it comes to finding out who is telling the truth - well, that is why we have juries!"

Helge did not like the court's decision. He told the Pasadena Star-News (April 2, p. A-5), "This is a dumb case." Helge's sour grapes attitude is not surprising. Legal experts say that because the WCG has refused to settle the case out of court, attorneys' fees alone have cost the WCG well over a million dollars. And there will be more bills coming.

More Gay Concerns

Editor: Readers' and editor's comments about homosexuality in the WCG hierarchy run in our January issue drew a flurry of heated letters to AR. As the following excerpts show, there is a wide spectrum of views on the subject.

I just finished reading your January issue of the Ambassador Report and as usual enjoyed it. However, I must comment on the letter from the Pasadena person who thought Joseph Tkach might be homosexual just because he wears his ring on his little finger, or by the way he smiles in his picture, or because he's holding a book of poetry. Those ideas are ridiculous, and something right out of the Salem Witch Hunts!

Don't misunderstand. As a former WCG member I have no admiration for Tkach. But I believe in fairness. And to judge him homosexual based on such silly so-called "evidence" is not only unfair, it is sinful. Is this how that Pasadena person picks out all homosexuals? Does he or she think that all men who do not look or act like John Wayne are homosexual? I happen to know a lot of decent God-fearing men who have at one time or another been unfairly labeled homosexual just because they dressed or acted a little different from the average "macho man"....

Christians should remember that God tells us to only hate the sin of homosexuality, not the persons themselves. We should pray that they will turn from their ways and repent and give thanks to Jesus. They have as much chance as anyone else if they change. That Pasadena person should remember too that there is a sin that God hates worse than homosexuality and that is hurting an innocent person: "But whoso shall offend one of these little ones which believe in me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea" (Matt. 18:6). Maybe wearing a ring on your little finger is a homosexual signal but I never would have known it if I had not read that Pasadena person's letter. As for all homosexuals looking and acting effeminate, that Pasadena person should remember Rock Hudson. Who would have thought in a million years that manly Rock was a homosexual! Until we know for sure whether or not someone is a homosexual we should always be willing to give them the benefit of the doubt.

Please print my letter in one of your future issues. The problem of innocent people being labeled homosexuals because of silly things like what that Pasadena person mentioned is bigger than you know.

David W. Berryman
Alabama

I read the correspondence headed "Readers' Gay Concerns" in the last AR with a real feeling of sadness. Regardless of the problems of various WCG ministers, the comments offered had far less balance and charity than Dennis Luker's GN article. While I'm all for exposing hypocrisy, the publication of gleeful and flimsy speculation about the sexual orientation of named individuals is another matter.

The issue obviously hits a raw nerve with many people. The homophobic views expressed in AR need, however, to be challenged. I'd heartily recommend John Shelby Spong's Living in Sin? (Harper & Row, 1988) as a powerful corrective. Nor is Spong, an Episcopal bishop, afraid to come to terms with the biblical texts. Those who think that the matter can be neatly summed up with a few trusty proof-texts need to think again.

A final comment. People, despite (or maybe because of) their many differences, are at the end of the day still people. Like yourself, I have known, and sometimes admired, a number of gay people. These included some within the WCG who crucified themselves with guilt and denial. In this respect they were oppressed not so much by Herbert Armstrong, as by the unthinking antipathy of the rest of us.

Gavin Rumney

Editor: I am not unfamiliar with some of the arguments used to explain away the Bible's many verses dealing harshly with homosexuality. But I generally find such arguments unpersuasive. For example, Marshall Alan Phillips (Los Angeles Times, Dec. 3, 1990, p. B5) argues that the Genesis 19 story of the mob of men surrounding Lot's house and desiring to gang rape Lot's masculine visitors is not really a condemnation of homosexuality, but is merely a condemnation of inhospitality. Is inhospitality the reason God destroyed Sodom? To me, Phillips' argument is ludicrous.

As for Episcopal Bishop Spong's 1988 book, I have not yet been able to find a copy. However, I noticed that in his latest book, Rescuing the Bible From Fundamentalism (Harper and Row), the Newark, New Jersey bishop speculates that St. Paul was homosexual. To Spong, "Nothing else could account for Paul's self-judging rhetoric, his negative feeling toward his own body, and his sense of being controlled by something he had no power to change." Ironically, such a strained reading of scripture does not help to buttress the main theme of his book. It is one thing to deny fundamentalism by reading scripture in an informed, scholarly, or even critical manner. It is quite another to argue as fact positions completely at variance with the text, when that text is purported to be the very basis of one's religious philosophy and faith.

I should be most interested if you can give me a list of famous homosexual and bisexual men and women in all countries of the world, past and present, particularly among scientists, philosophers, mathematicians, literary figures, artists, composers, statesmen, etc.

I want to know out of genuine interest, and not for sensational reasons. It seems that God created some people homosexuals and their homosexuality is natural for them. Nowhere does Christ condemn it and as regards the passages in the Old Testament, he specifically warned us not to "put new wine into old bottles." Moreover, some Christians, such as Anglican Bishop Hugh Montefiore, even believe that Christ himself may have been homosexual or bisexual.

England

Editor: Such wild notions about Jesus are certainly not the Anglican Church's official position. And George Carey, the new Archbishop of Canterbury, is clearly opposed to homosexuality (Los Angeles Times, April 20, p. A12). I find it difficult to believe that Rev. Montefiore would engage in such reckless speculation. But if he does, he only echoes that of Christopher Marlowe. Attempts to portray various Bible heroes as homosexual have gone on for centuries and, I am told, continue to go on privately in certain WCG circles. Nevertheless, with the possible exception of the David and Jonathan relationship (some scholars believe that I Sam. 20:30, 41 and II Sam. 1:25, 26 show that Jonathan had a homosexual attraction to David), such speculations often seem to flow more from overactive imaginations than from straightforward readings of scripture. For an excellent rebuttal to the notion that the Bible can somehow be made compatible with the homosexual lifestyle, see "Judaism, Homosexuality, and Civilization" by Dennis Prager in the April/June 1990 edition of Ultimate Issues (6020 Washington Blvd., Culver City, CA 90232, $7.50 per copy).

As for famous gays through the ages, many are discussed in Homosexuals in History by A. L. Rowse (MacMillan Publishing Co., 1977). Among those included in Rowse's book are James I and Renaissance humanist Desiderius Erasmus whose version of the Greek New Testament became the progenitor of the Textus Recepticus. (Regarding the latter, see Bruce Manning Metzger, The Text of the New Testament - It's Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration, Oxford University Press, 1988, pp. 96-106.)

I agree with your ethical views on what's fit to print. But, to be honest, your truthful and "disgusting" reporting on Herbert and Garner Ted Armstrong in years past was instrumental in my leaving WCG.

When I first heard Herbert and Garner Ted had stumbled, I concluded, "Well they're only human, we all make mistakes. But, the WCG is still God's True Church." However, after finding out that their sins were repeated, continuing, and perverted, I concluded that in no way can the WCG be "the one and only true church of God"!

S. Stanley
Kusaka Oregon

In general, I agree with your views on homosexuals and the homosexual lifestyle. However, I do not think these views apply to this specific situation. In regard to homosexuality in the WCG hierarchy, I believe you would do a genuine service in publishing any facts you have on the matter. This would not be in the nature of a witch hunt directed against those who choose an alternate lifestyle, but a revelation of hypocrisy of the highest degree.

These people are among the most radically fundamentalist and literalistic when it comes to interpreting Bible scripture - in some cases separating married couples and breaking up families by their teachings - while they themselves often do not conform to their own rigid interpretations.

I say just give the readers the unadorned facts in a non-judgmental way and let the chips fall where they may.

Patricia Roberts

Editor: The above letter seems to be on target regarding what I had thought was a dilemma. Hypocrisy - especially of the magnitude found in the WCGs top leadership - is itself a real evil. And it has been pointed out to me that hypocrisy is an evil about which many gays, themselves, feel strongly. In the last few years there has been a debate raging in the publishing world about the practice of "outing" - that is, publicly revealing certain public figures as being closet homosexuals. Many gay leaders, themselves, actually favor the practice (a lengthy discussion of the issue appeared in the Los Angeles Times, March 22, 1990, p. E1).

Now, just as we are about to go to press, I have discovered that in the April edition of GLAAD/LA Reports (published by the Gay and Lesbian Alliance Against Defamation) a short article appeared about our January issue's comments on gays. While they wrote how AR was "conservative " and contained "homophobia," nowhere did they object to us writing about the gays in Worldwide. In fact, GLAAD was quite glad about the way we had described their organization! Yes, it's a strange world.

I will have more to say about this matter next time. However, for now let me just end this section with the following letter which I found very instructive:

A friend passed me your January 1991 issue because of the letter from the City of Industry and your response. The dilemma of dealing compassionately with obviously sinful and self-destructive behaviour is not as deep as you seem to imply. The first error is to assume that homosexual behaviour is not a free choice and therefore an appropriate subject of moral judgment. A quick reading of the science from Kinsey to Masters and Johnson makes it clear that the idea that homosexuality is anything but learned behaviour did not even arise from the science but from theology. We are all capable of sexual release with men, women, animals, and objects. The fact that we don't is [due to] prior knowledge about right and wrong. To quote Kinsey, "It is clear that the human male would be promiscuous in his choice of sexual partners throughout his life if it were not for social sanctions." Orgasm is associated with the release of endorphins that mold the brain to increase the probability of repetition of any behaviour that preceded the release. It is the central mechanism of addiction.

The social consequences of permitting those who have become addicted to deviant sexual activity to recruit others into similar activity is painfully obvious. The gay movement is energized by the need to increase opportunity. We have found the moral courage to oppose drug pushing but have not found the courage to even mention in public the obvious fact that teaching deviant sexual activity is the moral and neurochemical equivalent of pushing drugs. God's condemnation of such activity is not a divine whim. It is a fundamental necessity of our human condition.

Is the Temple Almost Here?

Many WCG members can remember a time when WCG ministers taught that before the return of Christ, the Jews of Israel would rebuild the sacred edifice that once stood on the Temple Mount in Jerusalem. In recent years, however, official WCG statements on the subject have been very equivocal. Oddly, this WCG ambiguity on Bible prophecy occurs at a time when it appears very likely that the Temple will actually be rebuilt in the near future.

Professor James Tabor, editor of Genesis 2000 (P.O. Box 561476, Charlotte, NC 28256), has sent us clippings of a number of articles about the possible rebuilding that have appeared in the last two years: "Speedily in Our Time" in The Jerusalem Post Magazine (Dec. 22, 1989, p. 6), "Rebuild Herod's Temple? A Few Israelis Hope" in The New York Times (April 9, 1989, p. 17), and "Time for a New Temple?" in Time magazine (October

The idea of building the Temple is not just talk. Time magazine reported:

Two Talmudic schools located near the Western (Wailing) Wall are teaching nearly 200 students the elaborate details of Temple service. Other groups are researching the family lines of Jewish priests who alone may conduct sacrifices. Next year an organizing convention will be held for those who believe themselves to be of priestly descent....

No group is more zealous than the Temple Institute, whose spiritual leader, 50-year-old Rabbi Israel Ariel, was one of the first Israeli paratroopers to reach the Mount in 1967. "Our task," states the institute's American-born director, Zev Golan, "is to advance the cause of the Temple and to prepare for its establishment, not just talk about it."

During six years of research, the institute has reconstructed 38 of the ritual implements that will be required when Temple sacrifices are restored; it will complete the other 65 items as funds permit. A museum of the completed pieces has drawn 10,000 visitors during the current holy days. In addition to such items as trumpets, lyres and lots, the institute is preparing vestments for the priests-in-waiting. According to Scripture, the clothing must be painstakingly made with flax spun by hand into six-stranded threads.

One difficulty is the requirement (as in Numbers 19:1-10) that priests purify their bodies with the cremated ashes of an unblemished red heifer before they enter the Temple. Following a go-ahead from the Chief Rabbinate, institute operatives spent two weeks in August scouting Europe for heifer embryos that will shortly be implanted into cows at an Israeli cattle ranch.

It is not just Jews who would like to see the Temple rebuilt in Jerusalem. Many fundamentalist Christian groups, believing a rebuilt Temple must precede the return of Jesus Christ, are actively promoting the idea of rebuilding the center of the ancient Israelite religion. One such group, The House of Yahweh (P.O. Box 2442, Abilene, TX 79604), headed by one-time WCG member "Wild Bill" (now "Elder Yisrayl") Hawkins, publishes a 14-page tract entitled "A Peaceful Solution to Building the Next Temple in Yerusalem" which even gives diagrams of how the job should be done.

Another church that is less equivocal than the WCG regarding the Temple is Garner Ted Armstrong's Church of God, International (P.O. Box 2525, Tyler, TX 75710-2525). They are now offering a free booklet entitled "Will a Temple Soon Be Built in Jerusalem?" From GTA's March 28 letter to his magazine subscribers, it appears that he believes a Temple in Jerusalem is not far off.

should a Ministry Incorporate?

In a provocative pair of articles appearing in the Jan./ Feb. and March/April issues of Midnight Messenger, author Donald Bergeron argues quite eloquently that there is no valid law requiring a church or ministry to incorporate in order to have tax exempt status. Many budding ministries will find Mr. Bergeron's views fascinating and perhaps even helpful. (We should stress the "perhaps" because whether the IRS is always sufficiently cognizant of constitutional law is seriously questioned by some legal scholars.) Copies of Midnight Messenger are available for $2.00 each by writing to Midnight Messenger, 9205 S.E. Clackamas Rd., Clackamas, OR 97015.

FBR Slows to a Halt

A number of readers have asked what has become of the Foundation for Biblical Research (FBR). At the death of FBR president Kenneth Fischer in 1989, FBR board members had hoped that the organization could continue. But with C. Gary Reid in Toronto, Gary Schultz in southern California, Howard Clark in northern California, and Gary Arvidson now in North Carolina, the group has found itself too dispersed for a continuing publishing operation. Since his 1984 heart attack, Howard Clark has been in frail health. Nevertheless, he has been trying to answer as much FBR mail as possible. Clark's FBR mailing address is P.O. Box 279, Gasquet, CA 95543.

Helping Those in WCG: Important New Studies from Concordant

Over the years, we have repeatedly pointed out four major characteristics of the destructive cults: (1) isolation, (2) nonthinking, (3) absolute obedience, and (4) giving excessively (see our June 1990 issue, p. 6, for details). As regarding point four, we continue to recommend the Ernest L. Martin booklet published by the Academy for Scriptural Knowledge, (P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97225) and the Tony Badillo book published by Xavier Press (3122 Jerome, Dallas, TX 75223). As regarding "nonthinking" and "obedience," we can now recommend a really outstanding work recently published by Concordant Publishing Concern.

Authority, Instruction and Service by Jim Coram is a concise, yet highly thoughtful, biblical study that we feel sheds much light on two important issues: (1) how should the believer relate to scripture, i.e., how should a Christian intelligently read the Bible, and (2) how should the believer relate to ecclesiastical organizations, i.e., what role should human authority play in the believer's spiritual life (or how and with whom should we fellowship).

Mr. Coram writes:

The clearer our grasp of the evangel of true grace and of the intrinsic authority of the Scriptures themselves, the more clearly we will see the absurdity of human authority and the harmfulness of any posture which entails practical lordships over the faith of other believers. God is able to establish His people, and He does so, according as He is intending. The truth does not need the assistance of human dominion. "Success" is no proof of faithfulness. To the contrary, it is usually a strong indication of the opposite.

Mr. Coram's paper is not an attack on any denomination, but it is, nevertheless, a study particularly relevant for those in the WCG or for those with loved ones in the WCG. We wholeheartedly recommend it to our readers.

We similarly recommend Mr. Coram's article "Christmas and Easter" which was published by Concordant this past December. Worldwidiers are well aware of the fact that many of the concepts and traditions associated with the two great Christian holidays derive not from scripture, but from ancient heathen customs. Unfortunately, while the WCG's teachings on the origins of the two holidays are fairly accurate, a misunderstanding of certain basic New Testament principles leads many Worldwidiers to apply the historical information about the two holidays in such a way as to cause themselves and their loved ones much needless family stress and hurt feelings. Many divorces regularly result from such situations. (Recall that isolation - the encouragement of separation from family and friends - is one of the four main characteristics of destructive cults.) Mr. Coram's brief "Christmas and Easter" article can be of great help to many WCG members and friends of members.

Concordant tells us they will send the "Christmas and Easter" article and the "Authority, Instruction and Service" paper free of charge to any AR reader requesting them. (We should point out, however, that Concordant, like AR, relies on the financial support of its readers for continued publishing.) How about a "Winners and Losers" section in AR? Right now you could make a case regarding the Gulf War. Example: a clear loser is William Dankenbring for saying U.S. losses would be in the thousands, that there would be no decisive victory for the U.S. and its allies, and that the war would be long and would lead to a depression. At least Worldwide was cautious [on the Gulf War] and GTA said this war would not lead to Armageddon. But GTA, HWA, Dankenbring, and a lot of others have taught for many years that the U.S. and Britain won their last war in WWII and that the pride of our power has been broken ever since (in language that was definite, dogmatic, to the Millennium, end of story). Well, look what's happened. The U.S. has just won three consecutive wars! First against Grenada and its Cuban friends, then Panama, and now Iraq. [And let's not forget the British victory over Argentina.] Pride in our military power has never been higher! Are the "prophets" eating crow now and apologizing for being wrong?

Ron Wagner

Editor: Although the military performance of the U.S. and its allies was, indeed, very impressive, one has to wonder what kind of political victory was achieved with the Gulf region still in turmoil and Hussein still ruling Iraq. In the March issue of Prophecy Flash! (P.O. Box 292, Altadena, CA 91001) William Dankenbring offers an explanation for his past predictions about Iraq. Nevertheless, trying to predict the future is always risky business, no matter how well intentioned the prognosticator may be.

For example, in the March 1991 issue of The Philadelphia Trumpet ex-WCG minister Gerald Flurry wrote that California's five year drought would continue to get worse because it is a curse from God. Quoting passages from the "sacred" writings of HWA, Flurry wrote that God has put the curse on California because in 1979 the state's attorney general brought the famous lawsuit against the WCG. (Frankly, while the sins of California might make such a punishment well deserved, it is difficult to fathom why God would curse the entire state for a lawsuit that was aimed primarily at WCG lawyer-accountant-evangelist Stanley R. Rader.) In the weeks immediately following Flurry's curse-by-drought prophecy, California had weeks of heavy rain. Although the drought is still officially on, a large area of the state (the entire central coast region), which previously had emergency conditions, now reports numerous reservoirs at 100% of capacity (Los Angeles Times, April 4, pp. A1, A3). It seems Flurry's prophetic schedule is a bit off.

Another ex-WCG minister who has had prophecy problems is Martin Filippello. In 1988, when HWA was not resurrected from the grave as Filippello had predicted (see AR40), many thought Filippello would dissolve his ministry. But he has kept right on preaching, believing that only his timing was a little off. Friends say Filippello now believes that HWA will be resurrected some time this spring.

As someone who has worked at church headquarters many years now, I must take exception to your comments in the [January issue] about Mr. Steve Andrews, our new director of finance and planning. Yes, it is true some of the "oldtimers" seemed to look down their noses at him. But for them to call him "inexperienced" just because he has not been ordained very long is really not fair. Even though Mr. Andrews is only a local elder, he is a CPA, a lawyer (who graduated from Loyola of Los Angeles, by the way), and a former USC lecturer. He is also someone who has the respect of Mr. Stanley Rader, under whom he worked for six-and-a-half years. So you see, even though Mr. Andrews is not an evangelist yet, he is certainly not "inexperienced."

California

Editor: Thank you for the clarification regarding Mr. Andrews being a very bright and well-educated individual. After checking out the information in your letter, I wrote Mr. Andrews an apology for my poor choice of words. I also pointed out how I was looking forward to seeing whether his organization's annual financial statements will contain data on how much third tithe revenue is collected each year and what level of remuneration is now being given the WCGs top executives. Finally, I asked him what his relationship with Stan Rader was in years past and what it is now. I am looking forward to his reply.

Could you please send the Ambassador Report to my sister, a former WCG member, who was told not to come back until she could tithe. She only worked part time - two weeks out of the month - and had a daughter in high school and a son in college in need of help.

Editor: Her WCG minister was right. If you can't afford to give away 10% to 30% of your gross income (50% to 100% of your disposable income), you have no business indulging in the WCG.

I got kicked out of Armstrong's church many years ago for not sending enough money in. Lucky me.

It is true that the WCG rips off the old people of their money. I know so many cases of that. I was disgusted at the way they treated that poor blind man see [AR41] after he gave them so much. One lady I know left everything she had in a will to WCG and they promised to look after her until she died. They only visited her a few times to clean her place and that was it. She died and the church got it all. Her relatives were very angry about it.

I have an older friend, 89 years old, in a hospital (part of an old folks home) and WCG wanted to know how much she had and what she was going to do with it. She wouldn't tell them so they put her out of the church. She changed her will and left them out altogether. I am the only one that visits her, they just cast her off. They did the same to another friend in her 70s. They tried to pry it out of her how much she had and what she would do with it. She wouldn't tell them so they put her out because "she couldn't go to the Feast." All they were interested in was the money. I also am the only one that visits her.

Emily Young

During my wife's almost three weeks in the hospital, the pastor [from her WCG congregation] made one visit to see her and told her the best thing she could do would be to finish dying and be ready for the world tomorrow. Then after she came home there were only two lady members who visited her, but no financial assistance was offered by anyone.

Only a few years ago I wrote a tract titled The Christological Controversy: The Supreme Being Oneness - or Trinity? I hope you will find time to study my views on the subject. I also have a copy of Herbert's Fundamentals of Belief, which has no date on it, but it seems to me he [HWA] gave it to me in the late 1930s. As you may recall, Herbert and I were very close friends from 1935 to 1945 when he dropped me like "a hot potato." It was some time after that that he came up with the idea that the Jehovah of the Old Testament is the Jesus of the New. When that came up I was reminded that back in about the middle 1930s Brother Snow showed me a magazine published by the "Jesus Only" people who then claimed the Jehovah of the Old Testament was the Jesus of the New Testament. So when Herbert came up with the same idea I felt he was setting a trap for himself.

It seems from reading the October AR that the WCG under Tkach may be gradually moving towards the same doctrinal watershed which the Jehovah's Witnesses (then millennial Dawnists) reached after the death of Charles Taze Russell and the takeover by Judge Rutherford. Your photograph of the "picketing van" may perhaps suggest that the time is now ripe for official HWA breakaway sects to emerge and operate independently of the WCG, as for example the Laymen's Home Missionary Movement and the Dawn Bible Students Association did after Russell's death. (Both look to Russell only as their leader and mentor and consider the official "Witnesses" as apostates who have changed the truth once delivered by Russell. It looks as if I shall have to keep my discs [of research for a thesis on WCG] on standby for revision right up to the date of presentation.

I hope you can keep the excellent Report on the road and I wish you every success. Every issue chronicles the sad irony of the disintegration of HWA's world. How much longer before his system can no longer be labelled "Armstrongism"?

Ambassador College and the Worldwide Church of God seem to be functioning true to form as I observed from my seven-and-one-half years experience as an employee at Big Sandy in transportation, also as head of maintenance in aviation. I was designated the Federal Aviation Agent for the Big Sandy airfield by the FAA and was fired by the college when I called them to task for flight safety infractions. They have a great deal of difficulty preaching and following Christian principles and doctrine. They just bend them to their needs!

I've been thinking about something for quite some time. It's virtually impossible to keep the Sabbath perfectly in our present day society. People in the WCG do not turn off their utilities on Saturday, but somebody has to be on the job so that they can have water, heat, lights, etc.

It's a custom in our area that the majority of our young people get married on Saturday afternoon at about 3 p.m. The wedding ceremony starts in a local church, followed by a social hour, a dinner, and then a dance in the evening. Among the guests at times are some of the local WCG people who arrive way before sundown "seeking their own pleasure." Occasionally they have to travel farther than a "Sabbath day's journey" for such an event....

How hypocritical they are and the situation gets worse as time goes on.

Kansas

Editor: AR does not promote or denigrate either Sunday observance or Sabbath keeping, but you make an interesting point. Along a similar line regarding the keeping of "the law, " have you ever known a WCG member who adhered literally to the actual "unclean meats" law of Lev. 11 by avoiding all restaurants that ever serve pork products or by destroying cooking implements (v. 35) that have even touched pork? For that matter, how many WCG husbands literally put their wives out of the house during their periods (Lev. 15:19-33)? And how many WCG members have blue ribbon fringes on all their clothes (Num. 15:37-39)? We are not advocating such practices, but we point those out to show that some who claim to be keeping all of "the law " are really doing a bit of picking and choosing.

Regarding the WCGs continuing watering-down of the Sabbath doctrine, it is interesting that Tkach has changed the beginning of the WCG Sabbath from sunset to the beginning of darkness. This change has some HWA loyalists seeing Tkach as the one who would "wear out the saints of the most High and think to change times and laws" (Dan. 7:25). Yet some who believe Tkach is the prophesied "son of perdition " (II Thess. 2:1-12) still remain in the WCG. Try to figure that out.

Editor's Note

In response to my March 25 letter (AR47) dealing with AR's financial problems, I received a number of remarkably insightful letters. Hopefully, in a future issue I can share them with all our readers. For now I will just mention that many of those for whom my March 25 letter was intended never responded in any way. We now have a much smaller mailing list. Surprisingly (or maybe I should not have been surprised), many of those for whom my letter was not really intended (because they regularly contribute to AR) sent the Report a contribution anyway. Because of such folks this issue was made possible.

I had hoped to include Part VI of the Tkach series in this issue. However, it became necessary to postpone it in order to give a number of WCG executives to whom I've written a little more time to answer certain questions I have put to them. With a little bit of luck the next issue of the Report should be mailed out by September.

My sincerest thanks to those of you who are continuing to support our publishing efforts.

AR 49 November 1991

Joseph W. Tkach - God's New Rep on Planet Earth

(Part VI)

by John Trechak

Editor: Part VI of this serialized article covers a very tragic aspect of the Joseph Tkach story - the effect his teachings and policies have had, and are having, on the family lives of not only his followers, but upon the family lives of thousands who wish they had never heard of Tkach or his Worldwide Church of God. It should be pointed out to those Just starting on this series, however, that because Part VI builds upon what was covered in Parts I through V, those parts should be read first so that what follows may be understood in proper context.

Joseph W. Tkach - the Pastor General of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG), Chancellor of Ambassador College, and the Chairman of the Ambassador Foundation - is viewed by many of his followers as a God-led visionary who is leading "God's People" into the 21st century. Since the death of WCG founder Herbert W. Armstrong in 1986, Tkach has instituted a string of doctrinal changes (for instance, making medicine, makeup, birthdays, and interracial marriage permissible). Because of those changes, many of Tkach's followers say the WCG is now a kinder, gentler church. Unquestionably, Tkach has made the WCG a more liberal and modern organization. But is it really kinder and gentler?

The WCG continually publishes articles in its magazines and devotes whole segments of The World Tomorrow telecast to extolling the virtues of the traditional family (both nuclear and extended).<sup>57</sup> Yet, Tkach's reign (not just since 1986, but even from 1979 when he first started running the WCG's Church Administration Department) has been incredibly brutal toward the family relations of thousands - especially toward families where one mate is not a WCG member. An avalanche of letters to the Report indicates that Tkach's teachings and policies have devastated thousands of families and have led to untold numbers of separations, divorces, child custody battles, child kidnappings, the inadequate support of children from homes broken apart, the estrangement of children from parents and grandparents, plus the psychological problems and social ills that flow from family breakups and intra-family warfare. Let's look at some specific ways in which Tkach and his organization are hurting families around the world.

Dumping on Outsiders

One of the legacies of the Tkach administration is a policy AR has come to refer to as "dumping on outsiders." As with most cults, the WCG expects its members to put loyalty to the WCG's leaders far above any loyalty they may have toward country, community, or family. Members demonstrate their loyalty by obedience to the WCG's ministry and by exorbitantly contributing time and money to the WCG, thus leaving less for their family and usually none for community service.<sup>58</sup> Membership in the WCG is usually so consuming that it is quite common for WCG members to be completely estranged from relatives - even parents or children - who are not WCG members themselves.

But what happens when a WCG member runs into serious financial difficulties such as prolonged unemployment, the death of a breadwinner mate, or homelessness? That's when the "dumping on outsiders" policy becomes operative. In the majority of cases the WCG will not provide needy members with meaningful financial assistance. Instead, the WCG ministry will simply dump the member's problems (and often the member himself) onto community agencies or, more likely, onto the doorstep of the member's non-WCG relatives.

That's not the way the church is supposed to work. For decades the WCG has taught that the faithful are required to pay the church a tithe, or 10%, of their gross income every three years (actually every third and sixth year in a cycle of seven) in addition to regular tithes and offerings. According to WCG teaching, this "third tithe" is supposedly a kind of insurance or welfare fund:

Why did God command a third tithe anyway? God instituted the third tithe for a very real and important use. Without it many in God's Church would go hungry and homeless.... God has commanded a third tithe for the support of the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow who have no visible means of support (The Good News, Nov. 1962, p. 7).

In recent years some ministers have routinely called the third tithe fund "welfare income." For instance, in one of his reports in the Worldwide News (Sept. 10, 1990, p. 3) church treasurer Leroy Neff wrote:

Welfare income: This is often called the third tithe fund. It is for the widows, the fatherless and for the genuine emergency needs of members. Whatever is left over is used to pay field ministerial expenses. This year we have received 1.8 percent more than last year.<sup>59</sup>

In reality few WCG members living in poverty or in need of financial assistance during a crisis are given back any of the money they put into the third tithe insurance fund.<sup>60</sup> Some WCG ministers even get irked if a needy member brings up the subject of third tithe assistance. A case in point is that of South Dakotan Harold W. Strong who was a WCG member for 17 years. A few years after being baptized Harold started to go blind. Unable to work, having lost everything, and being unable even to heat his home in winter, he asked his local minister what he should do. The minister told him to go on welfare; third tithe assistance from the church was not even mentioned. So for years Harold subsisted on a meager $140 per month from welfare (and, later, some SSI and social security). During all that time the church never offered him any third tithe assistance whatsoever. By 1977 Harold was completely blind. And because he had by then been a WCG member for 15 years, he began to question why he should not be eligible to receive third tithe assistance. As a result of his questioning, Harold was suspended from the church for nine months.<sup>61</sup>

According to recent WCG exiters, when the WCG ministry does offer needy members assistance, it is usually only for very small amounts of money and it is almost always in the form of a loan. Even then the WCG's policy is to never offer financial help until the needy member has exhausted all government assistance and all possible help from non-WCG relatives. According to former WCG deacon Herbert Zacharios of Wisconsin, enforcement of the policy started with Tkach:

We attended the Feast of Tabernacles for our last time at Biloxi, Mississippi in 1979. During a service one of the speakers reported how two men had been raised in rank to evangelist - Stanley Rader and Joseph Tkach.... The speaker told how Tkach had taken it upon himself to go through the rolls of those receiving third tithe and remove everyone who was eligible for social security and/or welfare and/or anyone who had a living relative - in or out of the church - who could be responsible for their care.<sup>62</sup>

The outsiders dumped on by the WCG often find the needy member's situation quite bleak. I've heard of a number of cases where a member had no contact with his or her family for more than a decade and during all that time contributed very generously to the WCG. But, when the member was diagnosed as terminally ill with cancer or some other dreaded disease, the WCG's ministry refused to provide any financial assistance. Instead, the member was ordered to move in with non-WCG relatives and have them provide care until death ended their ordeal.

Spiritual Executions

The WCG practice of disfellowshipping (excommunicating or ordering the shunning of) members the WCG ministry wishes to punish continues to wreck havoc in the lives of thousands.<sup>63</sup> While the practice can be linked to certain Bible passages, numerous former

WCG ministers say the WCG's doctrine is far harsher than what the Bible actually prescribes.<sup>64</sup> Furthermore, we have seen over the years that in the process of discarding unwanted members, WCG ministers quite often have told ugly falsehoods about the ones being put out in order to justify their actions.<sup>65</sup>

Because being disfellowshipped often means being cut off from family relations or losing friends still in the WCG, the psychological impact of being disfellowshipped is often utterly devastating. Quoting William Martin, professor of the sociology of religion at Rice University, reporter Bill Marvel wrote in The Dallas Morning News (Aug 2, 1990, p. E1):

...the Worldwide Church of God has resorted to disfellowshipping frequently. (The late Herbert W. Armstrong, the church's longtime leader, even disfellowshipped his son, Garner Ted Armstrong.) Those who fall - or are driven outside - church boundaries often find themselves in a no-man's land in which they become non-persons, cut off from friends and family. "It's part of the biblical pattern that you're not supposed to eat or even talk with persons who have been disfellowshipped," Martin said. "They are literally dead. It means losing society. It's a tremendous loss."<sup>66</sup>

The idea that disfellowshipping is a kind of spiritual death or execution has not been lost on the WCG's leaders. In his column in the Worldwide News (Sept. 17, 1985) managing editor Dexter H. Faulkner wrote:

I just heard the saddest news a person could hear. Three families my wife and I were very close to have all died.

We labored together, we suffered trials together, we bore children together, we laughed together, for twenty years. We had one thing in common - we were all members of God's Church. But now they have been disfellowshipped.

I tried to analyze what brought about our friends' tragic demises. Did they underestimate the enemy?

Hundreds of letters to AR over the years have shown the accuracy of Professor William Martin's view that disfellowshipping is often extremely traumatic. For instance, one California woman wrote us:

I was in the Worldwide Church of God since I was a kid (for 20 years). I was put out about one and a half years ago. I've had emotional scarring, have suffered terror, insomnia, panic, etc. since being cut off from them. I haven't had anyone to help me. I'm in and out of mental wards. Can you send me some materials?...

In the above situation the woman was able to get consolation by reading AR. Back issues helped her to realize she had not been imagining the WCG's many failings. I recommended she contact a Christian psychologist and one of our readers who had gone through similar problems. They were able to help her regain her confidence. She also received emotional reassurance from a mainstream Christian support group. She was eventually able to overcome the trauma of leaving the WCG. As the following letter shows, however, everyone is not so fortunate:

We had a funeral for our oldest daughter (age 33-1/2) last week. Her husband was still in that church but she had left. God only knows how she suffered. She could no longer take the stress and killed herself with car fumes. She left us three beautiful grandchildren, but her husband will not let us see them now. We are "bad" because we left that cult. That's the story of our life involved in the Armstrong church. The pain is so intense, I don't know how we will make it. Please pray for us.

It is truly disappointing that while Tkach and his PR people are making every effort to give the impression that the WCG is becoming a more humane church, the old disfellowshipping policies remain in full force.<sup>67</sup> Those thrown out of the WCG are still being told that for normal fellowship "privileges" to be granted, they must demonstrate "unconditional surrender to the government of God's Church" - i.e. if you don't lick the ministers' boots you can't come back in.

The Home Breakers

The WCG has always been a cult ready, willing, and able to break up marriages.<sup>68</sup> One of the key tools used to do so has always been the WCG's divorce and remarriage (or "D and R") doctrine. The old version of the D and R teaching was described by WCG evangelist Herman L. Hoeh as follows:

Of prospective Church members - those applying for baptism - somewhere near one in three or four have been divorced. Many have remarried. To qualify to be baptized and accepted into God's Church MANY were required by the Church, knowing God's teaching against adultery in Matthew 5:32 and 19:18, to separate from a second marriage - in many cases a happy marriage with children.<sup>69</sup>

Thus the prospective member who was a D and R case was immediately put into a hellish Catch 22: Either to divorce one's present mate, live celibate, and perhaps also be permanently separated from one's children in order to achieve salvation - or to save one's marriage and thereby be consigned to hell fire. Naturally, many who decided to preserve their marriage had the joy of that relationship greatly diminished by doubts as to their spiritual future. And many who decided to put salvation, as they perceived it, above family were later to be tormented by unfulfilled physical needs and profound loneliness.<sup>70</sup>

To help guarantee that separated D and R couples would not weaken and backslide into forbidden liaisons, WCG clerics would often require that separated mates move to states distant from one another. When both mates, however, were WCG members it was inevitable that they would occasionally spot each other at one of the church's annual feasts or yearly conventions.

I very distinctly recall seeing one such accidental meeting at the WCG's Squaw Valley convention in 1969. Moments before a service was to begin, with everyone scurrying to their seats, a separated D and R couple accidentally saw each other. Obviously still very much in love, they instinctively and passionately ran toward each other to embrace. But almost instantly, as though some powerful dark force descended between them, the would-be embrace became a mere holding of hands as the two looked into each other's eyes, trembling and sobbing. In anguish with tears streaming down their faces, they then quickly turned from each other to take their places at opposite ends of the auditorium. I have seen very few real-life scenes as poignant. Incidentally, the sermon that day focused on the importance of obeying church authority.

Not surprisingly, the old D and R doctrine cost the WCG prospective members and, of course, considerable income. In 1974 the WCG came up with a new D and R teaching. In the same 1982 WN article quoted above, Herman L. Hoeh wrote how the WCG's leaders scuttled the old D and R doctrine (that a first marriage was bound by God until death) and how church members since 1974 have been allowed to divorce and remarry under two new circumstances:

(1) If the believing Church member has been newly converted and the mate refuses to live with him or her because of the religion, and (2) if both had been in the Church, but one falls away, or turns bitter against the Church or refuses to live as husband and wife with the still loyal member.

In this second case the embittered one is to be officially considered a nonmember or unbeliever. "A brother or sister is not under bondage in such cases: but God hath called us to peace" (I Corinthians 7:15). And the member may divorce.

The current D and R teaching as outlined by Hoeh<sup>71</sup> gives the WCG ministry broad power over the marriages of its members and over the marital circumstances of many non-members. A non-member spouse who expresses disapproval of the way the member spouse spends his or her time and money or the way children are being raised can be viewed as "not living as husband and wife" or as having "departed the marriage" and the member spouse will be given ministerial permission - or even encouragement - to divorce. The member spouse who is looking for an excuse to get a new mate is also given new power. Such members can easily create marital stress - unconsciously or even purposely - and then use the non-member's angry reactions as "proof" that the nonmember spouse has, in essence, departed the marriage.<sup>72</sup>

A repeated scenario has been that the member going off regularly to church services and conventions without his or her spouse meets someone of the opposite sex with whom they feel more comfortable. The non-member spouse either accidentally discovers, or is informed directly of this new "friend" and no longer is as amorous towards the member mate. The member mate then goes to the ministry, claiming the non-member is no longer living as a true spouse, gets permission to divorce, and after divorcing goes off into the sunset with the new-found WCG devotee. (To make matters worse, many wives deserted this way then find that their tithe-paying ex-husband has little money left over for spousal or child support.)

What Do You Mean "Unbeliever"?

The WCG's current teaching on D and R has had some very bizarre ramifications. For example, note the following indignant excerpt from a Sept. 25, 1989 letter to Church of God, International (CGI) members from CGI president Garner Ted Armstrong (emphasis his):

When you have had to experience divorce up close, you understand the terrible emotional and mental duress; the weeks, months and even years of sleepless nights, countless tears, with one's stomach tied in knots, loss of appetite; where practically everything in your life seemingly revolves around the terrible conflict and trauma of divorce!

Sadly, we have had to hear of cases where the parent organization, the Worldwide Church, has "ruled" that when divorce occurs within their ranks, but when one of the parties is a member of the Church of God, International, that party is viewed by the WCG as "an unbeliever"! They then invoke Paul's statement "If the unbeliever depart, let him depart," and rule that the member remaining within the WCG is FREE TO MARRY!

"Unbeliever?" But HOW can a member of God's church who believes in the whole Bible; knows the truth about [long list of doctrines WCG and CGI once held in common]... attends church every Sabbath, and is a loyal and faithful member of God's true church - yes, HOW could any pharisaical "holier than thou" so-called "religious leader" label such a one an UNBELIEVER?

This is nothing short of utter BLASPHEMY! Jesus Christ of Nazareth warned very sternly of those who would dare to attribute to the very power of God's Holy Spirit the works of Satan! He said such inferences were perilously close to the UNPARDONABLE SIN!

We in God's Church (the Church of God, International) have NEVER inferred that the members of the WCG are "unbelievers."

This thinly-disguised "excuse" to permit DIVORCE is heinous beyond my ability to describe! Thank God it is not I who am called to judge; Almighty God will judge such acts and deeds, and those who are committing them; those who are aiding and abetting in perpetrating divorce will have to answer to One far more powerful than I!

GTA is entirely correct in pointing out the incredible pain inflicted on thousands by the WCG's current D and R doctrine. He is also correct in suggesting that many sabbatarian church people do not agree with the WCG's current position on D and R. Notice the following article excerpt which appeared in the La Crosse Tribune of Wisconsin, Feb. 11, 1984 about Ambassador College graduate and University of Wisconsin alumnus Dennis Hallingstad:

A 34-year-old Sparta man was ordered jailed for 30 days after bursting into a Monroe County courtroom Friday afternoon and reading Bible verses, apparently to protest a hearing in his divorce case.

Dennis Hallingstad, who claims the divorce is illegal because it violates his religious freedom under the Constitution, was ordered jailed by reserve Judge Richard Harvey of Racine for contempt of court.

Hallingstad then ran from the courtroom and was arrested a few minutes later in the restroom of a nearby hospital. He then was strapped to a stretcher and wheeled into a makeshift courtroom at the Monroe County Sheriff's Department so that the divorce case could continue.

But the hearing was again disrupted when Hallingstad, who had appeared to be in a deep sleep, began screaming that the judge was an agent of Satan and should repent of his sinful ways. Hallingstad said God was using him to speak to the world.

"I want the news media to know what's happening in this country. I want them to know the judge is of the devil," Hallingstad shouted.

Harvey ordered Hallingstad placed in secure detention at St. Francis Medical Center in La Crosse. The judge then granted the divorce to Hallingstad's wife, Janice, saying it was the most difficult case he has handled in nearly 50 years of law practice.

"I've had nothing but turmoil in the case since it started," said Harvey, who was named to the case after other judges either disqualified themselves or refused to take the case.

Hallingstad filed lawsuits in Monroe County last year against Circuit Judge James Rice, Mrs. Hallingstad, a friend and a court commissioner in an attempt to block the divorce.

He said Jesus Christ does not recognize divorces and that it is therefore a violation of his religious freedom for a court to dissolve a marriage. He also has asked state Rep. John Medinger, D-La Crosse, to introduce a bill making divorces illegal in Wisconsin.

In addition, he recently filed a lawsuit in La Crosse County Circuit Court asking for $50 million in damages against the Worldwide Church of God, which he claims is a cult that has gained control of the minds of his wife and 6-month-old son, Gregory....

According to court documents, Hallingstad married his wife in 1977 and convinced her to join the Worldwide Church of God, a California-based group that is headed by its elderly spiritual leader, Herbert W. Armstrong.

Hallingstad said in a recent La Crosse Tribune interview that he was kicked out of the local branch of the church early last year after questioning church leaders' interpretation of the Bible and criticizing Armstrong for getting a divorce....

The Mechanics of "D&R" Mayhem

In an October 1984 sermon given in Buffalo, New York, leading WCG minister Harold Jackson stated that in 1982 (the year in which Hoeh wrote his definitive WN article about D and R), there were 265 divorces among the WCG's members. In 1983, he said, there were 235. Although current statistics are unavailable, every indication is that there are now more divorces annually among WCG members.

Those not familiar with the WCG's overbearing ministry might assume that divorce in the WCG is like divorce anywhere else where people simply get lawyers and go to court. Unfortunately, like just about everything else of significance in a WCG member's life, divorce requires ministerial involvement. To get authorization to divorce a mate, the complaining mate must reveal virtually all details - no matter how private or intimate - about the marriage (including all premarital sexual activities). Local ministers make thorough written reports on such matters and those reports are then forwarded to WCG headquarters where an all male "D and R committee" reviews them and decides the fate of the distant couple.

As head of Church Administration in January 1986, Tkach instructed the entire WCG ministry about:

the importance of doing a thorough job on these writeups.... No divorce and remarriage decisions are to be made at the local level... remember that all divorce and remarriage cases should be written up and sent to Pasadena regardless of how clear-cut or simple the case may seem.... Be specific about key dates involved in the courtship, marriage ceremony, divorce, separations, fornication, etc.....<sup>73</sup>

Not only does the WCG's "D and R committee" in far away Pasadena intrude into all the intimacies of the couple's relationship, in recent years the WCG's huge staff of legal personnel have also gotten into the act. I've seen numerous documents - including letters from WCG attorney Ralph Helge himself - revealing that WCG lawyers have provided substantial financial assistance to WCG members divorcing their non-member mates. This often seems to be the case where the nonmember is also an outspoken critic of the WCG. In such cases, the WCGs lawyers seem to revel in being able to financially break the critic's back.

One New York businessman wrote to me about the effects his divorce from a Worldwider had on him and his business:

I guess the last four and a half years have really taken their toll on my sanity. The legal battles of my divorce have finally, drained my last drop of blood. My business closed three months ago in bankruptcy, over $100,000 in debt. The creditors and state are currently hovering over the carcass picking it clean. I'm currently unemployed.... The divorce was finally completed last month with my ex on her fourth or fifth attorney - I lost count.... Her second attorney was the one paid $8,000 by Helge. And then she turned around and filed a fee application with the court for me to pay an additional $13,000 including $625 for the psychiatrist she called as a witness!....

I'll probably still have to pay $2500 [in fees] - can't discharge that kind of debt. And I still have to pay past sales taxes, employees' taxes, income taxes, etc. (about $30,000) if they don't raise enough auctioning off what has been my life of the last 10 years!

The involvement of WCG lawyers in divorces of WCG members is not limited to providing financial assistance to members out to divorce and/or harm mates critical of the church. WCG lawyers have been known to assist members in the kidnapping of children - that is, in surreptitiously whisking away children from the custody and care of the non-WCG mate.

In one of the cases for which I have documentation, a wife who was a WCG member went back to her native Germany with her children for a visit. (The main purpose of the trip, to which her member husband did not openly object, had to do with family finances and social security.) Although her marriage had not been all she had hoped for, her Oregonian husband had never brought up the idea of a formal separation or divorce. However, while the wife was in Germany, the couple's WCG minister in Oregon privately suggested to the husband that he divorce his wife. (Incidentally, throughout this period the wife remained a church-attending WCG member!) Then, while the two were still apart, WCG lawyer Larry Darden secretly wrote the husband:

As you know, our firm serves as general counsel for the Worldwide Church of God. Mr. Helge has discussed your letter with me and asked that I write to you on his behalf....

(1) Contact your wife in Germany and arrange for a voluntary transfer of the children to you - either permanently or for a visit.

In order to protect yourself in that regard you should be able to send non-transferable, non-refundable tickets for the trip naming your children as the only possible users and Portland as the only destination. I understand that TWA or other large airlines can arrange tickets in that manner for you.

On arrival of the children in Oregon you might consider contacting an attorney in Portland to assist you in filing for divorce or separation and for custody of the children....

(3) If your wife will not voluntarily release the children, you might choose to fly to Germany, after obtaining the appropriate passports or visas for the children, and bring the children back with you. As your wife is gone much of the time you should have little difficulty in that regard....

As you have equal right to custody with your wife until after a court has awarded custody during a divorce or separation proceeding, it would be to your advantage financially and strategically to avoid making custody a court issue in Germany or Oregon until after the children are with you in Oregon.

The attempted kidnapping did not prove successful for the husband. But the WCG-lawyer-counselled kidnapping attempt caused the woman's oldest son to develop severe emotional problems. The attempted kidnapping also resulted in the wife having to be hospitalized for severe trauma and damaged nerves in her right arm with the possibility of permanent paralysis. The legal and emotional warfare waged against the impoverished woman by her husband and his WCG ministers and lawyers continued for over five years. Although the two finally divorced with the wife getting child custody, many of her emotional wounds remain to this day.

Over the years, the evidence has continued to mount of WCG ministers encouraging the kidnapping of children away from "unconverted" mates and former mates. For example, as I reported in AR32 (p. 6):

In 1979, Ambassador Report was contacted by Dr. Galal Badr, a college professor at George Mason University in Virginia. Badr told us how he had been married to a WCG member, had gone through a divorce, and had been granted custody of their young daughter Abigail. Badr told us, however, that his daughter and his ex-wife, Marianna (a one-time school teacher from Philadelphia, maiden name - Dowhan) had disappeared, and a WCG minister, who hinted he knew of their whereabouts, had told him, "If you don't cooperate, you'll never see your daughter again." Badr refused to "cooperate" and true to the minister's prediction, he has not seen or heard from his daughter (or ex- wife) since then....

In late 1979, Dr. Badr wrote to WCG headquarters asking their assistance in locating his missing daughter. It was some time before he even received a response. Finally on July 3, 1980, WCG lawyer Ralph Helge wrote Dr. Badr that "the Church" would not intervene in his case because, "Any other position would demand that the Church become an investigator and fact finder in thousands of cases."

In recent court proceedings WCG-member relatives of Badr's ex-wife took the Fifth Amendment and refused to answer when asked questions about the missing teenager and her fugitive mother.

Abigail would now be 18 years old. Dr. Badr recently told me, "It has been more than 13 years since I last saw my daughter's face, her brown hair, her green eyes, or heard her voice. I don't know if she is well or even alive. Your readers who have children of their own will perhaps have some idea of the kind of sadness I feel inside. What has caused Marianna to subject me to such cruelty, and in the process make herself a fugitive from the law, I cannot understand."<sup>74</sup>

Child kidnappings are not the only means used by WCG ministers and lawyers to inflict emotional trauma upon uncooperative non-WCG mates. Floridian Carl Youngquist was married to a woman who joined the WCG. Although raised a Lutheran, Carl, himself, attended WCG services for a short period but lost interest. Before long, Youngquist noticed a profound change in his wife's personality. Eventually he became fed up with her obsession with the WCG and with her insistence on educating their three children at home. In late 1987 he filed for divorce and asked for custody of their three children.

Youngquist's parents, devout Christians who had helped raise their son's children, wrote AR about what happened next:

About six weeks after our son filed for divorce and for custody of the children, she charged him, on the advice of someone in the WCG, with sexually abusing their adopted five-year-old daughter.

The divorce hearing was held in December 1988 in West Palm Beach. We found out, through our lawyer, that the WCG was paying her lawyer directly from Pasadena. Besides her first lawyer, she had a second lawyer retained by the church. He objected to every question Carl's attorney asked about the church. For that reason the divorce hearing took two days rather than one.

At the divorce hearing Carl's ex was accompanied by an entourage from the church. In the hallway we saw them all laughing and having a gay old time. The so-called minister and treasurer testified but answered no questions regarding the church.

In May of 1987 the state of Florida dismissed the civil suit (alleging sexual abuse) because of insufficient evidence. But then the state filed criminal charges for which, if he had been found guilty, he could have received 25 years in prison! Because of the criminal charges against our son, his ex-wife "as awarded temporary [now permanent] custody of the children and he was ordered to pay $131 weekly in child support - prompt payment of which she enforces through repeated legal actions.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Youngquist
Ocean Grove, New Jersey

Richard G. Lubin, Carl's defense lawyer, was convinced of his client's innocence and refused all offers of a plea bargain.<sup>75</sup> Florida prosecutors were unable to make out a case and all charges against Carl were dropped in December 1990.<sup>76</sup> By then, however, Carl and his parents had paid out over $100,000 in legal fees. Although permitted to occasionally see the three children, Carl and his parents say the youngsters have become emotionally distant, even cold, toward them. The years of bitter court battles have left all those involved emotionally scarred.

Who's On Top?

The D and R doctrine is not the only way the WCG ministry undermines the marriages of thousands. If one reads official WCG publications dealing with marital relations, one finds promulgated what might be called a traditional Christian marriage ideal: Husbands are to faithfully love their wives, provide for and protect them and their children, be strong family leaders, yet show kindness, compassion, understanding, patience, etc. Wives are to faithfully love their husbands, be devoted homemakers and domestic managers, raise children in the faith, be understanding, patient, etc. Most people would probably find the public WCG model for the ideal family to their liking.<sup>77</sup>

Yet, the way the WCG message is actually read by many husbands transmogrifies the WCG marital ideal into one of male-centered, insensitive tyranny over a presumably inferior and subjugated serf. Furthermore, with many WCG clerics the more equitable marital model advocated in WCG publications is completely ignored and the overt message from the pulpit and in private counseling is one of unrestrained male domination.<sup>78</sup> Notice what one of our readers in Kansas wrote in this regard:

Thank God that Jesus Christ came and liberated women (as well as men)... and gave women the respect and consideration that God intended from the beginning. In the WCG our minister for several years preached about [women being] the less intelligent half of the human race. He felt God gave to men HIGHER talents and "smarts." He spoke to his own wife as if she was his servant or slave and he was the tyrant king.

We had a really good marriage until we were in the WCG a few years. My husband then became insensitive, treating me like I was dumb! He expected me to be subject to his every demand - regardless of how I felt and regardless of what I thought was proper. It was just like what the ministers demanded of their congregations - we were to do as they said even if it was wrong! The marriage became based on an attitude of dictatorship and tyranny, not on the idea that we were two capable human beings seeking to be Christians.

The ministry took us back to Old Testament days. Maybe this is why some of the ministers thought it was okay to have extra-marital affairs - because King David did, didn't he?

Not surprisingly, the WCG is an organization rife with the double standard. There are congregations in which the presiding cleric routinely puts down women for the most trivial of "flaws" - poor choice of clothing styles or makeup, "excessive" voicing of opinion, lack of deference toward males, etc. Yet some of those same ministers will expect the wives in their congregations to be "understanding" toward their husbands' "problems" with adultery or even incest.<sup>79</sup>

Excessive male dominance is the usual pattern found in WCG families that are dysfunctional. Ironically, however, when some ministers feel it is to the WCG's advantage, they are quite willing to support a wife bent on being the dominant mate in a marriage. Note the following letter written to AR:

I was suspended from the WCG Jan. 12, 1989 by David Register and his mostly silent assistant Ken Sparks. My wife, a diehard WCGer has become extremely self-righteous since finding out about the WCG. She has also become dominant and uncontrollable in family affairs. She involved the ministry early on and they took her side! They won't listen to me or to our children from her previous marriage. (Her first husband left her because of the same problem when they were both Catholics.) The ministers just back her up!

Situations such as the above are particularly vexing to husbands who, themselves, were taught to be dominant leaders. Men who've perhaps had a fundamentalist Christian upbringing or who have been military officers or business managers often seem to have little tolerance for a wife suddenly "wearing the pants" with full approval and encouragement from some 25-year-old Ambassador College-trained Tkach hireling. And so, even though such men are often very much in love with their wives, divorce becomes inevitable.<sup>80</sup>

The Love Bashers

In addition to tampering with members' marital relations and using the D and R doctrine to break up existing marriages, the WCG ministry frequently destroys budding relationships and future marriages through heavy-handed ministerial match-making and match-breaking. For decades, WCG ministers have considered it their God-given prerogative to encourage (read "coerce") certain individuals to marry. Conversely, they have also thought it their God-given prerogative to use their considerable psychological influence to discourage (read "destroy") certain budding relationships.

Obviously, there is an important counseling role to be played by any proper ministry as regards those contemplating marriage and even as regards young people just dating. But in the case of the WCG, with its highly authoritative - and often outrageously rakesh-ministry, marriage counseling has frequently been nothing but inane -and often self-serving - intermeddling with the legitimately private lives and intense emotions of trusting, child-like Christians.

I personally know of dozens of marriages ruined by WCG ministerial match-making/breaking. But let me just quote from one recent letter to AR:

I would like to tell you that I [recently] married a woman I have loved for the past 27 years. I met her when I first got into the WCG in the 1960s. We first dated back in the spring and summer of 1964 but [WCG evangelist] Dean Blackwell broke us up because he wanted her to go to Ambassador College. Unfortunately, she only attended for two years, then worked for the college. At age 23 Ol' Joe Tkach played matchmaker and advised (or whatever it is they do to so many people) that she marry a man she had known for only three months. He turned out to be an alcoholic and sex pervert - basically a closet homosexual. She went through 20 years of sheer hell.

Because of the church, I, myself, married on the rebound in 1965. That marriage lasted only a few years after we left the church back in 1974.

I cannot begin to warn people enough about how this organization has hurt, manipulated, controlled, and ruined the lives of thousands of innocent, unsuspecting victims. Our personal story could fill a book.

What Spirit Is Behind All This?

When we look at the WCG organization with its proclivity for thwarting budding relationships, mismatching mates, interfering in marriages, breaking up families, and separating children from parents and grandparents, we need to ask ourselves what is the spirit that infuses and motivates Tkach's so-called church?

Some years ago I heard Professor Lon Sobel, an internationally renowned legal scholar, lecture on the subject of entertainment business litigation strategies. He made an insightful comment that had relevance far beyond the subject upon which he lectured. He cautioned his audience of young litigators that whenever they were involved in legal battles with corporate giants, it was imperative they understand the attitudes, values, and psychological bent ("spirit," if you will) of the individual or group of individuals at the very top of that organization. He explained that it is the mindset of those at the very top that will permeate an entire corporation (and, in turn, affect the course of the litigation). That important principle is well understood by not just great trial lawyers, but by many psychologists and sociologists as well.<sup>81</sup>

What happens in the WCG and in the lives of its members is most often not the result of doctrines or policies derived from a sincere search for transcendent truths, but is almost always the result of policies that flow from the idiosyncrasies, prejudices, projections, and psychological bent of its top leader and his inner circle. And, as I have emphasized since our first issue, we can best understand the spirit underlying the WCG if we look at the private lives of those key individuals.

In this regard, let me quote from an insightful letter written by former WCG member/deacon N. C. Gilbert<sup>82</sup> to WCG minister Randall R. Kobernat on Dec. 30, 1984:

Mr. Kobernat, I do not [condone] incest or rape. In addition to physically, people can be raped mentally, emotionally, financially, and spiritually. And, I might add, Mr. Armstrong's own daughter will only answer, "I am not at liberty to discuss it" when asked if the incest charges against her father are true or false. I realize that happened a long time ago, and could/should be repented of and forgotten; but the attitude and spirit of forceful control (TOTAL authority) is still in the [WCG] organization. Mr.

Kobernat, if I said I was a minister (or apostle) of God and was committing incest, do you think Rev. 2:2 would apply to me? Dr. Joyce Brothers writes that people who commit such perverse acts do it, in most cases, to show their power and control over others. Christian ethics, love, mercy, etc. seem to be taking second place to obedience and control. It reminds me of the children's game "Simon Says." Either you do exactly what "Simon" says, or you are out! Is Christ a part of such?

Since 1976 virtually every issue of AR has focused on the issue of the WCG's spirit of forceful and totalitarian authority over the minds of its members. I have also reported extensively on HWA's long-time incestuous abuse of his youngest daughter. I will not reiterate those sad facts in this article. Nor will I devote space here to Garner Ted Armstrong's promiscuous past. Those matters have been covered in detail in past issues of the Report.<sup>83</sup> However, as one of AR's readers wrote me, "You have written extensively about the private lives of HWA and GTA. You have a duty to now report what you know about Mr. Tkach and his associates."

Joe Tkach Jr.

After Joe Tkach Sr., the most visible WCG figure is Joe Tkach Jr. Although less visible than his father in WCG publications, Junior is actually running much of the WCG.<sup>84</sup> As one WCG insider revealed to AR: "Basically, right now, Joe Tkach Jr. and Michael Feazell are running the church. Mr. Tkach Sr. trusts no one else!"

Junior's official title is Director of Church Administration U.S.A.<sup>85</sup> Those who remember him as a student at the WCG's Imperial School in Pasadena during the late 1960s and then at Ambassador College from which he was graduated in 1973, say he was not a brilliant student. Indeed, some classmates considered him "a goof ball."

After graduation he was a ministerial trainee in California, Indiana, and Arizona. Ordained in 1976, he was also cut from the WCG payroll that same year. Between 1976 and 1986, Junior took a few extension classes in psychology from Arizona State University, worked as a social service worker, earned an MBA from the small Western International University in Phoenix, and then worked for Intel Corp. for a couple of years. Since being lured back to employment in the WCG, his father has had him raised to evangelist rank.

Divorced from his first wife, Jill, in 1978,<sup>86</sup> Junior remarried in 1980. Those familiar with Junior's first marriage say it was a tumultuous relationship. Friends of Jill say Junior was an habitual wife beater and Jill, now a born-again Christian, has told friends that Tkach Sr., himself, even struck her on two occasions. The following letter from a former member of Junior's Arizona flock reveals something of Junior's character and personality:

I knew both Joe Tkach Jr. and Jill, his first wife, in a personal way [because my wife and I spent considerable time traveling with them on church business].... It certainly came as no surprise when we were apprised of Jill divorcing this "Hitler"! Certainly I could not blame her for such overdue action. I say this not from hearsay, second-hand scuttlebutt, or rumor, but because my wife (who still clings to the cult) and I witnessed his outrages first hand.

On one occasion, Mr. T. invited my wife and I to ride along on their trip to Prescott, Arizona where he was to give a Sabbath sermon. Jill was driving while Mr. T. Jr. was in the back seat preparing his sermon. Jill missed the turn-off to Prescott from the Phoenix to Flagstaff freeway. She had driven about 10 miles past the turn-off when we realized that she had gone by the Prescott exit. Mr. T. Jr. blew his top, to say the least! He cussed and swore at Jill from that point, 10 miles past the turn-off all the way to Prescott, about 60 miles from the freeway as I recall. He called her every vulgar name in the book: "an S.O.B.," "a stupid imbecile," "a F---ing bitch,"; and he said "God D--- you!"- except he said whole words, not just the starting letters. He just kept screaming the epithets at her. While he continued to scream out those deplorable rantings and ravings, I wondered if I should tell him to shut up. But I knew that if I did I would be disfellowshipped on the spot. After searching for years to find what I most ignorantly assumed to be "God's One True Church," and being taught never to question, much less upbraid, one of "God's ministers," I bit my tongue and felt embarrassed that a fellow human being would react so disgustingly to such a trivial mistake.

It's interesting that the moment we pulled into the church parking lot, Mr. T. Jr.'s personality did a 180 degree somersault. He smiled and greeted the deacons in the parking lot, apologized for being late, gave his sermon, and acted as though none of the turmoil in the car had ever happened. Mind you, he had carried on in the car ranting and raving for over one hour straight! Jill was left in tears by his tongue lashing. I remember thinking at the time - if he would mistreat his wife so horribly in our presence, how far would he go in brutalizing her in private?

Some time previous to the above incident, we were visiting his home when my wife asked him a question about [erotic] fantasies. He told her that fantasizing was perfectly normal, that he himself did this, and that he even encouraged his wife to fantasize about other men!<sup>87</sup>

I recall he said that he hated his Dad and that his father was a "little dictator" who had never shown him any love. The picture he painted of his father was nothing like the picture painted of Mr. T. Sr. in the Worldwide News where he is supposedly a family man who loves children. However, the description given by Mr. T. Sr. in the 7/17/89 WN of people in the WCG jockeying for position does fit perfectly my recollection of Mr. T. Jr. When Mr. T. Sr. became transformed from being a "little dictator" - as his son had described him - into being a "big dictator," he dangled a one-quarter to one-half million dollar carrot in front of his son's nose. That is what caused Mr. T. Jr. to want to gravitate to Pasadena in 1986. At his going away party, he told my wife that he had really changed. Well, I have to wonder. Someone who has, doesn't have to boast about it.

A considerable amount of evidence accumulated by AR indicates Junior has really not changed at all, but has only gotten better at concealing his leopard spots.<sup>88</sup> Tkach Sr., however, doesn't seem to mind.

Dean Blackwell

In his rise from lowly local elder to "God's Apostle," Tkach Sr. has had a number of mentors. The first was evangelist Dean Blackwell, Tkach's superior in Chicago during his early years in the church. For many WCG members, Blackwell's reputation centers around his mellifluous voice and his pulpit fulminations against sexual immorality. For many WCG ministers, however, Blackwell's reputation is that of, as one of his former colleagues put it, "a hypocrite with the personal morals of an alley cat and the brains of a chicken."<sup>89</sup>

Former WCG member Robert Skaggs<sup>90</sup> told the Report:

Dean Blackwell was absolutely idolized by women in the Chicago church. He, in turn, took advantage of many. He had a basement office with a couch. That is where many of his escapades would take place. He used to ask various church women to come over to his house to do his wife's housework for her. He had the nerve to ask my wife to come over like that. I told my wife, "Let Mr. Blackwell's wife do her own housework!"...

Around 1963, a deaconess caught Blackwell in bed with the wife of [a WCG local elder]. When she told me what she had seen I called evangelist Rod Meredith at church headquarters in Pasadena. I thought Blackwell would be removed or, at least, reprimanded. Instead, Meredith had one of the Chicago ministers come to me and say if I wanted to continue attending services I would have to be rebaptized!

In other words, Skaggs was not-so-subtly told that when it came to the personal morals of top ministers he was to mind his own business. His experience in this regard reflected a WCG policy unknown to most lowly members. As Mary Ellen Dahlgren, former executive secretary to Herbert W. Armstrong and Stanley R. Rader, told the Report, "the official, although unwritten rule, was that adultery by ministers ranked preaching elder and lower was to be punished, but adultery by ministers ranked pastor and above was to be covered up."

Under Blackwell, Tkach learned firsthand about the WCG's double standard and about church politics. When Blackwell seduced Tkach's own wife in the early 1960s, Tkach's silence was rewarded when Blackwell got him ordained.<sup>91</sup> Blackwell also put Tkach in charge of the Chicago congregation's third tithing "poor fund." As Blackwell's "bag man," Tkach gained a knowledge of how to distribute favors for selfish gain. With that experience he was later able to land a similar position of grass roots influence when transferred to WCG headquarters in Pasadena.<sup>92</sup>

Once Tkach became the WCG's Pastor General, many assumed that because Blackwell had slept with Tkach's wife, Tkach would get his revenge by firing him. Not so. Although Tkach did get satisfaction from being able to dominate and humiliate Blackwell by transferring him to the Philippines for a time, after a spell Tkach allowed his old mentor to come back to the U.S. In return for keeping his mouth shut about much of Tkach's past, Blackwell remains on full WCG salary as one of Tkach's "doctrinal advisors."

Herman L. Hoeh

For over forty years Herman L. Hoeh - evangelist, doctrinal theoretician, Ambassador College professor, WCG board member, and Plain Truth editor - has been one of the most influential men in the WCG hierarchy. He has also been one of Tkach's most important mentors. From 1976 to 1979 Tkach assisted Hoeh in pastoring the "Pasadena Auditorium A.M." congregation. The teacher-student relationship that developed provided Tkach with the insights and advice he needed to gain control of the WCG's Church Administration Department beginning in 1979.<sup>93</sup>

"Dr." Hoeh, as he is often referred to because of his Ph.D. from still unaccredited AC, is an individual not lacking in IQ or political skill.<sup>94</sup> In spite of certain well-known eccentricities,<sup>95</sup> most Worldwidiers view Hoeh as a mild-mannered gentleman and scholar. But there is another side to Hoeh - one very much at odds with his conservative straight image.

I first became aware of Hoeh's double life in mid-1977. We had just published AR2, our large "In Bed With Garner Ted" issue, and the revelations it contained were prompting many headquarters personnel to resign from the WCG. One such individual was Ron Lepeska, a gifted photographer and graphics artist who had been employed at church headquarters for a number of years.

One day, Ron received a phone call from Hoeh. "I understand you've left the church," said Hoeh. As Ron answered in the affirmative, his racing thoughts were that Hoeh had phoned in his capacity as a WCG minister and was about to counsel him to rejoin the church. Instead, Hoeh responded, "That's good. I've got a job for you." He explained to Ron that he had an extensive collection of photographic "art" - with some photos having cost him $200 apiece - but that a handful of photos had slight defects which required a bit of "touching up." While surprised at Hoeh's indifference toward his new non-member status, Ron agreed to assist the evangelist.

Later, after Hoeh dropped off twenty or so photographs, Ron was flabbergasted at what he saw. Ron - who had become sympathetic to AR's goals and was even then designing AR's new letterhead - phoned Report co-founder Len Zola. Shortly thereafter Len and I visited Ron's home to see the photos for ourselves. We discovered that most of the photos were clearly homoerotic. About half were of naked young boys with exposed genitals and naked buttocks. A few shots combined black leather and Nazi motifs. Most surprising, however, were three full-frontal nudity photos of very pregnant women - all of whose faces we recognized from WCG church services!

How, and from whom, Hoeh obtained his photos is unclear. It is interesting, however, that for years we have heard stories about WCG headquarters in Pasadena having its own secret group of nudism aficionados. We know, too, that Hoeh is a skilled amateur photographer who in the past has talked of leaving the ministry to become a professional photographer.<sup>96</sup>

The photos of naked boys in Hoeh's collection raises the question of whether Hoeh - in spite of his church's teachings - is latently bisexual or gay. At least one former Ambassador College instructor thinks Hoeh is. He told me:

Back in 1969, when I showed up to teach at Ambassador, there was to be a formal faculty reception. Herman Hoeh, aware that I didn't own a tuxedo, offered to loan me one of his. He invited me to his home and in his bedroom told me to disrobe so I could try on a tux. I did as he said only to discover the tux didn't fit me. It was only years later, after I was married and knew more about the ways of the world, that I pieced the puzzle together. Hoeh - who had sat on the bed leering at me - should have known all along his tux wouldn't fit me. He is five inches taller than I am! But then, he did get a chance to leer, didn't he.

What exactly is Hoeh's state of mind at present is difficult to say. Observers note that in recent years his obsession with Buddhism, Buddhist monks, reincarnation, and the nation of Thailand<sup>97</sup> has steadily increased. Insiders say Mrs. Hoeh has not taken well to her husband's continuing weirdness. One of our readers recently observed her aimlessly wandering about a supermarket with a dazed look, talking to nonexistent companions. In the meantime, Tkach keeps Hoeh on as editor of the Plain Truth. The two men remain close friends.

Men With Boys

Let me interrupt myself at this juncture to make an observation. In the past, homosexual attraction in the WCG hierarchy has gone largely unnoticed by the WCG's membership. As one former WCG member who is gay told me, "Straights just don't know what to look for. They assume that if a man is married, occasionally takes a woman to dinner, or doesn't behave effeminately, he could not possibly be gay. Ha!"

Heterosexuals, too, most often do not realize how complex, sophisticated, and formalized homosexual relations can become. To illustrate the latter, let me quote briefly from a Eugene O'Connor essay about homosexuality in ancient Greece - a time and place often idealized in modern homosexual literature:

Indeed, a whole body of homoerotic literature grew up around the themes of male beauty and how one ought to woo and win a boy.

The customary social pattern was this: a boy in his teens or, at any rate, a younger man (called an eromenos, or "beloved") was sought out by an older male (called an erastes, or "lover"), who might be already married. Women in classical Athens were kept in virtual seclusion from everyone but their immediate families and their domestic activities were relegated to certain "female" parts of the house [cf. Tit. 2:5]. As it consequence, boys and young men - partly by virtue of their being seen, whether in the gymnasium, in the streets, or at it sacrifice (its in the Lysis) - became natural love-objects.

The adult man acted the role of the aggressive pursuer, who openly courted a younger male. So eager were men's affections, in fact, that boys had to be regularly escorted by tutors [cf. Gal. 3:24-25] to keep from being molested. In no case was a boy to be seen as the aggressor; essentially playing the female role in a society in which well-bred women were largely absent from public life, the boy would, while displaying his beauty and charms, withhold them at first, yielding to the man only after a period of courtship.

Strict rules of conduct bound both parties: adult males could face prosecution for seducing free-born youths, while Athenian boys and young men could be censured for soliciting sexual favors for money. That would make them in effect equal to courtesans, who were hired companions and lacked citizen status.

This erastes-eromenos (lover-beloved) relationship, although it was sexual and in many ways comparable to typical male-female relations, with the man assuming the dominant role, was meant ideally to be an educative one. The older man instilled in the younger - in essence, "made him pregnant with" - a respect for the requisite masculine virtues of courage and honor. Plato acknowledges the educative value of male-male relations when, for example, he has Alcibiades in the Symposium recount how his passion for Socrates (here humorously cast in the role of the beloved boy) has filled him with the pang of philosophy, and when Socrates in the Phaedrus describes how the soul of the pederast (literally, "a lover of youths") who is blessed with philosophy will grow wings after a certain cycle of reincarnations.<sup>98</sup>

Some have seen a similar type of tutorial under-culture developing in the WCG's higher echelons. (One oft-photocopied letter supposedly from one WCG executive/minister to another alleges just that and in considerable detail.<sup>99</sup>) Indeed, I personally recall from my years at Ambassador how certain church "scholars" were very aware of the sociology of ancient Greek homosexuality.

Stanley R. Rader

Another important Tkach mentor was Stanley R. Rader,<sup>100</sup> the Jewish CPA-attorney who, for many years, was HWA's chief advisor. As detailed in Part II of this series,<sup>101</sup> Rader hand picked Tkach to run the WCG's Church Administration Department in 1979. Until HWA removed Rader from power in 1981, Tkach took his orders from Rader. To do justice to Rader would require a whole book. For purposes of this article, however, I will mention only a few items.

There are few WCG members who are not aware of the many stories that have circulated over the years alleging that Rader is bisexual. Interest in Rader's private life peaked around 1980. In that year, former WCG minister David R. Robinson published his book Herbert W. Armstrong's Tangled Web which repeated a number of widely circulated accusations concerning Rader.<sup>102</sup> One was that Rader's accounting partner, Henry Cornwall, was also Rader's homosexual partner. Another was that there were in existence photographs of church founder HWA having sex with young boys. (Copies of the photos were widely believed to be in Rader's possession.) Additionally, Robinson revealed how Rader had been unreceptive to any suggestion that the WCG maintain a position of staunch opposition to homosexuality.

According to Robinson's account, HWA, Rader, and Cornwall all had opportunity to deny the allegations to his face but never did. And, although the WCG sued Robinson over the book (for invasion of privacy), and although lawyer Rader is known for his litigiousness, the accuracy of Robinson's allegations concerning Rader's sexual preferences was never brought into issue. Finally, after just a few months of pleadings, the WCG quietly dropped the suit. In 1981, when author John Tuit published the same allegations against Rader in The Truth Shall Make You Free, the WCG did not even bother to threaten a lawsuit.

HWA stripped Rader of power in 1981 (while giving him a $250,000 bonus). But it is important to note that Rader was removed only because he represented a threat to HWA.<sup>103</sup> HWA never objected to Rader's personal lifestyle. Nor did Rader object to HWA's. As for Tkach, he never objected to the lifestyles of either HWA or Rader.

During the last decade Rader has continued to live in Pasadena where he is often seen about town in the company of his dotting wife. Friends say he spends considerable time reading fine literature, maintains contacts with numerous world leaders, and is "Of Counsel" with the Los Angeles law firm of Morgan, Wenzel, and McNichols. His clients include notorious cult leader Tony Alamo<sup>104</sup> (original name Bernie Lazar Hoffman) who, in recent years, has been charged with felony child abuse, admits to having stolen his late wife's body from an Arkansas mausoleum, and in 1991 was arrested by FBI agents after allegedly threatening to kidnap and hang a federal judge.<sup>105</sup>

While Rader no longer attends WCG services - his wife has said, "my husband is too charismatic; it would disrupt the church" - he remains a WCG member. Tkach has not seen fit to disfellowship him. And, not long ago, when asked if Rader was still receiving a paycheck from the Ambassador Foundation Tkach replied, "I don't know."

Gerald Waterhouse

Of the many colorful characters one finds in the WCG hierarchy, few are as odd as evangelist Gerald Waterhouse. A native of West Texas and a 1956 graduate of Ambassador College, Waterhouse has spent the last 25 years repeatedly circling the globe as the WCG's most long-winded evangelist.<sup>106</sup> While also promulgating such oddball notions as "the place of final training," the mystical meaning of "Big Sandy," and the importance of Christians remaining "dumb,"<sup>107</sup> Waterhouse's chief function until 1986 was to promote the glorification of Herbert W. Armstrong.

Since church founder Armstrong's death in early 1986, Waterhouse's four-hour-long sermons<sup>108</sup> -given before five or six different audiences per week - have been aimed at accomplishing one thing: the glorification of Joseph W. Tkach. Toward that end, Waterhouse has been quite willing to disseminate scores of outlandish untruths about his latest idol. Some, such as Waterhouse's claim that Tkach was a fearless WWII warrior, have been explored in detail earlier in this series.<sup>109</sup>

Dennis Van Deventer

Another Worldwide minister who has, like Waterhouse, carried Tkach worship to insane heights is Dennis Van Deventer. As explained in Part I,<sup>113</sup> Van Deventer was the minister who from the pulpit "had been so vivid in describing how Tkach single-handedly decimated much of the Japanese air force that some church members had become physically shaken by the bloody accounts of Tkach's ravaging." Not only does Tkach tolerate such nonsensical fiction about himself, he seems to revel in being the object of worship.

One close friend cautioned Tkach not long ago that when Van Deventer speaks about "the Apostle" it is as though he is talking about God. To this observation Tkach flippantly suggested that compared to the poor way Herbert Armstrong had run the church perhaps he really is like God!

So confident is Tkach of Van Deventer, Tkach has put him in charge of the church's headquarters security force - no small responsibility considering the amount of intrigue that occurs there. Van Deventer is also said to be one of those with whom Tkach likes to share his back yard Jacuzzi - the place where, I'm told, the WCG's most important decisions are made. And Tkach can often be seen on late night walks with Van Deventer - a practice regarding which some have warned Tkach of potential image problems. For while Van Deventer is currently married and behaves in the "hard-nosed S.O.B. style" expected of supposedly macho managers in the WCG, his critics say he is overly interested in other males. It is also well-known at headquarters that while he was a student at the church's college in Texas, Van Deventer was expelled for performing a homosexual act upon a male employee of the church.

All of the above has led many to ask: Is Tkach gay?

Joe, Are You Gay?

The question of whether Tkach is gay - or, more precisely, bisexual - may sound outlandish at first considering that Tkach's 30 year marriage has resulted in three grown children and considering Tkach's church condemned homosexuality very strongly in the past. But while most of the general WCG membership has been mesmerized by the WCG's PR team into believing that Tkach is a dedicated family man who, because of his wife's mental illness, has been forced to become "a eunuch for the kingdom of heaven's sake" (Matt. 19:12), insiders know better. One minister who has known Tkach for over two decades and who has had hundreds of intimate discussions with him over the years, told me bluntly, "Mr. Tkach has not had sex with his wife for over 22 years. And, let's face it, you either use it or lose it. We shouldn't criticize Mr. Tkach because he has needs."

For some years, many insiders assumed that those needs were being met solely by Tkach's executive secretary "Mrs." Ellen Escat.<sup>114</sup> Increasingly, however, some insiders are saying that although Tkach can function with women, he actually prefers male companionship.<sup>115</sup> So widespread has this perception become that stories about the personal preferences of Tkach and some in his inner circle have become quite widespread.<sup>116</sup>

For example, Ambassador College graduate Ralph DiFiori recently wrote the Report:

In the summer of 1987 I was with Mr. Tkach and his assistant Joseph Locke. We were at an international site [Rome, Italy] and I stayed with Mr. Locke. In a casual conversation with Mr. Locke, he confided in me that Mr. Tkach doesn't like to be alone at night.<sup>117</sup> While he sleeps alone, he likes Locke's company until he's ready to go to sleep. It startled me because we were always told Mr. Tkach was a fearless leader. Another interesting thing Locke mentioned, which I found very amusing, was that Mr. Tkach enjoyed watching professional wrestling on TV. So [we have] a modern apostle who enjoys Hulkamania. Now that's something. I can easily guess what other stuff they enjoy, but who am I to judge?

Locke, in his mid-forties, has never been married, shows little romantic interest in women, but shows considerable concern for the welfare of young boys, and lives with two young men across the street from Tkach. Besides being an officer of the Ambassador International Cultural Foundation and an almost constant companion of Tkach on tour, he is Principal Supervisor of Imperial School (a church-sponsored elementary school) in Pasadena. According to one outraged parent, it was while employed in the latter capacity that he once<sup>118</sup> disciplined a teenage boy by whipping him - after first requiring him to strip naked.<sup>119</sup>

Those who are convinced Tkach is a closet homosexual-bisexual point to a variety of facts to make their argument. Some examples:

Former WCG minister Elmer McElroy was one of Tkach's closest friends from Chicago. He was the driver of Tkach's big black car in the incident described in Part I of this series.<sup>120</sup> Elmer's ex-wife has stated she knew that while Elmer was a WCG minister he was having affairs with men in the church. Just days after the big black car incident, in fact, Elmer left the WCG and "came out of the closet." He now resides back in Chicago living openly with his gay partner. Critics of Tkach say he knew all along that Elmer was gay. But that even while he and Elmer were putting Bible-believing Christians out of the WCG, Tkach was "covering" for his friend Elmer.

When Dennis Pebworth, a former WCG member, died of AIDS<sup>121</sup> in 1987, Tkach attended his funeral and displayed great emotion on the occasion. Some WCG conservatives were surprised to hear of Tkach's attendance and behavior because until that time no top WCG leader would have dared pay his respects at the funeral of an ex-member who was a known homosexual.<sup>122</sup>

Another Tkach relationship that has disturbed some church conservatives is Tkach's long-time relationship with J. Michael Feazell. Feazell, now one of Van Deventer's close friends, is Tkach's chief ghostwriter. Officially, he is assistant to the Plain Truth's publisher (Tkach). He is also an evangelist and a member of the WCG's board of trustees.<sup>123</sup> That someone so young (he's only 40) should quietly have been given so much authority galls some WCG old-timers - especially when, as one minister told me, "Mike is an incredible cry baby." One former Plain Truth writer told me, "Feazell is very effeminate. Mr. Herbert Armstrong would never have allowed him to be ordained an evangelist."<sup>124</sup> I am not saying that Feazell (who is now married) is gay, but how did Feazell get so much power? According to ministerial sources, Feazell virtually lived full time with Tkach (and Tkach's then confined, schizophrenic wife) for ten years beginning when he was 18 years old. And just as Herman Hoeh became mentor to Tkach in the 1970s, Tkach became mentor to the young Feazell. The two have remained trusting mutual admirers ever since.

Tkach has a number of idiosyncrasies that get him into trouble with his more conservative associates. One quirk is that, unlike church founder HWA, who was more formal, Tkach is very "touchy-feely" with men in public. I personally thought this criticism quite silly until someone pointed out to me how there are hundreds of photos -

many already published in the Worldwide News - of Tkach giving male friends a little touch here and a little squeeze there (or of male friends doing the same to him).<sup>125</sup> I would prefer not to read too much into such gestures, but as one individual noted, "Mr. Armstrong would not have been so publicly affectionate with other males." Another individual told me, "Sexual harassment was a big topic in the news recently. A lot of people think it's the kind of thing that must involve a male boss and a female employee and that it must involve dirty talk. But a male employee who is frequently touched by a male superior can't help but feel a little bit odd about it. After all, what's the purpose of it? Is he sending out signals, or what?"

A far more significant observation about Tkach's psycho-sexual bent revolves around his actual direction of church teaching about homosexuality. The WCG's official position used to be one of absolute opposition. For almost two decades that position was exemplified in Dr. Roderick C. Meredith's article "The Shocking Truth About 'Queer' Men!" But around 1979, right about the time Stanley Rader and Joe Tkach became evangelists and really took over control of the WCG, many noticed a major shift in the WCG's official position on homosexuality. Plain Truth articles attacking the gay lifestyle became almost nonexistent.<sup>126</sup> Meredith's article became first more difficult to obtain and then "out of print." If one wrote the church asking what its position was on homosexuality, after much delay one might get the church's new official paper on the topic, "Is It True Some Are 'Born That Way'?" - a sociological-psychological study by Donald D. Schroeder (whose by-line, for some reason, is now deleted from reprints). While the paper certainly is not pro-gay (and contains some excellent points), it clearly lacks the strong, masculine language found in the "classic Meredith" article. Today, Tkach strictly forbids Meredith's article from being distributed. Many see in this a desire by Tkach to avoid offending gay friends.

Even more disappointing to some is the defensive way Tkach has responded to the well-intentioned criticism of his private life. When stories about Tkach being bisexual inundated church headquarters around February 1990, many thought Tkach would forcefully rebut such accusations by restating the WCG's historical opposition to homosexuality. Instead, Tkach's own sermons and editorials began emphasizing the importance of forgiving sins.<sup>127</sup> Tkach also ordered the (now defunct) Good News magazine to publish a very odd article by WCG minister Dennis Luker. In "Hope for Homosexuals"<sup>128</sup> Luker called for greater understanding of homosexuals, stated that homosexuality was not the worst of sins, and reiterated Tkach's position that the WCG would not bar those with AIDS from attending WCG church services.

Taken on its own, Luker's article may not seem very startling. But what is shocking is the contrast between the very liberal tolerance Luker advocates toward homosexuals and homosexual problems as compared with the very rigid and harsh approach toward heterosexual sins and sinners exemplified by WCG policies for decades. Then again, maybe we shouldn't be shocked. The double standard has been at the heart of the WCG since it began. Sins by those at the top of the WCG - whether adultery, incest, or homosexuality - are to be gently forgiven.<sup>129</sup> However, sins committed by lowly members - even when less serious - are to be dealt with harshly.

Luker's article has been viewed by some conservative WCG observers as but one more indication of the dilution of moral values taking place in both the WCG and in many other churches. Greater tolerance of homosexuality within the ministry is clearly the current trend in America's major denominations.<sup>130</sup> Many see the WCG as simply going with that trend. So much so it has been speculated that there is an "international gay conspiracy" at work. While I find such a suggestion a bit over-dramatic (assigning supposed conspirators a level of skill and stealth I doubt they possess), reliable sources have told me that a number of major denominations have powerful gay cliques in their hierarchies. For instance, a number of former JW's say there are such cliques in the hierarchy of the JW organization. The Watchtower, an official JW publication has even admitted, "Shocking as it is, even some who have been prominent in Jehovah's organization have succumbed to immoral practices, including homosexuality, wife swapping, and child molesting."<sup>131</sup> The WCG is no different.

We are living in times when a very large percentage of the population (even in the Christian community) seems to feel it is wrong to condemn any sexual conduct as long as it is "between consenting adults." Clearly, such was not the view of the Apostle Paul who saw a direct connection between personal philosophy and personal sexuality (Rm. 1:21-32). Nor is such the view of many (perhaps even most) psychologists today who frequently see a direct connection between neurosis (caused by childhood trauma and/or misguided personal philosophy) and sexual dysfunction and/or deviant behavior.<sup>132</sup>

I personally believe that while the sex life of almost all citizens should be a completely private matter, the personal immorality of elected - and spiritual - leaders is of too great import for all of us and therefore should not be ignored.<sup>133</sup>

Again, is Tkach gay? Frankly, if we evaluate the information being put forth by his critics we must concede there is no hard evidence. In a criminal trial, where guilt must be proven beyond a reasonable doubt, defendant Tkach would probably make out okay. But even without hard evidence, there is still a substantial body of circumstantial evidence available. And in a civil trial, where liability would be found by a preponderance of the total evidence, Tkach would probably not fare too well.

Nevertheless, whatever one concludes about Tkach's personal conduct behind closed doors, when one looks at the totality of the evidence regarding the upper echelons of the WCG, it is very obvious that Tkach's WCG is ethically, morally, and spiritually little different now than the "worldly" churches it has so long condemned.

Editor. Part VII of this serialized article will appear in the next issue of Ambassador Report.

Footnotes

57. In virtually every issue, the Plain Truth magazine features such articles as "Saving Bad Marriages, Making Good Ones Better" (3/90), and "Building Strong Marriages -Why Marriages Succeed, Why Marriages Fail" (4/90). The Plain Truth even has a monthly section called "Today's Family." Topics covered in the last few years have included: "Marital Abuse... In the Name of God" (8/89), "The Family Makes a Comeback" (1/90), "Can Love Die?"(3/90), "Letting Go [of Grown Children]" (11-12/90), "Keeping the [Romantic] Flame Burning" (1/91), and "The Abuse of the Elderly" (3/91). Finally, there's the WCG's ever popular booklet How to Have a Happy Marriage, written by six WCG authors who ostensibly have all the answers on this important topic.

58. Of course there are exceptions. But generally speaking the WCG has always dissuaded members from giving of their time and money - what's left of it after the WCG's requirements - to community or charitable causes. This reality stands in stark contrast to the WCG's vigorously self-publicized support of various charities through its Ambassador International Cultural Foundation activities.

59. It is significant that nowhere did Neff actually state how much third tithe the WCG actually took in. And I have not seen that information published in any WCG source. In Arthur Anderson's Audited Financial Report on the WCG for 1989 (WN, July 16, 1990) church assistance to needy members in 1989 was given as $7,709,000. But as I pointed out in the Dec. 1989 issue (p. 6), my calculations show that such a figure represents, at best, only about a third of what the WCG should be giving to its poor members if its own doctrines were being adhered to. That Neff and Arthur Anderson would omit such important information from their reports strongly suggests the WCG's leaders are involved in a major coverup with regard to its welfare fund.

60. In fact there doesn't seem to even be an actual third tithe fund. Financial statements by Arthur Anderson published in the Worldwide News never show a separate third tithe accounting. Third tithe contributions from members apparently continue to be co-mingled with the WCG's general purpose revenues. (We can only wonder about the legality of such a procedure.) Nevertheless, as Leroy Neff's statement about "welfare income" indicates, the WCG's leaders are certainly aware of what third tithe contributions are supposed to represent.

61. If you have read AR over the years, you have a good idea why Mr. Strong wasn't offered any church assistance. While Mr. Strong was suffering financially, millions of dollars every year were being diverted from the third tithe fund to pay ministers' salaries. Many more thousands of dollars were being siphoned off to pay for expensive artwork, furniture, carpets, and drapes in the leading ministers' homes, while Apostle Armstrong winged his way all over the world using third tithe to pay for jet fuel. With these kinds of financial abuses unchecked for decades, is it any wonder that there wasn't enough church assistance to go around for noninfluential members like blind Harold Strong?

62. Fortner WCG minister David Robinson says the policy described did not really originate with Tkach, but that it was not enforced previous to Tkach's rapid ascension in 1979. Before then WCG ministers, out of compassion, often ignored the official policy and provided help to the needy as they saw fit. Tkach has zealously squelched such soft-heartedness in the ministry.

63. The broad outlines of the WCG's doctrine can be seen in Herbert Armstrong's article "God Commands That We Avoid Certain Ones!" (Worldwide News, Feb. 25, 1980). Then in "When One Is Disfellowshipped - Which Family Comes First?" (Good News, April 1980, p. 4) Armstrong made it clear that when family members were disfellowshipped, relatives who remained in the WCG's good graces were to avoid their disfellowshipped family members. Armstrong reasoned that by being in the WCG a member was in the "God Family" and that that relationship had to take precedence over relationships that were merely "physical."

It is interesting that while HWA, himself, did not seem to differentiate between "disfellowshipping," "marking," or "putting out" a member (evidenced in the last few paragraphs of HWA's Feb. 25, 1980 WN article), the WCG today seems to have a multitiered approach. "Disfellowshipping" can be merely refusing to allow a member to participate in church services or it can mean prohibiting current members from having any contact with the disfellowshipped individual. "Suspension" often seems to refer to a temporary disfellowshipping. "Marking" usually means revealing the disfellowshipped member's "sins" publicly as from the pulpit. Additionally, the WCG now seems to have added an "inactive member" category for those who have just drifted away from the church, but have not tried to criticize it or draw away members. Current members are apparently allowed social contact with "inactive members."

64. Bible passages the WCG uses to condone its disfellowshipping practices include Matt. 10:36-37, Rom. 16:17, 1 Cor. 1: 10, 11 Thes. 3:6, 14-15, and II John 10. Among those who have pointed out the flaws in the WCG's interpretations of those passages are evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong of the Church of God, International and Dr. Ernest L. Martin of the Academy for Scriptural Knowledge (P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97225).

It should be further noted that nowhere in scripture does one find that "disfellowshipping" or "marking" can only be done by ministers. I recently read copies of letters titled "Notice of Disqualification and Disfellowship From the 'Real' Body of Christ" sent by former WCG member Gary J. Kelley of Wyoming to his former WCG ministers Chuck Zimmerman and David Grey. In the letters, Kelley described the intellectual and spiritual limitations of the two men and to Zimmerman, Kelley wrote:

I blame you for the destruction of my marriage because you barged into my home and told my wife that I was spiritually leaving her and that it was okay to divorce me. I blame you for embarrassing and humiliating me in front of my wife (now my ex-wife) and children when you were invited for counseling, and for allowing my wife to defraud me and my daughter to disgrace me. I blame you for creating untold mental and physical suffering in me as well as dozens of other church members....

65. See the Dec. 30, 1984 letter of N.C. Gilbert to WCG minister Randall R. Kobernat. Copies are available from Mr. Gilbert, 7087 Washington Ave., Lantana, Florida 33462.

66. After the Dallas newspaper article appeared, writer Bill Marvel was contacted by a WCG spokesman who claimed that the WCG very rarely disfellowships anyone. Yet, just a few weeks later The Birmingham News (10/28/90, p. A-1) ran a lengthy article about the WCG disfellowshipping members in Alabama and stated that many members loyal to HWA's teachings were being disfellowshipped. One member, 90-year-old Marvin Ragsdale, was put out for letting 66-year-old R. D. Bailey, a disfellowshipped member and neighbor, mow his lawn and take him to the hospital for treatment (Ragsdale had been struck by lightning a few weeks before). Ragsdale said he was not about to forsake a friend and neighbor just because he questioned some church teachings.

67. The WCG is not the only church that practices disfellowshipping. The Jehovah's Witnesses (JWs) have a very tragic legacy of destroying individuals and families in the same way. One of our readers, Richard Rawe (Box 443, Soap Lake, WA 98851), has put together extensive documentation about the thousands who have been absolutely devastated by the JWs' disfellowshipping practices. In this regard the parallels between the JWs and the WCG are truly amazing.

68. Mal. 2:16 (Moffat) quotes God as saying "I detest divorce and cruelty to a wife." While the WCG will quote this verse in its writings, the WCG's leadership seems never to have been able to grasp the spirit of what it really means.

69. Herman L. Hoeh, "Divorce and Remarriage: How - and When - Did the Worldwide Church of God Come to Its Teaching on This Important Subject?"; The Worldwide News; May 10, 1982; emphasis his. It is difficult to read Hoeh's article without noticing a certain indifference toward the joys of romantic male-female love.

Presumably, a D and R person who wanted to be a WCG member and still remain married could do so if the mate from the first marriage was simply "bumped off" - not an impossibility considering the hatred some feel for their ex-wives or ex-husbands. Fortunately, we have never heard of someone actually committing murder in such a circumstance. Some "D and R" members, however, were known to jokingly question whether murder was a solution to their dilemma.

70. Being celibate in the WCG has always been more demanding than celibacy in any other denomination. HWA strictly forbade masturbation and, according to many ex-WCG ministers interviewed, HWA required his ministers to always ask prospective members, "Do you masturbate?" Yet, "Apostle" Armstrong, himself, loved to masturbate. So much so, he even kept a diary - called the "flog log" by some ministerial associates - recording the dates and details of such episodes. See David Robinson, Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web, John Hadden Press, Tulsa, OK 1980, p. 86.

71. Although Hoeh's statement was published in 1982, the WCG's position on authorizing the divorce of a member from an "unbelieving mate" remains the same. See current WCG form letter LO54-0190, paragraph five.

72. Just as the WCG teaching on disfellowshipping is parallel to that of the JW's (see footnote 67), the WCG's position on divorce and remarriage is strangely similar to that of the JW's. For that reason, non-WCG individuals who fear they will be divorced by their WCG-member mates may be given important insights from an article published last year in Bethel Ministries Newsletter. The article was titled "Families Broken Apart by Jehovah's Witnesses: Can They be Restored?" and appeared in the Mar./Apr. 1990 issue of Bethel Ministries Newsletter (Hope Chapel, 2420 Pacific Coast Highway, Hermosa Beach, CA 90254).

75. The Palm Beach Post, Dec. 13, 1989, p. 1B.

76. When Assistant State Attorney Douglas C. Fulton nolle prossed case no. W. Div. 88-8167-CF, he gave as grounds: (1) "The [child's] mother and legal counsel have interfered in the discovery process to the extent that they have unduly delayed the case." (2) "There is testimony by the child in the transcript of the competency hearing which suggests that the child's testimony is not reliable." (3) A licensed clinical social worker and expert in child sexual abuse "is going to testify on behalf of the defendant. Based upon interviews with the [child] and members of the [child's] family, she does not believe that the [child] was sexually abused by the defendant." And, (4) "The child has made statements about sexual abuse while in the custody of her natural mother."

77. Readers should not assume that the author of this article has confidence in the WCG's published formula for marital success. Although there is much that may be said positively about "traditional" roles in "traditional" families (George F. Gilder has done so eloquently in his book Sexual Suicide), I am convinced that the WCG's simplistic approach - with its emphasis on wifely "obedience" - is not only inadequate, it very often is a major cause of marital discord in WCG families.

We live in an age where women have more control over the procreative process, where brain power is more important for survival than muscle power, where women are as educated - and frequently are more educated - than men, and where a family's economic survival now usually requires both mates to work outside the home. In such an environment, attempts to find marital happiness by slavishly conforming to the WCG's "government from-the-top-down" formula invariably proves disappointing at best. I say this based on 25 years of observing the WCG scene and based on thousands of letters about marriage problems written to AR over the last 15 years. I am convinced that for any marriage to succeed today requires substantial effort, understanding, tolerance, communication, cooperation, and compromise by both wife and husband. A lot of husbands who think that simplistic and mindless "obedience" - as advocated by many WCG clerics - is the magical key to marital happiness are in for major disappointments.

78. Some WCG ministers (I'm told broadcaster David Albert is one) carry this theme to such extremes they actually require their wives to briskly respond "Yes Sir!" upon any command. (Some have even gone beyond that by requiring a "Yes Lord!!") Others have ridden this theme into the bedroom by teaching that the only "correct" way to make love is with the husband ON TOP!

79. I personally recall how some years ago I stayed with a WCG family while on WCG business in the Midwest. The family's older daughter was openly very hostile toward her father; he seemed disturbed and perpetually guilt ridden; his wife appeared emotionally beaten and bewildered; their younger daughter seemed confused. I mentioned to a WCG executive that I was concerned about the family's emotional state. He replied, "Well, you know that Mr. has been having sex with his older daughter don't you? Everyone in the local church knows about it." The local pastor, I discovered, knew about it too, but did not consider the man's attitude bad enough to warrant his disfellowshipment. While this took place before Tkach's ascension to power, I'm told such abhorrent situations are still tolerated in some WCG congregations.

80. Some of the most bitterly fought divorce wars I ever followed derived from situations of exactly this type. In a number of cases "macho" husbands made it very clear that by interfering in their marriages WCG ministers were putting themselves in physical danger. In fear of getting a bloodied nose or much worse, such ministers of Tkach have sometimes sheepishly ordered WCG women to relinquish custody of their children to their divorcing husbands. My impression of such passion-charged divorces is that in the end no one gets a clear victory. Husbands, although retaining custody of their children, are often not only left without a woman's help in raising the children, but are left with a significant amount of feeling for their former mates of whom their children serve as a constant reminder. I have also gotten the impression from such situations that the ex-wives are left with much guilt for having "abandoned" their children. Furthermore, those who remarry within the WCG do not seem to easily forget the passion exhibited by their ex-husbands especially in comparison to the WCGers they now find themselves sleeping with.

There are circumstances when divorce, unfortunately, may be necessary. Christians who are struggling with the doctrinal question of whether divorce is a proper alternative in a difficult marriage will find Ralph Woodrow's book Divorce and Remarriage of help. (For details write Ralph Woodrow Evangelistic Association, P.O. Box 124, Riverside, CA 92502.) On the other-hand, many psychologists now say that far too many people see divorce as a solution to their problems when in fact divorce frequently makes an individual's problems even worse. For insights on the latter, see The Case Against Divorce by Diane Medved (Ivy Books, 1990). Readers contemplating a divorce might also want to consider what it will really be like by reading The Wife-in-Law Trap by Ann Crytser (Pocket Star Books, 1990).

84. Tkach Sr. is more and more becoming a mere figurehead as was HWA in his later years when the WCG was actually run by men such as Stanley Rader and his partner, Henry Cornwall.

85. Tkach Jr. was born in Chicago, Dec. 23, 1951. His official, although extremely brief, biography appeared in the Worldwide News, Aug. 31, 1987, p. 7.

87. This advice, mind you, came from a man who has done a considerable amount of marriage counselling over the years and even went on to teach psychology at Ambassador College.

88. Space does not permit a detailed biography of Tkach Jr. at this time. A major serialized article - like the one on Tkach Sr. - is planned for future issues of AR.

89. The statement was made by author and Texas historian David R. Robinson.

Incidentally, Dean Blackwell should not be confused with his brother Lowell Blackwell who enjoyed wearing female undergarments and was put out of the WCG ministry for allowing his wife-swapping activities to become too well-known. For the official WCG biography of Blackwell, see the article "When a minister needs relief Dean Blackwell pitches in," WN, May 27, 1991, p. 5.

94. See AR31, p. 4 for a detailed list of some of Hoeh's more "positive" traits.

95. Among WCG executives, anecdotes about Hoeh's pet goat are legion. So are stories about his obsession with "natural eating habits." Former WCG minister Howard Clark and his wife Beverly recall how, on a High Sierra camping trip with a number of leading WCG ministers, the group had finished a meal of grilled trout. Hoeh - who believes God intends man to utilize all the nourishment He provides - gathered up the twenty or so discarded fish heads and devoured them gills, eyeballs, and all. "The man," says Clark, "has absolutely hellacious stomach acids." I talked to some non-WCG business executives who described Hoeh's formal banquet gastronomical eccentricities in terms far less charitable.

96. Sexologists I interviewed stated that Nazi and black leather motifs are common in homosexual B and D pornography. An erotic fascination with pregnant women, I'm told, is common to certain types of deviants. And "voyeurs" are frequently amateur photographers who ban together in porno camera clubs. See "In Search of Bettie Page," LA Weekly, Oct. 11-17, 1991, p. 22.

97. Hoeh's connections with Thailand have troubled some WCG conservatives who, quite correctly, see that nation as steeped in the worst kinds of sexual practices. In Travels (Ballantine Books, 1988, pp. 122-3), Michael Crichton, the distinguished author, film director, and M.D., has described one of Bangkok's many government-protected child whorehouses: "There is a guard, and a central courtyard. In the courtyard are parking stalls, with curtains in front of each stall. 'That's for the cars; you pull the curtain so people can't read the license numbers,' Ed [the tour guide] says. 'Politicians, really important people come to this place....'" Some WCG observers say it was Bangkok's sexual debauchery that attracted HWA to that country in his later years. The WCG's Ambassador Foundation continues to pour WCG tithe money into that deeply-troubled land.

98. The quote is taken from the Introduction to On Homosexuality: Lysis, Phaedrus, and Symposium by Plato; translated by Benjamin Jowett, with selected retranslations, notes, and introduction by Eugene O'Connor; Prometheus Books, 1991. Copies may be obtained for $7.45 each by writing to Prometheus Books, 59 John Glenn Drive, Amherst, NY 14228.

99. One minister told me that the letter, with numerous names blacked out as by a censor, has been distributed throughout the WCG by "conservatives." While he identified who he is sure are the original sender and recipient, I have not been able to get either Pasadena minister to comment. In the meantime, an unofficial spokesman for Tkach told me the letter was most likely created by someone in the Garner Ted Armstrong organization. A spokesman for that church, however, flatly denied the allegation.

100. Rader is apparently one of broadcaster Mike Wallace's favorite villains. At the opening of the CBS special "Mike Wallace Then and Now" which aired on Sept. 26, 1990, there were clips from Mike Wallace interviews of such notorious celebrities as Malcolm X, John Ehrlichman, the Shah of Iran, Ferdinand Marcos, and the Ayatollah Kohmeni. Included in the sequence was a clip of Rader yelling at Wallace: "You're contemptible!"

107. See AR16, p. 6.

108. There seems to be some doubt as to whether Waterhouse's sermons should really be considered four hours in length. One AR reader, Bernard Solleveld of Winnipeg, wrote us, "I remember sitting through a four hour sermon that Waterhouse preached. I had a tape recorder with me and filled a tape on both sides. Later when I played it back I discovered that Waterhouse had really preached four one hour sermons. That is, he had preached the same one hour sermon four times!"

114. The details of "Mrs." Ellen Escat's involvement with Tkach were covered in Part III of this series. See AR43, our December 1989 issue, pp. 4-5.

115. While for a number of years many insiders assumed Tkach planned to divorce his wife to marry Escat, in recent months he has told friends that even if he could get away with divorcing his wife, he still would not marry his secretary. Such statements plus the widespread stories about Tkach's personal preferences have apparently left Ellen Escat very depressed. Sources at headquarters have told the Report that she is drinking heavily (to the point of having been visibly drunk at some public functions) and that her liquor bills - charged to the WCG - have, of late, been astronomical. I am not condemning. I am sympathetic and have told her so in two notes.

The fact is Tkach has made a real public show of affection for "Mrs." Escat (holding hands in public, allowing repeated references to her and even photographs in the Worldwide News). But because of the widespread stories at WCG headquarters that Tkach is bisexual, there is much speculation that Escat is simply being used as a "front."

Similar speculations have appeared in the press concerning Elizabeth Taylor's relationship with the late Malcolm Forbes (see the Los Angeles Times, 3/22/90, p. E1) and about Eva Gabor's relationship with entertainer-businessman Merv Griffin (see the Washington Post, 4/12/91, p. B 1; People Weekly, 4/29/91, pp. 34-37). Both men in later life are said to have developed a sexual preference for males, with women friends serving merely as publicity "fronts."

116. The question has been raised by numerous religious leaders outside the WCG, as well. See "Ministerial Letter" of 10/17/90 by Pastor John W. Trescott (The Church of God, 900 W. Alabama, OK 73005); and William Dankenbring's Prophecy Flash! (Box 292, Altadena, CA 91003), 12/30/90, p.4; 10/30/90, p.4; 7/31/90, p. 11.

117. Internal WCG documents obtained by the Report clearly show that when Tkach travels he always requires a hotel suite with two double beds. Interesting, indeed, considering that Mrs. Tkach never travels with her husband.

118. One that we know of, that is.

119. In a separate letter to Ambassador Report, Mr. DiFiori wrote about Locke: "Members would be astonished (though they'd never believe it) that his assistant (a nice man, I have nothing against him, he gave me $50 for some fun) got up that morning and left for the day's activities doing no prayer or Bible study. I was shocked myself. Mr. Tkach was nice enough to me in Rome. Can't complain there. But he does have an explosive temper that surfaces whenever something irks him."

120. See AR41, p. 6.

121. It's interesting that since Pebworth's death the WCG has quietly begun contributing Ambassador International Cultural Foundation money to a Pasadena-area hospice. (In itself odd because the WCG in years past was never pro-hospital in its medical teachings.) Ostensibly, the money was for a hospice devoted to cancer patients (WN, April 2, 1990, p. 6). But when I personally contacted the hospice, I was informed that a large percentage of their patients were actually dying of AIDS.

122. Lest anyone misinterpret what I am saying - I am not suggesting it was wrong for Tkach to show sympathy at the death of a good friend (or to give money to a hospice for dying AIDS victims). Quite the contrary.

Dennis was a charming, intelligent man, and a talented jazz pianist. But as I recall from a personal conversation I had with him shortly before I left the WCG, he did little to hide his homosexuality. And it is for that reason, I suspect, that some church conservatives read so much into Tkach's attendance at his funeral.

123. About the only information that WCG members have been given about Feazell - the most influential WCG leader after Tkach Sr. - is a few paragraphs in the Worldwide News, Nov. 5, 1990, p. 3.

124. Maybe so. But this view erroneously assumes that HWA was really not tolerant of behaviors and affectations usually associated with homosexuals (see the Phillips translation of Rm. 1:27- "...receiving ...in their own personalities the consequences of their own perversity"). HWA's true feelings, however, were evident from his often - admitted friendship with Bill Tilden, the 1930s Hollywood-based tennis star. "Never change a winning game; always change a losing game" was a piece of advice Tilden gave HWA who frequently quoted the maxim in public. HWA's mostly unsophisticated audiences were apparently oblivious to the well-known fact that in the 1940s Tilden was publicly disgraced by two convictions on morals charges and by revelations of his obsessive homosexual interest in young boys. See Irving Wallace, et.al., The Intimate Sex Lives of Famous People, Dell, 1976, pp. 661-3. Yet HWA was always very candid about his great admiration for Tilden.

125. Excluding published photos of mere hand shaking, photos of Tkach hugging, touching, or squeezing men (or being hugged, touched, or squeezed by men) include those in the Worldwide News, 1/26/87, p. 1; 3/9/87, p. 4; 5/11/87, p. 5; 8/17/87, pp. 4-5; 8/31/87, p. 3; 5/30/88, p. 5; 6/27/88, pp. 1, 3; 8/8/88, p. 5; 10/31/88, p. 3; 1/23/89, p. 3; 2/6/89, p. 1; 2/20/89, p. 1; 8/11/89, p. 5; 3/19/90, p. 3; 4/2/90, p. 3; 5/7/90, p. 3; 8/13/90, p. 4 (seven shots on just one page!); 9/10/90, p. 3; 1/14/91, p. 3; 2/25/91, p. 3; 3/11/91, p. 3; 4/15/91, p. 3; 4/29/91, p. 3; 5/27/91, pp. 3, 6; 6/10/91, p. 6; 6/24/91, p. 3; 7/8/91, p. 3; 7/22/91, p. 3; and 8/19/91, p. 3.

126. The Church of God, International responded very forcefully to this shift in 1980 when CGI president Gainer Ted Armstrong (son of the WCG's founder) produced a powerful broadcast titled "Is Homosexuality a Sin?" Cassette copies of that broadcast are still available from CGI, P.O. Box 2530, Tyler, TX 75710.

128. The article appeared in the Good News, May-June 1990, pp. 24-26.

129. According to a March 9, 1989, letter from WCG spokesman Ronald B. Nelson, the WCG's official position is that ministers who commit such acts are always disqualified from the WCG ministry.

133. Regarding the propriety of publishing facts about the private sex lives of WCG leaders, see my editorial in the 1977 Ambassador Report, p. 1. I would additionally refer my Christian readers to I Tim. 3:2 and Eph. 5:11 (RSV). As for my friends in the legal community, I would remind them of conflict of laws fundamentals. In the Report, I prefer to apply the reporting principles of the jurisdiction being reported upon. That is, I report on the private lives of WCG leaders in the same way they frequently have reported (and not always as carefully) on the private lives of members from their pulpits (see McNair v. Worldwide Church of God, 197 Cal. App. 3d 363).

Incidentally, each and every WCG figure referred to critically in this article was given an opportunity to be interviewed. None responded to my letters. Nevertheless, should any of them wish to respond to my published comments about them, space will be made available in a future issue.

Journey From Eden

Ambassador Report occasionally receives complaints from a few readers who feel AR, and all other religion-related publications for that matter, should never mention anything having to do with sex - and especially not in a frank manner. While we can understand the sensitivities of some who were perhaps raised in a more prudish or discreet era, the fact is we live in an age where it is quite common to see the sex lives of powerful and famous people alluded to, and often discussed in detail, in the media. A few weeks ago we watched the televised U.S. Senate Judiciary Committee hearings focusing on Judge Clarence Thomas's private life. As for frankness, it would be very difficult for AR to outdo The Intimate Sex Lives of Famous People (200 of them!) by Irving Wallace, Amy Wallace, David Wallechinsky, and Sylvia Wall (Dell, 1981) - a book which not long ago was a national best seller. Finally, AR does not even come close to the kind of frankness about sex that is found in the Bible.

It is strange but true, nevertheless, that most people who have read the Bible for years are unaware of the huge number of sexual references it contains (over 600!). One reason for such ignorance is that because of extensive use of euphemisms, most translations do not reveal what would have been plain sexual language to readers in the ancient world. Another reason for the lack of awareness is that most Bible students know very little about the history and customs of biblical times. For these reasons many students of scripture will undoubtedly find a new book we've come across to be particularly helpful toward gaining a better understanding of the Bible.

Journey From Eden by Kevin James Aaron is an in-depth, well-documented account of everything about sex we were not told in Sunday School (or in Professor Rod Meredith's classes at Ambassador) and were afraid to ask. It is a complete history of the sexual practices, customs, creeds, and ceremonies among the people by whom, and about whom, the Bible was written. The 212-page quality paperback, which includes nearly 600 biblical references and an extensive bibliography, is well researched and written in a very readable style. Journey From Eden is available to AR readers for $5.95 from Cathedral Publications, P.O. Box 888, Cathedral City, CA 92235.

Letters

Referring to AR, May '91, p. 4, "HWA Remembered (Part IV)." I believe that HWA said - on tape - that he actually visited Salvadore Allende three days before he was overthrown. Of course, that was long ago and history is subject to change in WCG hands.

Douglas Chalmers
Sparta, Greece

You noted on page 4 of [AR48] that HWA met with Ceausescu in October 1971. I was on that trip along with Saintly Radar and Osumo Ghoto, our "born again" Japanese fixer. Fortunately perhaps for Ceausescu the meeting never took place. Could this be the reason he remained in office years after the cancelled meeting with HWA contrary to the fate suffered by Selassie, Marcos, et al? I jest.

Charles Hunting

Editor: Thanks for the correction. The Feb. 10, 1986 WN, from which we got our information leaves the impression HWA actually met the Romanian dictator. However, the actual wording was "October 1971 - Invited by Romanian President Nicolai Ceausescu, Mr. Armstrong travels for the first time to a communist country." The 1986 article listed many leaders HWA met with during his lifetime. It is interesting that in 1986, before Ceausescu was overthrown and executed, the WCG wanted HWA's name associated with the Romanian dictator. Yet HWA's meetings with Ferdinand and Imelda Marcos (by 1986, ousted in disgrace) and Indira Ghandi (assassinated in 1984) were not mentioned in the article.

I am recovering from an operation which was connected with my illness-SLE Lupus. I agree with your 3/25/91 letter and the reason for it. There are costs involved and I have always sent what I could. The situation in which I find myself is due to an illness which was beyond my control. I did have a good paying job when I was in the WCG and I was unmarried. However, while in that church I almost died from this illness because they forbade doctors and medicine. I have been so badly injured by the effects of Lupus attacks that I can no longer work and can barely do housework. My hands and feet are badly crippled and I have extensive damage to kidneys, heart, stomach, etc. The WCG took my money but then when I was ill and close to dying, my "unconverted" office friends came to my rental and found me in a coma and took me to the hospital. The WCG minister (Al Dennis) was so angry with me for "allowing" myself to be put in the hospital I was told not to come back to church until I repented. Well, I was so scared about losing my salvation I begged them to let me return after three full months that my illness required me to recover at home. The doctor would not release me to go back to work and my insurance ran out so I asked the church if they could help me from the third tithe fund I had paid into for years, but I was told I must apply for welfare instead. But I did not. I found out since that the third tithe fund was not to help people like me, but was the ministers' slush fund. My mother helped me and then I met my husband.

Well, there is much more to my story, but I won't go on. I am out of the WCG since 1983 and married now but with the cost of my illness and living expenses, there are few dollars left. My husband had also been in Worldwide and came out with no savings at all. We had to start from scratch and have only bare necessities. My hands are cramping so must close for now.

Thanks for sending your releases to me and my son. His marriage has been broken and his children alienated because of his wife's absolute commitment to the WCG. We have been struggling in court for the last five years over child custody and a property settlement and the end isn't yet in sight. He is a college grad and his wife (ex) has a master's degree in education, but her mind and life are completely under the control of the WCG cult.

Minister

(50 years, Church of the Brethren)

I no longer believe any of the doctrines or other garbage funneled into my mind while in Worldwide. Now, instead of being depressed about religion, I'm depressed about marriage. Although I love my husband, I deeply resent the fact that he sided with the organization that caused me so much emotional, mental, and spiritual pain - to the point that I felt that if I didn't get out, I would quite possibly lose my mind. Instead of blaming them for causing this reaction, he seemed to blame me for not being able to take it. Any trust I had in him has been damaged beyond repair. The strange thing is he seems unable to understand why we aren't close anymore. I've told him quite plainly my feelings, but he seems to beat the words out of his mind almost as soon as they are out of my mouth.

I was a WCG member until July 1986, when upon examination of irrefutable evidence I decided to get out. Subsequently, I attended several groups which brought skepticism from my WCG wife's family members that I was in the "bonds of Satan." Upon enough pressure from family, my wife departed and will not return nor talk about it.

The bottom line is that the ministers encouraged her to do so, of which I find no biblical basis. Her family cut me off like I did not exist and instead of trying to help mend the marriage they have broken it up. Their recognition of me and response to attempted communication is far from Christian.

Justification of divorce has become commonplace in the WCG in order to remove those who do not fit their mold, who use their brains, or won't get down and worship the ministers. Whatever happened to love and the marital guidelines of the Bible? I feel for the numerous AR readers who have endured similar circumstances and the destruction of the family. I dearly loved my wife and little boy and pray for them and for your newsletter to possibly save some from this ongoing process of breaking homes apart.

Joe Tkach is someone I once knew quite well, but what he did to our family is a story which many think should be told.... By signing one paper in Pasadena, Joe Tkach set my children up for abduction by mind control experts. It could be proven.

Oregon

Regarding ex-husbands who are still in the WCG and not giving proper child support money because they are tithing in preference to supporting their kids, I have this very problem with my ex-husband who I threw out of the house in 1982 because of his incestuous abuse of our daughter. I finally divorced him in 1985. He was out of the WCG for a while and so was I over the whole divorce matter. Finally I was readmitted (in another city) and then later he was readmitted. When I asked the ministers in the two cities to collaborate in helping me to get proper child support money from him, they collaborated to throw me out! After I was disfellowshipped, I sued my ex in family court and the court awarded me child support....

It all goes to show how we women are brainwashed by our husbands in the WCG to accept everything they say. I wouldn't put up with incest and adultery but I did put up with his inadequate child support for five years (1982-1987) before I decided to fight.... To be blunt, the WCG is promulgating the doctrine that children of mothers not in the WCG are worthless and are to be thrown away by their fathers who remain IN!

I became a member of this lot (I can't call them a church) as a 17 year old so that I could marry my husband (he was a long-time member). Without going into all the story, 21 years down the line with many, many years of doubt and being told I doubted because of lack of conversion and spiritual contact to God and also by not being brought up as a "decent church girl" (this I've always been told by my mother-in-law) and 20 years of marriage to a very dominant and cruel man, I decided that for the safety of my four sons and for my mental stability, I'd have to end the marriage. Very sad, I know.... I had to get a court order to have him removed from the house - it was the hardest thing I ever had to do in my life....

Now I have to start all over again - new life, new friends, new thoughts and new understandings. The boys and I are making it slowly, but we are all much more relaxed and happy. I have full custody of them. He didn't want them - too much trouble, he said.

Australia

I recently was given some copies of AR. They have been very helpful to me since I have been disfellowshipped from the WCG this last year. They explain a lot of things that I was feeling about the church. I had never seen an AR before and didn't know about the things written about. My husband would not allow me to read anything sent from ex-members or talk to any friends who left the church. Reading these issues now helps me know that God is not part of that church.

I'm now in the middle of a divorce suit. My husband, who I let take our three children for a month last August (he was to bring them back for school), kept them and filed for divorce, asking for custody, and $300 a month support from me (I'm not even able to work). The church is supporting him in this. Two WCG ministers, David H. Treybeg from Spokane and Graernme L. Marshall from Calgary, have been down-right rude and nasty, which surprised me. They told me if I would not stay with my husband I have deserted him and God and that I deserve nothing and must leave my children alone. They are doing everything they can to keep my children from me, making them scared of me and not trusting of me because of church teachings....

It is not easy to leave the church, lose your family and have friends all turn on you. Even my own mother and sister, who are members, turned on me.... I am worried about my children and how to help them. They are very confused right now.

Canada

These [young WCG] girls are being lured into marrying someone in the church. It turns out to be a big joke and a big nightmare.... I have watched the WCG for over 20 years. They have torn families apart, taking everything the families had. They did that to my late husband. We hardly had a roof over our heads by the time he got his eyes opened to the truth about five years before he died. But by then it was too late. My four children and I lived a hellish life.... There was a case up here where the husband would throw tantrum fits. The ministers still let him stay in the church. They told the wife, "just give him time." She finally filed for divorce. He came in, killed her, then himself. Young couple. Very sad.... Please warn the young [WCG] girls about the trap they are getting into.

West Virginia

I'm one of HWA's victims. I was thrown out in 1981, my wife divorced me in 1982 with the church's blessing. I was labeled "unconverted" because I had a mind that still worked, therefore the marriage was not "bound" and she was free to divorce me. This was done under the guidance and direction of "Preacher" Dave Pack of the Rochester, New York church.

Harry R. Williams

I was a school teacher in a small town on the northeast coast of Newfoundland in 1955. One Sunday night I tuned into WWVA, Wheeling and heard the powerful voice of HWA saying "The World Tomorrow." I married that year and in time we had eight children. We moved to Toronto in 1964. Everything went reasonably well until the seventies when the church allowed divorce. Then my wife got ideas and soon we were divorced and now she's remarried.

I have seen a lot of changes over the years and am beginning to reevaluate my life at 71.

Herbert H. Matthews

I don't know what it's going to take for God to straighten some of these so-called Christian men out. They think because they know the scriptures they can live their life any way they please. I never dreamed after 26 years of marriage, and at 66, I would have to start my life all over.

My brother and his family's involvement with WCG has brought such pain and sorrow to my elderly parents, not to mention the rest of the family. God's way is not a way that brings pain, destruction and separation of family units but seeks to keep His family in harmony and love for each other. I am deeply saddened that the last years of my parents' lives are being spent with the effects this cult has placed on our family. It is our prayer our family will be united once again.

I just wanted to say how much I appreciate your efforts. May the Lord uphold you.

Editor's Note

In our May issue (AR48), I mentioned how this edition (AR49) was to have appeared in September. Long-time readers, however, will have read that statement with a grin, knowing how often in the past I have had problems meeting deadlines. The reason is simple. When Ambassador Report began a decade and a half ago, we had a team of over a dozen researchers, writers, and editors. With the passing years, however, most of those involved with the Report have had to drop their involvement due to career and family responsibilities. Today, I, alone, am personally responsible for virtually all of the editorial and daily routine operations of AR. It gets to be a bit much at times and so it is not easy to always meet deadlines. I thank all of you for your patience.

This issue, although a bit long, is actually only about half of what I had prepared for publication. With the economy in recession, contributions to AR have been below expectations and so this issue represents the most that I can afford to publish right now. I will try to get out the next issue very early in 1992. Every so often I get letters from readers asking if AR has ceased publication. I have no intention of stopping the Report, at least not without giving all of you a very long advance notice. So I hope that those of you who believe in what AR is doing will continue to support our efforts.

Finally, with the year end approaching, I want to wish all of you (even those who don't "believe in" Christmas) a safe and happy holiday season and a very healthy, prosperous, and spiritually fulfilling 1992.

June 1992 (AR50)

The WCG's Decline Continues

Under the direction of Pastor General and Apostle Joseph W. Tkach, the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) continues to experience the doctrinal changes, the policy shifts, and the declining influence that began with the death of church founder Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA) in 1986. Significant WCG news items of the last 18 months include the following:

Increasingly, some WCG ministers are teaching that Herbert W. Armstrong was a type of false prophet who really didn't understand the true gospel. Even Tkach is admitting that Armstrong had taught many errors. Notice what Tkach wrote in his March 25, 1991 co-worker letter:

Many long-time members and co-workers will remember that there was a time when we were preaching, based on our interpretation of Bible prophecy, that "America has won her last war!" We were sincere, and we thought we understood the prophecies correctly. Our goal was to warn people that they needed to awaken from spiritual lethargy and turn to God. But, brethren, we were wrong - not about the need to turn to God, certainly - but about using specific prophetic interpretations as the means of getting people to do so.

What is the gospel? The gospel is the good news of the kingdom of God, that is, the redemption of humanity, the reconciliation of all mankind to God from its state of alienation from him (Luke 4:18-19). That reconciliation is possible only through the Son of God, Jesus Christ....

The WCG's income continues downward. The church's total revenue for 1990 was $211,563,000 - a drop of $214,000 compared with the previous year's revenue. But in 1990 church expenses actually exceeded revenue by $10,592,000 according to the church's Worldwide News (WN, 9/2/91, financial statement, p. 7). Now Tkach has announced that WCG income for 1991 was 3.8 percent below the total for 1990 (Tkach co-worker letter of Jan. 27, 1992). The current year has produced no substantial rise in the WCG's revenue levels. Insiders at Ambassador College in Texas say there have been numerous cutbacks there in recent months. The Plain Truth magazine, which once had a circulation of over 8 million, is now reported to be under the 2.7 million circulation mark reported as recently as last fall (WN, 9/2/91, financial statement, p. 5). Long gone are the days when the WCG's income grew by 30% per year.

After a ten-year relationship with Arthur Andersen & Co., the WCG has a new external accounting firm: Coopers & Lybrand, another one of "The Big Six" (WN, 4/29/91, p. 8). No reason for the switch has been made public.

* * *

The WCG has taken its $15 million advertising account out of the hands of the giant BBDO advertising agency and has given the account to Dick Janik & Associates, a small Los Angeles-based media buying service. To handle the new business, Janik had to hire six new employees (Los Angeles Times, 2/5/91, p. D6).

* * *

The Plain Truth magazine has a new editor. He is evangelist Greg Albrecht. Former Plain Truth editor Herman L. Hoeh will now be a kind of super editor over all WCG literature including magazines, the Bible Correspondence Course, form letters, and booklets (WN, 12/23/91, p. 1). Insiders view old-timer Hoeh as the last conservative brake on the WCG's ongoing transformation. As such, many younger WCG ministers and executives are looking forward to the day when Hoeh retires.

* * *

Former Ambassador College Dean of Students and WCG pastor Richard F. Plache has rejoined the WCG after being released from prison in 1991. In 1988 Plache was convicted on 18 counts of mail fraud and SEC violations (see AR 41). Plache remains married, lives in the San Diego area, and has recently worked as a writer on contract for the WCG's Plain Truth magazine. His future employment plans are unclear.

The McNair v. Worldwide Church of God libel case (see ARs 10, 29, 34, 35, 37, 40, 41, and 48) continues into its 14th year. In November, the U.S. Supreme Court refused to intervene on the WCG's behalf (Pasadena Star-News, 11/5/91, p. A3). Then, in their latest round in court, WCG lawyers (about a dozen of them) argued that the case should be thrown out because Leona McNair had supposedly been a WCG minister. She told the press, however, that the WCG's claim that it had allowed a woman to be a minister was ludicrous. "You never dared open your mouth," she said. "I just served a lot of tea." Los Angeles Superior Court Judge David A. Horowitz denied the church's motion (Pasadena Star-News, 3/20/92, p. A6) and the new trial is currently scheduled to begin July 6.

We are sorry to report that Beverly Gott, the eldest daughter of WCG founder Herbert W. Armstrong, recently passed away at age 73. She died of cancer. Insiders say that, although she was neither a WCG member nor employee, she had been receiving financial support from the WCG for many years.

* * *

Other prominent WCG figures who recently passed away include WCG ministers Walter M. Dickinson, 70, and T. Vincent Panella, 63, who both died of cancer (WN, 3/25/91, p. 3). The WCG's leading black minister, Harold L. Jackson, 80, died in mid-December. He was a member of the WCG's Council of Elders (WN, 12/23/91, p. 1).

The WCG continues to modify its doctrines to make them more palatable to the majority of mainstream Christians. For instance, the WCG is now officially teaching a modified type of Trinity doctrine. An official WCG doctrinal position written by K. J. Stavrinides states:

The Worldwide Church of God teaches the full divinity of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit - the biblical foundation of all Trinitarian discussions....

The Worldwide Church of God has made all biblical truths an indispensable part of its teaching, including the doctrine that God is One - but not the specific way in which God is One (which is entirely a philosophical matter). It teaches the full divinity of the Father, of the Son and of the Holy Spirit - but it does not enter the debate of whether God is an essential, a personal, or a supra-personal being, in the way these terms are used by theologians.

There is no mention of God being a "Family" as HWA had taught. Although the WCG is still quietly teaching that the Holy Spirit is a divine power and not a divine person (WN, 12/23/91, p. 1), Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Chicago was so impressed with the WCG's new openness that in early 1991 it invited a number of WCG leaders to the seminary to meet with its faculty and graduate students.

* * *

Many mainstream Christian groups are applauding the WCG's drive to become part of the Christian majority. Christian Research Journal (Summer 1991, p. 34) wrote how "The Worldwide Church of God continues its march toward Christian orthodoxy." Michael Snyder, a professional PR man who frequently represents the WCG, has announced that the WCG has discontinued distribution of HWA's Mystery of the Ages, The Incredible Human Potential, and The United States and Britain in Prophecy (ibid.).

* * *

The WCG's march toward mainstream acceptability can be seen in many subtle shifts in church policy. For example, not long ago a Jewish cleric named Wexler was given a considerable amount of air time on The World Tomorrow, with program host David Albert praising him as "a remarkable rabbi!" Even the WCG's attitude toward traditional church architecture is changing. Whereas the WCG ministry once routinely referred to church steeples as "phallic symbols," the February 1992 Plain Truth (p. 7) showed a picture of a Gothic-style cathedral along with the caption, "Church architecture, a symbol of the civilizing power and influence of Christianity in a materialistic world."

* * *

The WCG used to view unfavorably the practice of cremating, as opposed to burying, dead bodies. No more. WCG insiders report that cremation is regularly being allowed - particularly for cases of widows dying while on third tithe support (there are a few). Cremation saves the church money.

* * *

According to the Worldwide News (3/11/91, p. 1), actordirector Sam Wanamaker was chosen as the recipient of the Ambassador Foundation's fourth annual Ambassador Award for Excellence. With substantial financial assistance from the WCG, Wanamaker is spearheading the drive to rebuild Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London. The original Globe was shut down in 1642 when Britain's Puritans under Oliver Cromwell closed all playhouses in London (Los Angeles Times, 12/18/90, Calendar section, p. 1).

In presenting the award to Wanamaker, Tkach said:

As we near the dawn of a new century, it is important to do everything in our power to build a better world.... For nearly two decades the Ambassador Foundation - with the sponsorship of the Worldwide Church of God - has sought to promote understanding and to reduce tension throughout the world.

Ambassador alumni who took classes years ago with church founder HWA can vividly recall when he taught that building a better world now was emphatically not the purpose of the end-time church. Being "a watchman" was. Tkach has now changed all that.

* * *

Many who studied theology at Ambassador during the sixties can recall how certain leading church clerics then saw Prince Charles as the end-time "profane, wicked prince of Israel" described in Ezek. 21:25. While many of the tabloids now seem to agree with the WCG's old assessment of Charles' character, today's WCG has a decidedly different official view of the heir to the British throne. WCG writer John R. Schroeder states:

A prince with principles

Prince Charles is a sincere believer in higher values.

In the conclusion to his book on architecture, A Vision of Britain, he wrote: "What is the point of being the most technologically advanced society if, at the same time, we lose our soul...."

The prince's words are a carefully phrased call to live a new way of life. Jesus Christ spoke similar words....

When he becomes king, Charles will take on the title "Defender of the Faith." While this title applies specifically to his relationship to the Church of England, he is already making his stand for the sacred over the secular.

He is worried by the prominence of materialism and the dwindling concern for nature, community and creativity. His stand for Shakespeare is just one example of responsible royal concern for the people whose sovereign he will become.

Yes, as that Cole Porter song goes, "Brush up your Shakespeare...."

* * *

Even though a number of WCG executives now privately celebrate Christmas in a secular way, the WCG is still teaching its members that Christmas is not to be observed religiously. Nevertheless, the WCG's leadership seems to be mellowing a bit toward the idea of celebrating Christmas. Two letters published without editor's comment in the Worldwide News (11/25/91, p. 3 and 12/23/91, p. 3) reveal this new spirit of moderation:

I have recently read your editorial in the November-December Plain Truth magazine regarding "Is Christmas Christian?"... your belief that it's time for Christians to reconsider the yearly practice that taints the worship of Christ with the pagan "birthday of the invincible sun" is totally ludicrous. As long as we keep in our hearts the true meaning of Christmas, God will be glorified because we honor and remember the birth of his Son.

I am dismayed when I hear Church children use the word pagan. Nothing will distress a teacher more than a 6-year-old telling her that her most sacred holiday of the year is pagan. We have never used that word around our children. I tell our children that... it would not be kind to make fun of what others do, just as we don't want people to make fun of what we do.

In a recent editorial (WN, 5/5/92, pp. 1,7), Tkach explained to his followers that "It should not become a spiritual issue if we miss eating unleavened bread a day or two during the Festival [of Unleavened Bread]."

* * *

The ongoing changes in the WCG, of course, are prompting many to leave. Pastor John Rittenbaugh (tel. 704-544-2016) recently exited with five local elders and about 200 members. He now has congregations in Charlotte, NC; Washington, D.C.; Anaheim, CA; and Chicago, IL.

One of our readers, Mr. M. Thompson (P.O. Box 276, Richmond, NSW 2753, Australia) recently sent an open letter to the regional director of the WCG in Australia. The letter discussed a number of reasons why Thompson sees an evil conspiracy operating within the WCG hierarchy. Ironically, Thompson was disfellowshipped for believing something Joseph W. Tkach, himself, had preached in Sydney on Dec. 26, 1987:

And I tell you now that... we are living in the day when the Laodicean spirit is beginning to take root within God's Church. And it won't be long before the Laodicean spirit and the Laodicean Church and the Philadelphian Church are going to be side by side. And from outward appearance you won't be able to tell...

With the WCG changing so many of its fundamental teachings, naturally many church publications are out of date. For example, as the Pastor General's Report of May 21, 1991 reported: "The current 32-lesson [Bible Correspondence] course, which is replete with dated explanations of our teachings and doctrines, has been revised as an interim course of 12 lessons...."

The 12-lesson interim course will be in effect until the fall of 1992. Then, according to the Pastor General's Report, there will be another new Bible Correspondence Course. It will be interesting to see how many new teachings that one contains.

"God's Church Isn't What It Used to Be" - title of an article published in the Nov./Dec. 1990 Good News magazine (now defunct).

The New, Loving WCG

At the end of 1991, many religious news writers concluded that the top religion stories of the year involved sexual issues. The Los Angeles Times on Dec. 28 (p. F16) carried a Religious News Service article that began:

Disputes over human sexuality rippled through religious bodies in 1991, leading even liberal denominations to wonder how far they could go in modifying traditional standards in light of contemporary practices. The issue of homosexuality was especially divisive, turning up as a key factor in a threatened schism in the Episcopal Church and seriously undermining the ecumenical movement as Orthodox groups suspended activities in the National Council of Churches. Debates on sexuality in many churches this year were like hot coals dropping on a raging fire.

And so, too, it was with the WCG. Space limitations and the sensibilities of some of our readers prohibit us from running most of the letters we have received relating to sexual matters. However, two letters we recently received will show the kinds of concerns being raised in WCG circles.

Thanks for the recent AR. It's always interesting, although as time goes on I cease to be shocked by anything anymore, especially concerning what goes on in the hierarchies of religious organizations.

Considering that one of the main themes of this recent issue was homosexuality (the morality of which is as debatable as it may be), I wish now that I had written you sooner. I wanted to relate one of my experiences at the college [Ambassador] which wouldn't weigh so heavily of and by itself were it not for the fact that a friend of mine living here in Japan (and a fellow "ex-AC grad," as we like to refer to ourselves) mentioned that he had an experience eerily almost identical to mine.

I had requested personal counseling with [WCG Elder] Fred Stevens of Accounting who was then my Ambassador Club Director. After our discussion at his office, in which he included many anecdotes of his many close contacts with HWA (apparently he was one of the few who had direct access to him in his later years), he invited me to take a stroll with him around campus a few times. As he shared many things with me and I with him, I began to feel that here I had a true friend and a close brother. After strolling around awhile, he invited me to come to his apartment. I gladly accepted the invitation. There we continued to talk in his living room, and the conversation came to how we should all love each other, and be ready to help each other, talk to each other about anything (including sexual matters) without inhibitions, etc. I found myself opening up to him as well about a few intimate matters.

Well, eventually I needed to get back to campus, but as I rose to leave, he came close to me and kept talking about how we really should be closer to one another, etc. and began to embrace me. That's fine - I don't mind hugging my good buddies once in a while, but I gotta tell you - this hug was a doozy. As well as lasting long past the usual accepted length (whatever that is), he pressed his crotch up against mine and began caressing me to the point where it was getting very embarrassing for me.

And you see, at the same time I was chastising myself for feeling embarrassed about it. After all, Fred Stevens was a minister and couldn't possibly have any deviant sexual motives, so why was it so awkward for me?

As this "embrace" began dragging on for many minutes, I finally couldn't stand it any longer and broke away, saying I had to hurry back to the dorm.

The next (and last) time I talked with Fred Stevens was in the Auditorium a few days later, but the feeling was completely different. I approached him as before, but now he was changed, somehow. I mean the atmosphere was colder. He greeted me, yes, but certainly not as the man I had felt so close to the other day. He had nothing to say to me. You can imagine how confused I was.

Now looking back, I wonder if, since I didn't give him what he wanted - I shudder to even imagine what that could be - he had no use for my friendship.

What really shocked me was when my friend Darryl recently told me that he had had a "close encounter" with Stevens that compares almost word for word with mine described above. Uncanny, isn't it?

(signed) Mike Savoia

A number of young men have stated that they have had private encounters with minister Stevens that were almost identical. Suspecting that Elder Stevens could explain these incidents as perhaps some new type of "laying on of hands," we phoned him on May 7. Unfortunately, as soon as we asked him what the WCG's current position was on homosexuality, he declined to continue the conversation any further.

At AR we continue to hear cases of WCG ministers who use their authority as a pretext for becoming intimate with members counseling on spiritual matters. This type of abuse of trust is not found only in the WCG, but is a problem rampant in many denominations. In the Los Angeles Times (March 31, 1990, p. F14), David Briggs of Associated Press wrote:

An increasing number of complaints by laymen and research indicating that up to a quarter of the clergy may have committed some form of sexual misconduct have led churches to address the issue, according to some church leaders and ethicists.... [A survey] showed up to a quarter of clergy engaged in misconduct that included such acts as kissing and hugs that were more than friendly embraces....

"By authority of their position, ministers have a lot of power and a lot of sway over people coming to them seeking help," [Rev. Emilie M. Townes of the St. Paul School of Theology in Kansas City, MO] said. "If the minister's always right, anything he or she asks of them must not be out of line."... "Sexual involvement by clergy is tantamount to family incest," said the Rev. Susan Moss, a member of the Interfaith Task Force on Sexual Exploitation by Clergy in Minnesota. "The dynamics are the same: Parishioners come to church expecting that clergy will help provide a nurturing, caring environment, a safe place to grow in faith. When that trust is betrayed, the whole congregation becomes the victim."

As long-time AR readers are well aware, there is extensive documentation of the sexual excesses and abuses of authority by leading WCG ministers over the years. For that reason undoubtedly, a new parenting program instituted in at least one WCG congregation is being viewed with great suspicion. One of our Wisconsin readers wrote us:

Last Saturday, the 7th of December, the local WCG congregation in Wausau had a meeting concerning the new program there called: "Little Pals."

The way it works is this: The adults each have a "little pal" (i.e., a child from another family), as their own "little pal." For example, my WCG-member brother-in-law has another family's young son (maybe 9 or 10 years old) as his "little pal." My sister-in-law has another family's daughter as her "little pal." Both their "little pals" have mothers and fathers and siblings in WCG. My mother-in-law who is in the church has a "little pal" girl who has a mother and sister in WCG (but whose father is not a member).

I asked her if it was the case that men get boys as their "little pals" (yes) and women get girls (yes). This isn't just for "spiritual orphans" either. I asked if this was to be just at services that they sit with each other, she said she thought so, but commented that the Deacon and his wife had the family of one of their "little pals" over to their home for a meal. She also told me that one of the functions of having a "little pal" would be to exchange Feast of Tabernacles gifts with them.

Having a "little pal" seems to be a great invitation for any "closet" or otherwise pedophile to get away with his/her vile acts with the WCG's blessing, and none (i.e., innocent parents of innocent children) could be the wiser.

It is also another substitution for an extended family that would normally come with grandparents and aunts, uncles and cousins in families outside the isolated cult atmosphere. It will encourage the commune type relationship of one cultist to another.

How many congregations are involved in the "Little Pals" program is unclear. The program at this point does not appear to be nationwide. But one has to wonder why WCG headquarters would allow any of its local ministers to initiate such a plan. Many innocent people find it difficult to believe that some individuals could possibly use a Christian organization as a means of furthering personal homosexual goals. Nevertheless, such a misuse of Christian fellowship is increasingly common. One of our readers recently sent us a collection of classified ads that have appeared in "adult" publications in California. Most contained graphic language so offensive we cannot reproduce them here. Nevertheless, what we found most shocking were the ads run by supposedly Christian groups: "Affirmation" - a gay and lesbian Mormon organization, "SDA Kinship International" - supposedly "the oldest and largest support group for Gay/Lesbian Adventists," "Sovereignty" - gay and lesbian Jehovah's Witnesses of San Francisco and Sacramento, and other organizations of homosexuals who are supposedly Christian.

Even more shocking is a letter we recently received from an Alabama man who puts out a Bible Correspondence Course. This Bible teacher, who claims to be "a servant of God," privately advocates nudism, child pornography, and erotic love between adults and children. He has difficulty understanding why police agencies are monitoring his activities and why AR refuses to publish his address or promote his Bible course.

The bottom line is this: We should not assume that because someone is religious, or is even a minister, they should automatically be allowed to be physically intimate with us or to be trusted with our children.

Joseph W. Tkach - God's New Rep on Planet Earth

(Part VII)

by John Trechak

Anyone who has followed The Worldwide News regularly in the years since Joseph W. Tkach took over the Worldwide Church of God will have noticed that a considerable amount of that church newspaper's space is devoted to the idolization of Tkach. In photo after photo we see "The Apostle" - face perpetually tanned, figure maintained by careful dieting, body swathed in a wide variety of very casual to very formal outfits, and demeanor relaxed from his daily Jacuzzi sessions with friends. We see Tkach, the serious executive, lecturing employees. We see Tkach, the wise counsellor, listening attentively to the words of celebrities. We see Tkach, the indignant cleric, pounding pulpit lecterns before WCG congregations around the world. We see Tkach, the father figure, holding babies and gently stroking the hair of little children. And we see Tkach, the master politician, jovially shaking hands with long lines of adoring WCG followers at each local church he visits.

Among loyal WCG members, there seems to be not the slightest suspicion that what they are being media fed about Tkach is anything other than truly sincere, spontaneous spirituality. Yet, to those with even a little training and experience in advertising, public relations, and the modern media, it is immediately obvious that the Tkach organization has spent considerable time, money, and effort to create its idol, and that all of Tkach's public appearances are carefully staged.

For a number of years we have heard stories about some of the gimmicks the Tkach team uses to prop up the Tkach image. For instance, at most stops Tkach will actually spend an entire hour or more shaking hands with congregation members. But before each local performance, we've been told, Tkach requires a list of the names of the area's biggest contributors, with personal data on each, so that he may give them special attention in the receiving line. We at AR are not naive. Nevertheless, when one of our WCG headquarters sources recently provided us with copies of internal WCG documents showing the idol-enhancing machinations and excesses of the Tkach team, even we were surprised at the lengths to which the Tkach organization will go to control the minds of its members and to pamper its guru.

The documents comprise official instructions from Tkach's headquarters tour coordinators to WCG advance men. We had originally planned to put full-size photos of the documents in this issue. But because of their large print and excessive white space, doing so would have required using too many AR pages. Instead, we are publishing the complete contents of the leaked documents, but in smaller type. There are no editings, deletions, or additions. Emphasis is theirs:

Transportation Arrangements

For Mr. Tkach and his traveling party:

- 1) Reserve three (3) WHITE LINCOLN TOWN CARS. If Lincoln Towncars are not available, fullsize sedans will suffice. White Towncars are best; our second choice is black.
- 2) Look at each vehicle we are to use. Be sure each is clean inside and out. Many times the vehicles need to have a smoke smell removed before use. Be sure the interior of each car is in good condition and not a wild color.
- 3) The lead Towncar (the one used for Mr. Tkach) needs to have each tire over inflated by four pounds.

For Mr. Jay Brothers (Steward) supply the following:

- 1) Please reserve a FULL-SIZE VAN FOR LUGGAGE.
- 2) Be sure the following requests are met:
  - A) Provide a chauffeur to drive the van to and from the hotel.
  - B) It should have only two seats (one for the chauffeur and one for Mr. Brothers). Be sure there are no seats in the back, only an empty bed.

If the television crew is coming, please reserve a Mini-Van:

Be sure the following requests are met:

- A) Provide a chauffeur to drive the van during the entire stay. Please provide a complete map of the city with the airport, hotel and meeting hall marked for easy reference.
- B) It is best if the van has windows all the way around, for filming purposes. Take the last seat out of the back of the van for equipment storage.
- C) The television crew may be traveling commercially and will therefore arrive at a different time than Mr. Tkach. If this is the case, you need to be sure the vehicle is available for them when they arrive.

The captains will make their own transportation arrangements.

If touring is approved for Sunday, please reserve the following:

- 1) An EXECUTIVE 40-PASSENGER BUS.
- 2) It should be a very nice bus with high-back seats, restroom facilities, etc. Do not get a school bus, but rather a very nice executive touring bus.
- 3) Provide the following items in the bus for Sunday's touring activities:
  - A) 7UP, regular and Diet Coke in glass bottles
  - B) Perrier mineral water in glass bottles
  - C) Various salted and unsalted nuts
  - D) Orange juice
- 4) If the bus trip is longer than 45 minutes, provide the following items in addition to those items listed above:
  - A) One large platter of various cheeses and crackers
  - B) One large platter of sliced fresh fruit with dip
  - C) One large vegetable platter with dip

Hotel Accommodations

- 1) Please carefully research to find the FINEST HOTELS in your area. Take time to visit each of these hotels. If at all possible, look at the actual suites we will be using. Take note of the interior and exterior condition of the hotel, quality of service, decor, etc. If it is difficult to make a decision, it might be helpful to make up a list of pros and cons for each hotel. We would like the very best your city has to offer. Keep in mind that quality is of the utmost importance. Before making a commitment, call me for further instructions.
- 2) If possible, we would like to have king size beds in all rooms. If they are not available, queen size will suffice.
- 3) Be sure to get a confirmation number from the hotel and have them send you a confirmation receipt.

Please call the hotel, one or two days prior to Mr. Tkach's arrival, to confirm that all rooms are as close to each other as possible. If the television crew is coming, confirm that one one-bedroom suite is as close to the front lobby and elevator as possible - for equipment and hauling.

- 4) All hotel charges will be paid by Mr. Michael Rasmussen on the day of departure.

Please personally inspect the following rooms:

5) One two-bedroom suite for Mr. Tkach (PRESIDENTIAL OR EQUIVALENT). It should have two (2) separate bedrooms with a separate living room area, dining room, air conditioning and a refrigerator. We would also like to have a jacuzzi-type tub in the master bedroom if possible. Please be sure this suite is the very finest. (If this suite has three bedrooms, please be sure to let me know.)

For security reasons, do not use Mr. Tkach's name in making the reservation or in any hotel listing. The only exception to this would be our private in-house rooming list which you will distribute at the airport upon BAC 1-11 arrival.

6) Another two-bedroom suite. It should have two (2) separate bedrooms with a separate living room area and air conditioning. This suite should be located on the same floor as close as possible to Mr. Tkach's suite.

7) Two (2) one-bedroom suites. They should each have a bedroom with a separate living room area and air conditioning. These suites should also be located as close as possible to Mr. Tkach's suite.

8) Four (4) deluxe rooms for the flight crew. Each should have a bedroom with a king or queen size bed and air conditioning.

Try to obtain rooms that are not right next to an elevator, ice machine or anything else that might cause a disturbance throughout the night.

If the television crew is coming please inspect the following (in addition to the rooms listed above):

9) One (1) one-bedroom suite. It should have a bedroom with a separate living room area and air conditioning. It needs to be as close to the front lobby and an elevator as possible (for equipment hauling).

10) Two (2) deluxe rooms with king or queen size bed and air conditioning.

Please supply the following in Mr. Tkach's suite:

- A) One large platter of fresh fruit
- B) One small platter of fresh sliced vegetables and dip
- C) One small platter of various cheeses and crackers
- D) Two quarts or liters of spring water in glass bottles (room temperature), EVIAN if available
- E) Perrier (two large glass bottles)
- F) Two six-packs Coke Classic in glass bottles

- G) Four six-packs Diet Coke in glass bottles
- H) Six containers of PLAIN NON FAT yogurt
- I) Six containers of "Spicy V-8" and six containers of regular V-8

IT MAY BE NECESSARY TO HAVE THE HOTEL PROVIDE AN ADDITIONAL REFRIGERATOR IN MR. TKACH'S SUITE.

Please supply the following in the second two-bedroom suite:

- A) Four quarts or liters of spring water in glass bottles (room temperature), EVIAN if available
- B) Perrier (twelve 8-ounce glass bottles)

Please supply the following in all one-bedroom suites and deluxe rooms:

- A) Two quarts or liters of spring water in glass bottles (room temperature), EVIAN if available
- B) Perrier (four 8-ounce glass bottles)
- C) Six spicy and six regular V-8 containers (one-bedroom suites only)
- D) One six-pack of Diet Coke in glass bottles

Important Note - If television crew is coming: Due to allergies, please be sure there are no flowers of any kind in Mr. Bergstrom's room.

Mr. Michael Rasmussen's American Express card is to be used for reserving hotel rooms, and banquet rooms. I will also be sending a cash advance made out in your name. Please use this to pay for any charges that are not covered by the American Express card.

It will be necessary for you to keep detailed records of how this money is spent. Please keep all receipts, marking them with the date, amount spent and a brief description of the item or service being paid. These receipts, along with the balance in money, should be sent to Pasadena as soon after the trip as possible.

If you need additional funds, call me, and I will immediately have another check drafted and mailed to you. If there is not sufficient time for this, another alternative is for you to use money out of your local account and then send in the receipts. A reimbursement check will be sent to you.

Send all receipts and balance of advance of:

Mr. Derrick Coker
Worldwide Church of God
Accounting Department
P.O. Box 385

Welcoming Arrangements

- 1) Due to airport security, we ask that only the coordinating pastor, his family, chauffeurs and photographers meet Mr. Tkach at the airport.
- 2) Please be at the airport a minimum of one-half hour before the BAC 1-11's scheduled arrival. There is always the possibility of early arrival due to winds.
- 3) Assign two (and only two) photographers to take pictures for possible use in "THE WORLDWIDE NEWS." Photographs should capture all the highlights of the visit (five to seven rolls each). Refer to the information sheet sent to the pastor from Headquarters.

Please give all undeveloped film to Mr. Rasmussen before the BAC 1-11 departure.

- 4) Once you have returned your completed questionnaire I will call you with the name of the airport handling agent for your area. After you have his name and phone number, please make the necessary arrangements for all vehicles to drive onto the tarmac alongside BAC 1 -11 during arrival and departure. Due to security and safety policies at some airports, this will not be allowed. If this is the case in your area, have the vehicles and chauffeurs as close as the airport officials will allow.
- 5) Please purchase 14 small tourist lapel pins which are representative of your area for everyone in the traveling party. It can be the name of your state, stage flag, etc. Try to keep the pins smaller than 3/4 inch in diameter. These pins should be in the envelopes which will be distributed at the airport upon Mr. Tkach's arrival.

Sequence of Events

Friday - Late Afternoon:

- 1) Mr. Tkach and his party arrive at the airport and are met by the coordinating minister and family, photographers and chauffeurs. The coordinating minister will distribute envelopes containing hotel keys, rooming list and lapel pin.
- 2) Chauffeurs then drive Mr. Tkach and his party from the airport to their hotel.

Friday evening:

Free

Saturday morning:

Free, until hotel departure for Sabbath services.

Saturday afternoon:

- 1) Chauffeurs pick up Mr. Tkach and his party at their hotel and drive them to services.
- 2) Arrive at hall 20 minutes before services [and] are directed to the hospitality room. The hospitality room is for Mr. Tkach, his party, coordinating minister and those serving.
- 3) Two minutes before services Mr. Tkach and his party are escorted from the hospitality room to their seats in the front row.
- 4) 1:00 p.m. Services begin.
- 5) 3:00 p.m. Services conclude.
- 6) After Services, Mr. Tkach shakes hands with the brethren and ministry.
- 7) After shaking hands, Mr. Tkach is directed to the ministers' meeting.
- 8) The meeting normally lasts one hour. Mr. Tkach speaks for 45 minutes and then will conduct a 15 minute question-and-answer session.
- 9) After the meeting Mr. Tkach and his party will be driven back to their hotel (if the meeting is not in the hotel).
- 10) That evening Mr. Tkach will host a buffet dinner at his hotel for all ministers and their wives as well as all deacons, deaconesses and spouses. The buffet dinner will be held in one of the hotel's banquet rooms. The banquet will be coordinated by Mr. Jay Brothers (BAC 1-11 Steward).
- 11) 9:00-10:00 The dinner will conclude. Remainder of the evening is free.

Sunday:

- 1) Mr. Brothers will pick up the luggage of the traveling party.

2) 10:00 a.m. Depart hotel in an executive bus for touring (if approved by Mr. Tkach).

3) After touring, the chauffeur will drive Mr. Tkach and his party to the airport.

That's Show Biz, Folks!

Editor: We showed the above Tkach tour guidelines to friends in Hollywood working in the entertainment industry and familiar with its customs. One television talk show executive told us, "Very few celebrities stage their appearances this meticulously, and with the exception of a few superstars like Michael Jackson, Madonna, or Prince, very few entertainers - even among the very neurotic - would expect to be pampered to such a degree." Indeed, those we talked to said they could think of only one celebrity who exceeded Tkach in degree of required pampering and in concern for personal image - the Pope.

Counter-Cult Organizations and Materials

Today, there are so many organizations battling the cults and so many books on the cult phenomenon, it is difficult for AR to keep track of all of them. We list below a number that some readers may find of interest. Appearance on the following list does not imply that we endorse all the views of such authors or groups, or that they endorse ours. Nevertheless, we have found the following anti-cult books, journals, and organizations noteworthy.

How to Rescue Your Loved One from the Watchtower by David A. Reed (Baker Book House, 1989) is a book not directly about rescuing someone from the WCG, but about rescuing members of the Jehovah's Witnesses (JWs). Nevertheless, because there are so many similarities between the JWs and the WCG, many who have relatives or friends in the WCG can benefit from Reed's book. Mr. Reed, currently affiliated with the Baptist denomination, is a former JW elder and presiding minister who has written extensively about the JWs. His newsletter Comments from the Friends is devoted to exposing JW doctrinal errors and to helping both current and former JWs. Those interested in obtaining copies of How to Rescue Your Loved One from the Watchtower ($9.95 per copy) and back issues of Comments from the Friends ($1.50 per copy) should write to Comments from the Friends, P.O. Box 840, Stoughton, MA 02072.

Another organization that is working with JWs is Bethel Ministries of Manhattan Beach, California. As with David Reed's ministry, this organization is aimed at helping current and former JWs. Nevertheless, it has materials that are relevant to the WCG. For instance, a number of articles in recent issues of the Bethel Ministries newsletter, edited by Randall Watters, were particularly relevant to the WCG phenomenon: "Deprogramming and Exit Counselling - Are They for Christians?" (Jan./Feb. 1990),

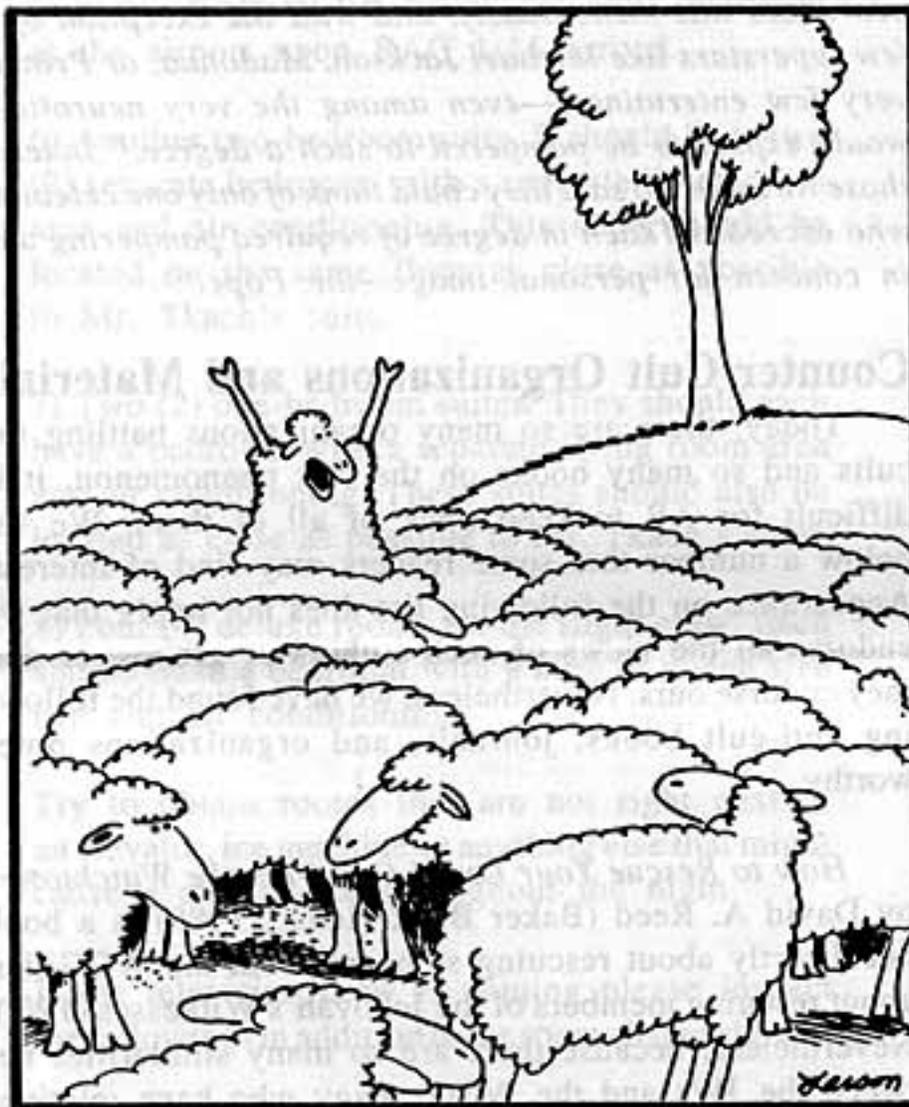

"When Prophecies Fail - A Sociological Perspective on Failed Expectations in the Watchtower Society" (May/June 1990), and "Understanding Watchtower Phobias" (July/Aug. 1990) all contained much of relevance to understanding the WCG as well as the JWs. Those interested in obtaining more information about their publications should write to: Bethel Ministries, P.O. Box 3818, Manhattan Beach, CA 90266.

Psychiatry and the Cults - An Annotated Bibliography by John A. Saliba (638 pages, $60 plus postage and handling). The publisher of this large work has not supplied us with a review copy so we are unable to comment as to the quality of its contents. Those who would like information about this book should contact Garland Publishing, 136 Madison Ave., Dept. G.K., New York, NY 10016 (tel. 212-686-7492).

Cultic Studies Journal ($15 per year) is published semiannually by American Family Foundation, Box 336, Weston, MA 02193 (tel. 617-893-0930). We have not yet been provided a review copy of this academic journal, but those who are interested may be able to get details by writing to the publisher.

Religion Analysis Service, Inc., P.O. Box 806, Brainerd, MN 56401-0806 (tel. 800-562-9153) is an evangelical Christian organization that distributes "books and tracks exposing cults and unscriptural teachings." Those interested in knowing what they have available should request a copy of their catalog.

"Wait! Wait! Listen to me! ... We don't HAVE to be just sheep!"

Watchman Expositor is a cult expose periodical published by the Watchman Fellowship, Inc., P.O. Box 13251, Arlington, TX 76094-0251. In the last few years they have done a number of articles relating to Armstrongism. Their vol. 7, no. 3 edition, for instance, carried an article (p. 5) on the WCG's old "born again" doctrine. And their vol. 8, no. 2 issue contained an excellent article about a number of central WCG teachings. Their vol. 8, no. 5-sp issue contained a very thorough history of the WCG and an analysis of the recent WCG doctrinal changes. The article was entitled "What in the Worldwide Church of God is Going On?" Also of special interest is The Watchman Expositor's "1992 Cult Catalog" which lists many WCG splinter groups as cults.

The spring 1991 edition of Christian Research Journal contained an article about the WCG written by Bill Alnore. Those interested in receiving a copy should write to the journal at P.O. Box 500, San Juan, Capistrano, CA 92693.

What About Those Dangerous Religious Groups? is a concise booklet on the cult phenomenon. It is particularly helpful in giving relevant Bible passages that highlight the spiritual characteristics of "dangerous" religious groups. For a free copy write to Radio Bible Class, Grand Rapids, MI 49555-0001.

Deo Gloria Outreach is a Christian organization dedicated to informing both the Christian and secular public of the growing challenge posed by pseudo-Christian and quasi-religious cults. Although based in Britain, the organization also appears to be active now on the continent, as well. Services offered include printed materials and personal counselling. For more information, write Deo Gloria Outreach, Selsdon House, 212-220 Addington Road, South Croydon, Surrey CR2 8LD, England (tel. 01-651-6430).

Fundamentalists Anonymous (FA) is a national network of support groups for individuals who have been psychologically harmed by involvement with various so-called "fundamentalist" religious groups. FA was founded by Richard Yao who got his Masters degree from Yale Divinity School and his J.D. from New York University Law School. Those who would like to know exactly what FA is all about (AR has few details) should write to: Fundamentalists Anonymous, P.O. Box 20324, Greeley Square Station, New York, NY 10001 (tel. 212-696-0420).

Tithing: God's Command or Man's Demand? by Tony Badillo has been referred to in past issues of AR. We still feel it is the most thorough book on the tithing doctrine we've ever seen. We recommend it to those who have become hooked on the WCG's teachings on that subject. Xavier Press informs us that they still have copies available for $9.50 each. For more information about the tithing book and other WCG-related literature published by Xavier, send two first class postage stamps to: Xavier Press, P.O. Box 45411, Dallas, TX 75245.

Many AR readers tell us that they continue to benefit from the writings of Ernest L. Martin, once the head of the theology department of Ambassador College. We found two recent articles by Martin to be of special interest: "How Churches Disobey the Commands of God Today" and "Who Has Real Authority in Christianity?" Readers may obtain a free copy of each by writing to Academy for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97225 (tel. 503-292-4353).

The question of whether Christians are biblically required to keep the Old Testament sabbaths is one that continues to be debated in WCG circles. For instance, Garner Ted Armstrong of the WCG offshoot Church of God International (P.O. Box 2525, Tyler, Texas 75710) recently announced that his organization was publishing a new booklet on the subject (they answer the question in the affirmative).

Another concise work on the subject was recently written by Sir Anthony Buzzard whose conclusion is quite different than that of Armstrong. Buzzard's booklet, which we recommend highly, is titled "The Law, The Sabbath and New Testament Christianity." It is available for $2 by writing to Restoration Fellowship; Box 100,000; Morrow; GA 30260. (Note: This is their new address.) Be sure to also ask for a list of their other thought-provoking publications.

The Association for Christian Development (ACD, Kenneth Westby, Director) is an organization many ex-WCG members have found personally beneficial. The November 1990 issue of ACD's newsletter began a series of articles we found particularly interesting. Written by Kenneth Westby, the series discusses recent scientific evidence pointing to a seven-day cycle extant in nature as a building block of plant and animal life. Discoveries seem to provide "a biological explanation for the mystery of the week." Also of interest is a pair of articles recently published on the so-called "Near Death Experience." Those who would like to receive ACD's newsletter should write to: Association for Christian Development, 4449 S. Star Lake Rd., Auburn, WA 98001 (tel. 206-859-1017).

The Faithful Word group, which publishes studies about HWA's statements of doctrine as contrasted with Tkach's revised teachings, apparently has a new address. We've been told it's The Faithful Word, 117 W. Harrison Bldg., Suite 600-F191, Chicago, IL 60605.

MacGregor Ministries News & Views published two concise articles on the WCG in their April-June, 1991 issue: "The Betrayal of Ann (the testimony of a former member of the Worldwide Church of God)" and "Why the Worldwide Church of God is a Cult." Those interested should write to: MacGregor Ministries, Box 73, Balfour, British Columbia, VOG 1C0, Canada.

The subject of thought control and brainwashing comes up repeatedly among those studying the cult phenomenon. One of our readers has brought to our attention a work that thoroughly explains these diabolical methods: The Rape of the Mind by Joost A. M. Meerloo, M.D. (The World Publishing Company, New York, 1956). It can be found in many university libraries. Our reader points out how pages 126-140 of Meerloo's book seem particularly relevant to the methods used by numerous WCG ministers.

The incredible proliferation of religious cults in the U.S. during the last twenty years has, quite understandably, led to a proliferation of counter-cult organizations. Today there are literally hundreds of organizations that, like Ambassador Report, monitor the activities of various cults. In 1987 Cornerstone Press published a Directory of Cult Research Organizations listing many countercult ministries and other cult research organizations. The Cornerstone directory has now been updated to include over 500 Christian countercult ministries and over 140 secular cult research groups. It is the best listing available on the subject. The new directory retails for $7.50 per copy (including postage) and may be ordered by writing to Cornerstone Press, 939 West Wilson, Suite 202-C, Chicago, IL 60640 (tel. 312- 989-2080).

Of the many counter-cult organizations in the United States none has been more active than the Cult Awareness Network (CAN), headquartered in Chicago. CAN publishes a monthly newsletter containing news reports on the cults, puts out numerous factsheets on the various cults, and provides advice to those with friends or relatives in the various cult groups. CAN's national headquarters is at 2421 West Pratt Blvd., Suite 1173, Chicago, IL 60645 (tel. 312-267-7777). Cynthia S. Kisser is the Executive Director. Two of the many regional CAN offices that have been most helpful to AR are the Los Angeles area office (Prescilla Coates, Director), 1917 Hampton Lane, Glendale, CA 91201 (tel. 818-845-4354) and the New York City office (Larry Zilliox, Investigator), 67 Irving Pl., 3rd Fl. South Entrance, New York, NY 10003 (tel. 212-777-7137). For the address and phone number of the CAN chapter or office nearest you, write to the CAN national headquarters in Chicago.

Dankenbring's Prophecy Flash!

One of our readers recently wrote us:

In AR you mention a lot of religious organizations that seem to me to be worse than the [WCG]. Don't you realize you are encouraging people to get hooked on such groups? For example, you have mentioned William Dankenbring's Prophecy Flash! Yet Watchman Fellowship has included his organization on their list of cults. You surely must have noticed how Dankenbring can be very dogmatic and "sets dates" for prophecies. Many [WCG] ministers say Dankenbring is insane. When will you fellows get around to revealing the skeletons in his closet?

It is true that occasionally some of our readers will get "hooked" on some author or group we mention in AR. Let's not assume, however, that such an interest is always a negative thing. Frequently, individuals leaving the WCG utilize such groups as a source for important information or as a stepping stone in their spiritual growth. And sometimes our readers find organizations with which they feel genuinely compatible.

It has never been our goal to make AR into a countercult cult. While we have valuable information to offer regarding the WCG and some of its offshots, we do not pretend to have all "the truth." We mention many organizations knowing full well that they have flaws at times. So do we. But very frequently organizations which may be weak in one area are strong in another and, therefore, have much to offer. While some well-meaning Christian organizations seem to throw the "cult" label upon any religious organization that does not hold to some of their own religious beliefs (e.g., the divinity of Jesus, Trinitarianism, Sunday worship, etc.), that is not how AR uses the term "cult" (see AR 44, pp.2-8). There are a number of plausible definitions for the term "cult" (or "destructive cult"). But we have used the term to refer only to groups that (1) promote isolation from nonmember friends and family, (2) promote nonthinking or uncritical thinking, (3) require absolute obedience to a person or persons who claim to represent God, and (4) encourage unrestrained giving of time and/or money to the group's leadership. Dankenbring's small ministry has none of those characteristics.

It is true that Dankenbring has been very outspoken, has taken a number of positions that seem extreme, and has "set dates" regarding some Bible prophecies. Yet, we should remember that a number of Old Testament prophets did the same kinds of things. Is Dankenbring insane? No, and it is really unfair for WCG ministers to so quickly dismiss his ministry in that way.

We at AR have known Dankenbring quite a few years. While some of his articles may have a certain dogmatic ring to them, he has always treated us with the utmost cordiality and openness. He works as an administrator for a large metropolitan high school, is a part-time publishing entrepreneur, is a family man (married 27 years, three kids, never divorced), was an eagle scout, is a devout Sabbath-keeping Christian, and is a dedicated Bible researcher and writer who regularly turns out more articles than the entire WCG editorial staff. As for skeletons in his closet - we honestly don't know of any. Yes, some of his articles are a little on the wild side. But perhaps that is why so many find them interesting. Prophecy Flash! is available from Triumph Publishing, P.O. Box 292, Altadena, CA 91003.

Questions for the Editor

Q. I am convinced that Mr. Tkach should not have taken the title of "Apostle" even though the designation was used in the early church. Now I am wondering about the title "Pastor General." Where did that come from? I don't find it in my Bible.

A. No, and it's not in anyone else's Bible either. Where exactly Herbert W. Armstrong got it is hard to tell. But it is interesting that "The Black Pope," the head of the Catholic Church's Jesuit Order, has a similar title: "The Father General" (see Malachi Martin, The Jesuits, Simon and Schuster, 1987, p. 31). According to former WCG minister David Robinson, HWA's top advisor, Stanley Rader, was very knowledgeable about Catholic history and organization to which he looked as a model for WCG hierarchical organization. Another HWA subordinate highly knowledgeable of Catholic organization and history was Herman Hoeh who remains as the WCG's chief editor and doctrinal advisor. These facts have led to speculation that it was Rader or Hoeh, or both, who were behind HWA's adoption of the title "Pastor General" (and later "Apostle") and behind HWA's drive to mold the WCG's hierarchy after that of the Roman Catholic Church.

Q. Even though you have reported how Mr. Tkach's parents came from Czechoslovakia, the church members continue to be told that Mr. Tkach's ancestors were Russian. I am very confused as to why he would want to be thought of as Russian. On page one of the April 10 Los Angeles Times there was a very large article about how the Los Angeles area has become a haven for the so-called Russian Mafia. The Times reported how this large criminal network has branches now in Chicago, New York, Boston, Cleveland, Dallas, Detroit, Miami, Philadelphia, and San Francisco. Because many of the Russian Mafia's members are former KGB men, some U.S. government officials are saying it is the most vicious and technologically advanced crime syndicate they have ever encountered. Do you have any evidence that Mr. Tkach has ties to these new Russian gangsters? Why does Mr. Tkach say he is Russian?

A. We've seen no evidence that Tkach is currently in contact with the crime ring you describe. As for Tkach's perception that he is of Russian decent: Because of the eastern European Pan-Slavic movement of Czarist days, many Rusyns - that is Carpathian area people who were of the Russian Orthodox faith - viewed themselves as Russian, even though they lived in eastern Czechoslovakia (a hybrid nation formed only in 1918 remember). Like many Rusyns or Rusnaks who came to the U.S. before WWII, the father of Tkach Sr. apparently saw himself as Russian. His son, Tkach Sr., has simply continued to view his roots the way his father did in spite of evidence to the contrary. The loss of a clear understanding of their historical identity is quite common among many, if not most, Americans of Rusyn origin. See Paul Robert Magocsi, Our People - Carpatho-Rusyns and Their Descendants in North America. For information write to Carpatho-Rusyn

Q. What is the "Dracula Complex" referred to on page 11 of your March 1988 issue?

A. It's a term we coined to refer to certain strange behavior patterns of the WCG ministry. Over the years we have noticed that whenever the WCG ministry is confronted by (1) blunt talk about Jesus or the Holy Spirit operating in the lives of non-WCG Christians, or (2) the glare of media exposure about the sins of WCG leaders, WCG ministers usually react like the blood-sucking Count Dracula did in the movies when he was (a) shown a crucifix, or (b) exposed to sunlight. Like the revulsed Count who would hide his face in his black, silk cape, WCG ministers are adamant in their refusal to honestly confront certain truths. And most especially, like Dracula - whose image was never reflected from a mirror - most WCG ministers refuse to allow well meant criticism to penetrate their consciousness. It's a type of mind control reflex or denial.

Actual examples are legion: AR issues or AR letters mailed to WCG ministers are almost always refused. (Some have even come back marked "Return to Satan!") Requests for interviews are routinely denied. Some WCG lawyers are unable to talk to AR writers directly and can only communicate via a non-WCG colleague. On one occasion a panic-stricken WCG executive literally ran out of a building when the Report's editor turned to cordially chat with him in a bank line. What strange forces possess such people we're not sure. But "Dracula Complex" seems a pretty fair description of the phenomenon.

Alumni News

Many Big Sandy Ambassador College alumni of the early seventies will remember the story-telling skills of alumnus Peter M. Leschak. Now living in Side Lake, Minnesota, Leschak is a freelance photographer and writer whose work has appeared in many national magazines, including Harpers, The New York Times Book Review, New Age Journal, and Outdoor Life. His collection of essays, Letters From Side Lake, is published by Harper and Row. "Apocalypse Then - The Mind of a Messiah Watcher," an article about his experience with WCG prophecies, appeared in the July 1990 issue of Magical Blend (P.O. Box 11303, San Francisco, CA 94101, $3.95 per copy).

Harry Sneider, the former AC athletic coach who has also trained a long list of world class athletes, including race car driver Danny Sullivan, Olympic jumpers Dwight Stones and James Butts, water skier Wayne Grimditch, cyclist Mark Gorski, and bodybuilders Mike Mentzer and Lou Ferrigno, now claims a doctorate in physical fitness from Pacific Western University. Along with his wife, Sarah, and his three teenagers, Sneider is currently promoting "aerobic resistive rebounding" - a low-impact, home exercise system that utilizes minitrampolines, hand-held weights, and various aerobic principles. Articles about Sneider's inspiring life and exercise methods have appeared in the Pasadena Star-News (July 2, 1990, p. C-1) and in the re-spected weight training magazine Ironman (May 1991, p. 68). Those who would like information about Sneider's training methods should contact him at Sneider's Family Fitness, 115 Loralyn Dr., Arcadia, CA 91006 (tel. 818-355-8964).

Pasadena alumnus Larry Taylor wrote us a while back about a couple of alumni names he has seen in the media. William R. Fairchild, once a systems programmer at AC Pasadena, had a technical article published in the March 1990 issue of Mainframe Journal. Its title was "MVS/XA I/O Subsystem and DASD Event Traces." Fairchild, at the time the article appeared, was with Landmark Systems Corporation.

Taylor also wrote us about Bob Nesler:

Remember Bob Nesler? He was an AC student, sometimes doing animation for the TV department. He was the only person that I know who managed to get kicked out of AC twice. His editorial cartoons even got the Portfolio shut down once.

I recently saw his name in the animation credits for the cartoon series, "Garfield," on CBS Saturday morning. There was even an on screen gag with his name, Nelsner, showing.

I would like to hear more about the AC graduates and WCG veterans.

It seems to me that "God's Little Spider" a.k.a. Joseph Tkach is playing both ends against the middle. To the general public, Worldwide is saying, "Look, we've changed. Aren't we a whole lot more conventional? We're merely just another denomination of Christianity, aren't we? How can anyone even think of calling us a cult?" Is this not Tkach's goal? Theoretically this approach should attract more members.

But to the WCG membership, the impression that is given is this message: "We're making only a few minor changes. We still keep the Sabbath and the holy days. We still have God's spirit. Don't worry about the changes - don't even notice them. God is still in command."

Is this not duplicity of the worst kind? The loyal membership is simply not being told the truth.

Recent WCG Exiter

Ambassador Report and other publications have catalogued about 100 false prophecies uttered by HWA, and God has not allowed any of them to come to pass, showing the world that HWA is not a minister of God, and also declaring that he is a wicked one. I use the present tense, as HWA is still alive in the minds of many, whereas God commands that the false prophet must be put to death (Deut. 18:20-22).

Prophecy aside, the fact that HWA lived the satanic way of get identifies just whose "apostle" he was!....

I do know of one person (but only one) who holds a grudge against Mr. Joe Tkach Jr. In spite of this grudge, and in spite of his being a close friend of mine, he had only one thing negative to say about Joe Jr. Since I feel that he still holds a grudge, I doubt if he can be objective; so I will not reveal his name.

Other than this one comment, I have heard only positive things about Mr. Joe Jr. I doubt that his ex-wife Jill would confirm the story you printed about what happened on the way to Prescott. I have never known Joe Jr. to exhibit such a temper.

The story about the affair between Dean Blackwell and Elaine originated with Rod Meredith. I do not consider him sane. He denies reality.

Current WCG Member
California

Editor: Friends of the long-time WCG evangelist say that Roderick C. Meredith resides in the Los Angeles suburb of Glendora, is in good health, and sounds rational. Because he remains on the WCG payroll, Meredith refuses to be interviewed in the pages of AR. Sources indicate, however, that due to the mellowing influence of his colleague Dennis Luker, the self-styled "conservative" has greatly moderated his once highly critical attitude toward homosexuals. Meredith remains loyal to the Tkach organization and hopes that one day he will again be allowed to give sermons.

I am surprised at how few people speak of the blessings they have received since leaving the WCG.

I was the Chief Photographer for the Plain Truth and Ambassador College for four years and had 17 years in the WCG. My job was to make the pictures I took look like whatever HWA said was true (even when what he said was not true). Believe me, pictures can lie.

I went through a divorce with no help from the church. One minister tells me I am bound, another says I'm free, etc. I lost my wife and four children to the church. So you see I, too, can make this a "woe is me" letter. Instead I'm going to say hallelujah! I now understand I Tim. 2:5 that there is no one on earth between me and the Father - I have a straight line through Jesus to the Father. Also I cannot lose my salvation or be disfellowshipped from the Father by anyone or anything on earth (Rom. 8:38, 39). If I need healing now I don't have to call anyone. I go direct [to God] and I have received a lot of healing the past couple of years.

I retired at the age of 55. Five years late. AC would not retire me God's way (Num. 8:25). I am now 67 years old and still participate in all the sports I did at the age of 50 thanks to miracle healing.

Life is a joy to me now in spite of the fact that my family is still in the WCG. I put the problem in God's hands and I am sure He will open their eyes and mind as He did mine when they are ready to listen. Thank God that we are no longer in bondage (Rom. 8:15).

I took your advice in AR45 and phoned 1-800-CONCERT - Ambassador Auditorium rushed me their pompous brochure airmail (98 cents postage). The same day I phoned the Church at 1-800-423-4444 and ordered "What Do You Mean Salvation?" (still available!) and still haven't gotten it (must be 4th class mail - after all it's only "gospel")....

Did you notice in one WN on "Tips for Managing Your Finances in Recession" they recommend members fix their cars with junk parts from the auto junk yards? A lot of members are already driving unsafe cars and this would endanger them even further. Why doesn't the famous Ambassador garage, which Waterhouse used to say was so spotless clean in his slide show, use junk parts on Tkach's limos?

I was born poor. My family is poor. I was a strict Catholic until 12 when I learned Satanism. And by 14 was living a biker lifestyle, plus I was a homosexual. I found Jesus, or he found me, at 16 and I have been serving him since. In 1984 I was convicted of murder, which I did not do, and was sentenced to 25 years to life in prison where I serve Christ. I have six years in now. I am Orthodox Christian and study comparative religions, Cults, Greek, and Hebrew. I am writing a book (for the last 2-1/2 years) on religions in which I have had experience.... All the ARs you have ever sent me are in our Chapel Library for my brothers to read. Thank you for sending them.

I am thankful for your recent April letter even though it made me heartsick and brought tears to my eyes. AR has helped me more than anything else except the Bible and Ernest Martin to get over the bitterness I felt from being brainwashed in the WCG for 10 years. I left that cult in 1975. I am now 76 years old, have had no personal contact with others of like beliefs. It's been a hard and lonely life and except for AR and Ernest Martin's material, I probably would have committed suicide. Reduced to poverty, only a third grade education, no children, I left a good husband because they told me my marriage was not legal in the sight of God because of his living ex-wife (though they had been divorced 10 years). He is now dead.... A social security check of $372 a month is all I have to live on.

I can't seem to come up with the right words to express how thankful I am for all the ARs you've sent me.

My father, age 76, became a member of WCG about three years ago. He now seems to be unable to make a decision without asking the advice of the minister. He is also triple tithing which concerns me since he has a small fixed income and I think he is doing without medical care to pay the tithes. He was always a man of strong opinions but now he seems to be a follower. I'm also worried that he's giving the church his principal since he is talking about the church "taking care of him." What can I do to get him away from their influence? I feel I'm losing contact with him. Also, what about going to Jordan? He talks of this.

Florida

Editor: While the WCG does not now officially teach that its membership will eventually flee to Petra in Jordan, many WCG members apparently still cling to that teaching. As with so many doctrines, what many WCG members believe is now out of step with what WCG headquarters is preaching.

As for getting your father out from under their influence, be sure to read AR44. You might also want to consider using an exit counselor. While their fees sometime seem high, in the long run they are often very cost effective.

My husband became affiliated with the Worldwide Church of God about three years ago. Since that time, I have noticed gradual changes in his behavior and personality. Some of his ideologies have become downright bizarre. I want my husband back and I'm preparing to do whatever it takes to get him back.

Just received the Nov. '91 issue of AR. You emphasized the many marriages broken by the church. I wonder if anyone knows just how many have been kept from getting married at all by this church. Not being even allowed to date or marry outside the church and, of course, with ministerial meddling, as you called it, I know of many who were kept single for many years and some who simply never did get an opportunity. Seems this church was like the Pope preventing his nuns and priests from marrying and then condemning the church for all the problems with masturbation and homosexuality that resulted. The WCG would always blame the church people for anything that went wrong, never the leaders or the doctrines of the church.

In regard to the third tithe, the church is trying as it were to be a nation (an Israel with a welfare system). But the New Testament Church was a church, not a nation. We already have social security and welfare benefits provided by our nation. Why the people of the church see a need for their own welfare system one must wonder. But, of course, tithing in the Bible was never on money, only on food. So the con game continues.

The November issue of AR was indeed a good one. I only wish there were a way to get more people aware of the Report. The most interesting or significant comment of this issue to me was that question you ask on page six: "What spirit is behind all this?" It is interesting that in the words and preaching of Christ those most condemned were the religious leaders of his day. The church under the greatest condemnation in all of Paul's writing was the Galatian Jewish church of his day. And the church most closely akin to the Galatian church today is the WCG.

The spirit behind all this, you stated, was the spirit of forceful control. WCG evangelist Dean Blackwell once stated that the demons followed Satan much like the Nazis followed Hitler. They felt they must obey the orders! And they felt they must obey - sadly, the wrong person. Dean said there was a reason why the first commandment was the first - how we must have no other gods before God, the true God. When we do, whether it be our mates or our religious leaders or the government, or whomever or whatever, it always leads to problems. How right Dean was in so many things yet he also fell under Herbert's spell and domination, it seems. And so the church has put itself in the place of God in the lives of the church people with the sad results that we see.

I think there has been no other person that has had such an effect on my life for better or for worse than Dean Blackwell. His preachings were no less than profound. His insight into spiritual matters seemed profound. His speaking ability was profound. His wisdom was profound. His abilities were profound. Just like GTA? Just like HWA? Just like... Satan?

And so it seemed with many of the ministers of the church. Such ability to speak. And much truth. But truth mixed with error and false doctrines of men. And it is interesting to note the ones God chose in the Bible to be his major preachers were just the opposite of the WCG preachers. Moses of the Old Testament could not speak at all and had to have his brother do it after he whispered the words to him. Paul described himself as the worst in speaking ability. The reasons given by Paul were that God did not want men glorified or looked to with admiration. This was to be directed to God only, not man. Christ said his church leaders were to be as servants not rulers. Herbert twisted that verse also to read that those who served were to be the rulers (just the opposite of the intent of Christ). And so the church continues to play God in the lives of the people of this church to their hurt. But God will judge them and the results will become apparent.

Well, Christ said many would come in his name and deceive many and Paul warned of false doctrines to come. No one likes to think it is they who are deceived. But Jesus, himself, wondered if, when he returned, he would even find the faith upon the earth. Except in a few, I don't think he will.

Your April 3rd letter to us folks who haven't been contributing sure explains why we haven't gotten a Report since November. Sorry to have to hear that you, too, are looking for work now. We have read in the papers that California is having it worse than other parts of the country economy-wise. Then after we got your short renewal letter we heard about more earthquakes and then the L.A. riot. Hope you folks are all okay.

We also heard from friends in Pasadena that a little while back the home where AR has its files was burglarized. Did AR's files get stolen again?

Washington

Editor: It's true that some months back the home where our files are stored was burglarized and ransacked. Even though all the stolen items were not recovered, the burglars were finally apprehended and it doesn't appear that the incident had anything to do with AR (unlike our 1977 burglary). Quite amazingly, though the house was thoroughly ransacked and searched for valuables, the rooms where AR's files are located were somehow overlooked.

As for California, yes, things could be better. The Los Angeles Times has reported that unemployment here is actually six times greater than what the government has been admitting. We have somehow survived in spite of the economy, the earthquakes, and the riots. But getting out this issue of AR (#50) has not been easy. Right now we have enough information on file for about four complete issues. But the funds are just not available to publish everything we can document. The last issue of AR (#49, Nov. 1991) was the largest and most difficult one we've done in years. Yet, it produced significantly fewer contributions than usual.

We will continue to publish Ambassador Report, but the rate at which we get new issues into print depends to a great extent on the level of support we receive from our readers.

Our thanks to all of you who are encouraging our efforts.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

October 1992 (AR51)

Is Armstrongism Dead?

It used to be called "Armstrongism." Whether it was sermons heard from Worldwide Church of God (WCG) pulpits, articles in the WCG's Plain Truth magazine, telecasts of The World Tomorrow, projects of the Ambassador Foundation, or literature published by Ambassador College, we used to think of it all as one thing: "Armstrongism" - the ideas, personality, and message of Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA). But now, seven years after Armstrong's death, so much of the doctrinal and organizational edifice erected by Armstrong has been transformed by his successor, Joseph W. Tkach, that many are beginning to ask: Hasn't this thing become "Tkachism"?

Audit Shows WCG's New Direction

In July, the WCG released its annual "Worldwide Audited Financial Report" in The Worldwide News (WN, 7/28/92, pp. 5-9). Like the financial reports of any other corporation, the WCG's report naturally attempts to portray its activities in the best possible light. Nevertheless, the report, which covers the years 1990 and 1991, is quite revealing.

First of all, for 1991 the WCG's total revenue was $196,985,000 - down almost seven percent from the $211,243,000 it made in 1990. How much of the drop was due to the ongoing recession and how much was due to the management of the Tkach team is not known. But clearly, the WCG's income is falling.

Second, there are major changes occurring in the way the WCG spends its money. For while overall WCG income declined, the Tkach organization actually spent more for what it calls "nurturing the church" ($71,379,000 - up seven percent from 1990) and for the Ambassador Foundation ($8,566,000 - up 25 percent from 1990). At the same time, however, the WCG spent 25 percent less (only $58,656,000 in 1991 compared to $78,317,000 in 1990) for what it calls "preaching the gospel." Expenditures for electronic media declined by 19 percent and money spent on publishing declined a whopping 36 percent.

A number of the statement's notes are quite revealing. In note 1.A, the WCG states that it has approximately 98,000 baptized members. It would be edifying if we could know how many of that figure are "inactive." Note 1.A also states that "the Church does not publicly appeal for funds, involve itself in politics nor actively seek new members." Semantic arguments aside, it is difficult to see why the WCG feels a need to make such a dishonest claim. Most churches proselytize to one degree or another, and so does the WCG. As for politics, the WCG's top clerics don't just cuddle up to local officials, they unashamedly brown nose all world leaders that make themselves available.

Note 3.B states:

Each third and sixth year in a seven-year cycle, members who are financially able contribute an additional ten percent of their annual income to the Church Assistance Fund. This is commonly referred to as third tithe. Monies contributed to this fund are used to assist the needy in the Church, to cover the costs of administering the Church Assistance Fund, and to pay other expenses of the field ministry, including a portion of ministerial salaries.

A few comments regarding the above note: First, the paying of third tithe only by "members who are financially able" is a new doctrine that has crept into the WCG in the last few years. It's a nice change, but one that does not go far enough. It should have been obvious to church leaders long ago that with government welfare and insurance programs - which church members are encouraged to make use of - there is no justification for a mandatory third tithe in any modern church. Second, nowhere in the Bible can one find that third tithe is a proper way to finance the field ministry. And third, the WCG still refuses to divulge how much money it takes in as third tithe so it remains impossible to calculate from the financial statement how much third tithe has been misappropriated.

Note 6 begins: "The Church, Ambassador College and the Foundation have been named in various lawsuits and actions, some of which involve claims for substantial damages." While the still-delayed McNair case, often reported on in AR, is one of the lawsuits, the other referred-to cases are not identified.

Note 6 admits: "The Church is currently providing assistance to certain former employees of approximately $1,476,000 annually. This discretionary assistance is provided based upon the employee's needs and accordingly, could be discontinued in the future." As recently as in the 1989 statement (WN, 7/16/90, p. 5), the WCG was paying out only about $1,000,000 annually to former employees - about $800,000 of which was "discretionary" and about a half of which one Tkach associate has referred to as "hush money." Who today is receiving the $1,476,000 is not known. But it would appear that the WCG is in the process of retiring many of its old-timers.

Note 7 contains the following: "The Church is undertaking immediate steps to address certain issues raised in a 1989 audit by the Canadian taxing authorities. These issues, if not resolved, could affect the Canadian Church's status as a charitable organization."

Exactly what the issues are is not stated in the note.

Finally, while the WCG's published audit does represent a substantial improvement in policy from the days when HWA only gave an oral financial report at the church's fall festival, there is still a significant level of ambiguity in the report. Specifically, nowhere in the report is there an indication of what level of remuneration is received by any of the WCG's executives. Nor is there any indication that the abuses that existed under HWA - of millions being siphoned off yearly via "expenses" - have ever been corrected.

Beyond Tithing

With WCG revenues having declined in 1990 and 1991 and with its U.S. revenues down three percent for 1992 (WN, 6/30/92, p. 3), it is not surprising that the Tkach team has been looking for new ways to market its product. (Incidentally, lest someone think we are being disrespectful in using business terminology - in a letter to Dunn & Bradstreet, the WCG, itself, described what it does as "sales.")

In a May 19 WN editorial (p. 6), Tkach outlined some of the new methods he is instituting:

...we are currently exploring the feasibility of a visiting program in which member couples would be trained to call on Plain Truth subscribers who respond to a letter asking if they'd like a visit from a member couple.... We are also planning to test in some areas a new procedure on the telecast. At the close of the program, the presenters will inform viewers that the sponsor of the program, the Worldwide Church of God, has local congregations in their area, and invite them to write for information about attending.

Long-time WCG members know that such an "open door policy" was not allowed by church founder HWA. Nor did HWA entrust members with the responsibility of personally preaching the gospel or of personally inviting nonmembers to church services. Nevertheless, some insiders say that in those areas where the new procedures have been tested, they have proven very effective. And some insiders feel that by adopting such methods - methods long used by the Jehovah's Witnesses and other cults - the WCG will become more effective than ever before in making "sales."

By encouraging members to become personally more active in WCG operations, the Tkachs, of course, are dipping into a previously untapped church resource. They know that time is money. Note 3.1 of the WCG's latest financial statement says: "The efforts of volunteer workers are not recorded as contributions and expenses, since it is not practical to calculate the monetary value of the benefits received. Such services might constitute a significant factor in the Church's operations."

By getting their followers more personally involved in "spreading the gospel," the Tkachs will be able to further cut back expenditures for print and electronic media. As a result of such cutbacks, they will then theoretically be able to funnel more money into other areas such as the Ambassador Foundation. Indeed, that is already happening. According to a report we received from Dunn & Bradstreet in mid-July, since 1988 the number of WCG employees decreased from 1,890 to 1,325 - a decrease of 30 percent. Yet, according to Dunn & Bradstreet, during that same period the number of Ambassador Foundation employees went from 30 to 200 - an increase of 567 percent!

The two new marketing techniques discussed above are not the Tkachs' only bright ideas. A third new scheme has been labeled Friends in Deed. This new program aims at giving members the "opportunity" of serving their communities. In explaining how the new "opportunity" will be granted, church director Joseph Tkach Jr. wrote in the June 16 WN (p. 4):

...the pastor of each congregation will follow a three-step procedure: 1) determine assets and talents of the local congregation, 2) determine needs of the community and 3) adopt Church assets and talents to fill community needs.

Here is how the program will work. Let's say that your city government, like so many today, is short of cash. In order to keep expenses and taxes down, the city has to fire a half dozen janitors. Well, that's no problem. Your mayor needs only to phone the WCG's local pastor with his list of WCG "talent" and in almost no time the city will have six WCG volunteers coming over to clean the city's toilets for free. Tkach Jr. writes:

In some cases, several of our congregations are already participating in certain community-service activities that fulfill the purpose of the Friends in Deed program.

For example, some congregations have participated in the Adopt-a-Highway program, in which groups are responsible for keeping a mile of a given highway free of litter.

Obviously, there is a time for volunteer service, and service to one's community can reap spiritual dividends. But aside from becoming one of George Bush's "thousand points of light," of what benefit will the new program be to the WCG itself? Considering the WCG's history of institutional self-centeredness, it is difficult for us not to be more than a little bit suspicious of the motives behind Friends in Deed.

As one of our readers wrote us: "Besides giving the church 30 percent of his paycheck, my husband gives them his Saturdays, his Wednesday evenings, and an hour every morning. Already he has very little money or time left for his family. Now they want him to volunteer away some of his Sundays to clean highways! What next? Living at the airport and handing out booklets?"

Goin' to Guyana

Mention Guyana and most people immediately recall the 1978 Jonestown massacre which took place in that small South American country. That is why we were surprised to read in the WN (5/19/92, p. 8) how the WCG is working to "forge a positive relationship between the Church and the government of Guyana." One way in which the relationship is being developed is through an agricultural testing project run jointly by the Ambassador Foundation and the government of Guyana. The project was initiated by WCG minister Dale Schurter after discussions with Hamilton Green, the country's Prime Minister.

Additionally, since August 1990, a WCG-related corporation called Ambassador Farms Enterprises Limited (AFEL) has operated a farm project and "several miscellaneous ventures" in Guyana. Most recently, the article reported, AFEL opened produce stalls at the Stabroek Market in Georgetown. The government apparently gave AFEL permission to build the stalls even though, according to the article, "30,000 other applicants had already applied for the position."

Ostensibly, the WCG's farming and produce marketing operations in Guyana are aimed at benefiting its poor members in that country. Yet according to the WCG's own official figures (WN, 4/14/92, p.5), the church has only 115 members in the entire country. Even if all 115 were near starvation, one would have thought that the parsimonious Tkachs would have simply sent down a shipment of basic foodstuffs, rather than set up a produce marketing operation, a joint church-government agricultural experiments program, and other "miscellaneous ventures." It would be nice to know what the Tkach people are really up to in that part of the world. But Guyana is a little bit out of the way for us to find out.

The Doctrinal Merry-Go-Round

Since AR's inception, we have attempted to keep up with the WCG's ever increasing rate of doctrinal change. Lately, however, the pace at which doctrines have been changing has left us feeling a little dizzy. Even the WCG ministry seems overwhelmed. For example, in 1991 when the WCG issued a booklet entitled Statement of Beliefs of the Worldwide Church of God, many WCG pastors told their congregations that the booklet really did not represent the WCG's doctrines, but was only intended for "the world" as a public relations ploy. One such minister was "conservative" evangelist Herman Hoeh about whom one of our headquarters sources wrote us:

The Trinity doctrine may not be as modified as it appears. On Feb. 8, 1992, Herman Hoeh presented a sermon to the Pasadena East PM congregation concerning the WCG's recently published Statement of Beliefs. He commented specifically on the statement: "The Worldwide Church of God teaches the full divinity of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit..." He cited a dictionary definition of "divinity": "of or related to or proceeding directly from divinity." Since God is divine, so is His Spirit. He went on to indicate that the Statement of Beliefs was a document carefully crafted to make the WCG seem more orthodox to mainstream Christianity and that the position of the church has not essentially changed. The Statement was designed to be capable of being viewed in two ways.

That Hoeh would admit how the WCG was being double tongued is not surprising. Since the late 1980s, Michael Snyder, the WCG's top PR man, has been telling WCG members how Tkach's executives have embarked on a program of actively deceiving the news media into thinking the WCG is changing, but that the WCG had no intention of doing so.

Nevertheless, in spite of what Snyder, Hoeh, and many other WCG leaders have told congregations, in the March 17 WN (p. 4) Tkach Sr. stunned many WCG conservatives with the following, almost offhanded, comment:

By the way, I have heard recently that a few ministers and members may have thought that the Statement of Beliefs is not for members, but is only for use in public relations efforts to people outside the Church.

This is absolutely untrue! This new booklet captures the core beliefs of God's Church and constitutes our official statement on most of our major doctrines such as God, baptism, repentance, salvation, the kingdom of God and other vital teachings.

It most certainly is for members, and is for nonmembers as well! It is part of the preaching of the gospel of Jesus Christ to all nations.

Amazingly, since the above statement appeared, some WCG ministers have been telling members Tkach's "clarification" was, itself, only for public relations purposes and should therefore be ignored by members. So who is deceiving whom now? Is Michael Snyder deceiving "conservative" ministers and members when he says the WCG is attempting to trick the media? Is Tkach deceiving "liberal" ministers and members when he says that the new teachings are for everyone? Did Tkach get the ministry's support for the recent changes by deceiving the "conservatives"? Or is Tkach deceiving himself?

Whatever the case, certainly Tkach personally brought on much confusion when he wrote in the WN (12/23/91, p. 1): "the Statement of Beliefs does not constitute a closed creed." In other words, the WCG may change again at any time and, indeed, it will. That is because the WCG, like all other cults, is built on personalities, and not really on law. And it is upon the whims of those personalities that the doctrines of the WCG are based. A good example of the doctrinal confusion extant now in the WCG is its teaching on "apostles." As many readers will recall, HWA started to apply the term "apostle" to himself sometime in the late sixties. Tkach then adopted the title for himself a few months after HWA died (see AR 37). Now, however, in a bit of back tracking Tkach writes (WN, 3/31/92. p. 1):

When referring to Mr. Armstrong or myself, however, the Church uses the term apostle (drawn from the list of ministerial offices in Ephesians 4:11) only as a designation of the highest spiritual and administrative human office in the Church.

The term definitely does not connote an apostolic function in the Church that is equivalent to that of the original apostles. Not since the first century has the Church had that kind of apostolic leadership in person.

Long-time WCG members can recall, however, how HWA claimed that he was the first person in over 18 centuries to preach the true gospel (The Inside Story of the World Tomorrow Broadcast, pp. 9-10). Many also recall how HWA had compared himself to the Apostle Paul (Gal. 1:11-12) by claiming that he, too, had not been taught the true gospel by any man, but had received it "by the revelation of Jesus Christ." Thus Tkach's watering down of the WCG definition of "apostle" is but one more alteration of what HWA had taught.

Another example of WCG doctrinal confusion concerns, of all things, the Ten Commandments. In his May 27 letter to coworkers, Tkach wrote:

...it is a common mistake to assume, "If everybody would just keep the Ten Commandments, what a nice world we would have." Christians should consider that the Ten Commandments do not require kindness, mercy, compassion, generosity, sacrifice for others, impartiality, patience or love. Nor do the Ten Commandments specifically forbid conceit, envy, hatred, rage or selfish ambition. The Ten Commandments are important, but they are not enough.

Of course, no educated person would claim that the Ten contain every specific moral and legal requirement placed upon mankind by God and society. Nevertheless, throughout history innumerable theologians, philosophers, and legal scholars have marveled at how the Ten (when properly understood with all their implications and in all their fullness) represent an amazingly succinct summary of the ethical duties placed upon all humankind. Indeed, even Herbert Armstrong used to teach that the Ten Commandments were "God's Royal Law" - the first four summarizing man's duty to God and the last six summarizing man's duty to fellow man (love toward God and love toward man being the two great commandments - see Matt. 22:35-40). Why Tkach has now decided to tamper with this long-accepted teaching is a mystery. But insiders predict that the criticism his latest gaffe has drawn will, undoubtedly, require Tkach to backpedal in the coming months.

Perhaps HWA's teaching on the Ten Commandments was what Tkach was referring to when he wrote (WN, 3/31/92, p. 7): "Like all people God has used to do his work, however, Mr. Armstrong also taught some things that were not strictly the Bible message, but were his own interpretations of certain scriptures." If that is the case, then how much authority should members see in Tkach, himself? Obviously, Tkach has only one claim to fame - he sits in Herbert Armstrong's seat.

Finally, in his April 22 letter to coworkers, Tkach wrote: "As we look at today's rapidly changing political world, we must not be deceived into believing that the end of the age is imminent." Insiders say Tkach privately believes Christ's return is very, very far - perhaps 100 years or more - distant.

HWA used to teach that as the Millennium was a type of Sabbath and as "one day is with the Lord as a thousand years" (II Pet.3:8), God had a 7,000-year plan that was rapidly reaching the end of the sixth "day." The HWA era Ambassador College Bible Correspondence Course devoted many pages to "God's little-understood 7,000-year plan for mankind" (see Lesson 1, pp. 14-15; Lesson 39, pp. 10-16; Lesson 44, pp. 2-16). In his last years, HWA repeatedly emphasized that the church's commission of heralding the soon-coming Kingdom was well into the "gun lap." Now, with Tkach convinced Christ's return is far off, he has secretly ordered his ministry not to preach the old 7,000-year plan. Even the Plain Truth magazine is being used to attack the old doctrine (see the July issue, p. 22).

WCG insiders say that Tkach is so openly opposed to so many key HWA teachings that he wants no one reading The Mystery of the Ages, the book HWA called his "masterpiece." Some members complain that in order to read their church founder's "masterpiece," they must do so in secret or risk being disfellowshipped.

It remains to be seen how many more doctrines will be altered or dropped within the next few months. Evangelist Michael Feazell, Tkach's closest adviser, is now a graduate divinity student at evangelical Azusa Pacific College near Pasadena. Already, much of the Trinitarian thinking he has received there is finding its way into WCG literature (see, for instance, the new WCG booklet God Is...). Headquarters sources tell us that so many more doctrinal changes have already been decided upon that publication of the new, much-revised Bible Correspondence Course has had to be delayed until some time in 1993.

In the meantime, Feazell has gotten Tkach to begin introducing a more "Protestant" style of writing into church publications. For example, in his August Plain Truth editorial, Tkach (or ghostwriter Feazell) wrote:

It is no sin to feel the anguish of severe suffering. Even from the depths of our pain can come the knowledge that Jesus is there with us, that he too knows this pit of despair, that he too has walked through the valley of the shadow of death. And he will lead us through it, bring us back into the light, restore our hope, and remind us of the eternal love of the God of salvation and of the glory that awaits us.

A nice thought, certainly. But WCG old-timers distinctly remember how HWA used to attack such "Protestant" sentiments as "effeminate, sugar-coated perversions of the true gospel." Yes, the WCG is changing.

Ministerial Exodus Continues

One of the latest ministers to exit the WCG is James E. Baldwin of Charlestown, New Hampshire. His reasons for leaving and the reasoning process he used in deciding to leave are detailed in an open letter he wrote to all his friends. One quote:

I was not opposed to the changes as some were, but I had to ask myself, "If what we now have is the truth, then how shall I account for so much error of the past? How credible was HWA's often-made statement that he was not taught by men but by the living Jesus Christ?"

Those who would like a copy of his entire, well-reasoned letter may write to Mr. Baldwin at P.O. Box 320, Charlestown, NH 03603.

Why Can't We All Get Along?

The October issue of the Plain Truth had a quote all of us in California are only too well aware of: "Why Can't We All Get Along?" Those were the words of Rodney King, the black man whose videotaped beating by a handful of white sheriff's deputies set in motion the events that led to the Los Angeles riots last summer. Putting aside the question of whether Rodney King is really someone the WCG should be quoting as an authority on anything other than what it's like to be physically abused by police officers, the headlined quote is remarkable in that it really does reflect part of the new Tkach game plan.

Very clearly, the Tkach WCG is trying to do everything it can to "love bomb" new members into its fold. For example, in a sermon taped for the benefit of numerous distant congregations, Tom Lapacka, a minister who also works in media purchasing for the WCG's television outreach, told WCG members that it will be all right for visiting men to come to church services with pony tails (even though current WCG members are forbidden to have "long" hair). In other words, the WCG is quite willing now to overlook a few things in order to bring in new members.

Along the same lines, in the September Plain Truth there was an article titled "Accepting Your Child's Friends." In it, author Rick L. Shallenberger literally threw away the kind of advice we used to hear from successful parents and child rearing experts when he argued that parents should not be too critical when their children bring home friends who wear black leather outfits, use heavy makeup, or tattoo their faces. (See the picture of the punker that accompanies the PT article.) The article states:

So what do you do? Should you make a set of rules concerning who your teenager should and should not have as friends?

You can try, but chances are, your rules probably wouldn't work. It's probably too late for that.

Clearly, this kind of wimpy advice on parenting is something new in the WCG. Shallenberger's article may contain some nice ideas on tolerance. But a lot of parents who are concerned about the very real dangers that gang violence, drugs, and venereal diseases pose to their children's survival, are going to find it hard to accept the idea of allowing punkers the opportunity to influence their children as the new PT suggests.

Trying to make the WCG more tolerant of just about anyone who could become a tithepayer is but one of Tkach's policies. Another shift seems to be to imitate "the world" whenever possible. For instance, while the WCG still has not okayed the actual keeping of Christmas, imitating Christmas-type customs seems to be gaining a foothold. For instance, Tkach has given his blessing to the sending of holiday cards. In the May 5 WN, there was a reproduction of Tkach's own Holy Day card for Passover. It showed a painting of a Charlton Hestonish Moses leading his people. (One thing that confused some members, however, were the Roman-legion type standards also visible in the illustration. Some members thought they were "pagan Baal symbols.")

Finally, there's the debate that is raging in the WCG about the word "liberal." For as long as anyone can remember the WCG has viewed the word "conservative" as good. And the word "liberal" as bad. (Can't you just hear Dana Carvey reading this?) So ingrained has that set of equations been in the minds of most WCG members that many have thought a liberal arts education was inherently evil because it was "liberal." Well, to change that misimpression (or is there more going on here?), along comes AC President Donald L. Ward with an article (WN, 12/23/91, p. 5) that explains:

The word liberal was derived from the Latin root liberi, which means "free." To be liberal is to be free, to be liberated. So, the word liberal in its most obvious meaning, as applied to education, has a wide connotation.

Liberal education requires methods of learning and knowledge that free one from fear, ignorance, superstition and the dogmas of man. It is dependent upon knowledge, but is much broader and complete...

Therefore, a true "liberal arts education" is in perfect harmony with the biblical injunction: "You shall know the truth, and truth shall make you free" (John 8:32).

Don't misunderstand. We don't disagree with Dr. Ward. But his views seem to be more in line with those of AR than those of the WCG we once knew.

Renehan's Revelations

It was not long after the death of HWA that it became very obvious to us how Tkach had a secret agenda for transforming the WCG into a church radically different from the one HWA had built. HWA's last major article, written shortly before the onset of his final illness, was "Recent History of the Philadelphia Era of the Worldwide Church of God" which appeared in a special edition of the WN (6/24/85). In that major article, HWA warned his followers about the "liberals" in the ministry with whom he had crossed swords for over a decade. Incredibly, HWA's body was barely in the grave when his successor, a man HWA had been led to believe was a "conservative," immediately began step by step to institute virtually every doctrine and policy change that HWA had so vehemently opposed. (See the above-referenced HWA article on p. 3, column 2.)

One veteran WCG member who has uncovered evidence of the extent of Tkach's plan to transform the church is Bruce Renehan of Tehachapi, California. Mr. Renehan recently sent us the following letter:

On May 8, my wife and I were visited by the local pastor and his associate (Dave Dobson and Leon Sexton). I had not solicited their visit. But since I knew that they were coming, I decided that I would be completely open with them about all of the errors I have discovered about church doctrines. I was fully willing to let them disfellowship me over the things that I had discovered concerning Worldwide Church history, the Old Covenant being done away, and the New Covenant now being in force. So I spilled my guts to them for about three hours.

The first thing I told them was that the WCG by all definitions falls into the category of a cult. The pastor agreed, but then quickly said that the New Testament church fell into that category also. I disagreed with him on that point and reminded him of how Jesus specifically warned against authoritarian government in his church. That's when his attitude became subdued. Next I talked about how HWA had made over 100 false prophecies in his lifetime and I reminded them of Deuteronomy 28. I recited from the histories of William Jones and Emilio Comba showing all of the deliberate lies by Herman Hoeh who tried to create an apostolic lineage for the WCG. They were without an answer and I started to feel a little sorry for them. Each time they got defensive I offered more information.

After a while, I began to show them what the New Covenant is and how the WCG has been in error on that teaching. I said that the Mosaic Law which was given at Sinai is simply done away. They looked at each other and then at me. Then, to my amazement, they replied, "We both agree with you. You are right. We discuss these things between ourselves all the time. But, of course, until word comes down from on high we cannot preach these things."

Then I began to elaborate to them that if the Ten Commandments are done away then that would include the Sabbath Day and tithing. They didn't even flinch. They agreed that I was absolutely correct. But, they added, "We can't breathe a word of this to the other members because if we did, many people, especially the old-timers, would just get up and walk out of the church."

They told me that I can't be telling others about what I know, but that I could still attend services. I said that, like Paul, I could be all things to all men - even if I didn't think the Sabbath was still binding. They then said that if I was patient and hung in there, in 10 or 15 years I would see the whole church teaching the things that I have come to believe!...

My wife, who has been in the church since she was a little girl, feels she needs the church and wants to continue attending. On the other hand, I feel the church needs men who are not pussyfooting around. Our church leaders' lack of boldness to preach the truth reminds me of when Samuel asked Saul, "What is this bleating sound that I hear?" And Saul answered, "It's the people. I did it because of the people."

Since Mr. Renehan sent us the above, he has continued to research WCG history. Before the end of the year, he intends to publish a book entitled Daughter of Babylon - The True History of the Worldwide Church of God. Renehan says his research reveals that plagiarism, trickery, and even falsification of documents have played a role in the WCG's creation of the fable that it is the "one and only true church." From correspondence with officials of the Church of God (Seventh Day), the Seventh Day Baptist Church, the American Waldensian Society, and other organizations, Renehan has been able to debunk many of the claims now being formulated into dogma by the Tkach organization. Renehan is tentatively planning to make copies of his book available for about $15 each. Those interested in further details should send a self-addressed, stamped envelope to "Daughter of Babylon," P.O. Box 1551, Tehachapi, CA 93581-1551.

New Discoveries on WCG "History"

In addition to the research being done by Bruce Renehan, a number of others have been uncovering the real facts behind many of the WCG's bogus historical claims. One such researcher is Warren J. Carlson of Glen Ridge, New Jersey. He sent us the following letter:

Those who were members of the WCG back in the early 1970s (and I was one of them) will, no doubt, remember a booklet published by the WCG. It was authored by Herman Hoeh and was entitled A True History of the True Church. This bit of dubious "history" purported to reveal the true identity of the seven churches of the book of Revelation - the so-called seven eras of the church.

Most WCG ministers and members embraced the church eras theory with fervor, since the WCG was identified by Hoeh as the Philadelphia era, and it was the Philadelphia era of God's true church which would escape the fiery fate which would be meted out in the last days to an unrepentant world and an apostate Catholic Church. The Philadelphia era would flee to a place of safety, assumed to be Petra in Jordan, under the leadership and guidance of God's one and only Apostle for the ultimate gun lap. Although I understand the Hoeh booklet is no longer in print and is unobtainable from the WCG, a modified and watered down version of this alleged "true history" appeared in serial form in the Good News before it was scrapped, and then recently in the newly religified Plain Truth.

The Waldensians, a twelfth-century heretical sect founded in France by Peter Waldo, was included among those groups which the WCG claimed to be one of the seven churches of Revelation. Hoeh assigned the Waldensians to the Thyatira church, or era. The recent PT article about Waldo and the Waldensians, while diluting any mention of the "church eras," nonetheless made it clear that the WCG still believes the Waldensians to be a group which is its spiritual forefather. Thus, one would believe, it would be expected that the Waldensians cleaved to the same eclectic assortment of Old Testament and New Testament beliefs which the WCG follows today. Not so!

I have researched and written on Peter Waldo and the Waldensians during the course of my studies toward a BA in history. What I found regarding the Waldensians was that, although there are some similarities between their doctrines and those of the WCG (for example, the Waldensians didn't believe in military service or in the taking of oaths), there are some striking dissimilarities between the two. In fact, the Waldensians were closer in beliefs to the Roman Catholic Church than to today's WCG!

There is no documentary evidence to substantiate that the Waldensians observed either the seventh day sabbath or the holy days, observed Levitical dietary laws, or tithed. In fact, according to documentary evidence from the thirteenth century, the Waldensians strongly opposed both the practice of tithing and the possession of material wealth by the clergy. Here's what one document revealed on both subjects:

On tithing: "They [the Waldensians] say that tithes are not to be paid, because the early church did not pay them. They say that if tithes ought to be paid, then the Church, too, should pay them. If you say that the Jews paid tithes, they respond that we should then observe all the other legalia of the Old Testament.... They say that those who pay tithes are damned, as are laymen who receive tithes, since they spend them wickedly."

On possessions: "They say that clerics ought to have no possessions or property."

Source: Peters, Edward, ed. Heresy and Authority in Medieval Europe. Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania Press, 1980.

How interesting! So who has deviated from the truth? Was Waldo in error on tithing (a subject which one could certainly say is at the core of WCG doctrine)? And if so, what does that say about the WCG's teaching regarding church "eras" and Waldo's place in them? Or is it the WCG which has deviated from the truth by proclaiming that anyone who does not tithe (and three times over!) is "cursed with a curse"? Who has got the curse right - the WCG or its claimed historical antecedent, the Waldensians?

If Tkach would read what the Waldensians had to say about possessions, would he give up his chauffeur-driven limo, his Jacuzzi, and his jet? Anyone who is careful in handling the pure Biblical truth knows that the Waldensians were closer in spirit to the church of Jesus Christ than the WCG ever has been or ever will be.

Warren J. Carlson

Readers interested in uncovering the facts about the origin of many WCG doctrines may find one additional source of help. In their Jan.-March 1991 issue, The Discerner published an excellent research paper by Dwayne Krogstad of Northwestern College in Minnesota. Mr. Krogstad's paper, titled "Early Leaders of Seventh-Day Adventism," does not mention the WCG directly. However, he does show the origins of a number of Adventist doctrines HWA, himself, later adopted. The Discerner is published by Religion Analysis Service, 821 Washington St., Brainerd, MN 56401.

Assyrians and Chaldeans

The interpretation of Bible prophecy has played an important role in the WCG's growth since the 1930s. One of the key elements in the WCG's prophetic scheme has been the theory, developed by HWA, that as a result of migrations over the centuries, the nations in many Bible prophecies are today known by different names. For example, HWA taught a type of British Israelism. That is, HWA saw the House of Judah (the Jews) as distinct from the House of Israel which he saw as the white English-speaking nations (the U.S. and British Commonwealth, essentially).

Among the Bible nations HWA claimed to have "identified" were the ancient Chaldeans, whom he saw as the modern Italians, and the ancient Assyrians, whom he saw as the modern Germans.

Unbeknownst to HWA or his followers, apparently, was the fact that there are peoples on earth today who can, and do, trace their origins to the ancient Chaldeans and Assyrians and those peoples are not the Germans or Italians.

According to the Los Angeles Times (3/16/91, p. D 1), the descendants of the ancient Chaldeans by and large still live in the Middle East with the bulk of the modern Chaldeans forming a Roman Catholic minority in modern Iraq. They have a distinct identity, language, and culture. Some modern day Chaldeans have emigrated out of Iraq and about 60,000 now live in Detroit, Michigan where about 600 independent grocery and liquor stores are owned by Chaldeans. For more information about the real Chaldeans, see the short research paper "Who Are the Chaldeans?" by Rev. Michael J. Bazzi, distributed by the Chaldean American Association, 115 South Mollison Ave., El Cajon, CA 92020 (tel. 619-588-9669).

As for the modern Assyrians, about 1.5 million people living today in Iraq claim to be their descendants. Like the Chaldeans, they are a Christian (in this case Orthodox Catholic) minority with a distinct identity, language, and culture. Like the Chaldeans, the Assyrians tend to view themselves as foes of Arab Saddam Hussein. About 300,000 Assyrians have emigrated to the United States and about 68,000 now live in Chicago (Los Angeles Times, 2/21/91, p. A9).

Mr. Homer Ashurian, a spokesman for the Assyrian Universal Alliance Foundation told the Report, "Many people are surprised to learn that there are still Assyrians in the world today. No, we have not disappeared. We are still here." For more information about the real Assyrians, contact the Assyrian Universal Alliance Foundation, 7055 N. Clark, Chicago, IL 60626 (tel. 312-274-9262).

Modern Israelites

One of the absolutely key doctrines of Armstrongism was HWA's version of British Israelism. It was a "version of" because it was never exactly the same teaching as that put forth by such groups as the British Israel World Federation. Nor was it exactly the same as those theories put forth now by many "Identity Movement" groups. Nevertheless, insiders say that none of the "Identity" theories - including HWA's as expounded in his book The United States and Britain in Prophecy - hold any appeal for Tkach. It seems likely, therefore, that the Armstrong version of British Israelism is headed for the doctrinal scrap heap. Nevertheless, we continue to receive letters from readers who find the Armstrong theory fascinating.

Among those who have studied British Israelism, few have done as much serious research as has William Moore of Papillion, Nebraska. In AR40 we ran a letter from Moore concerning some of his research. Shortly thereafter, an article critical of Moore's views appeared in The Truth of the Matter published by the Biblical Church of God (Canada). In response to that article, Moore wrote us the following:

As you suggested, I wrote the group in Canada for a copy of their August, 1988 issue. In it they pretty much castigated me for what I had written about British Israelism. Much of their argument focused on the physical composition of the Coronation Stone of Westminster Abbey. They took exception to my calling it "red sandstone" and my saying that it was probably quarried near Scone in Scotland where the ancient Pictish kings had their royal seat. [Many British Israelism believers prefer to think of the Stone as literally "Jacob's Pillar Stone" of Gen 28:11-ed.] As evidence to support their contention that the Stone housed in Westminster Abbey was not quarried in Scotland, or anywhere else in the British Isles for that matter, they cite an alleged physical examination of the Coronation Stone by a Professor Odlum about the year 1926 or '27. Supposedly, Odlum's examination refutes William Skene's nineteenth century observations that the Stone came from the red sandstone formations near Scone in Scotland.

According to Keith Hunt, editor of The Truth of the Matter, Odlum and an unnamed geologist were permitted to examine the Coronation Stone. To quote Hunt, "They worked under a tremendously powerful arlight. They had the finest microscopic instruments it was possible to get [sic] they made a perfect microscopic examination of that stone and they compared what they found with Scotch granite, granite from Aberdeen, stone from Scone and from Iona, and so on, and they were absolutely satisfied and so wrote and stated, that the stone under the Coronation Chair was not the same texture, was not red sandstone, and that there was no stone in the British Isles, anywhere, that compared with it." In an effort to determine the veracity of Odlum's claims, I wrote The Reverend Canon A. E. Harvey, Librarian of Westminster Abbey. His assistant, a Mrs. E. Nixon, kindly replied to my inquiry... As her letter indicates, Westminster Abbey officials claim they have no record of any geological examination of the Coronation Stone conducted during the 1920s. Dr. C. F. Davidson, Senior Principal Geologist, Her Majesty's Geological Survey, did examine microscopic sections taken from the Stone when it was cleaned in 1892. Although Davidson does not give the exact year of the examination itself, he does say it was "some years" prior to 1951 when he wrote his article on the Coronation Stone for the Illustrated London News. (Mrs. Nixon sent me a copy of the short article.)

Davidson writes, "The Stone has been examined by successive generations of geologists, including John Macculloch, who made the first geological survey of Scotland, and Sir A. C. Ramsey, Sir Archibald Geikie [Prof. Skene refers to both Ramsey and Geike in his 1869 work, The Coronation Stone - Moore] and Sir J. J. H. Teall, three of the most distinguished Directors of H. M. Geological Survey." As you will have noticed, there is no reference to a Professor Odlum. Regarding the most likely geological and geographic origin of the Coronation Stone, Dr. Davidson observed the following in his 1951 article:

"From these investigations, it has long been known that the Stone is almost certainly of Scottish origin; but its lithological character is such that it has always been found a difficult matter to trace it with any certainty to the locality whence it was derived.

"Some years ago, the writer had an opportunity of examining microscopic preparations of minute fragments obtained from the Stone while it was being cleaned in 1892. These were compared with similar preparations of rocks from various localities and geological horizons, and from this study the Coronation Stone was found to agree most closely in lithology with sandstones of Lower Old Red Sandstone age from Scotland. Several examples of sandstone petrographically indistinguishable from the Stone of Destiny were collected from the neighborhood of Scone itself.

"A microscopic section of a pebble from the Coronation Stone has been examined, and it was found that this rock could be matched exactly with pebbles from the sandstones of Perthshire and Angus. [We] can thus assume with reasonable certainty that the Stone was quarried somewhere in eastern Perthshire, probably not far from the ancient seat of the Pictish monarchy."

All this leads me to conclude one of two possibilities. Either the official records of Westminster Abbey are incomplete and Her Majesty's Geological Surveyors are in error or the Professor Odlum story is pure fiction created from whole cloth. Neither Mr. Hunt nor his British Israel associates furnish any substantiating evidence of Odlum's examination; they cite not one reference from which one could verify Odlum's claim. The geologist who participated in Odlum's examination is also unnamed.

In the words of Mrs. Nixon, "I cannot believe that any proper geological examination could have taken place without the express consent of the Dean and Chapter and there is no indication of that having been either asked for or given."

If Professor Odlum examined the Coronation Stone in 1926 or '27, he apparently did so without the permission or knowledge of the authorities responsible for the care and protection of the Stone. Logically, the good professor would have wanted their support for his investigation, not only to gain access to the Stone but also to help corroborate that he had, indeed, examined authorized samples from the Coronation Stone. Without that endorsement, no matter what the conclusions might have been, we would have no guarantee that the samples he examined actually came from the Stone of Scone, defeating the whole purpose of his investigation.

I am interested in reviewing any evidence AR readers might have of Odlum's 1920s examination, if it exists. In the meantime, I propose to write Her Majesty's Geological Survey to obtain whatever information they might have regarding the geographic history and physical composition of the English Coronation Stone. I'll keep you posted on developments.

Bill Moore

Readers familiar with only the HWA version of British Israelism may be surprised to discover that there are many other varieties of the theory. Those just beginning to study the subject may benefit from reading J. Gordon Melton's chapter on "The Identity Movement" in his Encyclopedic Handbook of Cults in America (Garland Publishing, 1986).

Another helpful work is Anglo-Israelism: Divine Master Plan or Satanic Deception? published by TSL Publishing House, P.O. Box 18122, Cleveland Heights, OH 44118. While AR does not endorse all the views in this book (nor in most other books we mention), TSL's 77-page book is, nevertheless, helpful in understanding Armstrong's prophecy theories and the racial theories of many he seems to have influenced: Anglo-Israelism and Euro-Israelism groups, the Posse Comitatus, the Order, the CSA, neo-Nazi Skinheads, the Aryan Nations, proponents of the "Serpent's Seed" doctrine, etc., etc.

As is obvious from TSL's book, there are varieties of "Identity" theory to fit the needs of just about any racist group. Some readers are aware that the Mormons view the native American Indians as "the Lost Ten Tribes" of Israel. Many will be surprised to discover, however, that "the Lost Ten Tribes" at one time or another have been thought to be the Japanese people and even some of the Maori of New Zealand. For an excellent insight into the latter, see Peter Farb's Man's Rise to Civilization (As Shown By the Indians of North America From Primeval Times to the Coming of the Industrial State) (Avon, 1968, pp. 235, 328-9, 367).

Today, there are even a significant number of blacks who believe they are the "true Israelites." Notice what one of our New York readers wrote to us:

I am writing you for two reasons. First, in Bitter Harvest: Gordon Kahl and the Posse Comitatus Murder in the Heartland by James Corcoran (Viking Books, 1990), the "Christian Identity" movement is mentioned on p. 38 along with its connection to British Israelism and Herbert Armstrong. You may find the book of interest.

Second, I'd like to mention the Black Muslim/Black Hebrews movement. I don't know if these people are active on the west coast, but in Manhattan they have been out in growing force for about four years now. (Let me tell you right here that I am white and of northwestern European heritage.)

The most militant followers dress in garb that can only be described as ancient Israelitish with Shakespearean touches. On weekend nights, they lay siege to a streetcorner and pump out over loudspeakers what can only be described as AFRO-Israelism! Basically, they claim Adam was black, all of the Hebrews were black (and the Egyptians too), all of the prophets were black, Christ was black, God is black, and whites are either (depending on the source) a genetic mutation (ala albinism) or the spawn of a person whose line God cursed with perpetual leprosy. Either way, the basic idea is that all whites are of Satan and when blacks wake up to their true Israelitish heritage, they will rise up and destroy all evil, Devil-loving whites around the world.

When I first came across these people four years ago, I laughed about them to myself because their claims seemed so outlandish. Yet I have seen them grow in influence, power, and in number of adherents. Most, if not all, of them eschew Christianity and have taken up Islam. Louis Farrakhan is apparently one of their leaders. And, like the Anglo-Israelites, they identify the Japanese as the children of Ammon. Surely this stuff must have some roots in Anglo-Israelism. Or is it the reverse, as they assert (that the whites have stolen, wholesale, their beliefs - and identity - in order to suppress all non-whites)?...

I'm not sure if you find any of this interesting or just plain ridiculous. I discounted it four years ago. But these people aren't going away and I think we are going to hear more about them as time goes on.

It is probable that in the near future a number of authors will be publishing new books involving HWA's British Israel theory. We understand one such author is Steven M. Collins (3901 Crescent Drive, Sioux Falls, SD 47106). While he acknowledges that some of HWA's historical data was flawed, Collins seems to feel HWA's general views on British Israelism were correct.

Another writer who seems to feel that HWA's theory has merit is Gary Arvidson. Formerly with the Foundation for Biblical Research and now living in Cherryville, North Carolina, Arvidson has been working on a large book dealing with Bible prophecy and the Identity theory. For a number of years now, Arvidson has correlated a substantial amount of data dealing with the Bible record, secular history, geography, astrology, and the mystical teachings of Manly P. Hall and others. One major part of his planned tome is already complete. But it remains to be seen if Arvidson will ever find the means to publish all of his research.

Finally, many will be as surprised as we were to discover that Identity theories based on the idea of a twelve-tribe nation are not found only among Bible-believing groups. In their new book Twelve-Tribe Nations and the Science of Enchanting the Landscape, authors John Michell and Christine Rhone write that many ancient civilizations were divided into twelve tribes with each tribe corresponding to one of the signs of the Zodiac. While Israel is the most famous of the twelve-tribe nations, there are many others. The authors claim that examples of twelvetribe nations can be found "in all times and places, from remote antiquity to the nineteenth century, from Iceland to Madagascar, from Europe through the ancient East to America." The beautifully illustrated Twelve-Tribe Nations ($14.95 plus $3.50 postage) is available through many bookstores or by writing to: Phanes Press, P.O. Box 6114, Grand Rapids, MI 49516 (tel. 800-963-0892).

FBI Releases Stripped WCG Files

As we reported in AR48, Gene Bailey is an AR reader who has been using the Freedom of Information Act in an attempt to get the FBI's files on the WCG. After being put on hold for two years, the government finally sent Bailey the hundreds of pages of information he requested - well, sort of. Bailey tells us that the government's censors blacked out so much of the information for "national security" and other reasons that what he received is virtually worthless.

Ambassador Granted Accreditation Candidacy-Again

In June, Ambassador College received word that the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges had granted it "candidacy status" in its most recent drive for full accreditation. Writing in the July 14 WN (pp. 3, 6), Ambassador College President Donald L. Ward explained:

The next step for Ambassador College is to prepare a progress report in the spring of 1993 and, we hope, receive another creditation visit in the fall of 1993 with the expectation of receiving full accreditation in June of 1994.

In the meantime, the achievement of candidacy status provides the constituents of the College with all the practical benefits of accreditation.

All those who are Ambassador alumni certainly wish AC the best of luck in its accreditation drive. But as Ward, himself, pointed out in his article, Herbert Armstrong, writing in the college's 1947 Bulletin had promised that Ambassador would be accredited before its first senior class graduated. Forty-five years later, Ambassador's last remaining campus is still unaccredited. If one looks care-fully at the Southern Association's list of recommendations and suggestions reprinted in the Dec. 23, 1991 WN (p.3), one will see that most parallel the suggestions made by AR in our large 1977 edition (pp. 4-8). Our suggestions in 1977 were ignored and Ambassador-Pasadena's candidacy status ended in 1978.

With the state of Texas threatening to close the Big Sandy campus if it doesn't become accredited, Ambassador's current accreditation drive may be forced to succeed. Those recently visiting the Big Sandy campus report numerous changes. For example, there is now an intercollegiate sports program. There seem to be more foreign students on campus (in 1991 there were 39 countries represented). And the student body is quite noticeably racially diversified. In fact, last year's student body president was Kevin Epps, a black student. The results of Tkach's multimillion dollar building program are evident everywhere. And construction of the new Harold L. Jackson Hall of Humanities was begun in May.

Incidentally, Tkach has adopted one more policy common at virtually all other colleges of "the world." Contributions made toward the construction of various buildings, when generous enough, get special recognition. According to the June 2 WN (p. 1):

Those who donate from $200 to $999 will be considered Silver Circle members; $1,000 to $4,999 will be listed in the Golden Circle; $5,000 to $9,999, the Platinum Circle, and $10,000 or more, the Ambassador Circle. Alternatively, if a congregation, group of congregations or individuals donate $50,000, a plaque will be placed on a classroom acknowledging the group's or individual's contribution.

Because the WCG contributes about $13,000 per year toward each student's enrollment, each Ambassador student is spending only about $4,500 per year (tuition and living expenses) to attend Ambassador (WN, 6/10/91, p. 10). If the cost of attending Ambassador can continue to be kept that low, it may turn out that for many church families an Ambassador education for their kids will one day be a good deal.

World Tomorrow Too Erotic?

Some WCG members complain that the only way they can get The World Tomorrow is if they can afford cable TV. But if you are one of those still lucky enough to get the church's telecast in your area, you may have noticed an occasional slickness in the production. Many Worldwidiers are pleased by their telecast's sophistication. But the telecast does have its critics, even among church members. For example, WCG headquarters recently received the following colorful comment from a viewer:

Mr. Tkach, Christ's gospel should be of a clean and respectable nature fitten to be presented to young children and Christian adults. I noticed as recently as a few Sundays ago the telecast presenting a group of practically nude, shapely prostitutes parading and displaying their beautiful bodies before a pack of long-haired, bearded, filthy street men who appeared to be dying of AIDS or syphilis. Those prostitutes were wearing nothing at all except very, very scanty bathing outfits.

Back when the Apostles were recording the gospels, you never read about them going into such groups and taking pictures of whores and whoremongers (doing everything but the very act itself - which creates a lust in those taking such photographs) and then presenting such worldly idolatry and filth.

I admit, however, that as the gospel of the kingdom, sexual relations should be gradually taught to children, but only as they become old enough to learn of such. But not by displaying nude, shapely, female bodies twisting and wiggling in front of a pile of sickly, nasty, dying, lustful men who would not make buzzard bait.

Kinsey, Sex and Fraud

Dr. Alfred C. Kinsey, author of the famous studies Sexual Behavior in the Human Male (1948) and Sexual Behavior in the Human Female (1953) has been called "one of the 100 most important Americans of the twentieth century" (Life, fall 1990). Kinsey, whose work is said to have set in motion "the first wave of the sexual revolution," has been called by Esquire magazine, our age's "Patron Saint of Sex." In the years since Kinsey's writings first appeared, his research has become so accepted by the media that his conclusions are almost always given the status of accepted scientific "truth." And today, when representatives from the sex institute that bears his name appear on TV talk shows, they are frequently accorded almost unquestioned deference.

It is difficult to underestimate the impact Kinsey has had on sexual values in the late twentieth century. According to U.S. News (1/9/89), Kinsey's work provided society with "the cornerstone of almost everything known about human sexuality." Indeed, Kinsey's research is often said to form the very foundation of modern sex education. In the last two years, however, a number of researchers have been questioning the very foundation of Kinsey's work.

In Kinsey, Sex and Fraud: The Indoctrination of a People, authors Dr. Judith A. Reisman, psychotherapist Edward W. Eichel and editors Dr. John H. Court and Dr. J. Gordon Muir make the startling claim that Kinsey's research is the "most egregious example of science fraud in this century." The authors document the Kinsey team's research chicanery so devastatingly that a reviewer for the prestigious British medical journal The Lancet (3/2/91, p. 547) wrote that Reisman, et. al. "demolish the foundations of the two [Kinsey] reports."

Among the author's charges are that Kinsey's data was obtained from a sample of interviewees that was grossly unrepresentative of society (containing a high percentage of prisoners, sex offenders, etc.), that Kinsey's research was skewed to reflect his own biases toward bi-sexuality and against traditional Judeo-Christian values, and that some of Kinsey's data was obtained from highly detailed sex experimentation done on children illegally and without informed consent. In reporting on the new book, the Times of London (12/29/90, p.8) wrote, "The Kinsey Institute founded by the pioneer denies the authors' claims, ignoring the book's call for a full investigation. The institute's attempt to stifle the allegations, by asking a local radio station not to broadcast a talk programme on the subject, has only added to the controversy."

When we realize how long it has been that Kinsey's research has been accepted as scientifically valid, the evidence presented in Kinsey, Sex and Fraud is, indeed, shocking. For those who wonder about conspiracies in the mass media, or about how it has come to be that pedophiles can openly march in parades and how major denominations can openly ordain avowed homosexuals, this book will provide unsettling insights.

Kinsey, Sex and Fraud ($19.95 plus $2.00 shipping) may be ordered at bookstores or directly from the distributor: Huntington House Publishers, P.O. Box 53788, Lafayette, Louisiana 70505 (tel. 800-749-4009).

Letters

Editor: Our AR50 article about Pastor General Tkach's traveling style brought a number of colorful letters from our readers, including the following:

I wonder if that pseudo Pope would actually notice if his limo's tires were overinflated by only two pounds or if they were underinflated by a few pounds. If I had anything to do with it, I would underinflate one of his rear tires by about ten pounds so that the car would start to vibrate when it built up speed. That so-called "Apostle" would undoubtedly get so upset that he would heave his fruit and vegetable platters left and right! You know, soft drinks like 7Up and Coca-Cola are hard to get anymore in glass bottles up here. If Tkach were to come to Winnipeg, he would have to drink out of plastic! And, as if all his requirements are not enough, he still wants a touring bus? He should be stuffed in a rickshaw pulled around the city by the local WCG pastor!

Canada

Editor: Security experts tell us that the reason for overinflating limo tires the way Tkach requires is to increase the vehicle's maneuverability in the event of a terrorist attack.

I found the leaked instructions about how field ministers were to prepare for, and cater to, the desires of Joe Tkach and his entourage remarkable.

I personally took care of arrangements for Herbert Armstrong at the Feast of Tabernacles sites where I was festival coordinator for seven years. While I certainly don't want to become an apologist for HWA, I do feel the need to point out that HWA was never as demanding or as hard to please as Tkach. Herbert Armstrong always brought his own driver, Mel Olinger, because his eyesight was failing due to old age. It is true that he preferred black Cadillacs. But if for some reason, as happened in 1978, a Cadillac wasn't available, another car would do without complaint from Armstrong.

At all feast sites other than Big Sandy he stayed in the hotel or motel where the other ministers were staying. We customarily reserved only two rooms for him - a bedroom and a sitting room. The bed was standard for the motel, though we moved in furniture for the sitting room if the motel didn't already have such a suite. He did want a small refrigerator for his wine and champagne, Bristol Cream Sherry and Dom Perignon, respectively. Mel took care of his luggage and helped him in other ways, and Dr. Lochner gave him the rubdowns he wanted as he advanced in age.

While Loma still lived, his requirements were much more moderate than that because of her conserving nature. For example, there was no jet airplane then. Personally, I believe the Falcon and the G-2 were corrupting influences in a manner not different from what we see in Washington today.

I have little doubt that had Herbert Armstrong been younger, he might also have gone as far as your piece shows Worldwide's current leadership has gone (especially if Loma had not been around to curb the slide down the slippery slope). But, the fact is HWA did not do so before he died, even though he was the church's founder.

*commercial real estate field, Robinson has written a number of papers ("The Russian Empire," "Our Noble Language," "The Devil and His Power," etc.). He has also written and recently published A Little Corner of Texas, a 222-page history of Live Oak County, Texas where he grew up. While the new book has nothing to do with the WCG, the years of research that went into its production and its charming stories will be appreciated by many - especially those with connections to South Texas. A Little Corner of Texas was favorably reviewed by Dan Kilgore, past president of the Texas State Historical Society, and has also gotten Robinson back on TV and into the newspapers (see the Alice Echo-News, 8/24/91, p. 1). I am a disabled veteran. My wife, who is a WCG member, has taken control of our finances and I have to sneak away any monies that I can after my wife pillages my veteran's allocation and sends a big chunk to the memory of Herbert. Meanwhile, I have only one change of clothes, what I wear is dilapidated, and there are holes in my shoes.

Arizona

I have heard that the WCG is now asking its members to send in 2.8 percent out of every pay check if they find it too hard to pay the whole 10 percent of third tithe every three years. I don't think this is Biblical at all.

Oklahoma

After spending more than twenty years in the Armstrong (now Tkach) church, I finally decided to order all your back issues. What a revelation! They really helped me to feel better about my life.

So much of what I had previously suspected (but only vaguely) now turns out to have been true. All along "a little voice" (maybe my subconscious - or was it the Holy Spirit?) was telling me something was very, very wrong in the church. Now I wish I could have read every one of your publications long ago. What a difference it would have made in my life. And how much money I would not have wasted on that "church."

I have only one criticism of your efforts. It is no wonder you are short of funds for publishing. You are giving too much free publicity to groups who are, no doubt, draining funds away from AR. I suspect many of your readers order all kinds of reading materials because of your mentioning other publishers. And then they have nothing left for the Report. Just a suggestion. I want to see you keep publishing.

Florida

I have relatives in widely separated congregations, and it appears that each local congregation may have a rather large difference as to emphasis and even doctrine.

North Carolina

Editor: The new WCG seems to be somewhat similar to its new Trinity doctrine - really three churches in one. There's the WCG that is hypnotized by Tkach: they will believe anything he says. A second WCG thinks Tkach is not moving fast enough: this group can't wait to start keeping Sunday and Christmas. A third WCG is loyal to the bones of HWA: these folks are members of "The Dead Apostle's Society. " What your local WCG congregation hears from the pulpit depends on which WCG the local pastor belongs to. In one sense, of course, it doesn't really matter. It's all still the same WCG!

Editor's Note

As you may suspect, because of the long time it has been between AR50 and this issue, we have been struggling, like many of you, to get through the current recession. It has never been easy publishing the Report, but this past year it has been very close to impossible. In order to keep publishing, we have had to cut back our mailing list considerably. We just can't afford to send out issues to those who don't contribute. So if you want to continue receiving AR, we occasionally need to hear from you.

If we can pay off the debts we have incurred for this issue, our next should prove highly informative. In addition to our regular reporting on the WCG, we hope to give an update on the major WCG splinter groups. We also hope to provide more insights into the possessive psychology of cults and on the newest methods of combatting their influence.

Our thanks to all of you who are helping to make this publication possible.

June 1993 (AR52)

Editor: More than seven years have now passed since the death of Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA), founder of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG), Ambassador College, the Ambassador Foundation, the World Tomorrow broadcast, and the Plain Truth magazine. Those years have seen Armstrong's successor, Joseph W. Tkach, make dramatic changes in WCG doctrine and church policies. Not surprisingly, those changes have not been accepted by many in the WCG's ministry. The latest addition to the WCG's executive exodus is none other than long-time WCG evangelist Roderick C. Meredith.

Bruce Renehan, a twenty-three-year veteran of the WCG who recently exited, is writing a book about the history of the WCG. He provided us with the following article.

Rod Meredith Becomes Contender for Church of God Crown

In December, evangelist Roderick C. Meredith parted company with the Worldwide Church of God. Dr. Meredith, a Joplin State College R.O.T.C. student and Golden Gloves boxing champion who came to Ambassador College in 1949 as one of that institution's earliest students, was also one of the very first evangelists ordained by Herbert W. Armstrong. For most of that church's history, Dr. Meredith was one of the WCG's leading theologians, college professors, and top executives. But now, Meredith has started his own competing church, The Global Church of God, and his own competing religious broadcast, The World Ahead. Here is a round by round description of how it happened:

Round 1. In mid-1992, Tkach decided to put the WCG's oldest shepherds out to pasture by retiring them. Pro-Tkach politicians saw this as a smart move because it helped Tkach save face over past embarrassments [a good example: the WCG's loss in the McNair case], it further distanced the church from HWA, it removed from the Council of Elders voices opposed to change, it helped create straw men to take the blame for the failure of past "paradigms" (a new WCG ministerial cliché meaning "patterns" or "ideals"), and finally, it paid back most of Tkach's past antagonists who, as he has mentioned in numerous sermons, had threatened to destroy him in his early years in Pasadena.

The first old-time evangelist to be forcibly retired was Gerald Waterhouse. In cutting him off, Tkach gave Waterhouse a minor bit of acclamation in a minor article attached to an almost mocking photograph of his grinning face in the Worldwide News (WN, 9/22/92, p. 8). Waterhouse had made an entire career out of promoting Herbert Armstrong adoration on a round-the-world preaching circuit that made him one of WCG's most influential ministers. His sermons included massive doses of his own unique prophecies plus imaginative expositions on the supposed cosmic significance of various numbers, calendar dates, and the names of Herbert Armstrong, Garner Ted Armstrong, Stanley Rader, Big Sandy, Bricket Wood, and Pasadena. He was the main proponent of the doctrine that WCG members would flee one day to Petra in Jordan. He lionized Herbert Armstrong as fulfilling an end-time role as Moses, Zerubbabel, John the Baptist, John the Revelator, one of the Two Witnesses, Malachi, Ezra and Elijah. He unflinchingly told WCG congregations that they would never see Herbert Armstrong die of old age. Few, if any, of Waterhouse's predictions came true. Once HWA died, the new object of Waterhouse's idolatry became his new boss, Joseph W. Tkach who, in Waterhouse's eyes, began to take on superhuman qualities. But Waterhouse's style did not adjust to the new administration. His sermons (actually, his sermon, singular - his sermon repertoire seems to have included only one real sermon which he repeated thousands of times) continued to be filled with rantings, ravings, and lectern pounding. Significantly, his sermons continued to extend well past the time limits normally allowed to local pastors who were frequently offended by his audacity. Clearly, Waterhouse was a loose cannon that needed to be tied down.

Round 2. A second major WCG figure Tkach decided to retire was Meredith. It should not have come as a surprise. Meredith had been privately saying for some time that he thought Tkach was leading the WCG in the wrong direction. In fact, before HWA had even died, Meredith privately made statements to the effect that he, and not Tkach, should be Armstrong's successor. Not surprisingly, for a number of years, Meredith was not allowed to speak from WCG pulpits (although he continued to receive a generous church paycheck). Then, in October, Meredith was allowed to deliver a closing prayer before thousands gathered at a Feast of Tabernacles service in Palm Springs, California. The prayer was of world-record time length. It was so long that at least one member was seen taking notes.

It was shortly after that faux pas that Meredith was asked by the Tkach administration to retire gracefully. The humiliation [and salary cut - ed.] was more than the evangelist could bear and so he requested a private audience with Pastor General Tkach. The resulting meeting lasted over two hours.

Thousands of WCG members waited with baited breath to discover the outcome of the confrontation. Undoubtedly, many frustrated Worldwidiers, hoping the WCG could avoid another schism, were like the crowd in the movie Monty Python's Life of Brian. In that comedy there was a scene in which the crowd asked the Roman governor for the release of a prisoner named Roderick. In a parody of the biblical "give us Barnabas" episode, the throng cried out "release Roderick!" When the Roman emperor, who had a speech impediment, heard this, he commanded his men by shouting "Wewease Wodewick!" As Roderick was summoned for release, the crowd was both joyful at the result and hysterical about the governor's manner. But for Roderick Meredith there would be no such reprieve from the WCG's emperor. Instead of being released from his years of censorship and pulpit denial, he was, instead, fired and disfellowshipped from the very church he had helped to create.

Round 3. Next came a mysterious letter mailed to WCG members around the world from an anonymous group. Signed merely "Friends from Pasadena," the letter accused Tkach and his staff of sabotaging the sanctity of Herbert Armstrong's divine commission by secretly destroying all of Armstrong's doctrinal "revelations." Its style, delivery, and typeface, coupled with the fact that it came from someone with computer access to the WCG's membership list, led most to conclude that it was an inside job. Some at WCG headquarters felt the letter had to have come from the church's editorial department (with purposeful misspellings added in to throw the inquisitive off track). Some in editorial, however, were convinced that the guilty culprits were in the church's television production department. Still others thought that the letter was the combined effort of some in the now de facto defunct Council of Elders. The Council, originally set up by HWA, had for years been sitting on its hands. With every distasteful doctrinal swing toward Protestantism, they have had to contend with the possibility of eventually resigning their positions and getting real jobs at McDonalds or elsewhere. Many thought that old-timers on the Council were the actual "Friends from Pasadena." Naturally, WCG headquarters told the field ministry that any members receiving copies of the letter were to turn them in to their pastors unopened.

Round 4. With the "Friends from Pasadena" letter circulating throughout the church, some were convinced that there would be an internal revolt against the Tkach administration and that Meredith would be restored to power. No such revolt transpired. Indeed, many came to feel that not only was Meredith behind the letter, but that he may have been responsible for other such anonymous letters in the past. Meredith quickly learned the frustration that other WCG members have felt over the years when they have attempted to apply the mandates of Matthew 18:15-17 ("if a brother shall trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault..."). Numerous statements Meredith has made in the last few months indicate that he actually expected a number of WCG evangelists to come to his rescue in December. It didn't happen. Even Dr. Herman Hoeh, whom Meredith had considered one of his very closest friends, told Rod in essence, "I never knew you, depart from me you worker of iniquity."

Round 5. With his break from the WCG now complete, Meredith formally announced that he had formed the Global Church of God (GCG). He then declared himself Pastor General. In a December 31, 1992 letter to his "Brethren and Co-Workers," Meredith boasted how he had been "ordained an Evangelist by Jesus Christ through Herbert W. Armstrong forty years ago this month. He then went on to outline his differences with the Tkach administration and his goals for the new church. In a flyer distributed widely, Meredith has explained his mission as threefold: "(1) To preach the gospel of the soon-coming Kingdom based on God's Laws. (2) To preach the end-time prophecies and give Ezekiel's warning to our peoples. And, (3) to feed the flock of God through weekly Sabbath Services with inspiring, dynamic preaching."

Round 6. With Meredith's announcement, the WCG rumor mill went into overdrive. Some Tkach associates began calling Meredith "insane." Employees at the church headquarters Meredith had helped to build began referring to Meredith's new ministry as "The Gullible Church of Rod." Yet, while many employees were outwardly laughing at the insulting terms in a benign show of WCG support, they were secretly sending tithes and offerings to Meredith's new ministry. And, like Nicodemus in the night, many close, personal friends of Rod and his wife assured them over the phone that were they not on the WCG's payroll, they would surely join Global openly. In fact, in the first few weeks following Global's establishment, its 800 number was so jammed with calls from those offering moral support, it was difficult to get through because of the almost constant busy signal.

Round 7. One series of comments by Tkach, in particular, only expanded the Meredith problem. Earlier in the year, Tkach had carelessly remarked in a sermon how previous church administrations had been in error on major policies and ideas that "we were dumb to believe in the past." The remarks, actually transmitted via satellite to the entire church during the Feast of Tabernacles, infuriated a fair number who deduced that the statement was actually a veiled attack on church founder Herbert W. Armstrong. In late December, in a clumsy stab at damage control, Tkach attempted an apology for the "dumb to believe" remark in a video-taped sermon sent to all WCG congregations. Unfortunately, in what many perceived as an outrageous display of poor emotional control, the apology quickly degenerated into a tirade against members not in agreement with his new doctrinal and policy positions. Tkach, in effect, said to those who didn't like his changes, "There's the door! Good riddance!" Among those who took Tkach's advice was veteran WCG deacon Bill Brazil. He now oversees Global's printing operations.

Round 8. The tirade that prompted Brazil to leave was not an isolated incident. Although Tkach has long sought to project the persona of a kind and benevolent administrator, many insiders say Tkach ever more frequently is behaving like a wounded lion ready to devour his own young.

Others say Tkach is increasingly paranoid. An example of this is a strange announcement WCG headquarters required all its pastors to make in late December. With the seventh anniversary of HWA's death approaching, pastors were ordered to warn their members against any kind of demonstrations during church services on the anniversary date. The pastors then threatened their flocks that if any member displayed disloyalty to headquarters on that date, the ministry was under strict orders to call the police and have that church member arrested in front of family and friends during services.

One minister from a northwestern state confided in me, "I don't know what we'd do if a problem broke out here. We don't even have a phone in the hall. We'd have to drive down to the 7-Eleven. By the time we got back, everybody probably would be gone."

When the anniversary date came, nothing happened. So what was the point of the announcement? In trying to track down the source of the rumor that a disturbance had been planned by anti-Tkach forces, the first group I thought to ask was the newly formed Global Church of God. My contact in that organization told me, however, that they had absolutely nothing to do with the scare. In fact, further investigation revealed that the actual perpetrator of the scare was on the top floor of the WCG's Hall of Administration. Has Tkach, then, become like Caesar, living in fear of the "Ides of March"? Does he run when there is no one chasing him?

Round 9. In January, Tkach finally got down to serious mud-slinging. In an editorial in the WN (1/26/93, p. 1), Tkach, in essence, called Meredith self-righteous, power hungry, and a liar. He further stated that Meredith wants "to take [his church] back into the bondage of an impossible salvation by works." Tkach claimed that it is he, himself, and not Meredith, who is following in HWA's footsteps. And that HWA, before his death, had privately confided in him that Meredith had been a continual thorn in his side. Unfortunately, like many other statements HWA supposedly made to Tkach before his death (including, supposedly, a plea by HWA that Tkach change many of the WCG's key doctrines), there seem to have been no other witnesses to this HWA to Tkach communication.

Round 10. Meredith has fought back with a series of stinging jabs: Meredith emphasizes how he was one of the first evangelists ordained by HWA and how he knew the Armstrong family personally and intimately. He even assisted HWA in attempting to resurrect Richard Armstrong after his fatal car crash in 1958, and he was one of the few at Loma Armstrong's death bed. Using Waterhouse-like "reasoning," he points out that GCG was born 40 years after he was ordained and that at GCG's very first service there were 19 people in attendance - exactly the same number as at HWA's first service decades ago. Meredith likens Tkach to Diotrephes in III John 9 and also, predictably, to Lucifer in his rebellion against God.

Round 11. Some in the Tkach camp, however, have come up with their own numerological rebuttal to Meredith. Someone has pointed out how there were seven years between the WCG financial crisis of 1965 and the church crisis of 1972 when Garner Ted Armstrong was put out of the WCG [and major WCG prophecies failed]. There were then seven years until the start of the famous State of California versus WCG lawsuit in 1979, another seven years until the death of HWA in 1986, and, finally, another seven years until Meredith's great rebellion of 1993. The theory WCG numerologists are apparently promoting is that God allows Satan to attack the WCG in some major way every seven years. Meredith therefore is supposed to represent but one more Satanic attack the WCG will weather on its way to "the end."

Round 12. As we go into round twelve, it is very clear the match between Meredith and Tkach will be a long one. In the three months since GCG was formed, Meredith has settled on a mailing address (P.O. Box 5500, Glendora, CA 91740-5500), has a toll-free number (800-959-1641), a monthly newsletter, a number of booklets that imitate HWA's old booklets in content and style, cassette lectures that sound almost as supercharged as HWA was in his early years, a weekly radio broadcast that is already heard in 12 major markets, congregations in 18 U.S. cities and two foreign cities, and plans for a magazine to begin later this year. Besides Bill Brazil, prominent WCG figures who have already aligned themselves with GCG include Edwin Pope (a CPA who is GCG's business manager), Donald E. Davis (GCG's general manager), Norman S. Edwards (heads GCG's computer department), Jim Downes, Eric Myers, Sven Clark (GCG's mailing manager), Ron Nelson, John D. Schroeder, Art Gray, Sidney Hegvold, Charles Knowlton, David Pack (who brought many of his Akron, Ohio congregation with him), Jean Carion (who brought 175 of his Brussels, Belgium congregation with him), Mordakhai Joseph, Gene Scarbrough, and evangelist Raymond McNair, who will head up GCG's editorial efforts. By the time this article goes to press, it is likely that many more will be added to the Meredith camp. On January 2, Meredith told his congregation:

When I grew up in the chat piles of Joplin, Missouri, it was the largest lead and zinc mining city on earth... in the amount of lead mined and so on. I got this scar here on this hand and another on this and several over my head. My mother used to wash the blood off my head over the bathtub. And I got called all kinds of names, so I'm used to being called names. And I hope you get used to that too! That doesn't bother me. As long as God is with us, it's going to work out!

Meredith, who once punched a "liberal" fellow evangelist in the face in church, is a scrapper. It looks like Tkach is in for a real fight.

GTA's CGI Becoming Like HWA's WCG?

Of all the churches that have sprung out of the WCG, probably the most prominent is the Church of God, International (CGI). Because it is headed by Garner Ted Armstrong (GTA), the son of WCG founder HWA, for many people this organization represents the true continuation of the Armstrong "commission." CGI currently has more than 3,500 members, annual revenues of more than $3 million, and a weekly telecast that is seen in about 40 markets. Small compared to the WCG, CGI has maintained only a modest annual growth rate since its start in 1978. However, through the issuance of $750,000 in first lien mortgage bonds in 1992, CGI was recently able to complete the construction of a corporate headquarters building on Lake Palestine, south of Tyler, Texas. As part of the complex, there is CGI's "Family Life Center," which was made possible by a bequest from a nonmember lady who was obviously an admirer of GTA. Recently GTA announced that he plans to open a ministerial training school called "Imperial Academy" at the same site in the fall of 1993.

While CGI has its own evangelistic activities, a good percentage of CGI members are former WCG members. Why do folks leave Worldwide to join CGI? Here is what Mr. Lloyd W. Cary of Toledo, Ohio wrote us on that topic:

After 26 years, our family came out of the WCG. And, honestly, once we made up our minds, it was like coming out of slavery in Egypt! It happened like this. We sat and squirmed for years, knowing that all the [doctrinal] changes were not right. But we were caught up in the "paradigm" (the pop psychology term they use to give themselves more credibility) of "God is on His throne," "this is God's one and only true church," and "Christ will work it out." The problem was we didn't know there was anywhere else to go without jeopardizing our eternal life....

I recently had a conversation on the phone with a lady in Worldwide and I said, "Mrs. so-and-so, if I pointed to words in your Bible and they were different from what Worldwide taught, which would you believe? After some hesitation, she said - and I quote - "Well, I'm no scholar. I guess I would believe what the church says."....

I challenge anybody sitting in WCG services to take this test: While taking notes, make a check list in your margin and notice how many times WCG ministers correct your Bible. Some of the phrases to listen for are: "This verse, or word, should be.... The original Hebrew, or Greek, (which no living man has ever seen) is.... The ____ translation reads..." [etc.]. Again, the real issue is: Are they Bible believers or Bible correctors?

Putting aside a host of philosophical questions raised by such views, the above comments, nevertheless, reflect views commonly held by many who leave the WCG to go to CGI (and other church organizations), namely, that the WCG's leadership has intellectualized away too many of what they see as the Bible's fundamental teachings. Ironically, for quite a few years after GTA left his father's organization, the WCG's official position on his departure was that he had been disfellowshipped for having liberalized too many of the WCG's teachings. It is true that upon founding CGI, GTA did adopt a number of doctrinal positions different from the old WCG (for instance, allowing those who were ill to obtain medical treatment - a doctrinal change Tkach later adopted for Worldwide - using softer language regarding tithing, and doing away with the "church eras" and "Petra as a place of safety" doctrines). GTA has even allowed his members to sing a number of traditional hymns that HWA would have considered "too Protestant." Nevertheless, a comparison of the current doctrines of CGI and WCG reveals that CGI is far closer to the original teachings of Herbert W. Armstrong. In fact, it is fair to say that had HWA not been senile during the last decade or so of his life (see AR23), the WCG during the eighties would very likely have evolved into a church very much like CGI is today.

During the eighties, AR frequently received letters from folks who said they were much happier in the CGI than they were in the WCG. Many have told us they found CGI less authoritative and more open. In regard to the latter, it is interesting that GTA, unlike Tkach, has frequently allowed himself to be interviewed by members of the press. Some have also pointed out that CGI has courageously taken a strong stand against the rabidly racist "Seed of Satan" teaching that some former Worldwidiers have adopted.

Not only do most CGI members say they believe in CGI's doctrines, there are many who remain GTA admirers. And certainly GTA, himself, recognizes the follow-the-leader phenomenon that pervades many churches. In the January 18, 1986 edition of the Pasadena Star-News, GTA was quoted as saying, "Sooner or later, a church has to identify with a person." Nevertheless, there are some in CGI who are there not because of GTA, but in spite of him. One AR reader recently told us, "Ted doesn't realize how tired some of us are of hearing about his past accomplishments, his hunting expeditions, his knowledge of jet aircraft, or of how he met world leaders years ago." There are other complaints. One of our Orange County readers wrote us:

It's good to know that some things never change. I just received a copy of The International News published by CGI. In the lead article, GTA writes, "I find it difficult to be cutting, sardonic, cynical to people." Say what? Anyone who has ever listened to Ted for over five minutes knows what utter nonsense this is! Typical GTA BS.

Sometimes it is difficult to take GTA seriously. For instance, in his Dec. 17, 1991 letter to his "fellow-laborers," GTA wrote, "I hope you saw Diane Sawyer's 'Primetime Live' expose of three 'televangelists' here in Texas. Some of the blatant hypocrisy used by these men to extract money from their television audiences was absolutely shameful." He then went on to report how his right hand man, evangelist Ronald Dart, has written a forthcoming book that exposes the fund raising gimmicks of televangelists. (We wonder if it includes a chapter on the mandatory triple tithing doctrine.) GTA went on to offer his readers a sermon tape entitled "Avoiding False Christs and False Prophets." In a recent telecast, GTA even lamented how a lot of TV preachers "seem to only want your money - or your daughter."

Back in 1988, when Christian fundamentalist groups around the country protested Martin Scorsese's The Last Temptation of Christ (thereby turning a terribly boring and stupid movie into a box office success), GTA jumped on their bandwagon. About the movie he had only read about, GTA wrote his followers:

I was stunned - sickened, absolutely shocked almost beyond words.... [and regarding some of the language in the movie:] Words nearly fail me to describe my utter OUTRAGE; the anguish of heart, the feeling of literal, physical sickness that came over me at the moment I saw such a blasphemous statement attributed to Jesus Christ.... Surely only a demon-possessed or demon influenced mind could begin to conceive of a scenario so grossly blasphemous as that which is portrayed in this motion picture!

Some of us can remember a Garner Ted in the seventies who, as a former navy man with a naked girl tattoo, would casually tell dirty jokes while guzzling beer and playing cards after basketball games at Ambassador, and who wondered aloud about how a masculine Jesus could ever possibly have had anything other than normal sexual urges. We are supposed to believe now, however, that the new GTA is a much more sensitive individual. GTA now even offers a cassette sermon entitled "How to Have a Happy Marriage." Actually, the lecture many have been waiting to hear is, "How I Screwed Around and Still Kept My Wife, Family, and Ministerial Credentials." (Ted: No kidding. As a book it would be a major best-seller. Think about it.)

There is no need to rehash the extensive coverage we gave to GTA - "the playboy preacher" - in AR2. Those facts remain undisputed. When Larry Flynt announced in June, 1978 that the September issue of his Hustler magazine would make those same sordid facts known nationally, GTA was coincidentally disfellowshipped, this time for good, by HWA within days. While HWA's June 26, 1978 disfellowshipment letter to GTA gave other (nonsensical) reasons for the disfellowshipment, the fact is GTA's reputation for womanizing within the church and gambling in Vegas played a major role in his being permanently banished from the WCG. Yet, to this day, GTA has not publicly (or, perhaps, even to himself) acknowledged the part his own sins played in his fall.

In late 1992, GTA finally published a formal explanation of how he left the WCG to start CGI. The 87-page booklet, titled The Origin and History of the Church of God, International, offers many insights into the tortured history of Armstrongism. Not surprisingly, the booklet does have its historical gaps and euphemisms: HWA's daughter, Beverly, was a "hostess," HWA's years-long incest of his daughter Dorothy was merely a "personal, family problem," how GTA really came to know so much about Ramona Armstrong's character before his father married her is not stated, Stanley Rader - who is attacked viciously throughout the booklet - is never actually named, etc. Nevertheless, there are some very forthright sections that help explain the personality of HWA, the reasons for the rift between HWA and GTA, HWA's unstable mental state during the last decade of his life (GTA thought HWA was insane at times, pp. 56 and 65), Stanley Rader's overwhelming influence over HWA, and the corporate chaos that existed in the WCG in the seventies and eighties.

Sadly, the booklet also reveals the incredibly inflated ego of GTA. He leaves the reader with the distinct impression that he sincerely believes that for decades he, alone, was running "the Work" (see p. 31). GTA makes no mention of the fact that for many years it was Al Portune who really ran the business operations of the church, Herman Hoeh who edited the Plain Truth, and Rod Meredith who oversaw the administration of the ministry. The significant contributions of those three men plus many, many others are simply ignored. It is also disturbing to read statements such as the one on page 85: "I believe God has appointed me to be His 'watchman' to His people Israel, and to all the world."

Why does GTA believe such stuff? The answer is found on page 80, where we find this statement from a letter he wrote to his father in April of 1979:

You are a pretty good salesman, Dad. You have told me and tens of thousands of others how I was given the gift of speech by a miracle from God, and how my very life was a miracle. You always felt God had intended me to be born - and intended me to be given that gift and had always intended to use me in His work. You sold me on that fact. And, Dad, I still believe you.

Reading such statements, it is difficult not to conclude that GTA, himself, has been not just a perpetrator, but also a victim of Armstrongism. It is also sad to see the extent of GTA's amnesia about his own past morality problems. No wonder he wrote his followers (Sept. 25, 1992), "It has been a traumatic chore for me to write this very difficult and sometimes traumatic booklet, going back through many of the almost mind-boggling events of 1978 and 79." Since his 1978 ouster from the WCG, GTA has denied his past a number of different ways. In a large front-page article in the Pasadena Star-News of Sept. 4, 1987, there was this statement:

Armstrong flatly denied old stories that he had sexual encounters with Ambassador students and other women. [Said GTA:] "There was never a whisper of anything immoral [!!!-ed.] and hadn't been for years and years."

In 1988, however, he had a different story and came a bit closer to the truth when, in an interview with Watchman Expositor (Vol. 5, No. 5), he was asked about why he had been forced out of the WCG (the first time) in 1971 for conduct "considered to be sin." GTA responded this way:

Not "forced." My father and I both agreed that we needed that (time apart) because I had had some very serious problems in my marriage and family. I have never commented on that nor will I now. Basically I had a mid-life crisis. I experienced a sort of partial nervous breakdown because of the load that was on me.

Although mid-life crises are a well-recognized psychological phenomenon, and GTA's extreme conduct in 1971 can be diagnosed that way, he neglected to mention that much of what got him thrown out of the WCG in 1971 and later was carnal behavior that went on long before his "mid-life crisis" and that also went on afterward.

Another way GTA has handled his past is evidenced in the way he sympathetically mollycoddled Jimmy Swaggart when that televangelist made tabloid headlines in the late eighties. In his May 31, 1988 letter to supporters of his own evangelistic association, GTA wrote:

Recently, Jimmy Swaggart returned to his pulpit, delivering a sermon having to do with repentance, contrition, "forgetting those things which are behind," and citing many scriptures to his audience which had to do with repentance and forgiveness. Of course, the American news media was having none of it. The news article I read was cynical, skeptical, hostile. It portrayed many of the loyal Swaggart followers as dupes, who parroted lines from the Bible concerning "forgiveness," as if all of this forgiveness and pardon really had to do with nothing....

This from a preacher who, for many years, has been touting the strict Law of Moses, and who, with ever increasing frequency lately, has been touting the death penalty as the great answer to America's crime problem. Later in his letter, in the subliminal-suggestion-threat style so common to cult leaders, GTA included the following warning:

I think all of us understand that it was a grave mistake for Jimmy Swaggart to "judge" Jim Bakker. But I am sure that no human being on the face of the earth knows that any better than Jimmy Swaggart!

GTA's followers by and large seem to have confidence in him. And those followers include many folks who are quite aware of GTA's past. For instance, one follower is Ian Boyne of Jamaica. Mr. Boyne is a talk show host and columnist in that country and has one of the world's most extensive collections of writings about Armstrongism. Yet he describes himself as a true CGI "Armstrongite."

Another CGI church member who was long willing to overlook GTA's past was John Tuit, author of The Truth Shall Make You Free, an expose about the WCG that came out in 1981. After a mysterious fire destroyed his upstate New York lumber business a few years ago, Tuit moved to Hays, North Carolina (he is currently on disability due to a serious back injury sustained at work). Feeling a need to fellowship with Sabbath keepers, he started attending CGI services again in Statesville. He recently told us that until this past year he felt comfortable being a part of CGI. But recent developments have resulted in his distancing himself from the GTA administration, although he still feels a loyalty to his local pastor and congregation. Tuit says that with Tyler's new plans to credential its ministers on a yearly basis, prohibit CGI pastors from preaching more than one hundred miles from their congregations, and other gimmicks designed to centralize power and control in Tyler, he fears that GTA is going the way of his father.

CGI has its share of critics, even within its own ranks. While GTA seems to believe that his persona is essential to the survival of CGI, not all of his ministers or members believe that that is the case. Some complain that GTA's TV program, for instance, reveals too much of his own faults. They have a point.

In early April, a GTA broadcast that touched on the Koresh standoff saw GTA poo pooing the government's supposedly excessive concern with the Davidians. (He has since thought it wise to be more critical of Koresh and now even uses the Waco tragedy to promote a booklet expounding his own adventist views of "Armageddon.") On the early April telecast GTA, apparently oblivious to the fact that Koresh's followers had already killed four federal officers and wounded 15, and apparently believing that Koresh was being picked on simply because of a few minor violations, and apparently oblivious to the fact that federal regulations about assault rifles are essentially based on their ease of convertibility to fully automatic weapons (thus giving those who have them a significant firepower advantage over local police officers with their standard-issue weapons), GTA launched into a cynical and embarrassingly lengthy discussion of how the calibers of banned assault weapons are much smaller than those of the scoped Weatherbys in his own hunting rifle collection. (Who in the world cares if Ted's is bigger than Koresh's?) He further commented that in serving their warrant, the federal government should simply have sent one agent to the door to ask if there really was child abuse going on. Child abuse, of course, was not a part of the federal case (although it should have been part of a state case). But his comment, nevertheless, left the distinct impression that to GTA child sexual abuse is no big thing (not surprising, perhaps, considering that GTA grew up in a family where father-daughter incest was tolerated). With such an obvious insensitivity to the feelings of average viewers, such an abysmal lack of understanding of current affairs, and a superficial approach to Bible teaching that is frequently all too evident, it is not surprising that the GTA TV ministry has been able to recapture only a tiny portion of the huge audience it had in the mid-seventies.

A further criticism one hears from those within the CGI organization is that while GTA has given himself a fine salary (making it possible for him to live at the exclusive Emerald Bay subdivision near Bullard, Texas with its private security force and mandatory country club membership), and has even provided church employment for his sons Mark and Matthew, most CGI ministers are expected to serve without pay.

Some CGI ministers also complain about other church policies. For example, some point out how GTA likes to claim his church board is "independent" (able to fire him should he go astray, see his church history booklet, pp. 86-7), and as having women (plural) and laypeople in its makeup. Yet, they point out that the board's eight members (in late 1992) actually included GTA, his wife Shirley (the sole woman), CGI employee Guy Carnes (Shirley's brother-in-law), CGI employee Ron Dart, and CGI employee Benny Sharp. The only members not openly on CGI's payroll, and who therefore might be called "independent," were CGI minister Lesley Pope, advertising man Larry Brookreson, and Pocahontas Savings and Loan President Skip Martin. Even if Brookreson's advertising business and Martin's savings and loan received no business opportunities from CGI (doubtful), GTA could still be assured of having a majority of votes from those whose livelihood are dependent on the continuation of cash flow into CGI. This is not to suggest that such a structure is illegal, nor is it uncommon for "family-controlled" Christian ministries. But the fact is CGI's board is not the truly independent entity painted by GTA. Furthermore, while church finances are under the board's authority, actual church policy on ordinations and doctrine - the real gut issues in any church - are not under their purview, but are under the purview of a separate ministerial council which, itself, is made up of a majority that is either on CGI's payroll or who have a financial interest in CGI. By temperament and training, all council members are GTA yes men.

While it is unlikely to happen, given the makeup of his board, GTA is very aware of the fact that his board still has the legal power to remove him from CGI's top position. Should that ever happen, however, GTA has a backup plan. Early on, GTA set up an independent "Garner Ted Armstrong Evangelistic Association." As the name implies, that legal entity is built around GTA, himself. Presumably, he is able to receive a separate income from that operation and would continue to do so if ever cast out of CGI.

Increasingly there are critics convinced that CGI is well on its way to becoming the kind of cult the WCG was in its heyday. As evidence of this some point to the soon-to-open Imperial Academy. Dubbed "Imperious Academy" by some, this new ministerial school is seen by more than a few as GTA's attempt at training a young and impressionable ministry that will eventually take over local CGI congregations from elders who GTA views as too independent. That such a scheme is exactly what GTA has in mind is evident in a statement he made in his church history booklet (p. 21):

[My father] would hold a successful evangelistic campaign, visit in people's homes, baptize new believers, and then leave the newly-organized local church in the hands of another minister with whom he was cooperating.

Soon, he would return to the region, only to find the church had dwindled down to virtually nothing, or that the formerly cooperative minister, eyeing the flock as something to be fleeced, not fed, had decided to go independent.

Years and years of painful experience taught him that the only way he was going to see his labors bear fruit in a really large and powerful way was to educate a ministry for the church himself!

Translation: GTA will soon follow in his father's footsteps. At Imperial Academy he will train young and easily moldable young men to be his obedient field ministry. And they will in due time replace most of the problematic elders that have known GTA - and his limitations - since their WCG days. Prediction: In ten years CGI will be another WCG in the old HWA style. And without the moderating influence, the "balance of power" - both political and spiritual - that comes from truly independent and mature elders and associates, GTA will eventually become the kind of major nut case he describes his father as being during the last decade or so of his life.

Not surprisingly, CGI already has its own offshoots. One formed in 1985 is the Church of God, Denton Congregation (Austin Newell, Pastor); P.O. Box 1893; Denton; TX 76201. More recently there has been created The Congregation of God, Seventh Day; P.O. Box 2345; Kennesaw; GA 30144. John Pinkston, who formerly pastored CGI's Atlanta congregation is leading that organization. We understand he left CGI after GTA prohibited him from preaching the gospel via his own radio program. (True to the usual pattern of Armstrongite churches, Pinkston's organization has since had its own internal "rebellion," complete with a near brawl during one of their services, as detailed in his 8/13/93 "Open Letter" tape.) Among those ministers who have recently left CGI are Lesley Pope of Midwest City, Oklahoma and David Owen of Chattanooga (who split with Pinkston since splitting with GTA). If one looks at the current roster of CGI ministers, one notices that with the exception of Ron Dart and David Antion, GTA's brother-in-law, there are no other former WCG evangelists, regional directors, department heads, or Plain Truth editors who have gone with, and stayed with, GTA. Other than Antion and Dart, the best-known WCG celebrity to go with CGI is GTA's old drinking buddy and general "sidekick," Jim Thornhill, who now leads CGI's Salt Lake City flock.

Some critics within CGI have written to us that although CGI for a number of years had attempted to be, or at least claimed to be, nonauthoritarian, some CGI ministers are now beginning to revert back to their authoritarian WCG ways. At least one CGI minister is telling his congregation that CGI is the one and only "true church." Others are quite willing to use strong-arm methods to maintain their "authority." Cosden A. Foland, a security guard who was recently in the news for his heroics in foiling a store robbery (see The Indianapolis Star, 8/18/92), was a loyal CGI member who discovered that by entering into an interracial marriage he was no longer welcome in CGI (see AR45, p. 4). As a result, Foland (223 N. Lynn St., Indianapolis, IN 46222) formed his own small fellowship group. He, nevertheless, still wanted to consider the CGI brethren his friends and hoped to occasionally fellowship with them as he and his family did with other groups. Here is what happened to him:

My family and I were sitting in CGI services listening to the sermon when four men came up and asked us to leave. I said, "Why?" They then said that if we didn't leave they would call the police. I said, "Call the police!" But the police never came. A few days later, however, the police did come to my place of work and served papers on me.

We were all on the TV stations. And in court my lawyer made them look sick. They are sick, but I continue to pray for them. Anyway, the judge said that I could visit or go to the church if I wanted. I no longer want to, however.

Ironically, GTA claims his church is nonracist, intimates that dual church affiliation is okay (see history booklet, p. 82), and condemns the WCG's excommunication policies (history booklet, p. 86). While there are those who are happy with their membership in CGI, our mail indicates that many who leave the WCG for CGI do not remain there for long. For many, CGI is a half-way house, only a stepping stone to other things. As one of our readers wrote us, "GTA's church is in a time warp. They are essentially just holding onto the few truths they had ten or twenty years ago. Those who really want to grow spiritually find themselves moving on."

Such people apparently feel toward CGI a lot like GTA felt toward WCG in 1988 when he told Watchman Expositor:

I don't know if I could have survived in that organization [the WCG]. It would have been like asking a certain kind of flower to thrive in a certain kind of weed bed. I only wanted to fulfill what I feel is a personal destiny. If I am wrong about that, it will take God to show me, not some human, political or religious force.

Those who may want to receive GTA's Twentieth Century Watch magazine ("The Germans are coming! The Germans are coming!") or who may want to check out CGI for themselves can write to: The Church of God, International; P.O. Box 2530; Tyler; TX 75710. Good luck.

You Can Fool All the People Some of the Time, But...

As we have been reporting since at least AR41, for some years now Joseph Tkach has been hard at work changing WCG doctrines and policies in a frantic effort to give the WCG a new image as a noncultish, mainstream church. What the WCG has been doing is not unlike what the Seventh Day Adventists did for many years. When exposed by famous cult watcher Walter Martin (the late founder of Christian Research Institute and Christian Research Journal), the SDA's went on the offensive. They began a twenty-year dialog with Martin and instituted a number of changes in the wording of their public positions. By doing so they were able to convince a number of cult watchers that they had evolved into a mainstream Christian church. Nevertheless, they still retained many points of doctrine that mainstream believers see as cultish. (There is an excellent discussion of this history in the April-June issue of The Discerner, P.O. Box 806, Brainerd, MN 56401.)

That the Tkach team's PR offensive has been successful in some quarters can be seen by a remarkable statement that recently appeared in a new book published by Baker Book House. On page 11 of Why We Left a Cult by Latayne C. Scott, there was this statement:

I selected four groups I believed would be most relevant to readers: Jehovah's Witnesses, Christian Scientists, New Age believers, and Worldwide Church of God (Herbert W. Armstrong's movement). However, after many conversations with ex-members of the Armstrong group, I find I must agree with the assessment of the Christian Research Journal that such astounding changes have taken place in both the doctrines and practices of that group (accompanied by a significant decline in membership) that they can no longer be accurately viewed as a cult. While, of course, many cultic groups (most notably and overtly the Mormon church) have tried vigorously through an image-changing campaign in the media to be accepted as "another Christian church," the Worldwide Church of God seems to be doing it through repenting and changing instead of publicity and advertising. Only time will prove the group's sincerity. Meanwhile, I am fascinated with the prospect that a cult, as a group, can turn to God.

Who the ex-WCG members were that Scott talked to, we don't know. She certainly did not talk to any of us at AR. Nevertheless, her comments do show how effective the WCG's image-changing campaign has been. And it really should come as no surprise. First of all, many cult fighting organizations have a simplistic view of what a "cult" really is. While AR has used a four-point test to characterize an organization as a "destructive cult" (encouragement of isolation from family and friends, non-critical thinking regarding the group's teachings, absolute obedience to the group's government, and excessive giving of time and money - see AR1 and AR44), many Christian anti-cult groups define a "cult" simply as a group that falls outside the doctrinal parameters of what they view as Christian orthodoxy. Very aware of the latter, Tkach has changed a number of WCG doctrines and policies that have given it its "cult" reputation in the eyes of mainstream Christian groups.

Just since our last issue, Tkach has been publicizing a number of doctrinal changes. For example, while HWA adopted the title "Apostle" without any reservations, and Tkach later also adopted the same title, now Tkach is backtracking as to what the WCG means by "Apostle." In the January, 1993 Plain Truth (page 19), there was the following statement at the end of a short article explaining what is meant by the title "Apostle."

Today, some Christian denominations use the title apostle for the person who holds the chief spiritual office in their church.

These churches generally do not mean the term in the broadest, biblical sense - as eyewitnesses of the resurrection - but rather in the administrative sense.

Of course, even the wording used gives the impression that WCG somehow considers that there are multiple "denominations" of the true body of Christ. But, as we shall document below, that is not what WCG teaches. Published statements such as the above do, however, get the WCG points with some Christian cult watchers.

The same issue of the PT gave us an article by Terry D. Warren entitled "God's Amazing Grace." It was about John Newton (1725-1807), the slave trader who went on to become a Christian minister and the composer of the popular hymn "Amazing Grace." The article by Mr. Warren is excellent. And certainly, to most of us, the Newton hymn is a classic, beautiful of both sound and sentiment. Yet, the article's author neglected to mention a very interesting point. "Amazing Grace" was one hymn that was never sung in the WCG during the days of HWA because HWA absolutely hated that hymn. With its emphasis on grace and a melody that HWA apparently found too sentimental, he simply would not allow it to be sung in his church. Now, under Tkach things are different. More points for Tkach with the Christian cult watchers.

position on "the cross." For HWA, the cross was an offense. Many can recall how the WCG used to teach that the cross symbol predated Christianity as a phallic symbol in pagan religions. So in the HWA era many WCG ministers preferred the translation "stake" to "cross." Now, that teaching is no longer WCG dogma. The doctrinal change was heralded to WCG members in a Paul Kroll WN article appropriately titled "Should we use the word cross?" (WN, 2/9/93, p. 4). Now, Tkach increasingly likes to use the word "cross." In the May/ June PT, Tkach devoted his entire editorial to the cross, writing:

For the Christian "army," however, there is only one battle cry, one fundamental reference point providing the courage, strength, and morale to endure to the end in the good faith. That battle cry is: Remember the cross!....

The cross of Christ, therefore, becomes the central reference point for every Christian....

In simple terms, if you're having trouble forgiving your spouse, remember the cross. If you're struggling with sexual sins, remember the cross. If you're involved with dishonest business tactics, remember the cross!

Today, if one reads only the WCG publications intended for the general public, one can easily be lead to believe that the WCG is just one more Protestant denomination. (Of Tkachism, former Worldwider Bob Ellsworth likes to say, "It's really Herb Lite - tastes great, less filling.") But carefully read those WCG writings aimed at only the baptized members of the WCG and one can clearly see that the WCG still retains all the key traits of a "destructive cult." For example, the February 25, 1992 Tkach letter to his members and co-workers contained no hint of ecumenicalism. Instead, Tkach was very plain:

Tkach is now claiming a type of clairvoyance with the dead HWA, much like Luke Skywalker had with Yoda in Star Wars. Doctrinal changes just come to him now as if Armstrong's voice whispers to him out of the grave: "Use the force Joe." Tkach brought this out in his December videotaped "apology" to the church. He repeatedly emphasized that HWA privately told him to change the church's doctrines once he died. But Dr. Meredith, recalling HWA's stubbornness, says that to believe such a story, one would have to be crazy.

As I write this month, I pray that God's people truly understand what it means to be a member of the body of Christ, and why it is that the Worldwide Church of God holds certain distinctive teachings and practices not followed by most other Churches....

[Tkach discusses the seventh-day sabbath, the Old Testament holy days, and then:]
That is why this Church stresses obedience to God as necessary to Christianity....

What makes us the true Church of God? We are God's Church because God works in us by his Spirit to worship him and serve him. It is what God does that makes us his Church....

Does this mean it makes no difference what Church you belong to? Far from it! It makes every difference, for you need to be part of Christ's body....

In other words, to his followers Tkach still claims that the WCG is the "one and only true church," and thus continues to psychologically and spiritually isolate members from their families and rest of the Christian world. The mandatory triple tithe system of HWA remains in effect. So does the oppressive church government system HWA modelled after the Catholic Church's hierarchy (which, like the hierarchy of the Sicilian Mafia, was modeled after the hierarchical system of the ancient Roman empire). So, even though there have been many changes under Tkach, spiritually speaking nothing has really changed.

To give you a better idea of what a massive subterfuge the Tkach organization has been engaged in, we quote below a May 6, 1992 letter written by then-WCG-member Bruce Renehan to Dr. Ruth Tucker, an Illinois theologian and the author of Another Gospel, who has naively endorsed the WCG's supposed conversion.

Dear Dr. Tucker:

I appreciate the time you took to talk with me on the phone concerning recent "doctrinal changes" within the confines of the Worldwide Church of God. I do realize now, as an afterthought, that you and I were not on the same wavelength. It seemed as though you were trying to impress me with the fact that the church that I have been a member of for over 23 years is becoming more and more "Christian" in its teachings. I must have come across sounding very paranoid. For that I apologize. But I would like to explain.

You and I are both in the dark on certain issues. And part of the problem is purely semantic. When I first began to realize this about myself, I found that I had to learn what other Christians meant by terms like "born again," "grace," "repentance," "salvation," etc., etc., because they differ from Worldwide terminology.

Let me explain what these and other terms mean to a Worldwider. The term "born again" used to mean becoming a God. Now it means being conceived to become a God at baptism. Baptism is a requirement to "salvation." "Salvation" means being changed into a God at the return of Christ. Baptism is by full immersion. Sometimes baptisms are considered invalid because the member displays "carnal tendencies." "Carnal tendencies" are equated to rebellion against "God's government," that is the ministry of the Worldwide Church of God. One must always be completely obedient to ministers in the Worldwide.

"Grace" is God's free gift. But, it is earned by obedience to "God's ministers" (Worldwide ministers only are true ministers) and by keeping the "Commandments of God." The "Commandments of God" are the laws given to Moses in the Pentateuch (the WHOLE Pentateuch). Christ is considered an elder brother who kept the Pentateuch perfectly. This shows us that we must do likewise to become a God.

Protestants are the harlot daughters of the Great Whore of Revelation 17. The Great Whore is the Catholic Church. The pope is the false prophet. Protestant churches are Satan's churches and Protestant ministers are ministers of Satan. Worldwidiers would rather slit their wrists than become "Protestant." So you can understand that when Bernie Schnippert (leading Worldwide minister) explained to all Worldwidiers in a taped sermon, that they were "born again," he was emphatic that he was "NOT SPEAKING OF BEING BORN AGAIN LIKE PROTESTANTS ARE BORN AGAIN!"

There is only One True Church, the Worldwide Church of God. Worldwidiers, on the inside, refer to themselves as the Philadelphia era of God's True Church (although the published stance has been changed to please outsiders). This strongly held belief means that God will divinely protect them in a "place of safety" during WW III (or the Great Tribulation). Anyone who leaves the Worldwide Church of God is a heretic and cannot be associated with and will not be divinely protected with the Philadelphians.

(There was some confusion in our conversation about the Philadelphians. This is not the church that Gerald Flurry started. I'm talking purely about the teachings of the Worldwide Church of God and not other distinct churches.)

It is understandable that you feel the way you do (since being approached by Messrs. Hulme and Snyder). The Worldwide has taken a very deliberate stance in the area of public relations in the past decade. I heard Michael Snyder myself, in the late 80's tell church members that church teachings would be disguised to the media in an effort to stop the Worldwide from getting bad press reviews. Had you been circumspect enough to ask the members (or ex-members) of the Worldwide Church of God if they themselves felt the doctrinal stances were leading them closer to Christ, you would have learned differently. Maybe I'm wrong, but your being led to believe the new and improved Worldwide stance under Joseph Tkach seems a bit like a police officer asking the parents if they are abusing their child and not noticing the bruises all over the child itself.

As far as old Worldwide tactics NOT changing under Tkach, I have just spent the weekend with two of my best friends in Fresno, Byron and Linda Sanders. Byron has been in the Worldwide all of his life. He was disfellowshipped just two weeks ago. Why? Because he would not acknowledge Herbert Armstrong's and Joseph Tkach's apostleship and obey the local Church leaders above the scriptures. Linda was disfellowshipped on the grounds that she attended church services in another church. I am bound by Church doctrines to turn my back on them and not associate with them ever again. But I refuse to do that on threat of being disfellowshipped myself when I am caught...

This is far from an isolated case. Almost all disfellowshipping is related to Church "government." This is to cause remaining members to fear going against the administration. I can assure you that the Worldwide is still a cult in every sense of the word. I don't know of any member who shares in this imagined bliss that the Church's public relations people are feeding the media.

And those editorials in the Plain Truth are purely window dressing for outsiders. Worldwidiers rarely read the Plain Truth because it is pablum compared to inside doctrines.

I found your statement on page 216 of Another Gospel most interesting: "...it is impossible to assess how significant any changes in church doctrine will be. Will they, in fact, be more cosmetic than real?" This is exactly why I have decided to leave the Worldwide Church of God. It just doesn't offer the way to Christ and has made no real effort, aside from semantics, to do so.

-Bruce Renehan

That the WCG is still a cult in every sense of the word is obvious in almost every letter we receive from those leaving it these days. For instance, just a few weeks ago we received the following:

I have recently left the WCG due to reading your AR and the publications of Dr. Ernest L. Martin, Tony Badillo and others. When the ministry of the WCG found out what I had been reading and trying to share with others, they then, with a letter and an official announcement from the podium, disfellowshipped me. I wish to thank you for rescuing me from that deceitful and burdensome church and for your reports. I am now a much happier widow.

-Mrs. Dorothy Stankovsky
Wisconsin

Space does not permit us to run the hundreds of letters we have received in the past year attesting to the fact that the WCG is still a cult whose leaders still actively use the mind control techniques we have reported on for years. While there is no doubt that along with the doctrines that have remained the same but have only had cosmetic changes made to their descriptions, many WCG doctrines and policies have changed (and some for the better). Nevertheless, the WCG is still a cult steeped in deception and oppression.

While some cult watchers have been fooled, not all of them have been so naive as to take the WCG at its word. For example, in Britain, the anti-cult Conservative Family Campaign (26 Farm Ave., London SW16 2UT) has recently been able to get The World Tomorrow removed from a number of stations in Europe. One executive of that Christian organization knows what it is like to be involved with the WCG. He wrote us:

I have a great personal interest in this matter. My mother and father were reluctant to go to hospital in spite of complications at my birth in 1965. It was only through the intervention of my grandmother that they consented. I wonder if their involvement in the [WCG] was responsible for this.... Anything you send will be greatly appreciated. I was brought up in the cult and almost committed suicide before becoming a Christian.

-Mr. Paul Geddes

The editors of Christianity Today have not been fooled either. In the November 9, 1992 issue (pp. 57-8), they reported on the WCG's apparent shift toward orthodoxy, but were quick to make a number of astute observations:

Many of the changes of the past six years are reflected in materials furnished to Christianity Today by WCOG's communications office....

Despite the changes, even a cursory examination of WCOG's official Statement of Beliefs is likely to raise eyebrows among trained theologians. CT provided several with a copy of WCOG's official statement without disclosing WCOG's identity.

Said Eastern College's (Philadelphia) Chris Hall, "In several places the wording is such that the door is left open to distorted beliefs and unhealthful emphases." He added that the section on the Trinity is unorthodox and that the inclusion in the doctrinal statement of such peripherals as the angelic realm, tithing, and the millennium "makes me suspect a group that majors in the minors. This is one characteristic of a cult."

WCOG's position on the Trinity appears to be the major concern raised by ministries devoted to watching cults and aberrant groups....

In addition to the issue of the Trinity, according to [James Walker of Watchman Fellowship], there are lingering concerns about WCOG teachings on the sufficiency of grace. He said that while the church has at points articulated an orthodox position on the doctrine of grace, it has not reconciled this view with other writings suggesting that salvation is something that must be earned.

Walker and others who have monitored WCOG from an evangelical perspective applaud the changes they have seen, even as they hope for more. As of now, WCOG appears still to be a long way from the mainstream church's standards of orthodoxy.

Finally, we can't help but chuckle as we report one of the funniest twists in this long-running episode of PR deception by "God's Church." For years, the front man in the WCG's PR campaign has been Michael Snyder, A.P.R. (an Accredited member of the Public Relations Society of America) who, right down to his signature, seemed to revel in being a true propagandist.

How Snyder was able to maintain his sanity while working for the likes of Joseph Tkach, David Hulme, and company, we don't know. But apparently he was able to do it. WCG informs us that Snyder is no longer working for them. While Snyder is now in hiding and we therefore have not been able to locate him, insiders say he has left the church. And friends report that Snyder is now saying privately that he is convinced the WCG really is "a cult" after all.

We told you so, Michael.

Dismantling of HWA's Empire Continues Under Tkach

In recent months it has become clearer and clearer what Joseph Tkach's true feelings have been toward HWA. Tkach has told numerous individuals that the worst seven years of his own life were the last seven years that HWA lived. Considering what an SOB his old boss was, such an admission is not surprising. And considering the way Tkach feels about HWA, it is also not surprising that he would want to completely demolish HWA's monuments.

Of course, there is no bigger monument to HWA than the original Ambassador College campus in Pasadena, and the Tkach team continues to look for a buyer. (Actually, such a sale would only be the latest step in Tkach's de facto policy of selling off most of the WCG's real property, something Tkach has been quietly doing since becoming Apostle in 1986.) While some at WCG headquarters claim that the WCG's Pasadena properties have been appraised at $175 million and that the asking price is about $200 million, we have also been told by others that the property has been appraised at about $275 million and that Tkach wants at least $300 million for the property. Upon the sale, we are told, Tkach intends to spend $100 million to build a new WCG headquarters complex somewhere in Oregon, New Mexico, Arizona, or Nevada. With the remaining monies, Tkach supposedly intends to set up a retirement fund for the WCG's elderly elders. While real estate experts say the current southern California real estate market is soft, others say that Tkach has already had nibbles from certain unnamed Arabs and a Chinese group that is hoping to start a college. With the British about to abandon Hong Kong to the Communist Chinese, many in that rich colony are fleeing to southern California. Already, the millionaire community of San Marino near Pasadena boasts a very substantial population of wealthy families from Hong Kong. An exclusive college to accommodate the needs of such families would make many in that community very pleased. In the mean time, the old Pasadena campus is used as the world headquarters of the WCG, with old dormitories such as Manor Del Mar and classroom buildings now housing church administration and editorial operations.

With the WCG trying hard to appear more Protestant, it is not surprising that many WCG leaders are getting their theological training at seminaries and colleges other than Ambassador. Russell Duke, the chairman of Ambassador's theology department, recently completed his doctorate in practical theology at The Union Institute in Cincinnati (WN, 4/13/93, p. 5). Union Institute is a small, private, "nontraditional university," established in 1964. Its 500 graduate students can choose from among 108 different majors offered in its Ph.D. programs. Michael Feazell, assistant to Apostle Tkach, and Tkach's chief ghost writer, recently got his Master of Divinity degree from the Methodist-founded Azusa Pacific College. And Hugh Mauck, a 73-year-old WCG local elder and former WCG executive, recently received a Ph.D. in exegetical theology from Christian Bible College and Seminary in Independence, Missouri (WN, 2/9/93, p. 8).

With some WCG ministers getting their educations from non-Ambassador sources, it is not surprising that many new ideas are making their way into the WCG. For example, WCG members who used to be told that they would one day enter into God's Kingdom, are now being told by Tkach that they are already in God's Kingdom (WN, 12/1/92, p. 1 and letter to members, 9/24/92).

In a March Plain Truth side bar (p. 11) entitled "Did Gospel Writers Change Jesus Words?", Senior Editor Paul Kroll (once the editor of Black Belt, the karate magazine) explained how some of the Gospel authors had "divine license" to fictionalize some of Jesus' sayings:

It may come as a surprise to learn that writers of New Testament books adapted Jesus' sayings and stories to new situations. The fact is, they did so in a number of cases....

Such examples - and there are many - show that the Gospel writers had divine license to adjust Jesus Christ's original wording. This allowed readers to understand the narratives more clearly....

That is why we shouldn't insist on harmonizing every detail in the Gospels.

Then there is that small question regarding the nature of Jesus' resurrection. Eric Pement, whose organization publishes the excellent Directory of Cult Research Organizations, sent us the following note:

You should know that I was present at the 1991 Tanner Annual Lectureship (the "cults" portion of the title was omitted that year), held at Trinity Evangelical Divinity School in Deerfield, Illinois. I was present for the plenary session and the workshop led by David Hulme and Mike Snyder. I believe videotapes of those sessions may be available from TEDS. Some of the changes seemed striking: they indicated a willingness to consider dropping British Israelism and closed communion - or at least think about it. On the other hand, David Hulme openly denied the physical resurrection of Christ from the dead in favor of an invisible, spiritual resurrection.

Some insiders are saying that the next major area of WCG doctrinal change will probably come in the area of prophecy. To prepare members for those changes, Tkach recently had his good friend Dean Blackwell make a taped sermon (3/20/93) on the subject of prophecy. Titled "Prediction Addiction," the sermon made light of many preachers' attempts at understanding that facet of the Bible. While never ridiculing HWA by name, some of the examples he used seemed to have come right out of old HWA sermons. Here is one interesting quote that shows where the WCG may be heading:

So we need to correct errors in our thinking. The Bible is not one third prophecy.
And 90 percent of what is, is not for our day!....

When I look back over some of the things we have in print, some of the things we've preached, that's highly embarrassing to me. And I can't believe we actually didn't see through the things we printed. Whether it's Leviticus 26 or Daniel 12 or other areas.

Getting the WCG's membership to adjust to the constant changing of doctrines has been a major challenge for the WCG's leaders. To help members psychologically adjust to the changes, last year Tkach ran a propaganda campaign in the WCG built on the theme of "Changing Paradigms." He even had a commercially produced video tape shown in local churches to persuade members that constant change is a good thing. As part of the campaign, Tkach sold the notion that there are five paradigms [the word actually means patterns, models, or ideals] that the WCG should discard: (1) "Anything the pagans did, we must avoid." (2) "Anything the Protestants say or do, we must avoid." (3) "Our commission [is] to prophesy and condemn." (4) "All truth was revealed through Herbert W. Armstrong." And (5) "doctrinal change equals watering down the truth." (Quotes are from WCG minister David Register's 1992 sermon explaining Apostle Tkach's condemnation of "the five paradigms." It was reported on in the Vol. 9, No. 10 issue of Watchman Expositor.)

published list of "18 essential, basic truths that God restored to His people through our late Pastor General Herbert W. Armstrong." (WN, 8/25/86, p. 5.) The critics point out that of those 18 "basic truths," fully half (numbers 2, 3, 4, 7, 8, 12, 13, 14, 17) have already been rejected by Tkach. And that total does not include many other new doctrines that HWA would never have accepted or the changes that are still coming.

The rapid changes have, at times, been even a bit rapid for Tkach, himself, and he has had to backtrack a number of times to cool off. For instance, when his recent comments about the inadequacy of the Ten Commandments (see AR51, p. 3) brought an avalanche of criticism, Tkach found it necessary to give his followers a lengthy "explanation" of what he really meant (WN, 9/22/92, p. 1). The new policy of giving members commemorative plaques for contributions to Jackson Hall (see AR51, p. 8) has been reversed by Tkach, who now says "the whole idea ... was a mistake" (WN, 11/6/91, p. 1). Tkach's comments at the fall festival regarding certain old policies being "dumb" has now been "explained" by Tkach as a statement not really about HWA (WN, 11/17/92, p. 1). Some of our readers north of the border report that Canadian WCG members are again being required to pay third tithe even though Tkach had previously exempted them because of the high income taxes of that country. And a legalistic article in the WN (12/1/92, p. 3) regarding the meticulous keeping of the Sabbath has been interpreted by many as a reversal of years of lax Sabbath rules in the WCG. One example of the latter was given to us by a reader who explained that in many congregations it has become commonplace for WCG weddings to be rehearsed on Friday nights and for the weddings and their receptions to be held on Saturday afternoons. Some WCG watchers feel that Tkach may want to tighten up the Sabbath rules to show that he has not yet gone completely "pagan."

Besides "remember the cross!", another big slogan that Tkach is now pushing is "Upward, inward and outward" (letter to members, 11/24/92). (Somehow it doesn't quite have the ring of an HWA slogan, does it.)

The WCG is changing so rapidly that some ministers have even commented that the WCG should become a member of the World Council of Churches. Such comments, however, appear to be mere trial balloons (attempts to see if the membership would balk at the idea). We contacted both the World Council of Churches and the National Council of Churches and found that the WCG has not made an application to join either.

Nevertheless, changes are taking place at every level of the WCG. You may have noticed that beginning with the February issue, the Plain Truth has had a new modernized format designed by Randall Cole and other professional artists. The church will also soon have a new hymnal. While retaining most of the old Dwight Armstrong hymns, 43 percent of the new hymnal will be made up of contemporary or traditional Protestant hymns. The collection is slated to appear later this year (WN, 8/11/92, p. 1).

The WCG, always big on computers, recently updated its computers to include the new IBM AS/400 Worldwide Circulation and Support System. And many WCG field ministers now have their own interconnectible PCs. The WCG has also started using advanced bar-coding technology to keep track of its members and magazine subscribers. The WCG will even be bar coding its Holy Day offering envelopes from now on (WN, 12/29/92, p. 6). Through the use of such technology the WCG is now able to immediately ascertain from any returned envelope exactly who the envelope was originally sent to, how much money the parties have been contributing, what church literature they have ordered, plus much more, and much more personal, data.

In Britain, there was recently some confusion among former WCG members who received a letter on WCG letterhead and with the official signature of Joseph Tkach. One who received the letter said he could not understand how the WCG even knew how to find him because he had moved many times since leaving the WCG more than a decade ago. The letter caused genuine shock among some because it stated that many former WCG members had been disfellowshipped improperly and without cause by WCG ministers who had acted contrary to church policy. The "WCG" letter asked that the former members assist Tkach in ferreting out the problem ministers. The letter also claimed that a full one half of the WCG's ministry is secretly active in freemasonry. While the letter appeared to have been mailed by someone with much inside knowledge of the WCG, sources within the church claim that the letter is not authentic and that Tkach was not its author. We have yet to discover who is behind the mailings.

In December, many Ambassador College alumni received a mailing from the Ambassador Alumni Association (P.O. Box 111, Big Sandy, TX 75755) promoting membership in that organization. Benefits of membership include discounts on "selected Ambassador College merchandise available by mail." Yearly membership dues are $15, but "now you can use your Visa or Mastercard to join." One catch though: "It is understood that members of the Ambassador Alumni Association are in harmony with the goals, purposes and philosophies of Ambassador College and its principal sponsor, the Worldwide Church of God."

The WCG's television program, The World Tomorrow, continues to become more sophisticated. Viewers are now treated to occasional "dramatizations" that make the WCG's message more attractive to viewers. In order to ensure quality acting, the producers frequently employ professional Hollywood actors, with auditions of 20 or 30 actors from a Hollywood casting company not unusual (WN, 8/25/92, p. 6). With such attention to detail, it is not surprising that The World Tomorrow is ranked by Nielsen and Arbitron as being second among all network religious programs. Only Robert Schuller's Hour of Power has more network viewers (WN 9/22/92, p. 3).

Joseph Tkach's plan to get his church more actively involved in charity work is moving ahead. Recent projects have included church members raising money for children in war-torn Croatia and the participation of Ambassador students in the Jerry Lewis MS telethon (WN, 11/17/92, pp. 1, 12).

Because the WCG loses so many of its "church kids" to other denominations or atheism, Tkach has been particularly interested in developing programs to keep young people in the WCG. The WCG recently started ARROWS in Flight, a magazine for the WCG's teenagers (WN, 2/9/93, p. 1). And one WCG minister, Curtis May, recently had a "Youth Day" for Sabbath services: church youngsters were allowed to perform ushering duties, lead songs, take attendance, and deliver opening and closing prayers. Tkach is encouraging other pastors to try out the church-promotion idea in their own congregations (WN, 12/15/92, p. 1).

The WCG's ongoing concerts at Ambassador Auditorium (formerly "The House for God") continue to draw sophisticated crowds and critical acclaim. An August jazz festival at "The Ambassador" received high praise from jazz critic Leonard Feather of The Los Angeles Times, who wrote, "Anyone looking for a primer in the art of running a jazz festival would have been wise to have studied what happened... Sunday at Pasadena's Ambassador Auditorium." The Ambassador Foundation recently published a brochure detailing the concert season lineup for 1993- 4. The season features scores of the very finest opera and concert world stars, plus dozens of stars from the pop, jazz, and country music fields. Those interested in getting a free copy of the brochure can call the auditorium's toll-free number: 1-800-CONCERT.

The WCG continues to operate around the world to propagate its message. One area of the world in which the WCG is taking an increased interest is Eastern Europe. During the past year, the WCG was excited to discover that there are scattered Sabbatarian groups throughout the region, including the western Ukraine, close to the part of Czechoslovakia where Tkach's parents originated (WN, 10/6/92, p. 1 and 12/29/92, p. 1). WCG insiders say that Tkach had hoped to lure many of "the Ukrainian brethren" into the WCG but that most balked at the idea when they learned of the WCG's tithing policies.

Another area of the world where the WCG takes a special interest is Thailand, whose northern area is part of the "Golden Triangle" (where most of the world's heroin actually comes from) and whose capitol of Bangkok is the world's premier city for child prostitution. Tkach recently sent his close friend and advisor Ellen Escat to that country as his personal representative to meet with Queen Sirikit. Escat says she likes Thailand because " there is so much mutual love and respect between those ruling and those being ruled. In Thailand, it's a way of life" (WN, 12/1/92, pp. 4-5). Included with the WN article reporting on her trip, there was a picture of AC student Jonathan Reedy teaching English to a class of Buddhist monks - a project sponsored by the Ambassador Foundation. Other pictures in that issue included one of idols at the Thai palace, more shots of Buddhist monks, and one of Escat touring a Thai agricultural research project.

Readers keep asking us for an update on Stanley Rader. According to GTA's church history booklet (p. 58) and many rumors, Rader is supposedly still involved with the WCG in some capacity. But we have seen no hard evidence of that. We have learned, however, from a reliable source that Rader has been busy researching the life of New York attorney, author, and art collector Myron Orlofsky who was a victim of art fraud years ago. Rader has told some that he is doing research for a book about Orlofsky.

Tkach continues the practice begun under HWA of inviting famous people to speak at Ambassador College. The latest celebrity to do so was former Speaker of the House, Jim Wright (WN, 3/23/93, p. 3). A few years ago, the WCG was able to lure Senator Strom Thurmond to Ambassador. It is interesting that Wright was booted out of government for alleged ethical improprieties and that Thurmond, according to the Los Angeles Times (5/20/89, p. 23), openly admits that he is regularly deluged with gifts ranging from free hotel rooms to free plane rides and that even his eyeglasses were paid for by a political contributor.

Joseph Tkach Jr. continues to gain power within the WCG hierarchy. In mid-1992 Jr.'s assistant for overseas church administration, Larry Salyer (once Jr.'s boss), supposedly asked to be relieved of his position so that he could be sent to pastor a church in St. Louis. Replacing him is Randall ("Randy") Dick (WN 7/28/92, p. 1). The move further enhances the now-pervasive influence of the Baby Boom generation within the hierarchy of the WCG.

"Criticizing Mr. Tkach is tantamount to committing the unpardonable sin!" - Gerald Waterhouse, speaking at the WCG's Feast of Tabernacles in Australia in 1990. The quote is from the manuscript of a 518-page book of essays about the WCG. The book's author, Murray S. Thompson (P.O. Box 276, Richmond, NSW 2753, Australia) is currently looking for a publisher.

How would you like to listen in on the behind-the-scenes chatter, wireless mike comments, and two-way transmissions that go on at WCG headquarters? Believe it or not, you can do just that if you have a scanner and a copy of the December, 1992 issue of Popular Communications (76 N. Broadway, Hicksville, NY 11801; tel. 516-681-2922). In an article titled "Scanning Televangelists," that publication showed how to listen in to many of the private electronic communications of religious groups. Within the article was a list of the communication frequencies used by various organizations including WCG headquarters in Pasadena and Ambassador College in Texas.

McNair v. Worldwide Finally Ends

Mrs. Leona McNair's libel lawsuit against the Worldwide Church of God, Roderick C. Meredith, and her ex-husband Raymond McNair, was finally ended in December when the suit was settled out of court for $750,000 (Pasadena Star-News, 11/21/92). Mrs. McNair has finally gotten her check, paid off her substantial legal fees and expenses, and is trying to get back to a normal life. The lawsuit which began in 1979 has been one of our longest running AR stories (see ARs 10, 29, 34, 35, 37, 40, 41, 48, and 50). In settling with Leona, the WCG still refused to admit any wrongdoing, but claimed that the settlement amount represented what the church's insurers would have had to spend had the case been retried.

The victory by Leona was no small accomplishment. While over the years a few have been able to sue the WCG and win, most plaintiffs have discovered it is almost impossible to win against an organization that is quite willing to spend virtually any amount necessary to stop those who have grievances against the WCG. Whereas Leona prevailed, many others in the past have not. For example, Mr. and Mrs. Gilman Anderson of Minnesota who sued the WCG back in the mid-eighties (see AR33) were unsuccessful in their lawsuit. More recently, the attempt by Richard Stambler (see AR46) to put together a class-action suit against Worldwide fell apart. While a couple dozen former members indicated their willingness to participate in such a suit, Stambler discovered that just preparing for such a legal battle requires far more time and money than he ever anticipated. (Nevertheless, Stambler - Rt. 1, Box 92, Walton, NE 68461 - says he would be willing to turn over his legal research to anyone interested in carrying on the project.) Stambler is currently taking out some of his frustration by distributing anti-cult flyers.

Leona McNair says she intends to get back to her career in nursing very soon. In the meantime, she is working on a book about tithing which she believes is a false doctrine that has cursed many Christians. Whether or not the book ever gets done, she has already written a short, but thought provoking, paper on the subject and she is distributing it to friends.

The best thing about her lawsuit coming to an end seems to be that, because she is no longer perceived as fighting against "God's Work," her two WCG-member sons are once again able to talk to their mother. Ironically, because Leona's ex-husband, Raymond McNair, recently left the WCG for Rod Meredith's Global Church of God, Leona's two sons are not supposed to talk to their father now because he has become "an enemy of God's Church."

Comments on Koresh

Editor: The Waco tragedy involving the government siege of David Koresh and his Branch Davidians prompted many to write AR asking questions about what transpired and for our opinions on various facets of the story. Space does not permit a thorough review of the entire story. For an overview of what happened, see the articles that appeared in the major news magazines. Particularly insightful are the articles that appeared in Newsweek (3/15, 5/3, and 5/17). But because so many have written, I will very briefly make a few personal observations:

Because Koresh had previously lived in both Tyler, Texas and in southern California, and because two AC alumni, Dr. James Tabor of the University of North Carolina and Dr. Phillip Arnold of Reunion Institute of Houston, were involved with the Waco tragedy (as consultants to the government and by going on the radio trying to persuade Koresh to give himself up), some have wondered if Koresh had a connection to the WCG. The answer is that even though Koresh had a number of doctrines that were identical to those of the WCG, he was never a WCG member. However, if you look at the history of his movement and the history of his predecessors, you will find that the Branch Davidians had in their religious roots some of the same antecedents that HWA had. An excellent explanation of this fact, along with a related family tree of Sabbatarian and adventist churches, is found in the Vol. 10, No. 4 edition of The Watchman Expositor (P.O. Box 13340, Arlington, TX 76094-0340; tel. 817-277-0023).

Some have asked my legal opinion as to whether the government had actual "probable cause" to obtain the search warrant that sparked the initial Feb. 28 shootout. The answer is very simple. "Probable cause" can be as little as an anonymous letter to police coupled with conduct that, although legal, could be interpreted as typical of a certain class of criminals (just behaving outwardly like a drug seller, for instance). See Illinois v. Gates, 462 U.S. 213 (1983). In the case of David Koresh, he had made it known locally that he was in the market for explosives and hand-held rocket launchers, had already purchased almost $200,000 worth of assault rifles, hand grenades, and at least one tripod-mounted M-60 machine gun, and had made statements that he was planning some type of show of force. And, in fact, Koresh had previously solidified his control of the movement through a shootout in 1987 with George Roden, a former contender for the Davidians' leadership. Furthermore, dissidents from the group who had moved to Australia had been warning since 1990 of the danger of the Koresh movement and had provided numerous affidavits to law enforcement officials. There was more than adequate information for probable cause and a search warrant.

Did the government botch the initial raid? Obviously they did. While one can be sympathetic to a government agency that cannot comprehend the extreme nature of a violent cult, the BATF should have known better. Cult expert Rick Ross of Phoenix, one of the country's leading deprogrammers and a personal friend, recently told me how, because he had helped exit two Branch Davidians in the past, he had warned of Koresh's potential for violence. And, according to Time magazine (May 3, p. 33), the government had an informant in the Koresh compound before the shootout who overheard Koresh say that the agents were on their way and that he would not be taken alive. According to the magazine, the informant was able to get away in time to have been able to tip off the government agents that the Koreshites were armed to the teeth and were waiting for them. Unfortunately, it seems that the macho BATF (with leaders who were apparently hoping to get publicity for themselves by allowing the press to be present for the initial raid) simply could not comprehend that a religious group was capable of outgunning them.

Once the siege began should the government have used different methods to get Koresh to surrender? Being critical with all the hindsight of a Monday morning quarterback is, of course, much easier than making wise decisions under pressure when one is in charge of anything. But, it is difficult not to come to the conclusion that the government needs to do some homework about cults. Of course, once Koresh decided to openly challenge the authority of the federal government through violence, there was no way that he, personally, was going to come out a winner. (Those who doubt this should read a good history of the Civil War beginning with the John Brown insurrection and a history of the bombing of Nagasaki.) Nevertheless, it is a tragedy that a way was not found to extricate more of his followers - and especially their children - from his control.

Rick Ross is highly critical of the BATF and, to a lesser extent, the FBI for not listening to his advice that once the siege began the main focus of their persuasion should have been on the followers, not Koresh, who Ross believed was mentally too far gone to be reasoned with. Given the paranoia that infects most cult groups, it is difficult to see how the techniques used by the government could have accomplished anything other than increase their paranoia and dependence on "Yahweh Koresh." After all, how many of us would not get a little crazy (or be made more crazy) if we were subjected night after night to the psychological tactics the government employed: blinding searchlights shining into the compound; roaring helicopters flying overhead; and recordings of Nancy Sinatra, chanting Tibetan monks, and the sounds of rabbits being slaughtered. Ross suggested, instead, that they use loudspeaker messages from loving relatives who, obviously, would want their loved ones in the compound to cooperate with the government. Certainly anything that would have gotten the Davidians closer to reality would have made more sense than the creation of an "end-time" environment that paralleled the apocalyptic scenario that Koresh had been predicting all along. As pointed out in Newsweek (5/3, p. 29), at both the Feb. 28 shootout and the last day of the siege, the government played right into the hands of Koresh's prophetic scenario.

What was the nature of Koresh's psychological state? A number of experts such as Dr. Louis J. West of UCLA have labeled Koresh as a psychopath, obviously an intelligent diagnosis. Syracuse University psycholinguist Murray Miron saw Koresh as a delusional paranoiac, another logical diagnosis. But, at least one psychologist diagnosed Koresh as a multiple personality because he did not seem to know from one day to the next what deals he had just struck with the government negotiators, and he designated himself through a series of changing names, titles, and symbols. In Biblical times he would have been called "demon possessed." While the news media seems to flinch at such a term, a lot of psychologists of the analytical school would describe Koresh exactly the same way.

Did Koresh want his followers to die in the agony of a fire that he, himself, lit or ordered to be lit? The final government investigation may provide an answer. But a number of observations can be made at this time. Rick Ross points out that the compound had a total of 65 doors and windows plus numerous tank-made breaches out of which the Davidians could have escaped. Only seven or eight chose to do so. According to Time (p.31), two cult members who got out alive were spared only because of the heroics of agents. In one case agents even had to forcefully restrain one cult member from going back into the burning building. The logical inference is that most of the followers of David Koresh knowingly allowed themselves to perish in the flames. And according to the detailed sequence of events of the final day as reported in Newsweek, it would appear that the fire was set from within at three different locations simultaneously, and that most of those inside could have escaped the flames had they made an attempt to do so.

That someone would choose such an end is difficult for most balanced, rational minds to comprehend. But let us not forget that David Koresh - and his followers - did not have rational, balanced minds. The astute editors of Newsweek pretty much foresaw how Koresh was going to end his life (see their 3/15 issue and note particularly p. 58). One could even make the argument that Koresh's end was the fulfillment of an old plan - conscious, unconscious, or demonic. To provide a few insights into Koresh's mind set, let me quote a most insightful letter from one of our readers. David Whitaker is not only an avid Bible student ("scholar" would perhaps be more accurate), but he is also someone who has had professional experience in the mental health field. Here is what he wrote to us about Koresh:

As an epitaph to the unfortunate incident near Waco, Texas, involving the Branch Davidian cult, it is interesting to note how Vernon Howell managed to literally fulfill the meaning of his appropriated name "David Koresh."

As was publicized in the news media, Vernon Howell claimed that the name "Koresh" is the Hebrew form of the name "Cyrus" - referring to the ancient Persian monarch who reigned 538-529 B.C. It should be observed that, although Cyrus was a Gentile monarch who was friendly toward the Jewish people, there exists no historical indication Cyrus ever followed or practiced the Jewish religion or converted to the God of Israel. The prophet Isaiah twice emphasized the words, "though thou hast not known Me," clearly describing Cyrus as a Gentile monarch who did not personally know God, although God used him as a human "messiah" ("anointed") to liberate the Jewish people from captivity at that time in history (Isa. 45: 4-5). Allowing the Jewish people to return to rebuild Jerusalem was only one of many acts which Cyrus preformed during his lifetime.

The Hellenized form of the name "Cyrus" translates into English as "Miserable." "Cyrus" is the Anglicized form of the Hellenized "Kyros," with the original Persian being "Kurush," and the Hebrew nameform used by Isaiah being "KRSH" in the ancient consonantal Hebrew, the Persian pronunciation being acknowledged by the Jewish people. The modern pronunciation as "Koresh" is based on modern - not ancient - Hebrew. If the modern Hebrew method is used, "kor" means "furnace," and "esh" means "fire." (Compare Strong's Concordance, Hebrew Dictionary nos. 3564-3565, 3566, and 784 [and as a Bible student, it is very likely that David Koresh would have had access to a copy of the ubiquitous Strong's - ed.] ) Therefore, the name "Koresh" translates literally as "Furnace (of) Fire," which is an apt description of the ultimate destiny to which David Koresh and his followers offered themselves and their children.

The first name which Vernon Howell took for himself was "David" - a Hebrew name meaning "Beloved." When the two names "David" and "Koresh" are applied to one individual, the translated meaning is "Beloved Furnace of Fire" - a name filled with opposite and disassociated meanings, which provides an excellent description of Vernon Howell's divided personality, i.e., a man who said one thing and did another, a man who couldn't keep his word to law enforcement officials, and a man whose moral conduct was filled with inconsistencies in relation to his claim to be Jesus Christ, the Lamb, and the true interpreter of the Seven Seals of Revelation. The living of a lie in committing uncounted acts of adultery, child molestation, and only God knows what else, certainly fulfills the disassociative meanings inherent within the combined names "David Koresh."

In Holy Scripture, a "furnace of fire" is always associated with either the murder of God's servants by unregenerate unbelievers or as Divine Judgment from God upon the ungodly and incorrigible sinner. From the viewpoint of Holy Scripture, the destiny sought and achieved by David Koresh for himself and his followers was neither Scriptural nor necessary.

Finally, a few very brief comments on something many of us need to think about. As a publication read by many Sabbatarians, AR frequently receives letters and submissions from sincere individuals who hold to the notion that seventh-day Sabbath keeping is "a sign" of the true people of God and that to be one of the "true" churches of God a church must have that "sign." Yet, David Koresh and his followers all kept the seventh-day Sabbath. In fact, the Branch Davidians are the very first group listed in the 1986 Directory of Sabbath-Observing Groups published by The Bible Sabbath Association (Fairview, OK 73737). Not only that, Koresh kept the annual Holy Days, eschewed unclean meats, loved to study prophecy, and indeed, from the age of 12 could recite the entire New Testament from memory. Yet, look at his end. What happened in Waco was a terrible, terrible tragedy. But, hopefully, it is one from which many of us will learn some very important lessons.

Obituaries

We are sorry to report the passing of a number of individuals who will have been known to many of our readers.

Keith F. Thomas died on January 9, 1992. Mr. Thomas was a member of the WCG from 1954 and a minister until 1986 when he resigned from the WCG ministry. The WCG refused to print his obituary since he had been disfellowshipped for not attending services. Actually, the minister who took over the local church after he resigned asked him not to attend locally, but to attend with another congregation over 100 miles away. The new minister admitted that he feared the local congregation would still look to Mr. Thomas as a minister and would not respect his replacement. The deceased is survived by his wife, four children, and nine grandchildren.

Although he passed away more than two years ago, we failed to report that Mr. Jim Doak died in January of 1991. No longer a member of WCG, his death was not reported by the WCG in which he had been a minister for many years. He is survived by his wife, Bobby, who lives in Tulsa, Oklahoma.

All of us at AR were very saddened to learn of the recent death from melanoma of Robert N. Justus, 44, of Springdale, Arkansas. Bob, a member of CGI at his passing, was co-owner of a printing company and an avid pilot. The editor of AR fondly remembers Bob as the fellow Bricket-Wooder who introduced him to the music of many great British big bands in the late sixties and as the fun-loving friend with whom he used to sneak off campus for ice-skating sessions at a London rink. His survivors include his wife, Paula Ann, two daughters, a stepdaughter, and a stepson.

Finally, we are saddened to report the death of Los Angeles TV news reporter Wayne Satz, 47, from a heart attack in December. Satz, a lawyer-journalist most famous as the reporter who broke the McMartin story, had been off the air since 1987 when he reported on his own station's unethical attempts at manipulating the Nielsen ratings. Ironically, his wrongful termination suit against the station was settled in late 1992 and he had been back on the air only a short while when he died unexpectedly. He will be missed by all of us at AR, not just because of the high quality of his reporting, but because by giving air time to publishers Trechak, Nugent, and Gerring in the mid-seventies, he was the first Los Angeles television journalist to cover the Ambassador Report story.

Letters

Wow! Unbelievable! On Sunday morning I turned on my radio to get the latest racing results on KIEV, our local pony station, and who did I hear but Mr. Herbert Armstrong! Preaching just like he did many years ago! But then at the end of the broadcast I heard him say his name was Rod - "like a fishing rod" - Meredith. I remembered an evangelist by that name from my days in the WCG. But this still freaked me out. Because I had heard from friends still involved with the WCG that on January 16, exactly seven years from the day he died, Mr. Herbert Armstrong was scheduled to come out of the grave and begin preaching again. I didn't believe them, but when I heard that broadcaster's voice it shook me up. Now I'm thinking that maybe Mr. Armstrong's spirit or powers or something came out of the grave and went into Mr. Meredith. I'm feeling really freaked out by this. What do you think?

California

Editor: I agree. You do sound "freaked out." We at AR had also heard the story that HWA was supposed to be resurrected on January 16. And we heard that some were planning a prayer vigil at his grave that day in anticipation. Finding it difficult to fathom that there are people who would believe such a thing, we drove up to the cemetery. As crazy as it sounds, however, for a good part of the day there were groups praying over HWA's grave in the rain. There were also bouquets of flowers and two notes from Joseph Tkach. Who the notes were meant for, we don't know. HWA is dead and after January 16 he still remains in his grave.

Mr. Trechak, something I heard last Sabbath (Jan 30) really got me upset. At around 1:30 p.m. I turned on KUSC, one of our local classical music stations. I had hoped to listen to some beautiful classical music while studying my Bible. But instead of beautiful music, what I heard was some of the most bizarre stuff I have ever experienced. It was a piece called "Polyrhythms - Chants for the Priestess." The announcer said it was based on African tribal music. I'm sure that was correct because it was all drums and voodoo-like chants. What upset me, however, was that just as I reached over to turn the program off, the announcer said the program was being sponsored by the Ambassador Foundation. So I continued listening. The next piece was a piece of modernistic cacophony by some Jewish intellectual. I could hardly stand listening. But then I really got a shock. The announcer on this program sponsored by the Ambassador Foundation said he was in the process of planning his special April Fool's program. He explained how his special Halloween broadcast had been a great success.

It bothers me that my tithes are being used to support such programs. What is your opinion of this?

California

Editor: I don't think I would have cared much for the music you describe. But KUSC is a great classical music station and I'm glad your tithes are helping to support its music broadcasts.

On Sunday, April 4, I watched the church's World Tomorrow telecast. The speaker was Richard Ames, Dr. Meredith's brother-in-law. The broadcast, which was about the Crucifixion, was in many ways very fine. But I found one production detail very confusing. In portraying the last Passover meal that Jesus had with his disciples, the program used Da Vinci's painting "The Last Supper." It is the one that shows Judas having accidentally spilled salt and Jesus eating fully leavened bread. I found the use of that Catholic painting confusing for a number of reasons. First, the WCG used to teach that it was a violation of the second commandment to portray the Deity via physical representations. Second, the WCG used to teach that the traditional representation of Jesus as having shoulder-length hair was effeminate and historically inaccurate. Third, the WCG used to teach that only unleavened bread was proper at Passover. And, fourth, the story about Judas and the spilled salt was never a part of WCG teaching and is found nowhere in the Bible. So are we seeing the quiet introduction of new doctrines "under our very noses" via the broadcast?

Washington

Editor: Apparently so. What other explanation could there be?

The day before the Feast of Trumpets, 1992, there was a suicide in the Fresno church. A 17-year-old girl, whose parents are dear friends of mine, shot herself with a .45 automatic right in front of her parents. Her mother told me later that the girl always became depressed during the holy days because she didn't feel she was "good enough." She felt unworthy by church standards, although she was a sweet, normal woman. This is the second suicide in the Fresno WCG in nine years. The other suicide was a minister's son, age 23.

Over the years that you have investigated the WCG and read thousands of letters from your readers, in addition to those who have died from lack of medical care or by being murdered, how many suicides have there been? And do you see any kind of a trend?

John Bowers
California

Editor: We have no way of knowing how many there have been, but we have heard of dozens of WCG-related suicides over the years. Back in mid-January, Glenn Troike, the son of WCG minister Paul Troike, committed suicide. Recently, former WCG member Elilu Neitsch - who never seemed to recover fully from the WCG experience or her husband's suicide some years ago - herself committed suicide in Pasadena. She left behind a sixteen-year-old daughter. A few months ago we heard of a WCG member committing suicide up in Wyoming. We don't know if there is a trend. Nor can we know for sure which suicides were caused by membership in Worldwide. After all, some may well have been caused by factors having nothing to do with church membership. However, from the mere fact that some members and children of members have committed suicide, we can logically deduce that WCG membership does not automatically protect one or one's family from that kind of tragedy.

Similarly, one has only to read the obituary section of the Worldwide News to see that Worldwidiers die just as frequently as others (maybe more frequently) from cancer and other diseases (often at an early age), from violence, or in accidents. For example, in the obituary section of the 12/2/92 WN, there were among the deceased one 47-year-old man who died from injuries suffered in an industrial accident, one 50-year-old man who died from an accidental fall at a construction site, and one 23-year-old man who died in a swimming accident. Their affiliation with WCG doesn't seem to have given them much protection from accidents. But the same can be said about CGI and other groups. For instance, last October six CGI members were killed in a fiery car crash in Mississippi while traveling to their church's Feast of Tabernacles in Florida (Jonesboro Sun, 10/23/92).

My little brother has been fighting cancer and was anointed by a very compassionate minister from the Church of God, International. As my in-laws still attend with Worldwide, it was brought to my attention that members of the WCG are saying my brother cannot be healed as he was anointed by a "false minister."

Illinois

Editor: In Mk. 5:25-34, we read of the woman healed by touching Jesus' garment. Verse

34 relates how Jesus told her afterwards, "thy faith hath made thee whole." He didn't say "you have been healed because you are in the right denomination." The fact is there are cases of miraculous healings in many denominations. And we have heard of many cases of people being healed after they left Worldwide. We even know of cases of dramatic healings of individuals who were not in any denomination or who were not even Christians. Almost always, however, there seems to be present some element of living faith.

In a taped sermon given on May 30, 1992, Mr. Joseph Tkach Jr. told a story about Harold Jackson, the black WCG elder who passed away last year. Here is what Joe Jr. said:

I had heard many stories about him [Mr. Jackson] and I had heard that he had visited Malcolm X. So I asked him about it and he told me, "Yes, that's true." He went to visit Malcolm X when he was in jail. This is before Malcolm X was known as Malcolm X, before he was known as anybody on a notoriety level. And while he was in jail he found a copy of the Plain Truth and a booklet and he also had the writings of Muhammad Elijah. And Mr. Jackson said as he visited him in jail he encouraged him not to read any more of Muhammad Elijah's writings but to continue reading the Plain Truth. And he told me how he told him how one set of literature will take you through the right door. The other will take you through the wrong door.

Interesting that Mr. Jackson had that experience visiting Malcolm X in jail, because it was years later he had the opportunity to hear Malcolm X speak in a big public setting and he and one of the deacons from Chicago went to hear him speak and they walked in and sat down and as Malcolm X was speaking he recognized him as the guy who had visited him in jail and [he] said, "Well, look what we have here. We have some representatives from the Worldwide Church of God sitting amongst us."

Mr. Jackson was the same race as everybody else in that room. But, he told me, he felt as if he was a different color.

Only seven months before, in the December 23, 1991 WN, the official Jackson obituary gave data that shows Tkach Jr.'s story to be doubtful at best. According to the obituary, Jackson first heard the World Tomorrow broadcast in 1951 in San Diego where he lived. Malcolm X (then Malcolm Little) was incarcerated on a burglary conviction in Charlestown Prison in Massachusetts from February 1946 to early August 1952. The obituary further stated that, "Mr. Jackson was ordained a deacon in November 1957 and a local elder in 1959. That year he moved from Southern California to Chicago, where he served for 12 years."

It seems unlikely that a first year lay member would travel over 3000 miles to visit a convict. I might add that Malcolm was a Muslim convert by 1947.

Now that Malcolm X has become a black folk hero among the nation's black youth, it's interesting to hear for the, first time in 40 years that he almost left the Nation of Islam to become a WCG member. I'm sure the young blacks listening to the tape were astounded. I wasn't.

Mark Thornton

We've been corresponding with a few ex-Worldwidiers, whose names were passed on to us. One of them mentioned how some Ambassador students had been taught to admire some of Hitler's traits. Examples: He had the leadership ability to sway the masses, he never let his hair cover his forehead (supposedly the seat of human will), and he was willing to be brutal when he believed his goal was righteous (thus suggesting that "God's ministers" have permission to do the same toward their congregations). I guess we should not have been surprised considering that HWA, himself, is widely reported to have been a student of Hitler's psychological methods.

Wisconsin

Editor: I'm not surprised either. But, the WCG ministry's fetish for non-covered foreheads has always seemed nonbiblical and odd to me. What is the basis of the taboo? Is there some tie-in to the parapsychological phenomenon of chakras? I don't know. But it seems particularly odd to equate the ability to sway "the masses" with a fetish for hair-bare foreheads. The latter, however, does sound like the kind of fetish that Hitler, who had a great interest in the occult, might have had.

You've published a few letters questioning whether or not the Waldensians were part of the "true church."

In tracing their beliefs to the Waldensians, Herbert Armstrong and Herman Hoeh were merely buying into a view that had been around for several centuries. No doubt they had been influenced by Dugger and Dodd's book, A History of the True Church, which describes the history of the Waldensians in chapters 8-16. This work quotes extensively from Hugh Smith's Church History, Jones' Church History, Wylie's History of the Waldensians, Ernesto Comba's History of the Waldensians (originally published in Italian), and a number of other works.

Ellen G. White also discussed the Waldensians in chapter four of The Great Controversy, published in 1888. She may have based her understanding on a four-volume history by A. Muston, titled Israel in the Alps and first published in 1851. Muston asserted that the Waldensians were keeping some of the Old Testament practices, including the Holy Days.

The Waldensians, themselves, claimed to be the uncorrupted remnant of the apostolic church, a view which was supported by Theodore Beza, the founder of the Swiss Calvinist church, and Olivetan, another Calvinist who from 1532 to 1535 preached Protestant doctrines to the Waldensians. Both Beza and Olivetan believed Paul had established the Waldensian church on his journey to Spain. A Catholic inquisitor of the fourteenth century, Reinerius Saccho, even admitted that the Waldensians had existed long before Peter Waldo came on the scene.

If you took an English literature course in college, you might remember John Milton's poem about the persecutions faced by the Waldensians. Cromwell had sent S. Morland as an emissary to the little church and in 1658 Morland wrote The History of the Evangelical Churches of the Piedmont. Apparently, the Waldensian church was quite well known among Protestant circles in England and perhaps served in some way as justification or validation for their rejection of Catholic doctrines.

Apostolicity has always been an important issue within Christianity, and Herbert Armstrong was no different than other churchmen in trying to establish an apostolic succession and continuity of doctrine for the Worldwide Church of God.

Linda Hardy White
Carrollton, Texas

Editor: Mrs. White and her husband Wes are former WCG members who now fellowship with the Church of God (Seventh Day). "CG7" is the group from which HWA, himself, exited to begin his own religious organization. Many individuals, disillusioned with the WCG, have found CG7 more to their liking. There are a number of branches, with the largest headquartered in Colorado (330 West 152nd Ave., Broomfield, CO 80020). Their magazine is The Bible Advocate, P.O. Box 33677, Denver, CO 80233-0677. Another branch is the Church of God, 7th Day; 79 Water St.; Salem; WV 26426 (a branch from which HWA once had credentials). Both the Colorado and West Virginia branches have published some revealing information about HWA's association with CG7. A third branch is The Church of God, Jerusalem (World Headquarters), P.O. Box 10184, Jerusalem 91101, Israel. This organization, with more than 40,000 members, publishes The Mount Zion Reporter, founded by the late A. N. Dugger who was once a senior associate of HWA. This group is now headed by Mr. Gordon Fauth.

My husband and I left the WCG in October 1992 and thank God every day that we have been freed from that bondage. We can't figure out how we could have allowed them to control us for 12 years. Doubt about the WCG had been building over the last few years, but when we "discovered" in September that the New Covenant released us from having to keep the Holy Days, that was the last straw.

To our surprise, we were not alone in our studies. Other members up here independently came to the same conclusions as we did. And many of them wrote to Vancouver (Canadian HQ) and Pasadena with their new found truth, naively believing that the church would correct their teaching when they saw the truth. Of course, they refused it. (We later learned that Tkach has known for at least five years that the church does not have to keep the Feast Days and yet he has made no attempt to correct the error in teaching.)

I've attached our exit letter to Frank Brown for your information. It pretty much sums up the major reasons for our departure.

Over the last six months 32 people (23 adults) up here have left the WCG and more are still studying. Most of us have started attending the Church of God (Seventh Day). (Another 10 people left the WCG three years ago and attend there also.) Some of those who left were longtime members of 20, 25, and 28 years. As well, some have joined a support group for people who have left cults; we all need a lot of healing after years of being victimized. The group advertises in the local paper and gets more calls from WCG members all the time....

We continue to pray that more of our dear friends will get out of that abusive and destructive cult and that you please pray with us. The WCG may be attempting to look more Christian, but in reality the fear tactics and manipulative treatment of members exists as much today as it did when HWA was alive.

Lorie Supruniuk

Editor: After a short correspondence with the Supruniuks, Lorie sent us the following:

We've been pouring over the ARs. One of the first things we read was "the Gerringer letter." It was super. One of the things that really struck us was that the process and the feelings Bob went through were so similar to our own, yet our experience was twenty years later! I firmly believe that God's Spirit was slowly working with us, chipping away at the errors the WCG taught us. When we allow His Spirit to lead us, we all end up being led out of the WCG!

That reminds me of a call we received from Bob Scott, an assistant pastor in Edmonton on illness leave. When Mr. Scott heard of our decision to leave the WCG he called and I had a long, tiresome conversation with him. He pleaded with me, using all the familiar arguments. Then he asked what we had been reading and where we got our information. I told him we've been reading Galatians. "Don't read Galatians!" he said. "You should never read Galatians without a minister present. In fact, even Dr. Stavrinides has trouble understanding it. If you read Galatians you will study yourself right out of the church!" He was right about one thing.

I've also been in shock at the amount of proof there is against New Testament tithing and (it shouldn't surprise me, but it does) that the church knows that it is wrong to burden the people this way. Tithing never was one of the things that we questioned when we left, we thought they had that right, although over the last few months we've been wondering about that too (just like the Sabbath). The Church of God (7th Day) teaches tithing as a Biblical principle but not as a law. The tithes and offerings stay in the local area and are used for the local minister's salary and local expenses. Very little is sent to Denver headquarters and the books are always available for anyone to look at. This seems to be a better system, but really should we be calling it "tithing" or would "free-will offering" be less legalistic?

I appreciated your private comments about the Sabbath. Dave and I have been leaning to the same conclusions about it being a principle rather than a legalistic rule. Fortunately the pastor of the Church of God (7th Day) congregation we're fellowshiping with is very strong on grace and is allowing us to work this out for ourselves. He hasn't pushed us on it at all. In fact, one of the men from our group just experienced a shift change and now has to work on Saturday. No one from the church has told him to quit his job or anything. Yet we know what would have happened if he was still in the WCG.

Some very interesting history about our pastor: His name is David Kauer (ring a bell?).

He's about 58 years old and his dad and HWA were contemporaries in Oregon. David is a corporate accountant (the church encourages men to have "real" careers before entering the ministry) and from 1964 to 1980 David worked at the church's Denver HQ as the secretary-treasurer. He then became a pastor for the churches in Seattle/Tacoma, Washington and in 1986 he moved to Edmonton to pastor the church here.

When GTA left the WCG for the last time (three is a number of completion isn't it?), he went to visit David Kauer in Denver to search out his father's roots. He looked over old copies of the Bible Advocate that HWA had written for. Even GTA was surprised to find out just how involved his father had been with the Church of God (7th Day) and for how long. It seems HWA didn't even tell his own son the truth.

So did the name David Kauer ring a bell? You mention him on page 69 of the 1977 AR in "Herbert Armstrong's Religious Roots." Neat huh? I've enclosed a copy of the documentation that shows HWA's involvement and membership in the Church of God (7th Day) until 1938. [Readers can write to CG7 to get a copy - ed.] Do you get Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Trumpet? The issue I received today has an article showing the "true" history of HWA's foundling church. Same old lies....

Regarding our letter to Frank Brown, by all means let your readers know they can have a copy from us. It would be helpful if they could send a self-addressed business envelope, just to save me some time. But because it would be impossible for Americans to buy Canadian stamps, we'll take care of that. If there is anything we can do further to expose the WCG, please let us know.

Editor: The six-page letter the Supruniuks wrote to Frank Brown contains many valuable insights about the WCG's current problems. Those who would like a copy may write to: David & Lorie Supruniuk, 12947 - 102 Street, Edmonton, Alberta T5E 4J4, Canada.

My wife Gail and I have left the WCG and are now Methodists. We recently started a support group called Help-Net, a Christian organization that helps people who are in, or are coming out of, cults.

Having read all 51 issues of Ambassador Report published to date and several of the books you have often mentioned, I have decided to resign from the Worldwide Church of God after nearly three decades as a member (copies of resignation letters as deacon and member enclosed).

I want to thank you very much for sending me all the back issues I requested some time ago.... You must realize that having all this hard data at our fingertips has made the difference between remaining totally messed up mentally, and having the peace of mind that the truth brings. We are still searching for clarifications on various doctrines, but at least we are absolutely clear on the Worldwide Church of God and its corrupt ministry.

I do hope that you are preserving all this information in some sort of permanent storage medium. This information must never be lost. It would be wonderful if the entire history of the WCG could be written up in a form that would be available both to scholars and the public.

I have been a member of the Worldwide Church of God for thirty years. My negative experiences are too numerous to write about. You can imagine how sick I feel about all that I have read so far. Mind control is a terrible thing to break away from.

I hope some day you can report on the utter, total collapse of the corruption known as the WCG. But people love to be deceived. HWA taught that. I heard him say so on a Bible study tape. And as long as they love to be deceived, the WCG won't collapse. I have no illusions about it. HWA taught that they love to be deceived and no one understood it better than he did. He was speaking to about 70,000 that he had deceived and I humbly acknowledge that at that time I was one of them. I paid a terrible price for allowing myself to be deceived.

I am glad that you have not given up the good fight against the WCG. It's been a long and difficult struggle for me to exit this cult. The mind still plays tricks on me even though I feel that I'm getting more normal each and every day. Reading your publication is a reentry into the real world again. I look forward to your reports.

A Few Comments From the Editor

As time passes there seems to be more and more WCG related information that needs to be reported. With the constant upheaval in WCG doctrines, policies, and personnel, plus the ever increasing number of WCG spinoff groups, it is becoming ever more time consuming to keep track of what is happening both in the WCG and in its daughter churches.

Many who have never been journalists will perhaps be surprised (but those who have, will not) that this issue represents over two solid months of full-time research. Yet, I still have about 1,000 pages of research materials already filed for the next two issues. I had hoped to report on the Flurry group and about a dozen other groups in this edition. But it looks like all of that will have to wait for the summer and fall ARs.

My apologies for not being able to get issues out on a more timely and predictable schedule. But, because AR does not provide anyone on its dwindling "staff" with a salary, AR projects sometimes have to be put on the shelf for weeks, or even months, at a time.

I hope all of you will continue on our mailing list. We do need to hear from you occasionally. Not just because we need contributions to continue, but because, with so many people changing addresses every year, we do need to know that you are still there - literally.

My thanks to all who contributed toward this issue.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

September 1993 (AR53)

WCG Adopts Trinity Doctrine

In a funny kind of way, it truly is a pity we cannot bring back Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA) from the grave - at least for a little while. We would love to see the look on his face when he learned what has become of the institutions he founded: The Worldwide Church of God (WCG), Ambassador College, the Ambassador Foundation, The Plain Truth magazine, The World Tomorrow broadcast. All have been so completely transformed since his passing in 1986, that if he would even recognize them, HWA would undoubtedly be dumbfounded at what they have become. Indeed, it is fair to say that virtually everything HWA founded, discovered, taught, and built up has now been turned on its ear, and what remains ostensibly in his name (for instance, the WCG corporation) is now actively in opposition to much of what he stood for during his lifetime.

The latest HWA doctrine to be spit out by the current WCG administration of Joseph W. Tkach is HWA's adamantly non-trinitarian view of the Godhead. During his lifetime, HWA taught in no uncertain terms that the trinitarian view of God was not only erroneous, but was a pagan teaching that originated with the Devil himself. Now the WCG would prefer to forget it ever embraced such "unorthodox" views. After months of laying the psychological groundwork for the monumental change, the Tkachs called a ministerial conference in Pasadena in early June. During the conference, billed as "the most important since Acts 15," the gathered WCG bigwigs were told by Tkach Jr. and doctrinal expert Kyriacos Stavriniades that the WCG's God is, in fact, a three-person-in-one deity. According to the new view, not only are God the Father and Jesus "persons," but the Holy Spirit, too, is a person. HWA, of course, taught that the Holy Spirit, although coming from God, was really a non-physical power or force and was not an actual person. The WCG's new teaching - which is being hailed by many Christian denominations - is not only at variance with what HWA taught, it is even at variance with what the WCG was teaching just a few weeks ago. It is so much at variance, in fact, that the WCG has pulled its just-published "God Is..." booklet so a new version will reflect the latest WCG doctrine.

So which of HWA's teachings will be next to go on the chopping block? Insiders tell the Report that among those doctrinal changes to be announced to the church membership will be the new status of the Holy Days which, it is suggested, will become just symbols of God's plan - not really laws and not really required for salvation. (The WCG ministry has already been informed about this "modest paradigm shift" - Pastor General's Report, 7/13/93, p. 4.) Another doctrine being discussed by WCG theoreticians is the unclean meats doctrine. Some are already saying that the Old Testament dietary laws were only instituted because the ancients lacked refrigeration. Now that we have refrigerators, so the argument goes, there is no logical reason to pass up the pork and shrimp. Tkach Sr. has also told one of the WCG's gay members he plans to change the WCG's public position on homosexuality somewhat. However, our source does not know how far that change will go or how it will be instituted.

Naturally, with so many doctrines being constantly changed, it is getting a bit confusing for some Worldwidiers to understand exactly what it is that they believe or don't believe. To help such members out, Tkach Jr. has issued the following order to his field ministers:

The June 15 PGR listed the only Church publications that should be in local church libraries. The Sabbath booklet, although not on that list, may be in Church libraries.

Obsolete booklets often contain explanations that are no longer representative of the Church. We do not want them in church libraries because many people would view them as officially sanctioned if they were there. So, if a new booklet is published on any particular topic, the old booklet should be removed from all local church libraries. (Pastor General's Report, 7/13/93, p. 6.)

Even more amazing is the Tkach position that doctrines, themselves, are just not that important. In fact, according to Tkach Jr., doctrines often get in the way:

The one chord that binds together each little denominational bundle is the identical thing that has caused every split and division that ever took place between brethren - DOCTRINE! As long as DOCTRINE is employed as [the] basis for church unity, every so-called "church" will suffer strife, division and separation into more divisions. (WN, 4/27/93, p. 5 in Tkach Jr. article entitled "Does God Identify and Underpin His Church by Doctrines, Growth?", emphasis his.)

Whatever one may feel about such views, long-time WCG observers will immediately recognize that we are witnessing a monumental transformation in the WCG's sales pitch. The WCG's ministry is apparently no longer going to say: "Follow us because we have the truth." What the Tkachs are telling us is: "Follow us, give us your money, and trust us with your spiritual welfare - not because we have the truth (because doctrinal truth does not really count for much, it's always changing and, besides, it only causes problems) - but follow us because of the loving feelings you get from being in our loving church."

WCG to Scuttle Its Prophecy Foundation

Twenty years ago, it was not possible to discuss Armstrongism without discussing HWA's teaching on the subject of the identity of Israel - that is, his doctrine that the United States and the British Commonwealth ("US and BC") were the "House of Israel" of Bible prophecy. In today's WCG, however, that doctrine is so much in disrepute that many WCG ministers no longer discuss it. Some are even claiming the WCG never taught it! While there are a few who obstinately hold to it, the Tkach administration is now quietly preparing the way for HWA's version of British-Israelism or "Identity" to be abandoned as numerous other HWA teachings have been. A member of the Council of Elders recently leaked a copy of an 8/10/92 memo from WCG evangelist Joseph Tkach Jr. to WCG minister Mike Swagerty at Ambassador. Because it clearly shows the direction the Tkachs are taking on the "Identity" teaching, we believe you will find it as remarkable as we did. Here is what Jr. wrote to Swagerty on the subject of "Israel in end-time prophecy":

Hi Mike!

Little has been said because it was initially announced as a 2 year study project before we revise the booklet. Since it will require more time than just the 2 years to produce anything, I would not preach on the topic of Israel in end-time prophecy, if you plan to include anything about US & BC. All it will do is generate more questions and possibly more confusion. To directly answer your questions, I would not stick my neck out on it at all.

You commented that US & BC was a big mainstay of the ministry. I would draw your attention to the booklet, "1975 in Prophecy" which was also one of the biggest mainstays of the ministry and often listed by members as the main booklet that brought them into the Church. And it was found to be in error and removed from circulation.

I would answer any inquiries about "US & BC in Prophecy" by saying that we are studying the material in order to produce a revised booklet.

Allow me to acquaint you with some of the problems, if you are not already aware of them.

1) From a Biblical overview: Our traditional belief is that the covenants and promises recorded in the Old Testament have not yet been fulfilled. Yet, we have never addressed how these promises of a continuing line of kings should be understood in light of the life and sacrifice of Jesus Christ. When you stop and consider the significance of Acts 4:12 (neither is there salvation in any other: for there is none other name under heaven given among men whereby we must be saved) the teaching of US & BC has no significance. The national identity is of no consequence given Christ's sacrifice. Christ's sacrifice is (and it should be our central plank and fulcrum) pivotal to God's plan. God is no longer dealing with a single nation.

2) From a plan of salvation view: In light of the New Testament, and the centrality of Christ in God's plan of salvation (as mentioned above) much of the relevance of our teaching on US & BC is reduced to - so what! Galatians 3:28 says, "There is neither Jew, nor Greek, there is neither slave nor free, there is neither male or female; for you are all one in Christ Jesus." In Galatians 6:16, Paul refers to the Israel of God. While we do not cease being male nor female, Jew nor Greek, American nor German while we are human; in this life we are asked to partake of God's nature and be part of the Israel of God - spiritual Israel.

3) From a logical view: Accepting the identity of modern nations as explained by US & BC forces us to have an a priori presupposition to prophecy. In other words we force ourselves into a corner on interpreting the prophecies by stating the conclusion and then forcing the text of scripture to fit our preconceived conclusions.

4) From a historical view: All of our traditional proofs are based upon folklore, legend, myth, and superstition. There may be some reliable historical evidence, but our booklet has never used any of it. Some of our statements contradict the evidence of history. It is a historical fact that the British empire found this explanation favorable as a justification for their imperial expansion of their empire.

[5] From an ethical point of view: It is a well known fact that Mr. Armstrong did not originate this teaching. In fact, earlier editions of the US & BC [booklet] plagiarized vast portions of a booklet entitled "Judah's Sceptre and Joseph's Birthright." It is not possible to say that this was revealed to Mr. Armstrong, when in fact, we can see where he copied it from - including the historical errors.

[6] From a practical point of view: In the 1600's when the Sabbath-keepers came to America, they did not preach to the native Americans or to themselves that, "hey! we are Manasseh, and we must warn everyone of their true national identity." Whether a person is from Manasseh, Ephraim, Assyria, or Italy, it is not pertinent to salvation.

We don't need to know whether we are Manasseh, or Ephraim to preach the coming tribulation, the day of the Lord, the return of Christ, the Millennium, or the white throne judgment.

Now, my opinion of US & BC is that this is an interesting episode in history that needs to be pursued. And that is what we are doing, but it will take time. It should not stay at the high level of doctrine until we can find proof. This is especially important if it is to remain the central plank in our view of prophecy. We can't simply say this is something to accept on faith because the life and sacrifice of Jesus Christ reduces the importance of the idea to a non-essential in terms of salvation.

Well, we have to keep working at it.
Hang in there!
Warm regards
[J. Tkach Jr.]

When the complete undoing of "US & BC" will be sprung on the WCG membership remains to be seen. But, clearly, the old HWA doctrine is as good as dead.

Editor: In the last few years so many WCG doctrines and policies have changed - and so radically - that it would perhaps be wise for us to pause a moment to reflect upon the magnitude of those changes. Former WCG minister David C. Pack has provided all of us with a service by putting together and distributing a rather comprehensive list of WCG doctrine and policy changes. Apparently compiled while he was on the WCG payroll as a minister, and it is therefore quite authoritative, the uncopyrighted paper has recently gotten wide distribution in WCG circles. Pack, who has not been one of our favorite WCG ministers (see AR32), is now a minister with the WCG's newest competitor, the Global Church of God (P.O. Box 5500, Glendora, CA 91740-5500). That being the case, we should keep in mind that he has a certain theological bias. (And most emphatically, Mr. Pack's views are his own and not those of AR.) Nevertheless, his compilation of 154 doctrinal and 28 policy changes is well-researched and his comments do reflect the thinking of many prominent ministers and laymembers still in the Tkach organization. With those caveats in mind, we are presenting Mr. Pack's paper below.

A few clarifications should be made for newer readers. The abbreviations: PT, WN, PGR, CAD, PCD, CW, and Reg. Conf. stand for, respectively: Plain Truth, Worldwide News, Pastor General's Report, Church Administration Department, Personal Correspondence Department, Co-Worker, and Regional Conference. The term "cc:Mail" refers to the WCG ministry's new computer network system. Except for punctuation corrections and the addition of some italics, the paper is unedited. Emphasis by underlining is Mr. Pack's throughout.

Doctrinal Changes of the Worldwide Church of God by David C. Pack

This is a comprehensive list of most all the doctrinal changes of the Worldwide Church of God. While some of these changes are smaller and less significant, others are huge and have a devastating impact on belief. Many changes involve numerous re-explanations of individual scriptures that could have been listed separately, making this list, quite literally, almost unending. A more comprehensive approach was attempted at the risk of being called picky because it demonstrates that heresy is a cancer that eventually leavens everything it touches. If people were being killed instead of truth, surely we would call this a holocaust.

There are perhaps four to six changes that might be for the better. I do not wish it to be said that "Dave Pack disagrees with every change the Church has made since the death of Mr. Armstrong." This has been said of Dr. Meredith and Mr. Raymond McNair among others to deliberately make us look like Armstrong worshippers rather than followers of truth. It is probably inevitable that this list will fall into the hands of people who will set out to attack and discredit it. I claim it to be neither complete nor perfect. The list grows almost daily anyway. Clever word-gimmickry can probably successfully explain away some few of these changes. Will you let that obscure the massive scope of this great apostasy as you study this list? Or will you prove all things, hold fast that which is good and only follow teachers of truth?

II Thes. 2:3 says a falling away (Greek apostasia - "a defection from truth") will precede Christ's return and verse 13 shows that receiving salvation is attached to "belief of the truth."

I Tim. 6:3-5 makes it clear what one must do in such historic and prophetic circumstances as these we now face. 2000 years of church history show people of truth and courage have always been willing to take this Biblical step. (Note: PGR Personals almost always appear 1-2 weeks later as a WN Personal.)

1. The Gospel of the Kingdom of God is now almost entirely about Jesus. "Christ is the Gospel.... He is the Kingdom of God." (PGR, 8/4/92 and 4/20/93, Personals.)
2. The Kingdom is here and we're in it now.
3. Mr. Armstrong was not the modern Elijah. The Church instead fulfills that role. (PCD form letter.)
4. Matt. 24:14 is no longer the Church's commissionit's "just a prophecy." (Portfolio, 3/4/93, Forum & Assembly, R. Kelly.)
5. Ezek. 33:1-7 was fulfilled by Ezekiel - it was never our responsibility. Isa. 58: 1 is not "thoughtful, dignified and friendly" - "it's too dogmatic." (WN, 12/29/92, G. Albrecht.)
6. Modern Israel's identity (U.S. & B.C. book) has been shelved/abandoned and called "folklore, legend, myth and superstition." (J. Tkach Jr. memo to U.S. field minister.)
7. "Christ fulfilled the major Purpose of the national identity of Israel." (PT, 12/92, Q&A section.)
8. Prophetic emphasis was just "prediction addiction." Prophecy is to encourage believers, not warn nonbelievers. (Numerous WN Personals.)
9. The second coming is possibly far off - maybe following another world war. (Numerous places in 1991 and later.)
10. There is no 7000-year plan of God. (PCD letter L57.)

11. God is ...a Trinity (defined as "3 in 1") and a mystery variously called three "consciousnesses, existences, entities" and the concept of the Trinity is not pagan. ("God Is..." booklet, p. 44.)
12. God is... not a family - He has one.
13. God is... not a person [nor] is Christ.
14. God and Christ don't have a body.
15. Man is not made in God's literal form, shape and image.
16. Hinduism, Buddhism, Islam, Polytheism, etc. teach us much about God. ("God Is..." booklet, p. 4.)
17. Christians are only adopted sons who will never become God Beings. God is not reproducing Himself.
18. Christ resurrected Himself. (He, then, couldn't have died for us.) (G. Albrecht sermon to ministers in 1991.)
19. The terms Father and Son are only analogous concepts. (see I Jn. 2:22!)
20. Christ could not sin - Mr. Armstrong's explicit definition of the spirit of anti-Christ. ("Millions Do Not Know What Christ Really Was," HWA reprint, pp. 3-4.) If He wasn't tempted and He didn't overcome sin He can't be our High Priest and had an advantage over us.
21. Striving to imitate Christ toward salvation is "an unscriptural false hope." (PGR, 1/22/91, Q&A.)
22. Christ was crucified on a cross and not a stake.
23. The cross is now "a symbol of service and sacrifice" and members at HQ (and elsewhere) are already wearing crosses. "Remember the cross" is now the WCG "battle cry." (PGR, 2/17/93, Personal.)
24. Interracial marriage is no longer wrong.
25. Marriage to unbelievers is now permissible "because we traditionally defined believers as baptized WCG members" - this is "extremely narrow." (PGR, 4/20/93, p. 3., J. Tkach Jr.)
26. II Cor. 6:14 is just a warning about spending time with idolaters. (PGR, 4/20/93, p. 3.)
27. Divorce and Rearriage is now permitted for over two dozen reasons including "mental abuse, emotional or spiritual abandonment" and many other hard-to-define reasons. (Special Policy Statement, 4/20/93, J. Tkach Sr.)
28. An annulment may be obtained by anyone who regrets getting married several months into the marriage. Also, the Church now accepts any legal annulment. (Special Policy Statement, 4/20/93, J. Tkach Sr.)

29. Place of Safety is not to be emphasized.
30. Church eras are not to be emphasized. (PGR, 2-3 years ago.)
31. Any Church history booklets are gone because "we make no attempt to trace ourselves to the first century." (M. Snyder, 12/13/91, Detroit WMUZ radio interview.)
32. The "invisible church" doctrine (from Augustine) allows for good Protestants and others to be saved. "We make no claims to exclusivity." (M. Snyder, 12/13/91, Detroit WMUZ radio interview - 11/17/92 cc:Mail to all ministers from J. Tkach Jr. states the same in various ways.)
33. Instead of "enduring to the end to be saved," Christians are saved now.
34. Christians are born again at conversion instead of at the resurrection.
35. Social activism through do-gooding in the community is now Christian duty and will help spread the Kingdom. (PT, 3/93, p. 17.)
36. Personal evangelizing and "sharing Jesus" is Christian duty and will spread the Kingdom. (Numerous WN Personals, 12/92-3/93 and various CW letters.)
37. The ability to evangelize is a gift of the Spirit. (PGR, 3/2/93, Personal.)
38. A completely open door exists to every Church function.
39. The Greek word for church, ekklesia, means "called together," not "called out ones."
40. Now is the time for the world's salvation. (Telecast, 3/29/92, D. Hulme.) Mr. Armstrong always understood this was not true.
41. Members may visit and invite prospective members to church - once a duty only for ministers.
42. Members may freely join worldly organizations.
43. Salvation is a gift by grace through faith requiring no works or obedience.
44. The WCG "understands and practices New Testament Christianity." Old Testament verses are rarely quoted. (Tithing booklet ["Tithing and the Give Way"], last page.)
45. Being led by the Holy Spirit - not any set of doctrines - or being in the right organization defines what a Christian is. (CW letter, 2/25/92 and WN, 4/27/93, feature headline, p. 5.)
46. Obedience springs from the Holy Spirit. Acts 5:32 says God gives His Spirit to them that obey Him.
47. Baptism is not required for salvation. (D. Hulme, M. Feazell statements at Evangelical Conf. in Deefield, Illinois.)
48. The Laying on of Hands is "not a fundamental doctrine" so it was excluded from the Statement of Beliefs - see Heb. 6:6. (J. Tkach Jr., cc:Mail to minist-ers, 1/93.)

49. Unconverted mates are "unbaptized members." (Arrows in Flight, 4/93, p. 4.) The term member is subjective because only God knows who they are. (Arrows in Flight, 3/93, p. 3.)

50. The focus of WCG literature is now grace, mercy, reconciliation, sanctification and Christ's blood.

51. The terms "qualify," "development of holy, righteous character," "building holy righteous character," "striving to overcome sin," "conquering sin," "qualifying for the Kingdom of God," etc. are removed from our publications by written policy. (U.S. Reg. Con. handout, M. Feazell, 8/92.)

52. The terms "false religionists," "professing Christianity," "so-called Christians," "religions of the world," "converted Christians," "pagan religions," etc. are both judgmental and condemning and are not to be used. Instead, terms like "Christianity," "Christians," "Mainstream Christians," "Jesus' disciples" should be used. (U.S. Reg. Conf. handout, 8/92, G. Albrecht.)

53. Mr. Armstrong taught the Ten Commandments are the basis for love while the WCG teaches the Ten Commandments don't forbid hatred, envy, rage, selfishness, conceit, and don't require love. (CW letter, 5/27/92.)

54. Mr. Armstrong said the liberalism of the 1970s put the Church in "mortal danger of becoming Laodicea" (GN, 8/79, Personal) but [the] current Pastor General accuses people who wish to hold to old teachings of being self-righteous judges who use emotional arguments to gain their own following. (WN, 12/17/90, Personal.) The current Pastor General wrote "a pharisee is anyone who thinks he has knowledge others do not have." (WN, 10/10/89, Personal.)

55. Co-workers are now "Brothers and Sisters in Christ" and PT subscribers are "Fellow members of the household of faith." (PT, 4/92, Personal.)

56. Voting and contributions to politicians are private matters. (Announced in Big Sandy.)

57. Third tithe may be paid every year at 2.8% abrogating the Deut. 26:12-15 third-tithe-year prayer of faith.

58. Tithing is called a "concept" instead of a law.

59. The WCG is officially pro-choice because "abortion is not equated with murder." IUDs, which kill fertilized ova, are permissible for contraception. (Private letter sent to members and personal CAD advice to members who call and ask.)

60. Men may wear earrings (though not yet at services) and probably the apostles did. (PGR, 1/22/91 and J. Tkach Jr. at Reg. Conf. 8/92.)

61. Proper hair length can't really be determined for men or women (PCD letters) and PT illustrations show David praying, Daniel in the lion's den, the prodigal son, Jesus Christ and the apostles on the telecast all as long-haired men.

62. Members may attend services while overcoming smoking.

63. Reciting the Lord's Prayer is not vain repetition. (PT, 1/93, Q&A.)
64. Position when praying makes no difference. Being on the knees is not important. (WN, B. Schnippert.)
65. New people are to be allowed to attend no matter how badly they dress (and members are allowed to be more lax as well).
66. We take no real position on the 144,000.
67. Prophetic charts are to be avoided.
68. The Beast [is] racism. (11/92 G. Albrecht sermon and M. Feazel sermon sent to ministers.)
69. The Bible is only 20% prophecy at the most (D. Blackwell, 1/93, "Prediction Addiction" sermon) when most all commentaries and Mr. Armstrong knew it was over one third prophecy.
70. Matt. 24:4-5 now refers primarily to strange people who call themselves Christ or to political demagogues rather than to false prophets who come in Christ's name. ("Will Christ Return?", D. Hulme.)
71. The woman astride the Beast is now merely something to be revealed in the future. She is referred to as "Babylon." ("Babylon-Past, Present and Future," p. 15.)
72. Spiritual Babylon is not here yet. People will only have to come out of it when it arrives. ("Babylon-Past, Present and Future," p. 21.)
73. The WCG now keeps "New Testament" not "Old Testament" feasts. The new meanings of each feast day all essentially honor or celebrate Christ in some fashion. J. Tkach Jr. called the holy days "nice window dressing" in the Philippines and Australia in ministerial conferences.
74. Col. 2:16 now has a completely new explanation softening the importance of the holy days. ("God's Festivals and Holy Days," pp. 20-21.)
75. The Azazel goat of Lev. 16 may be symbolic of Christ instead of Satan.
76. Instead of the Father, Jesus Christ is the most important subject in the Bible. (PGR, 4/20/93, p. 8, M. Fezell.)
77. At Christmas "There is nothing wrong with beautiful music, with happy family gatherings, with feasting, rejoicing and even appropriate festive decorations and treats for children..." ("Christmas-the Untold Story," p. 19.)
78. A Christmas nativity scene (Youth 92, 11-12/92) and pictures of Christ, angels, Mary, Holy Spirit like a dove, church buildings with steeples, etc. are all increasingly common. The new PCD letter on pictures and images states that worshipping, not making, these things is what's wrong. It should be noted that this point plus the cross, reciting the Lord's prayer, etc. are natural fruits that spring from those who stop worshipping God in Truth. Such people eventually stop worshipping God in Spirit as well. (John 4:23-24!)

79. The new Passover ceremony states that the bread represents the Church and not just Christ's physical body. The blessing asked over it is to reflect this at the Passover service.
80. The term "body of Christ" is merely a metaphor. (PT, 5-6/93, p.17.)
81. Jonah's sign is now primarily his ministry. (PT, 2/93, p. 23.)
82. Christ was now "about three days" in the grave. (PT, 5-6/93, p.8.)
83. Christ was resurrected bodily (physically), not as a Spirit being. (D. Hulme, M. Feazell statements at Evangelical Conf. in Deerfield, Illinois.) [Editor: On this point, Pack's recollection of Hulme's comment differs from that of others who were at the conference.]
84. "It is of no consequence whether one eats unleavened bread every day during the Festival of Unleavened Bread." (PGR, 4/21/92, Personal.)
85. Easter is now called a "religious day venerated by the Christian world picturing miracles important to Christianity." It is lumped [together] with Pentecost. The "Christian Easter season continues to Pentecost." (PT, 5- 6/93, p. 7.)
86. [The years] 30 and 33 A.D. have now (apparently) been adopted [as dates] for the crucifixion because they both have Friday Passovers. (PT, 11-12/92 [?]; "Reviews You Can Use," R. Kelly.)
87. The Old Testament Passover was the 15th of Nisan, not the 14th, after all.
88. Leaven is not a type of sin (per three HQ sermons sent to ministers - B. Schnippert, V. Kubik, and one other.)
89. Christ's body and blood both represent spiritual forgiveness. (Healing booklet [probably "The Plain Truth About Healing"-ed].)
90. Healing has been largely exchanged for medical science.
91. There is no physical sin.
92. One can be anointed for emotional turmoil. (PGR, 1/22/93, Q&A.)
93. Blood transfusions are entirely personal matters. The "life is in the blood" has no real bearing on this point. (PCD letter and healing booklet.)
94. Olive oil not only represents the Holy Spirit, but [it] is now also symbolic of medicine and concern of the Church during anointing. "An anointing is, when properly understood, an encouragement to seek medical help." (Healing booklet, p. 49.)
95. Treatments like chemotherapy are just as natural as vitamin C because natural means physical and both are physical. (Healing booklet, pp. 52-53.)
96. New Testament miracles were to prove Christ was the Messiah and are not to accompany preaching the Gospel today because people can now read about it in the New Testament. God didn't want a large church today and miracles would have brought that. (WN, 3/23/87.)

97. Laws are "contravened," not broken. (Healing booklet, p. 58 and WN, 3/27/87, p.3.)
98. Home birthing is not as good as a hospital [delivery].
99. "Disease and suffering (such as AIDS) are not punishments that come from a God of love and mercy." (PT, 11-12/92, "Letters to the Editor", p. 2.)
100. Disease is not a product of cause and effect; it is a built-in trial of life. (Healing booklet, pp. 5, 14.)
101. Hybrid vegetables are improved and enhanced products. (PT, 1/90, p. 27.)
102. One cannot increase the amount of the Holy Spirit one has. You either have it or not. (PT, 5-6/93, Q&A.)
103. The Work being blessed with growth as fruit is now formally disconnected from pleasing God (WN, 4/27/93, pp. 5-6). This standard, which was always Mr. Armstrong's, "can even be a form of superstition" (said by Pastor General [Tkach]). Mr. Armstrong's statements about 30% growth for 35 years have been repudiated by studying the wrong 35 years.
104. Mr. Armstrong used a "health-wealth gospel" hype approach to attract people.
105. Ukrainian charismatics are now deemed converted.
106. Women may write, teach, quote scripture and be interviewer/presenters [on WCG telecasts].
107. Women may direct choirs and be department heads.
108. The new marriage ceremony deletes the wife's vow to submit (and is very weak and Protestant in tone).
109. Accreditation for Ambassador College and worldly theology degrees are now deemed necessary and of value. This is because the Church had an "anti-education bias" during Mr. Armstrong's leadership. (WN, 4/3/89, p. 7.)
110. The existence of God cannot be scientifically proven but must be accepted on faith. ("God Is..." booklet.)
111. Unlike what Mr. Armstrong said, we shouldn't need proofs of fulfilled prophecy to believe the Bible is true. (WN, 8/19/91, Personal.)
112. Increasingly, commentaries seem to be the final source of truth in all matters.
113. Prov. 22:6 means train up your child in a vocation. (PT, 12/92.)
114. Various occupations (that can pay highly) may be chosen seemingly without worrying any longer whether they are right to do. (General advice.)

115. The Sabbath does not have to be kept for salvation. (PCD, D. Hunsberger, personal response to inquiry; J. Tkach Jr. in private letters.) Some Sunday-keepers, who WCG now believes may have God's Spirit, might never be led to the Sabbath. (Same sources.)

116. The Quartodecimans were Sunday keepers. ("Easter Is Pagan.")

117. Sunday keeping is not the mark of the Beast. (M. Snyder, Detroit WMUZ radio interview, 12/13/91.)

118. The Sabbath begins at dark, not sunset.

119. Local church bulletin boards may advertise homes for rent or for sale on the Sabbath. (PGR, 1/22/93, Q&A.)

120. Services may be skipped if one is "too tired to come." (Pastor General's taped sermon, summer/92.) Compare this to Heb. 10:23-26 in end-time context.

121. Christians need not attend services every Sabbath. (D. Blackwell sermon in Akron, 4/17/93.)

122. Make-up is being used-with no enforced guidelines.

123. Birthday parties and celebrations have replaced birthday "recognitions."

124. The WCG is now a "Christian denomination"! - a term Mr. Armstrong utterly denied and condemned. (GN, 10-11/83, p. 22.)

125. Genesis tells us all we can know or say about Nimrod. We should not use "anti-Catholic polemics" like The Two Babylons, or Babylon Mystery Religion. (WN, 3/20/89.)

126. The lesson of Job was not self-righteousness. It was that God is always worthy of unconditional love by humans. (PT, 10/92, "The Trial of Job," P. Kroll.)

127. The symbol of a fish as used for centuries "by Christians" is okay as long as we don't get carried away. This form of idolatry is not really wrong. (PT, 10/92, p. 20.)

128. Polygamy was not a sin and would be okay if it was a custom of our time. (PGR several years ago. An evangelist-professor in Texas has also openly stated this.)

129. PCD letter L57, debunking God's 7000-year plan, states modern forms of human life have been on earth long before 6000 years ago.

130. Geological strata were not a result of a flood but of stages of creation laid down by God. (Refresher [course for WCG ministers], late 1980s.)

131. Prehistoric people may have been created by Satan.

132. Adam and Eve are metaphors, not real people.

133. The two trees are metaphors, not real and not literal.

134. The Garden of Eden is a metaphor.
135. Cain and Able of Eden is a metaphor.
136. Noah's flood was local, not worldwide. (J. Tkach Jr. to a field minister in personal letter.)
137. The Tower of Babel is a metaphor.
138. The languages weren't divided at Babel. There were foreign languages before that time. ("Babylon - Past, Present and Future," p. 5.)
139. There were no seven literal days of creation. This was also a metaphor.
140. Eve did not carry the seed of all races within her as previously taught. (PGR, 1990.)

Church Government has been changed in a variety of ways:

141. When Mr. Armstrong held the office of Apostle "the term definitely did not connote an apostolic function in the Church that is equivalent to that of the original Apostles." (PGR, 3/24/92, Personal.) [Editor: Mr. Pack is correctly alluding to the fact that while HWA lived the WCG taught that Armstrong's title was considered equivalent.]

142. Almost all the Pastor General's material for Personals, letters to Co-Workers, sermons, speeches, PGRs, etc. are ghost-written. By contrast, Mr. Armstrong wrote almost all of his material himself.

143. The Systematic Theology Project (STP) has been officially reinstated along with the "Doctrinal Team." Mr. Armstrong strongly denounced both.

144. The Advisory Council of Elders almost never meets and has no real voice when it does.

145. Members may attend any congregation of the WCG that they wish, though very few are aware of this policy.

146. The very Protestant NIV is now the recommended first Bible of choice. (PT, 5-6/93, p. 26.)

147. All WCG literature is full of Protestant terms and buzz words. (i.e., "spiritual environmentalist," "kingdom support system," and many others.)

148. Virtually all reference to Biblically important numbers (3, 7, 12, 19, 40, 360, 1260) have been deleted.

149. Adopting children and foster parenting are no longer discouraged. (WN, recent feature article.)

150. Children now have a "valid reason" to leave the Church if they disagree with it. (PT, 1/93, p. 11.)

151. Masturbation, is not really wrong - it is the fantasizing that accompanies it that should be stopped. (PCD letter.)

152. We are no longer called now to primarily do the Work. (Said commonly several years ago.)

153. Of the "Seven Keys to Understanding the Bible" reprint, three [keys] have been rejected and the other four altered. This reprint (written 40 years ago) is, of course, now gone. Note: since Mr. Armstrong said these [keys] were vital to understanding the Bible, is it any wonder WCG leaders no longer understand the Bible?

154. Persecution is now an embarrassment to be avoided. (Recent R. Kelly "God Is..." sermon and recent Mr. Tkach video sermon sent to all churches.)

* Dr. Hoeh said in his 1/92 sermon about the then new "Statement of Beliefs" booklet: the "scripture stands above a Pastor General. The Pastor General does not stand above scripture."

Policy Changes

1. The Good News was killed.

2. The Newsstand Program was killed.

3. The toll-free phone number was killed.
4. The 32-lesson Bible Correspondence Course was killed.
5. Mr. Armstrong's literature is all removed along with his by-line. Only a few of his titles still exist but the contents are completely different.
6. Many of the most doctrinally sound evangelists and senior ministers have been demoted, retired, fired, or transferred far away.
7. European television has been killed along with [broadcasting to] some other areas of the world.
8. All international financial support has been shut off.
9. United States television stations have decreased to less than half of the total at Mr. Armstrong's death.
10. Local Church Bible studies have been deemphasized and can be cancelled at any local pastor's discretion.
11. The WCG now advertises local Church addresses on the telecast.
12. Quoting Protestant ministerial journals and secular experts now fills all WCG literature and telecasts.
13. Ministers' wives may once again work and even do it fulltime.
14. All publications are to reflect sexual and political correctness. Terms such as man, mankind, manhood, spokesman, chairman, forefathers, etc. are now to be humanity, people, human beings, humankind, adulthood, spokesperson, chairperson, forerunner, ancestors, etc., etc. (U.S. Reg. Conf. handout, 8/92, G. Albrecht.)
15. Brethren are told they can "believe anything, just stay in the Church and don't talk about it to others."
16. The blessing of children is now to be done privately. (PGR, Fall/92.)
17. Baptisms are now to be done privately. (PGR, Fall/92.)
18. Sermonettes are now to be directed to youth.
19. A new Passover ceremony was sent [to the field ministry] this year. (Uses NIV.)
20. A new Baptism ceremony is planned. (PGR announcement, 2/17/93.)
21. A new Funeral ceremony is planned. (PGR announcement, 2/17/93.)
22. A new hymnal is coming and will include many "old favorites" - to be received by Feast time. (PGR announcement, 2/17/93.)

23. Ambassador College Pasadena was closed and combined with Big Sandy, increasing enrollment from 500 to 1200 - both contrary to Mr. Armstrong's instructions before he died.

24. Intercollegiate sports have been reinstated at Ambassador College after Mr. Armstrong permanently banned them [because he viewed such programs] as participating with the world.

25. Money, no longer faith, now determines which doors the Church walks through - could this be why the open door set before Philadelphia has obviously closed in so many ways?

26. A new retirement policy and terms denies nearly all rights to retirees.

27. Local sermon tapes may not leave that area or be kept longer than one year.

28. All doctrine is on the table. (M. Snyder radio interview.)

Editor: As David Pack indicated above, the list of WCG doctrinal changes seems to grow almost daily. As the following article by Warren Carlson shows, many major doctrinal changes are creeping into the WCG via the Plain Truth magazine:

Is This Really the Plain Truth?

Holy obfuscation, Batman! Say it isn't so, Joe. Is the WCG really going down the evolution trail? Were Christ's parables made to be understood by all, even "the World"? Was the parable of Lazarus and the rich man really just a reflection of Egyptian folklore? After reading some muddled July 1993 Plain Truth articles, this longtime PT reader (since 1961) and former WCG member (10 years) has cause to pause at the rapid pace of drastic change in the WCG led by that Protestant Roader, Joe Tkach. Consider the following points gleaned from that July issue:

Joe Tkach leads off on page one with his opening "Personal" column and concludes that: "The one true God - The Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit - created all that is." Holy rampant paganism! Isn't this the Trinity doctrine, scorned so long by HWA? And what's that clickety-clickety-click I hear in the distance? The sound of Herbert Armstrong spinning rapidly in his grave?

In a page five sidebar entitled "Were Parables Used to Hide the Truth?", one would be led to believe that HWA and the WCG's former teaching that Christ's parables were NOT intended for the general public has been thrown overboard, jettisoned along with a growing host of former long-held WCG beliefs. The author writes: "Is the kingdom of God a secret, given only to a chosen few?" HWA certainly believed so, and so did WCG members. The sidebar continues: "Did Jesus tell his parables, which seem so simple, so accessible and so timeless, to keep outsiders from grasping the truth?" Yessir, that's what HWA taught. Only the elect, meaning WCG members of course, get to understand the truth in this age- at least that's what was taught in ancient times. There's that sound again. (Clickety- clickety-clickety-click.) HWA must be spinning even faster in his grave.

In an article written by Norman Shoaf, "What Jesus' Parables Reveal" (July PT, p. 4), we read the following regarding the parable of Lazarus and the rich man: "It's hard to wrench from this parable exact details about the afterlife. Jesus was drawing on images from Jewish and Egyptian folklore, which his listeners would have realized." Holy hoppin' heresy! Didn't HWA always teach, and wasn't there a WCG booklet written by HWA which explained in detail, that the story of Lazarus and the rich man was a lesson setting out the fate of the unbelievers who were to be burned up in the final Gehenna fire? Egyptian folklore?? (Clickety-clickety-clickety-click - the sound is getting louder and faster.)

John Halford's article "Religion and Science-Bridging the Gap" (July PT, p. 14) is a lengthy statement of what must be the new thinking in the higher circles of the WCG regarding evolution, as the following excerpts make clear: "Genesis 1 and 2 further describe God forming the earth and the life-forms on it in six days of creative activity. Most scientists believe the planet's features were molded by natural forces while life developed gradually, from simple to complex organisms, including human beings. Could both of these apparently contradictory concepts be two ways of looking at the same thing? Perhaps they can." Holy jumpin' secular humanism! The WCG has thrown Adam and Eve on the scrap heap and embraced apes and evolution! But wait-there's more.

Says Mr. Halford: "Opponents of evolution often seize on the fact that it is 'only a theory.' But to do this is to misunderstand the scientific method." Oh? HWA in a legion of articles heaped scorn on what he repeatedly emphasized was a theory of evolution, which he went to great lengths to denounce. Again it appears that the old-time HWA religion has been given a mighty shove off the starboard side into the heaving seas. And as a caper, just where did Halford go for higher religious edification concerning science and faith? To an Anglican priest! - a minister of what used to be called a daughter church of the Great Whore of Babylon. And why is an Anglican priest being quoted about faith on the pages of the PT? Yipes! (Clickety-clickety-click. There's that sound again.)

And I didn't even mention what the Questions section had to say about the "7,000-year plan of God," another old-time WCG teaching given the swift kick out of Pasadena. 7,000 years? Under the new thinking, it could be 10,000 or 100,000 years. (Ciickety-clickety-click. No rest for the weary, Herb.)

After reading the July Plain Truth, it is obvious that membership in the National Council of Churches is not far off for the WCG. In fact, I would guess that it is only a matter of time - and a short time at that - before a 50-foot Christmas tree appears at Yuletide in front of the "House for God" in Pasadena and an Easter egg hunt is held on the grounds of the former AC campus, with photos appearing in the Worldwide News of a beaming Joe Tkach patting the head of a smiling youngster who managed to garner the most eggs. Don't laugh. It won't be long. (Clickety-clickety-click.)

Editor: Shortly after we received the above article, Mr. Carlson sent us the following:

I know many must be confused by the changes going on in the WCG. I'm tempted to call some members who were friends while I was in the WCG, but I know my attempts would be futile. When you leave the WCG it's Joe Stalin time - you're a nonperson, obliterated from the pages of history, erased from the memory banks, zapped and evaporated.

I just started getting the PT again starting with the July issue after a couple of years absence from their subscription list. I was startled by the changes. Even the pictures of Joe Tkach change from issue to issue - one issue has him posing sans jacket on Wall Street, Gordon Gockoesque suspenders. The next month we see him smiling at the camera holding for dear life onto what appears to be a Bible. For all I know, it could be the Koran, or the Kama Sutra. Maybe even the Book of Mormon. Or the latest Robert Ludlum potboiler.

There were some more zingers in the September PT. The Kingdom of God is here already. I didn't know this. And the millennium "may or may not equal 1,000 years." I also noted the "liberal" use of jargon straight from the seminaries - what Gerald Waterhouse called "theological cemeteries" - words such as Amillennialism, Premillennialism, Dispensationalism, etc. There's that sound again.

Sardis Is No Longer Sardis

One of the more remarkable developments in Tkachism of late has been the WCG's recent overtures toward the Church of God (Seventh Day) churches (CG7). During his lifetime, HWA always referred to the CG7 group - out of which he came - as "Sardis" because, he claimed, they were "spiritually dead." Now, however, with HWA and his church eras doctrine officially dead, the Tkachs have decided that the CG7 folks are not so bad, after all.

Sources within CG7 have told us that in the spring a number of top WCG leaders went to Denver to meet with Calvin Burrell, the president of the Denver-based branch of CG7:

The WCG requested the visit because they wanted to get a better understanding of the CG7D's organizational structure (i.e., they vote their council and ministers into office). We heard that at the visit the WCG reps asked several questions about the organizational structure and offered an apology for past treatment and for calling them Sardis, the dead church. Calvin Burrell's questions were more of a doctrinal nature. He was told that the WCG is coming closer to CG7D's teachings.

Apparently, the above meeting led to an invitation for the WCG reps to attend CG7's biennial general conference in early summer. Joseph Tkach Jr. along with Victor Kubik, Michael Feazell, and Greg Albrecht actually attended and were well received. According to sources in both the WCG and CG7, the developing ties are being encouraged by both denominations. In explaining the developing ties to the WCG's ministry, Tkach Jr. wrote to his field ministers:

Becoming acquainted with the local pastor (if any) of the Church of God (Seventh Day) in your area is an important proactive approach that may have helpful benefits in the future. At the conference, we met many of their church pastors who expressed interest in meeting our church pastors in order to build a friendship rather than maintain barriers of exclusivity.

There are groups with which we would not desire to fellowship because of their disfellowshipped status and their divisive teachings. However, the Church of God (Seventh Day) is not one of those groups. (Pastor General's Report, 7/27/93, p. 6.)

Notice that the WCG is now willing to have fellowship with a church against which HWA rebelled, but it will not have fellowship with churches that claim a doctrinal allegiance to HWA!

Global Increases, International Decreases

In June, we reported on the founding of the Global Church of God (CGC) by former WCG evangelist Rod Meredith. In the few months since then, Meredith's organization has grown at a rapid clip taking hundreds of members from Worldwide (now including WCG ministers Ben Faulkner, William Swanson, and John Ogwyn who brought many of his former Baton Rouge and Lafayette, Louisiana congregation members with him), has expanded its radio broadcast to 16 major markets, has just put out the first edition of its full-color The World Ahead magazine, and is reported to have church revenues already rivaling those of the other major WCG offshoots.

In contrast to CGC, however, WCG spinoff Church of God, International (CGI), which is headed by Garner Ted Armstrong, recently had some important defections. Les Pope, who was a CGI minister and board member until February 24, has now formed the Fellowship Church of God (2019 Moore St., Oklahoma City, OK 73141). Pope has told friends that while he does not disagree with CGI's basic theology, he has had misgivings about many CGI policies and practices. For instance, he complains that CGI does not want its members and ministers to question anything, that ministerial conferences are just lectures to subordinates with no give-and-take, that CGI leaders Garner Ted Armstrong and Ronald Dart give themselves salaries that are bigger than Billy Graham's, and that Garner Ted Armstrong has become obsessed with notions of building a huge church empire. (Is another Armstrong "Edifice Complex" rearing up again? Oh NO!) Besides pastoring a congregation, Pope plans to start his own religious broadcast. To counter Pope's "rebellion," CGI briefly dispatched Ron Dart to Oklahoma City to round up local CGI supporters and keep them in the CGI corral.

Another recent CGI defector is author John Tuit (The Truth Shall Make You Free) who, just after we went to press with our last edition, sent us a copy of a resignation letter he wrote to CGI president Garner Ted Armstrong. It provides a number of insights into what is going on in CGI:

Dear Ted:

The recent edicts from your office have given Paula and me cause for concern. Since around 1985, the CGI seemed to be proceeding in a right way.

Now, the new rules for field churches remind me of the early days, when, in the original 1979 [CGI] constitution and by-laws, you were proclaimed Chairman in perpetuity. Do you remember the uproar over that? You should!

So now we have a new list of ranks, deacons who aren't allowed to anoint (what about Stephen and Philip?), administrators (we call them spies here in NC), speaking credential requirements, and a prohibition against unpaid ministers going more than 100 miles to serve a congregation. All the preliminaries to a total central control as soon as you are ready to place your new Academy graduates, loyal to you, in place. Then, when questions are raised, you say the rules don't really mean what they say, as Ron Dart wrote in his letter to the Statesville Church. Anything to pacify us for the moment, until you are ready to tighten the screws another turn.

And, the money. Always the most important concern, it seems. You claim authority over local church finances, try to tell us that Holy Day offerings must be sent to Tyler, demand local financial reports and complain about congregations that are saving toward a down payment on a building.

Yet, I haven't seen a financial report from Tyler since 1979. Of course, you have never published the schedule of salaries, allowances and benefits of the staff at Tyler, as you should. Are you fearful of the reaction from the struggling members who support you? Your statement in 1978 that the CGI would be squeaky clean has been relegated to the junk heap.

In addition to these problems, you have reverted back to your early 1980's practice of ridicule of others, including your own father. And, because you were offended by someone who didn't practice good personal hygiene, you launched an attack on all men who don't dress in a suit and tie. This doesn't apply to me, except in mid-summer, so I don't have a personal stake in your comments. However, you have offended many who either can't afford such clothes, or by local custom just don't dress that way.

As I have seen these developments over the recent months, it has become evident that you are just playing church, or worse, running a religious business, and want control, with the final concern being MONEY.

You don't seem to get it. If you would just preach the Gospel, stop trying to build a central headquarters, stop trying to quench the working of the Holy Spirit among God's people, you would be blessed in such service. I spoke on this recently, and enclose my sermonette notes for your study.

Rather than be drawn into another round of "church sandbox," Paula and I have decided to withdraw our membership, effective immediately, from The Church of God, International, of Tyler, Texas. We will, of course, remain members of The Statesville Church of God, International, an independently organized congregation, under the laws of North Carolina. And, most importantly, we remain members of The Church of God, headquartered in Heaven, under the rule of Jesus Christ. It is sad that there are those who, while members and officials in physical organizations called the Church of God, may, by their actions, be threatened with loss of the spiritual membership, if it hasn't already happened, assuming that it ever existed in the first place.

Sincerely,
John Tuit

Book Review:

Daughter of Babylon - The True History of the Worldwide Church of God by Bruce Renehan. Daughter of Babylon, P.O. Box 1551, Tehachapi, CA 93561; 203 pages plus documentary appendixes, spiral-bound first edition $15 plus $3 postage.

There is perhaps no teaching more perplexing to Worldwide Church of God outsiders than the WCG's "one true church" doctrine. Now it appears that at least one key insider is equally perplexed by this cherished doctrine's spiritually paralyzing side effect.

Recently, Pastor General and Apostle Joseph W. Tkach Sr., who appears to want the doctrine modified somewhat, voiced his own exasperation with the rigid closed-mindedness of his Worldwide flock. In his efforts to unravel myths and errors from Armstrong doctrine (a.k.a. "God's Truth"), "Master Weaver" Tkach seems truly bewildered by the group's unshakable, unyielding fixation on Armstrong's faulty rendition of "the faith once delivered."

As white-knuckled true believers cling tenaciously to what they heard "from the beginning" from Armstrong (not to be confused with the true gospel message first century Christians heard from the beginning), Tkach seems resigned to the fact that he will just have to "cut them loose."

Truly there is none so blind, Tkach chides, as one who will not look.

Author Bruce Renehan dares to take that look, examining the dynamic power which inhibits the Worldwider's challenge of his belief system - Herbert W. Armstrong's very own "one true church doctrine." In his book Daughter of Babylon - The True History of the Worldwide Church of God, the former Armstrong loyalist confronts the Worldwider's myopic world view and puts the church's historical documentation to the acid test.

Can the Worldwide Church of God, Renehan asks, really prove it is the "one true church" - the authentic descendant of the primitive first century church founded by Jesus Christ? Was Herbert W. Armstrong, as Worldwide historians have long contended, merely one Apostle in a long apostolic succession leading back through time to the original twelve? Or did Worldwide historians, trusted men of the cloth, reconstruct the entire garment of church history - stitching threads of truth to the colorful fabric of fiction - in an effort to cloak Armstrong's "government from the top down" in the wrap of ecclesiastical credibility? Renehan exposes the true historical and theological roots of the Armstrong movement and the false premises upon which Armstrong's "one true church" doctrine is based.

Daughter of Babylon is highly recommended for Worldwidiers - past, present, and prospective. Those who face the task of weeding through the "one true church" mythological maze will find Daughter of Babylon truly enlightening. Some, in fact, may even find themselves released finally (with a clear, educated conscience) from any continuing, uneasy allegiance to Armstrong's theology.

Whitaker On the Three Tithes

Editor: With the WCG changing so many of its doctrines, some wonder if it will now get around to changing its triple tithing doctrine. During the past year David C. Whitaker of Enid, Oklahoma has submitted a number of rather intriguing theological papers to AR. While we do not have the means to publish all of them, we suspect many of our readers will find his comments on the WCG's tithing doctrine thought provoking.

Over the years, many of us have become painfully aware of the various abuses in the applied practice of "tithing" as enjoined by the Worldwide Church of God and related groups which claim to obey the Scriptural laws for the First, Second, and Third Tithes.

Within the WCG, the teaching has been to send the First Tithe to the WCG's headquarters in Pasadena, for members to withhold an additional 10% of their total gross income to use in keeping the annual Festivals, and every third and sixth year in a seven-year calendar cycle for members to withhold and send a yet additional 10% to headquarters as a "third tithe" to be distributed among widows and poor within the WCG. This means baptized WCG members have been required to withhold up to 30% of their annual gross income every two years out of seven, and withhold 20% of their total gross income during all other years. [Note that these percentages are for "tithes" only; they do not include the separate "freewill offerings," mandatory holy day offerings, special offerings, building fund donations, loans, etc. that the WCG encourages - ed.]

Many times during the Third Tithe years, WCG members have had to unduly "sacrifice" - not be blessed! - in order to obey and fulfill the WCG's demands regarding money. This has taken various forms: Sometimes families and their children have maintained inferior nutrition levels; badly needed home repairs have gone undone (while their ministers have lived in well-kept homes); medical needs for family members frequently have gone unattended; and even needed dental repairs and cleanings have often had to be put off. Some of the ways WCG children have been neglected during "third tithe years" would be viewed as statutory child neglect or abuse in some states.

I cannot help but be reminded of Jesus' description of the ancient apostate Jerusalem Pharisees who had forsaken the traditions (Hebrew Kabbalat) from the Prophets in order to construct their own unethical interpretations of Torah administration: "And they prepare heavy and oppressive burdens for other men's shoulders, but they will not remove them with their finger" (Matthew 23:4 from the Greek text). In reading the unpointed Torah Scrolls in use at that time, the human "finger" was always used as a pointer to keep the place in the text of the Scroll while reading and when passing the Scroll from man to man or from rabbi to disciple. Jesus was here saying that these corrupt Pharisees possessed the accurate knowledge about Torah and could have used their "finger" to point from the Torah Scrolls the proper and intended teachings regarding the practice of Scriptural Law so as to produce great blessings upon all those who obeyed. Rather, these unethical Pharisees refused to use their "finger" on the Torah Scrolls to point out the truth about the proper application of the Law to the people - these Pharisees refused to use their individual and collective "finger" to "remove" the misinterpretations and malpractices of the Torah which they, and the Jerusalem Elders, had created at variance with the Kabbalah and Oral Torah anciently promoted by Ezra from the Prophets.

On a Gentile level, the WCG ministry is guilty of this same kind of refusal and sacrilege - dabbling around with Divine Laws which they don't properly understand. The WCG ministry has never taken the time and or made the effort to search Judaic history to discover the proper manner of understanding the Scriptures pertaining to the Second Tithe and the Third Tithe! As a result, many times the WCG manner of keeping the Second and Third Tithe laws has generated hardships and curses rather than blessings and happiness.

In ancient Israel, the Second and Third Tithes were considered to be what we today would call "declensional tithes" based upon the tithing formula described by the Hebrew words ma'aser min ha-ma'aser ("tenth from the tithe") mentioned in Numbers 18:26. This ma'aser min ha-ma'aser applied to the special tithe offered by the Levites from the main national Tithe they received, and also applied to the method of determining the amounts for the Second and Third Tithes. In fact, the Hebrew word for "second" (as in Second Tithe) is sheniy which means "double" in the sense of "secondary" or "subsidiary." The Second Tithe was understood to be a "juxtapositional tithe" or "a tithe accompanying along beside" in relation to the main national Tithe.

Rabbi Dan Cohn-Sherbok explains:

The 'first tithe' (Numbers 18:24-26) was given to the Levites after the heave offering ('terumah') - (10% of 10%) - for the priests had been separated from it.... The 'second tithe' (Leviticus 27:30-31; Deuteronomy 14:22-6) was a tenth part of the first tithe, and was consumed by the owner himself in Jerusalem; it applied in the first, second, fourth, and fifth years in the Sabbatical cycle, and is dealt with in the tractate Maasar Sheni ("Second Tithe") in the Mishna. The 'poor tithe' (Deut. 14:28-9; 26:12) was calculated in the same way as the second tithe and was paid in the third and sixth year of the Sabbatical cycle; it was given to the poor.... The Levites also paid a tithe (10% of 10%) from what they received (Numbers 18:26), in the form of an offering to God. (The Blackwell Dictionary of Judaica, p. 543, Entry: "Tithe"; c1992, Blackwell Publishers: Oxford, England.)

At no time in the history of ancient Israel or in the history of the Jewish religion did God require the people to withhold in excess of the mandated 10% total in tithes! Since the First Tithe (10%) also included the amounts of the Second and Third Tithes (10% of 10% each) according to the specified years within a Sabbatical (seven-year) cycle, anything given as additional was considered as an "offering," and anything additionally demanded by the king was defined as a "tax."

Why should any Christian church impose a tax burden on its own members above and beyond the stated intent and requirements of the Law? Even a good law, when substantially exaggerated beyond its original intent and purpose, can quickly become an unethical law of oppression and tyranny. And this is what has occurred in the WCG as a direct result of the anti-Judaic bias inherent within the cliquish, pro-Gentile mentality of the men positioned in the WCG's top echelons.

After becoming aware of this information about the correct method for determining the subsidiary Second and Third Tithes, will the WCG ministry choose the only moral and ethical course to pursue - changing their ways and enlightening their laymembers? Or, will the desire for money overrule any decision for spiritual improvement and performance? Rabbi Nachman of Bratslav (1772-1810 A.D.) observed in his time: "desire for money and influence is now greater than sexual desire" (Chayei Moharan 2:52, no. 25). Does Rabbi Nachman's observation apply to our present American culture also? And, if so, how strongly has the Worldwide Church of God been affected by the widespread desire for money? In this case, you be the judge.

Book Review:

The Making of a Tradition - A Criticism of Orthodox Christian Theology by Mark M. Mattison. Ministry School Publications, 3880 Jefferson SE, Wyoming, MI 49548; c1991, 142 pages, $5.95 (plus $1.50 for shipping).

In this historical survey of popular Christian doctrines, Mark Mattison contends that the teaching of the "Trinity" developed over a long period of time in conjunction with influences from Platonism and Gnosticism. Catholic catechist John A. Hardon, S.J., once remarked, "As a Christian today reviews the history of the Church in the first eight hundred years, the most striking feature of the seven general councils held during that period is their concern to safeguard the reality of the triune God." Mark Mattison explores the events and forces which served to make the Trinity dogma so important to the developing Catholic Church, including the political usage of the Trinity teaching as an instrument to combat the doctrines of Arius of Alexandria. Also, following the scholarly position of German historian and philologist R. Reitzenstein's 1921 work, Das iranische Erlösungsmysterium, Mark Mattison describes how the grassroots pre-Christian Mystery Cult system developed into the early movement called "Christian Gnosticism," and contributed extensively to Catholic religion. With so many forces at work from outside the Holy Land in which Christianity originated, Jesus Christ became perceived "as a mysterious hybrid of various substances." In addition to explaining the pagan theological and extra-biblical influences which occasioned the formation of the Trinity concept in early Catholicism, Mark Mattison calls for a return to the true worship of the One God of Monotheism which Jesus and the original New Testament Church understood. This epochal book, The Making of a Tradition, should be required reading for all current and former Worldwide Church of God members who seek a better understanding of the Trinity teaching in relation to the doctrinal changes occurring within the WCG organization today.

Gary Scultz Leads Secret Saucer Base Expeditions

Not everyone who leaves the WCG finds himself absorbed in the activities of WCG spinoff groups. Some move on to more interesting pursuits. A good example is Gary Scultz, a former WCG member and Foundation for Biblical Research board member who has also been a research scientist working on projects relating to air pollution abatement and primary energy technologies. While still maintaining a keen interest in biblical studies, in recent years Schultz has focused much of his attention on the UFO phenomenon.

While, for many people the idea of UFOs - and the related phenomenon of "alien abductions" - is the stuff of tabloid headlines at best, in recent years, more and more educated people have begun to view the subject as something to be taken seriously. Not only are there hundreds of books on the market that purport to give an explanation for UFO sightings and claimed "abductions," but there are whole magazines devoted to the idea of beings visiting our planet from other galaxies or dimensions. One such magazine, for example, is the MUFON UFO Journal, 103 Old Towne Road, Seguin, TX 78155. And in recent years a number of respected academics have produced books dealing with the UFO and abduction phenomena. One such book is Secret Life - Firsthand Accounts of UFO Abductions published by Simon & Schuster. The author of that work is David M. Jacobs, Ph.D., an associate professor at Temple University.

Not only are there scholars who take seriously the possibility that aliens may be visiting our planet, many everyday Americans feel likewise. Besides the millions who claim to have seen a nonterrestrial craft, about one in every 50 adult Americans may have had some type of UFO abduction experience (based on a poll conducted by the Roper organization - Los Angeles Times, 5/20/92, p. E1). There are even support groups for those who are trying to understand and psychologically cope with their abduction experiences (Los Angeles Times, 3/8/93, p. B1), and one insurance company actually offers UFO abduction insurance (Los Angeles Times, 8/19/93, p. B2).

Until a few years ago, the subject of UFOs was not one that greatly interested Gary Schultz. But in late 1989, Schultz heard ufologist Bill Cooper in a radio interview and later at a lecture. Cooper challenged the skeptical to see "the craft" for themselves by going out to "Area 51" near Nellis Air Force Range in Nevada. Taking up the challenge, Schultz and his wife Pearl went out to the location in early 1990. On their first visit to the area, they saw nothing unusual. But on a second visit, they not only made six separate UFO sightings, but they were able to photograph some of the UFOs in flight. Since then, Scultz has researched the UFO question extensively and has taken others out to "Area 51" and adjacent "S-4" near the government's nuclear test site in Nevada and to another UFO "hot spot" near Tehachapi, California in the hope of having a "close encounter" with UFOs. So many have wanted to see the saucers, in fact, that with an associate named Norio Hayakawa, Schultz has started a tour and lecture organization called Secret Saucer Base Expeditions.

Now, before anyone thinks that Schultz is not just an eccentric, but is a charlatan besides, a few points need to be mentioned. Those of us who've known Schultz over the years are convinced that he is both sincere and not one who is out to defraud the public. Furthermore, many of those he has guided to the desert sites have seen some thing very unusual. Not only are Schultz's photographs quite authentic (there is no hint that they were created by any kind of trick photography techniques), a fair number of others have also taken both still photographs and videos of the craft. Among those who Schultz has guided to the desert locations have been representatives of the Los Angeles Times, The Outlook, Business Week, Omni, KROQ radio, and television stations KCOP, KTTV, and KNBC. Some TV news crews were, themselves, able to video tape the craft in flight, and those of us who have seen some of the video footage can attest that whatever it is that is flying about out there looks and maneuvers like nothing we have ever seen before.

Could the craft be some type of highly advanced spy plane? Such a theory is held by a number who point out that Schultz's tour group has encountered some resistance from government security personnel. In May of 1991, for instance, the groups' caravan was buzzed by a military CH-53 helicopter which tried to run one of the saucer watchers' cars off the road. The incident resulted in a criminal complaint being filed with the U.S. Attorney's Office in Los Angeles (Los Angeles Times, 6/16/91, p. E1).

Some who hold to the experimental spy plane theory also point to some other unusual happenings in the southern California region during the last year or two. Many living in the L.A. Basin have noticed that tremors similar to earthquakes have been hitting the area quite regularly "on schedule" (for a while, every Thursday at about 7:00 a.m.). Many earthquake-experienced citizens have wondered how any type of earthquake activity could occur with such precise regularity. But phone calls to Caltech and various government agencies resulted in the explanation that no earthquakes are being registered at those times, but that we are getting "skyquakes" of undetermined origin. According to Jim Mori, a seismologist with the United States Geological Survey, the shocks have been caused by "something that's traveling through the atmosphere at several times the speed of sound in a generally northeasterly direction." And an analyst with Jane's Defense Weekly, the respected London-based military periodical has speculated - based on Congressional records that accidentally included secret information - that the skyquakes were probably caused by a new government spy plane, dubbed "the Aurora," which supposedly can fly about 4000 miles per hour (Los Angeles Times, 4/17/92, p. B1; see also the Pasadena Weekly, 5/28-6/3/93, p. 2).

While not doubting that the government may have such a spy plane, Schultz, nevertheless, does not believe that "the Aurora" is what he has been seeing out in Nevada or at another location in the Antelope Valley north of Los Angeles (and Fred Francis, NBC's Pentagon correspondent, agrees with him). "First of all," Schultz says, "what we have seen is a craft that is completely silent. It doesn't sound or behave like any type of jet or VTOL aircraft." Furthermore, Schultz points out that the flight patterns of the craft - sudden accelerations and decelerations, zigzagging motions, and 90-degree turns - all indicate a craft of highly advanced technology with control over gravity (something unknown in the general scientific community). Based on the evidence that Schultz has in his possession, he has concluded that the UFOs he has observed are actually alien craft that the government has somehow acquired and is now using for its own clandestine purposes.

While many UFO researchers view the UFO phenomenon as being of a psychological or spiritual nature, Schultz says, "Not all alien craft and alien contacts are of the ultraterrestrial or supernatural type. Some of these experiences are with physical aliens and their craft." Schultz has developed a theory to explain this phenomenon biblically. Referring to it as "an ontological sandwich," he points out that "angels - supernatural creatures - are far superior to physical man. So one explanation of aliens would be that these are also physical creations like man, but technologically more advanced. And just as both men and angels can be either good or evil, these aliens are probably capable of being either good or evil, as well."

An interview with Schultz appears in the August issue of Omni, the science magazine, and another interview appears in the 1993 book Alien Contact (Top-Secret UFO Files Revealed) by Timothy Good (published by William Morrow Co., 1350 Avenue of the Americas, New York, NY 10019). To help clarify his views, Schultz has also produced two lecture tapes: "UFOs and the Bible" and "The Shadow Government, UFOs, the Bible, and You" ($6 each). For further information about taped lectures, tours to sighting areas, and seminars about UFOs, write to: Secret Saucer Base Expeditions, P.O. Box 599, Gardena, CA 90248 (tel. 310-393-0778).

Book Review:

Angels and Aliens: UFOs and the Mythic Imagination by Keith Thompson, Addison-Wesley Publishing Co. (One Jacob Way, Reading, MA 01867, tel. 800-457-2226), c1991, 248 pages, $19.95.

Things that go "Bump!" in the night...

I was in my booth in Booth City, Ambassador College, Texas, studying late one evening in the early 1970s when C.J. appeared breathless at my door. "UFO!" he said, and disappeared again. Of course I followed him. A handful of guys were standing between the booths, near the Wall, looking up at the sky in the direction of Gladewater. The only thing I could see was an extraordinary bright, reddish light. Someone brought binoculars and tried to see more, but they didn't make the image much clearer. The light seemed to be standing still, or else moving directly away from me so slowly that it appeared to be stationary. Then suddenly it took off at a sharp angle to the northeast and disappeared from view. The others were pretty shook up. They said that they had seen it pass right over the booths, about 1500 feet in the air. It was large and round, with a lot of red and white lights around it. And it didn't make a sound. None at all.

Among all the speculations and dogmatic assertions about "The Truth" that took place in the Worldwide Church of God, there was not a great deal of attention devoted to trying to understand, in any sort of complex way, the nature of the universe in which we live. We knew (or thought we knew) about God and about the "elect's" destiny to become virtually God. We speculated that as "Sons of God" we might be given our own solar systems or galaxies to rule someday. But the WCG was not otherwise noted for engaging in, or encouraging, metaphysical inquiry. Of the denizens of other levels of reality we knew very little save that they came in two kinds, good and bad - and that the good angels existed in order to praise God and, as God's messengers, to help us. The bad angels we tried to think about as little as possible, so as not to encourage their presence among us. But this narrow and frightened view of the universe sometimes left faithful members without answers. Any anomalous experiences that didn't involve anointing by an elder were either ignored or else attributed, with a truly inquisitorial mentality, to those cosmic bad-boys, the demons. So there was no context into which to fit this UFO sighting over the Big Sandy campus except the chilling one that perhaps a bona fide demon had just passed overhead.

In the twenty years since the night of that sighting, I have heard several people talk about their experiences with UFOs in the WCG. Many people, when they come out of that organization, try on their own to understand the significance of their UFO encounters and how the existence of such things squares with the view of the universe that they were taught in the church. Keith Thompson's book, Angels and Aliens: UFOs and the Mythic Imagination (Addison-Wesley Publishing Co., 1991), may be one of the most sound pieces of thought about the nature of UFOs available today, and a valuable guide for those ex-WCGers still looking for answers to the riddle of their own UFO experiences.

Thompson develops two lines of inquiry. On the first and most straightforward level, he presents the modern history of the UFO "myth" beginning with Kenneth Arnold's famous sighting in 1947. In this historical narrative, Thompson does not concern himself with the validity or lack thereof of any particular UFO sighting. That issue, he claims, is one of the central tenets of the UFO myth - that with enough time and money, the real truth of UFOs can eventually be discovered. His interest is not in establishing or demolishing the "nuts and bolts" reality of UFOs, but rather in tracing the historical development of the "UFO-as-idea."

One of Thompson's more interesting short asides deals with the historical precedents for the modern "age of flying saucers." Here he deals with such phenomena as the "mystery airships" seen over California in the late 1800s, the visions of medieval mystics, the report of a French archbishop who narrowly saved three men and a woman from being lynched by a mob of frantic Frenchmen because they had disembarked from a "cloudship," Constantine's famous vision at the Milvian Bridge after which he professed Christianity, and Ezekiel's report (chap. 10) of a "whirlwind out of the north" and "wheels within wheels." He speculates that Ezekiel's wheels and modern UFOs might be essentially the same phenomenon - a shape-shifting technology form that has mastered the dimensions of space-time in such a way that defies human description.

On a second and more theoretical level, Thompson analyzes the UFO myth in terms of the place it holds in "humanity's religious search." To accomplish this, he draws upon insights provided by comparative religion, depth psychology, and cultural anthropology. It is important to note that Thompson uses the word "myth" in its scholarly sense: as a sacred story whose purpose is to account for the origin of things. Myth is not something that is "not true." On the contrary, because myth functions allegorically, it is (for those who hold it) ultimately true. Myth has significance not only on its surface but also on deeper, more profound levels as well.

It is at those profound levels that Thompson discovers the religious significance of UFO's for modern human consciousness. Thompson believes that whatever "teaching" may be ascribed to UFOs is simply to remind us who have made virtual gods out of science and technology, and whose view of the universe has been thereby constricted, that human beings actually inhabit multiple worlds and take part in multiple realities. The really strange thing, according to Thompson, is not that aliens or angels might exist, but that modern Western culture has placed these dimensions of reality off-limits to serious, rational consideration. To take UFOs seriously as a modern mythico-religious phenomenon, says Thompson, is to wake up after "a long sleep of denial" (p. 228).

Angels and Aliens explores the link between technology and metaphysics in a way that is thought-provoking to those who have not had an encounter with a UFO, and comfortingly helpful to those who have - particularly those who come from the WCG and continue to suffer the pinching-off of reality that the WCG teaches. In my opinion, Thompson's book is a "must read."

Dear Mr. Trechak:

My wife and I are not regular readers of your publication, but I am hoping you might be able to help us with a problem. We are still members of the Worldwide Church of God. But there is so much confusion and tension in the church now. Many are planning to leave during the fall. We even heard that during the feast there will be demonstrations and walkouts by some ministers who are loyal to Dr. Meredith.

We are getting tired of so much church politics but we still want to keep the feast this fall. Would you know of any other religious organization that would let us attend their Feast of Tabernacles even if we have not formally left the Worldwide Church yet? We don't want to join another church, just keep the feast in a nice environment, not have to see so much politics and confusion.

-Oregon

Editor: In your part of the country, two organizations that might be of help are: Feast of Tabernacles (R. W. Hoops), 8642 Highway 128, Healdsburg, CA 95448 and Association For Christian Development (Ken Westby), 4449 South Star Lake Rd., Auburn, WA 98001.

I think that overall you folks at AR do a very fine job with your publication. But every so often I feel you are a bit naive about some of the groups you mention. Let me give you but one recent example.

In your last issue you mentioned the Watchman Fellowship group in a positive way at least three times. Aren't you aware of how prejudiced they are?

I have before me copy of their Vol. 10, No. 2 issue which contains their 1993 listing of groups they call "cults." Now, granted, they do list many crazy churches that deserve such a label. But just look at some of the others they list: John Denver, John Bradshaw, Union Life, Norman Vincent Peale, all groups that can possibly be labeled "New Age," everything related to UFOs, and even Pumsy the Dragon! I think their list reveals that not only are they prejudiced, they are a bit paranoid.

John Denver is a singer-songwriter who is so squeaky clean he is very boring at times. A cult leader? Hardly.

John Bradshaw is a psychologist (and a former professor of theology) who has helped thousands of people understand themselves better. I personally know people who were greatly helped by his programs. He encourages people to seek God and never tells people what church to join. Why label him a cult?

Union Life is a fairly mainstream Christian ministry. Norman Vincent Peale was a respected minister in a major denomination. So they may have had an occasional odd idea. A lot of us do at times. Does that make all of us - everyone except Watchman, that is - cults?

Anything that can possibly be labeled "New Age" is supposed to be cultish. Of course, they neglect to mention that the Bible, itself, not only refers to a future new age (the Millennium), but most of the ideas that so-called "new agers" are interested in - the idea of life beyond the grave, the reality of spirit, the significance of names, numerology, symbolic thinking, predestination, the interpretation of dreams, the existence of angels and evil spirits, etc.- are all ideas found in the Bible itself.

As for the Sacred Names people - well, should they be labeled a cult just because they take some Bible passages literally?

And where did Watchman come up with the notion that "belief in extraterrestrial beings who have visited Earth and provided knowledge... is always contrary to biblical truth"? From cover to cover the Bible is filled with stories about non-humanoid beings - both evil and good - that come to earth with information for humans. The latter are referred to in the Bible as "angels" (see Gen. 19:1, Lk. 1:28, etc.). I guess the folks at Watchman just never noticed.

And what about Pumsy the Dragon? Pumsy is a hand puppet that is used in schools as an entertaining way to teach young children. Do the folks at Watchman really think a hand puppet can be a cult?

Now, I know what you are going to say: Watchman is only listing those groups that fall outside of "orthodox Christianity."

I guess that is why they list not only the WCG, but most of the WCG offshoots like Dankenbring, Meredith, etc. But is it really fair to label groups as cults simply because they have some teachings that the big Protestant denominations don't have? Frankly, while the WCG and its offshoots may have problems, let's not forget that some of what HWA taught was true: Sunday worship did come from a Roman emperor, Christmas came from the Saturnalia, and there is an awful lot of rank paganism in "orthodox Christianity."

But even if you stay with Watchman's standards, i.e., that we should ostracize every group that does not toe the line as to accepted mainstream Protestant teaching, in what category does that put some of the wackos that we see on the so-called "Christian TV" stations? I was amazed that Benny Hinn did not make Watchman's list. Not did Judaism. If a cult is any religious group that doesn't adhere to "orthodox Christianity" then certainly all religious Jews are in a cult. And what about the Roman Catholic Church? They didn't make Watchman's list either. Yet, can you think of a bigger cult?

Don't get me wrong. I don't hate Jews or Catholics. Nor Hindus for that matter. But, I think as soon as someone starts categorizing ALL religious (and even nonreligious!) organizations that are outside of Protestant "orthodoxy" as being a "cult," to my way of looking at it, the ones doing the labeling have, themselves, become a cult.

I hope that in the future AR will not give such "cult experts" so much space.

-Missouri

Editor: We have stated repeatedly that just because we mention a publication or group in AR does not mean that we endorse all their views. (Just as, undoubtedly, such groups do not necessarily endorse all our views.) In fact, we regularly report on groups with which we have little in common and give their addresses so that our readers can, if they wish, make their own inquiries and come to their own conclusions. We are simply not in the business of running the lives of our readers. As for the Watchman Fellowship organization, they regularly report on the WCG and related groups and they do so in a very professional manner. For example, the recent Vol. 10, No. 7 issue of their magazine - published in the face of outlandish legal threats from the WCG - thoroughly covers the WCG's recent shift to trinitarianism. For a free copy, write to Watchman Fellowship, P.O. Box 13340, Arlington, TX 76094-0340.

There is one thing in your last issue that I take issue with. You seemed to be far more critical of the Branch Davidians than the government. Of course I had no love for David Koresh, but surely you realize that this was a threat to all freedom loving people who believe in the Constitution. The government could not have cared less if Koresh claimed to be Jesus Christ or that he was sexually abusing the children. They only wanted to take one step closer to taking away the people's right to bear arms. The only thing that has kept our government from turning into a complete dictatorship is that our crooked leaders in Washington, D.C. know most of the American people are armed.

Also, while I'm no follower of Garner Ted Armstrong, I agree with him that the government should have used the Andy Taylor approach and sent one agent or the local sheriff, who knew Koresh, to talk about the gun violations. As for child abuse charges, that should have been handled by the local welfare department, not a bunch of trigger happy Barney Fifes. Just how in the world did burning those poor, little children alive help the fact that they had been abused? Don't we have great government? In fact, we will never know if the firearms charges were true or not because all of them were destroyed! The facts are clear that the BATF and the FBI caused the fire by throwing gas into the compound and turning over the Davidians' kerosene lamps they were using because their electricity had been cut off!

As for the agents that were killed, of course that was bad too, especially for their families. But they knew the risk they were taking when they took jobs as agents. I really believe many law officers today would not be killed if they would learn to be our friends and protectors instead of acting like the Gestapo.

Last of all, John, I noticed that you got a good deal of your information about the Branch Davidians from Newsweek magazine. That publication is nothing more than a rag for the system. It is owned by The Washington Post, whose owner, Katherine Graham, attends the secretive Bilderberger meetings but never reports on them in her paper or magazine. If you want the real facts, read The Spotlight.

John, I'm not mad at you.... Everyone is entitled to one mistake.... By the way, you may print this letter along with my name.

The least that the WCG could do would be to refund to each of us the money we gave to build the feast sites that they sold and to build the Pasadena campus and auditorium that they are now going to sell.

We were members of the WCG for 12 years. Leaving was not easy, but your efforts with the Report were an immense help, maybe more than you will ever know. After burning our bridges with former church affiliations and friends, and then leaving the WCG, you were our only lifeline to sanity. My very best wishes and thanks.

About This Issue

This issue that you are holding is not the one I promised in June. Although that one is almost ready for printing, I thought it best to delay it so that the more timely information that this issue contains could get out immediately.

For some months now, I have been researching the subject of the WCG spinoffs. There are so many now, and so many that hold to very strange beliefs, I thought that that information would make an informative issue or series of issues. But, in recent weeks it has become very obvious that the WCG is in the midst of a true revolution - one that pales into insignificance all the crises in its past, even the famous 1979 lawsuit brought by California's Attorney General. Many cult monitoring organizations have come to the same conclusion.

Where all this is leading is hard to figure. While the WCG has adopted a number of mainstream doctrinal positions, they have also been flirting with a number that are quite unorthodox. While they seem to want better relations with some religious and news organizations, they remain quite belligerent toward many others. While they admit their church has made many doctrinal and administrative errors over the years, they are doing little, if anything, to rectify the thousands of injustices they perpetrated in their past. "All you need is love" is a nice notion, but for most of us the slogan rings hollow without the physical evidence. (And didn't Paul write something along those lines?)

The next issue of AR should be quite interesting. We'll be getting it out as soon as we pay off the bills we incurred in doing this one. My thanks to all of you who are supporting our publishing efforts.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

February 1994 (AR54)

Editor: In the last issue of AR, I emphasized the many dramatic changes that have taken place in recent months in the Worldwide Church of God (WCG), Ambassador College, The Plain Truth magazine, and on The World Tomorrow telecast - the institutions founded by the late Herbert W. Armstrong. In this issue I mainly want to report on the amazing phenomenon of the growing number of WCG offshoots. However, before doing so I'd like to raise an important question: Of all the doctrinal changes taking place in the WCG now run by Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach, which one is the most significant?

One reader who recently wrote me said AR was over reporting on the Trinity issue and that we should be focusing more on the WCG's changing views on evolution. Some have thought we should be emphasizing the WCG's clear shift regarding the place of Jesus in defining the Gospel. Still others have suggested that the change in the WCG's approach to prophecy is the most important. While all of these views have merit, let me put forward my own suggestion - one that I have not yet seen made in any other publication. I believe the most significant change made in the WCG by the Tkach administration is this:

The Bible Is Being Deemphasized

Now, this may at first seem like an outlandish statement to make. After all, the WCG still quotes the Bible extensively, writes about it, quotes it in doctrinal statements, has members (some, at least) who study the Bible, and Mr. Tkach continually quotes from it in editorials and sermons.

Nevertheless, even though this change (like so many others) has not been overtly announced, it has taken place and one does not even have to "read between the lines" to see it. I first noticed the shift in the Tkach administration's position in the July 27, 1993 Pastor General's Report. On page one Pastor General Joseph Tkach makes this statement:

Before the God Is... booklet was published, I wrote to the Church explaining that the teaching we once held - that the destiny of human beings is to become Gods - was not one we could support theologically (or biblically, for that matter). At that time, I encouraged all members to read the new booklet carefully. [Tkach then goes on to write how many found the new booklet difficult to comprehend.]

Putting aside, for now, the distortion of HWA's teaching Tkach creates by using the word "Gods," let us just focus on one phrase: "was not one we could support theologically (or biblically, for that matter)." Please note the words I have italicized: "theologically OR biblically." Now, think for a moment - in all the history of the WCG - up until now - when was "theology" ever considered a basis for belief other than when it was "biblical theology"? With only one exception (discussed below), I can't recall any theological position that HWA's organization ever took that did not have at least an ostensibly biblical basis. Indeed, there are many of us who took theology classes at Ambassador College in years past who can distinctly recall that the WCG's position (often stated by reference to Rev. 22:18) was that we were not to produce theological positions that were not biblically based. There was no "theology OR biblical theology." There was just the latter.

Most seminarians understand the difference. Among academicians there is a distinction made between "natural theology" and "dogmatic theology." The former is usually defined as a branch of philosophy or metaphysics. A good example would be Aristotle's discussion of the "unmoved mover" - that is, the "uncaused cause" - what can rationally be described as the Creator God. (Here's the one HWA exception I alluded to above. HWA's booklet Seven Proofs God Exits would be viewed as an example of natural theology, and, indeed, many have recognized that that booklet's arguments came from various classical philosophers - even though one could also argue that those arguments are a priori within the Bible itself.) On the other hand, "dogmatic theology" refers not to a branch of philosophy, but to the dogmas or basic doctrines of a particular religion built upon that religion's first articles of faith. For example, in a religion such as fundamentalist Islam, the basis of their dogmatic theology would be the Koran. Among fundamentalist Christians, the basis of dogmatic theology (what most of us have simply referred to as plain "theology") would be the Bible.

Many, if not most, individuals raised in a Protestant home simply assume that the Bible - often called "The Word of God" - is the basis of belief for all Christians. Nevertheless, while all Christians make some room in their theology for the Bible (or, at least, the New Testament), exactly what that place is often varies from denomination to denomination. Let me give but one example.

The Eastern Orthodox Churches, which predominate in Eastern Europe and which are some of the fastest growing Christian denominations in the world today (and to which Joseph Tkach Sr., his wife, and a few other WCG leaders once belonged), have a view of the Bible that is quite different than that of Protestantism. Let me quote briefly from the latest edition of The Orthodox Church (Penguin Books, 1993) by Timothy Ware (Bishop Kallisto of Diokleia). The author is both a clergyman and a lecturer at Oxford and this work is considered the authoritative introduction to the subject in the English language. In explaining the position the Bible holds within the Orthodox Church, the author writes (pp. 199-200):

The Bible is the supreme expression of God's revelation to the human race, and Christians must be "People of the Book." But if Christians are People of the Book, the Bible is the Book of the People; it must not be regarded as something set up over the Church, but as something that lives and is understood within the Church (that is why one should not separate Scripture and Tradition). It is from the Church that the Bible ultimately derives its authority, for it was the Church which originally decided which books form a part of Holy Scripture, and it is the Church alone which can interpret Holy Scripture with authority. There are many sayings in the Bible which by themselves are far from clear, and individual readers, however sincere, are in danger of error if they trust their own personal interpretation .... When received into the Orthodox Church, a convert promises, "I will accept and understand Holy Scripture in accordance with the interpretation which was and is held by the Holy Orthodox Catholic Church of the East, our Mother." [emphasis is his-ed.]

In other words, the Bible is only a part of Tradition (with a capital T), and it is Tradition - and Tradition as understood by the clergy alone - that forms the basis of that religion. But what is this "Tradition"? On page 196, the Bishop explains:

...to an Orthodox Christian, Tradition means something more concrete than this [opinion, belief, or custom handed down]. It means the books of the Bible; it means the Creed; it means the decrees of the Ecumenical Councils and the writings of the Fathers; it means the Canons, the Service Books, the Holy Icons - in fact, the whole system of doctrine, Church government, worship, spirituality and art which Orthodoxy has articulated over the years.

One final quote. On page 202, the Bishop writes:

The doctrinal definitions of an Ecumenical Council are infallible. Thus in the eyes of the Orthodox Church, the statements of faith put out by the seven councils possess, along with the Bible, an abiding and irrevocable authority.

Now, you may ask, what does all of this have to do with the WCG? Only this: if one studies the early history of the Christian churches, one sees that those first three- or four-hundred years parallel very remarkably the WCG's last few years. In both cases there are the same debates about law versus grace, Judaic-Christianity versus Paulinism, pyramid church government versus collegiality, the same debates about the relevance of Greek and Hebrew terms, the same dickering over the ideas of post-apostolic church "scholars," and, of course, the big debates about the nature of God. Anyone wanting to understand what is happening in the WCG in our day would do well to study the early history of the Eastern Orthodox Church. (Timothy Ware's book is highly recommended for this and, especially for those having trouble understanding the WCG's new pronouncements on the Trinity, his chapters on that subject are particularly illuminating.)

Those that doubt that this repeat of ancient history is happening before our very eyes should look at the Nov./Dec. Plain Truth. A PT reader asked (p. 11), "During the Christmas season, why do you cast a gloomy atmosphere on the celebration? As God loves all of us, can't you be more understanding of those with different beliefs?" Here was the WCG's response (emphasis here is mine):

Although the Bible does not teach nor command the observance of Christmas, we respect your difference of belief. It is not our intent to condemn others, but to teach and explain the biblical examples.

The Worldwide Church of God observes the biblical Holy Days that Christ and the apostles observed. The apostles continued to observe these days after the crucifixion....

We understand that not all Christians, including many Sabbatarians like ourselves, observe these days. We believe, however, that the tradition of Jesus and the apostles warrants our observance of them, rather than the traditional holidays introduced in later centuries.

There you have it. The biblical holy days were just "the tradition," just as the days some keep today are traditional. No wonder that in the same issue of the PT, Tkach's Christmas season editorial (p. 1) stated:

Jesus' birth was a miracle of unparalleled significance for humanity, bringing true light into this world of darkness.... Don't just hum the Christmas tunes. Believe the good news!

In the new WCG with its new recognition of traditions, it is not surprising that the new Ambassador College Bible Correspondence Course is not just being altered, it is being cancelled. Local members who find the new church doctrines confusing or contradictory will simply have to trust the explanations given by the church's Greek scholars. Local church pastors have already been told that weekly Bible studies are "optional." And in Pasadena, the tradition begun by Herbert W. Armstrong more than 45 years ago of having weekly Friday night ("commanded assembly") Bible studies at church headquarters will soon come to an end. Insiders say Tkach wants the weekly studies to be permanently cancelled. The steadily declining small numbers in attendance show that among those at "HQ" there is just not enough interest in the Bible to keep the studies going.

-John Trechak

WCG Tidbits

WCG Sabbath services in Pasadena were canceled for January 1 this year. The church's parking structure was rented out to some of the New Year's Day hordes who came for the Rose Parade and the Rose Bowl football game. With no place for the members to park their cars, services were just cancelled. Why they were not simply postponed to later in the day or moved to another location was never explained. Interestingly, next year the Rose Parade will be held on Monday, January 2. The reason? The organizers of the parade have an understanding with the Christian churches of Pasadena that the parade festivities will never be scheduled so as to interfere with the regular services of any of the city's established churches. Apparently, as regards the New Year's parade and church services, Pasadena's Sunday keeping churches have priorities that differ from those of the WCG. (Incidentally, the Ambassador parking structure in question was seriously damaged in the January earthquake. Most ironic, considering that in December Tkach asked all WCG members to fast, presumably for church deliverance or a "sign.")

Recent broadcasts of the World Tomorrow have caused confusion in the minds of some viewers from another era. One California reader wrote us: "I like to watch the religious programs on TV. Sunday I saw Garner Ted Armstrong for the first time in many years. I was thrilled to see him again. I was surprised at some of the things he now says, and I was even more surprised that he has gone back with The World Tomorrow. But I still think he is TV's greatest preacher!" Sorry to have to report this, but Garner Ted has not returned to The World Tomorrow. The new addition to that program's string of "presenters" is WCG minister Judd Kirk (no relation to the Star Trek character). Insiders say he is the replacement for David Albert, who had the Tkach-forbidden habit of deviating from scripts formally approved by the Tkach family. Albert is now teaching psychology at Big Sandy. In the meantime, Judd Kirk is fulfilling a lifetime fantasy. Said one of his former colleagues, "He's spent a lifetime literally imitating Garner Ted Armstrong right down to the minutest details of personal grooming, posture, and delivery. Now he's getting his chance to act the part on TV."

WCG insiders report that declining church revenues have caused Tkach Sr. to be in a panic. Layoffs in the hundreds are in the offing. And Tkach has told the young Turks that manage the church - Little Joe, Feazell, Albrect, Kubik, etc. - that he wants to see a moratorium put on doctrinal changes. The young Turks, however, are reported to have openly balked at the idea. They envision even more dramatic changes in the coming months and years. Those changes will undoubtedly involve fundamental HWA teachings. Little Joe was approached by WCG members in a restaurant one day as he ate shrimp. Questioned about his diet, Little Joe responded, "It's OK, I'm not a Jew." Another WCG minister decided this year to put up a Christmas tree in his living room and Christmas lights on his house. When members started driving past his house to gawk at the lights, the minister's supervisor called "HQ." Little Joe's response: "No problem. It's OK."

Slavery Under the New Freedom

With church revenues declining, WCG leaders are being forced to find new ways to raise money. One member recently wrote us:

You have successfully put into print what a lot of us have privately suspected or thought, but the "reinforcement" of weekly Sabbath services suppresses. It is the most devastating feeling in the world to realize that you've been deceived and defrauded - especially under the guise of religion. I am now trying to repair the credit rating that I enjoyed prior to the WCG, which was ruined as a result of the high interest loans we took out not only to survive financially, but to support "the Work."

Many church areas have now cashed in on the local church-sponsored "fundraiser" consisting of the assembly and sale of fruit baskets. There are two delivery dates: Thanksgiving and "December." The Thanksgiving baskets are decorated in colors like orange, brown, and yellow; the "December" baskets are decorated in red and green. One congregation, the Boston church, has been so successful they even made a "how to" film for other church areas to emulate.

For those who don't like to sell, it is expected they "serve" by spending the dates designated for assembly working as basket assemblers. You see, this measures just how much a member's heart is in "the Work." For those who do not participate in either the assembly or in sales, there's a bit of tongue-lashing from the lectern at services.

Of course, a lot of us are wondering just where all the proceeds from these fundraisers actually go. Ministers are allowed to use part of the funds to buy themselves high-tech toys and software (for tracking purposes, no doubt)!....

It amazes me how, for a church that does not keep Christmas, we make merchandise out of it. Personally, I think it's unethical, as is the use of sermonette and sermon time to promote the fundraiser, and the peripheral sales activities and sales-related discussions that take place on the Sabbath. And then there's the tremendous stress a member experiences for lack of participation and enthusiasm. They are real good with guilt!

I'm told that in Boston, for those who didn't participate in the fruit basket fundraisers, they get an additional five or six "opportunities" to serve. In a 10-month period, there were additional fundraising projects that involved inventory, telephone book distribution, candy bar sales, clean-up, painting projects, and more. They even had an outright request on two Sabbaths for contributions from their second tithe to fly past ministers and their families in for their 25th anniversary party. The money-hungry game goes on and on.

In spite of it, in Boston the church activity fund is always broke. The minister there has been known to openly complain about how low his salary is from Pasadena. But you know as well as the rest of us that there are different colors of money, and what benefit packages the ministers have! They are exempt from social security taxes, pay no 2T, no 3T, get housing allowances, a new automobile, health insurance, etc., etc.

Editor: Aside from the obvious (leaving WCG), let me make one suggestion to members in this oppressive position. Calculate the hours you are slaving for your local task master and multiply that number by what your time is worth. It might be worth $15 an hour or it might be worth much more. For instance, Sunday time - time you are taking away from your family, for instance - might be worth $100 an hour to you. In other words, put a dollar amount on the time you are giving your task master and then just simply deduct that amount from your tithe checks. Time is money. Doctors and lawyers know this. So does Tkach. YOU SHOULD TOO!

Will the Real "One True Church" Please Stand Up!

For most of its existence, the WCG had a curious interpretation of Rev. 17:5. That verse talks about a Babylon that is "the Mother of Harlots." Herbert Armstrong saw in that symbology the Roman Catholic Church as the great mother church and the Protestant Churches as her harlot daughters (churches who traded spiritual heresies for money and who gave birth to their own daughter churches). That colorful interpretation is never mentioned by the WCG today. Perhaps the doctrine's fading away came because it is just not nice to call established Christian churches "whores." But another reason may be that in the last twenty years, the WCG, more than probably any other church in America, has been an organization of great confusion that has given birth to many other religious organizations which, in turn, have often given birth to even more religious groups - and even more religious confusion. Furthermore, that process is increasing at a tremendous rate.

In our very first issue in 1976, we mentioned nine separate religious organizations that had already come out of the WCG experience. Since then there have been scores more. So many in fact, that it has become increasingly difficult for us just to learn of the existence some of them, let alone to discover what all of them now teach. But so many AR readers have been asking us for updates on the WCG offshoots, we are going to attempt to tell you what we know of them (and for some groups, unfortunately, it is very little). Before doing so, however, a few points should be made.

First of all, while most of the WCG offshoots may have teachings with which we disagree, we shouldn't be too quick to assume what motivates the leaders of such groups. For some of the church leaders, it is all too clear that a hunger for spiritual truth and a desire to serve mankind are not at the core of their motivation. Nevertheless, we should not assume that such is the case for everyone that leaves Worldwide to start another group. Certainly, as for those who join such organizations, our experience has been that most are very sincere in their desire to gain spiritual understanding and live godly lives. The same might be said for some ministers in the various churches (even though a desire for a following, tithe money, a chance to preach, self-deception, miseducation, and even serious delusion, may be involved in some cases).

Second, it is important to remember that as human beings, all of us have failings. While some failings rise to a level to warrant being reported on, not all do. In other words, just because some group is having problems does not mean that it should automatically be labeled a "cult" or be attacked in the press. It is not always easy for us to know where to draw the line on this. However, as a general rule, the more a group fits the definition of a "destructive cult" (see AR44 for a detailed explanation) and the more the unethical or deviant conduct is likely to be long-running, intentional, or illegal, the more we feel we have a duty to report those facts.

Finally, readers should not assume that because we mention some groups without critical comment that we are endorsing them. There are many organizations with which we are not in philosophical agreement. However, because they have something to offer our readers, we will mention them and give their addresses. Sometimes we can learn even from those who are in error on some point, or many points, even if what we learn is only that we should not waste any more time on such a group.

The Armstrongism Group

In AR51, our lead headline asked the question, "Is Armstrongism Dead?" One of our readers responded to that question with the following astute observation:

I agree with you that in the WCG Tkachism has replaced much of what Mr. Herbert Armstrong used to teach. But, if by "Armstrongism" you mean the core teachings that Mr. Armstrong gave us - (1) the importance of keeping the law of God, including the seventh day Sabbath, (2) the importance of the Holy Days, (3) the importance of tithing, (4) the importance of church government, (5) the identity of Israel in prophecy, and (6) the importance of preaching the gospel of the coming Kingdom - well, then "Armstrongism" is not dead. It lives on in a growing number of groups. Furthermore, all those groups readily admit they got their key doctrines from Herbert W. Armstrong. So, it's pretty clear that "Armstrongism," as you call it, lives on.

The writer makes a very good point. In fact, outside the WCG, Armstrongism seems to be proliferating rapidly. A few who have come out of the WCG to form new religious organizations have rejected most, if not all, the key teachings of HWA (we'll write more of them in a future issue). But a majority of the break away groups still hold on to most of the core teachings of Herbert W. Armstrong. Below is a listing of the major Armstrongite churches that we are aware of, along with a few comments about their key features.

Church of God, International

CGI was covered quite thoroughly in our last two issues so we will not review that information here. But a few recent CGI items should be mentioned.

With CGI's new corporate headquarters building in place near Tyler, Texas, CGI has now started a program there to train CGI ministers. Called Imperial Academy, the program is in no way a college or seminary, yet it is being dubbed "Church of God, International's premier leadership school."

The Academy's first session began on July 5 with a total of 37 men and women students. According to CGI's International News (IN, Vol. 14, No. 6, p. 5):

These students spent two weeks of in depth [two weeks? in depth? - ed.] study through a variety of class instruction. Mr. Armstrong taught Homiletics (the art of preparing and preaching sermons), Prophecy, and History of the Church of God, International.

Mr. Ronald Dart taught Principles of Speech and Preparing to Serve; Mr. Vance Stinson taught Comparative Theology; Mr. Bronson James addressed the Fundamentals of Fellowship; Mr. Charles Groce, in his Conflicts Resolution class, explored the problems of local congregations and how to solve them.

In addition to all of the classes, there was an "Introduction to Speech" club. This club met twice a week and both men and women gave speeches on any topic they chose.

As we reported in our last two issues, not every one in CGI is happy with the Academy. Many see it as only a way for President Armstrong to further consolidate his hold over the CGI.

Global Church of God

Of all the WCG spinoffs, the one currently growing the fastest is Roderick C. Meredith's Global Church of God (GCG, P.O. Box 5500, Glendora, CA 91740-5500).

Recent developments in GCG include the addition of numerous congregations. GCG now has over 85 fellowship groups in nine countries. While not all the groups have a pastor - some are just small "video groups" - the number is growing steadily. Among the most recent WCG pastors to join Meredith's camp is evangelist Carl McNair who brought many of his Helena, Montana congregation with him.

GCG has a doctrinal and marketing game plan that mimics the winning formula put together by Herbert W. Armstrong; it has a dedicated higher echelon; and its chief spokesman is not generally perceived as a raving lunatic or a whoremonger. For those reasons, it is quite likely that GCG will emerge as one of the three or four clear frontrunners among the dozens of Armstrongite organizations. Nevertheless, because of the oppressive personalities of its leaders, it is also sure to have a contentious future. Notice the following September 6 open letter to Roderick Meredith from one ex-WCG member who attempted to fellowship with GCG:

Dear Mr. Meredith:

I was recently disfellowshipped from the Global Church of God by area minister Dave Pack because I found it necessary, once more, to stand up for the Truth.

On August 6, 1993, I was awakened at 10:30 p.m. by a telephone call from Mr. Pack. I was questioned about my interest in Mr. William F. Dankenbring's articles about Passover and Pentecost. In my studies of this comprehensive literature, I have proven to myself, from the Bible, that the dates and manner in which we keep these Holy Days are in error. I was sharing my new understanding of these Truths with the Host of the Tuckerton, New Jersey congregation. This is what prompted the call from Mr. Pack.

In our conversation, Mr. Pack made the statement, "Mr. Dankenbring makes his living acquiring information on sins about people and paying people to publish books about them. Aren't you glad, John, that he doesn't know your sins or he would publish a book about you?" Why is it that when we can't attack the message, we attack the messenger? When will this stop?

Mr. Pack was also very hostile toward Mr. John Trechak, saying he has been spreading garbage about him for years. And "that Trechak is no good." In one of your early sermon tapes you admonished us not to say unkind things about people, even when we ourselves are attacked. Is there a double standard in the Church? Where is Mr. Pack's humble attitude that ministers and members alike are supposed to exhibit?

Mr. Pack said that if I passed out any more literature, which I have already proven to be true, or call any members to discuss these issues, that I "would not ever be able to come back." Not ever?

In a conversation with a friend, Mr. Pack said I would lose my salvation if I continued this practice.

In Mr. Pack's conversation with me he made the statement, "I've never been wrong yet!" My question is, does God back him up even if he is wrong? Mr. Pack seems to think so!

I am extremely disturbed by the method used to force me out of the Church. Very similar tactics were used by WCG Ministers when they disfellowshipped me without proving me wrong! Mr. Pack refuses to address these issues, saying it is not his job. Is it this Church's policy to disfellowship a duly-baptized, God-fearing servant of Jesus Christ, without proof of error, or is the Global Church of God becoming WCG II? I had hoped that a better lesson would have been learned.

All facts related to my understanding of the Truth are in the Bible. If anyone wishes to have further information for their studies, please write or call me.

Undoubtedly, GCG is very fortunate to have as one of its top ministers a man who has "never been wrong yet." Not many of us can make such a claim. Mr. Morris is not the only new GCG member to be rudely banished. A number of Meredith's Pasadena-area associates have been put out for agreeing with Dankenbring's Holy Days position and for "Judaizing" (this includes the use of such Hebrew theological terms as Torah, Tenach, or Mischna - terms Meredith does not want used in GCG). Some prospective members have been put off by other Meredithisms. One former respected WCG minister wrote Meredith a friendly letter of encouragement. Instead of a personal reply, he was sent a copy of GCG's tithing booklet and some tithe envelopes. Another minister, John Trescott (see "Splinters" section below), attended a couple of GCG meetings but was told he was no longer welcome as he held some views that are not allowed in GCG (one being that he feels elders, such as himself, should not insist upon being called "Mister," but that calling elders by their first names is entirely proper).

As is obvious from the above, while Tkach's ministry may still believe in church government, the Meredith church will be strictly enforcing church government by chastening with spiritual whips. It's a sort of B&D outfit: you get put into spiritual bondage and then you get disciplined by the ministry. If getting whipped is your thing, then Meredith's church may be the one for you.

Triumph Prophetic Ministries Church of God

Triumph Prophetic Ministries Church of God (TPM), founded by William F. Dankenbring, is a group to which many former WCG members are being drawn. While we have commented on TPM in the past (see ARs 39 and 50), Dankenbring's work continues to stir up controversy and many have asked us for an update. As we have pointed out in the past, unlike a number of other WCG offshoots, TPM does not seem to have a secret side. Dankenbring and his team put out a huge monthly magazine called Prophecy Flash! (PM or "the Flash") plus a large selection of other publications that are quite up front about many of their beliefs. (The magazine and a list of their other publications is available for free by simply writing to Triumph Prophetic Ministries, P.O. Box 292, Altadena, CA 91003). An evaluation of TPM teachings can easily be made from reading TPM literature and making a comparison with critical literature from other sources. Nevertheless, we should point out what many, including AR, view as TPM's positive and negative sides.

First of all, on the positive side, of all those who have ever been a part of the WCG, there has never been anyone who could compete with Dankenbring in terms of sheer personal energy, zeal, and quantity of output. Just the amount of material that Dankenbring writes, edits, and publishes is amazing (particularly to those of us who have worked in the publishing field). On top of that, Dankenbring has even gone on radio now. He can be heard weekly on short wave around the world. (See the Flash for details.) Second, unlike most of the other WCG offshoots, Dankenbring has not fooled himself regarding the very sinful nature of HWA. He quite correctly weighs up the evidence and concludes that HWA, far from being a righteous man, was a man who committed some horrible sins, including incest, and was probably not a "man of God" (see the letter section of his 2/93 Flash). Nevertheless, because he feels that HWA presented many correct teachings, Dankenbring has referred to HWA as one "used by God" (Editor: couldn't the same be said of Nebuchadnezzar, Judas, and Satan?).

Third, unlike the publications of most of the other WCG offshoots, the Flash doesn't ignore the existence of its competitors, nor the implications of what they are teaching. While he is often criticized for being too energetic in some of his scathing rebukes, nevertheless, by openly debating the views of Garner Ted Armstrong, Jim Rector, Ernest Martin, Anthony Buzzard, Charles Hunting, Fred Coulter, Leona McNair, Roderick Meredith, and especially Gerald Flurry, Dankenbring has contributed to the marketplace of ideas - particularly among Sabbath-keeping Christians. The latest Dec./Jan. issue was particularly good in this regard.

Fourth, occasionally one finds genuine flashes of brilliance in the Flash. For example, in the 2/93 issue, writing mainly about church hierarchies, Dankenbring correctly points out that in the WCG and in most of its offshoots, there is an emphasis on pyramid structures. He then very astutely points out that whereas ancient pagan cultures put great emphasis on hierarchical systems of human rule and such was reflected in the architecture of the pagans' pyramid temples, the Bible places more emphasis on individual relationship to God and such is reflected in the rectangular shape of the Jerusalem Temple (and, he could have added, the cubed city of Rev. 21). He then draws on the examples of the solar system and the atom as analogies to God's preferred system of church structure. (While his article does not further the analogy beyond that of the solar system and the atom, many students of analytical psychology and abstract art would further point to the mandala of dream analysis - often considered a symbol of mental wholeness and balance - as the embodiment of the same principle on the unconscious psychic level. Interestingly, those same thinkers frequently point to triadic structures as symbolic of tension, instability, and imbalance - ed.).

Fifth, the Flash has quite often been quite courageous in running controversial - yet frequently insightful - articles and readers' comments that few other publications would run. For instance, the May issue of the Flash contained a rather well-documented David C. Whitaker article that equated the Mark of the Beast with the Christian Cross - the kind of theological speculation one would find in very few Christian publications. And on page five of the letters section of the 1/93 Flash, one reader pointedly speculated that HWA did not die a natural death, but was murdered. While that theory has been quietly discussed in WCG circles frequently since 1986, no other publication has dared bring it up in print.

Nevertheless, with all that said, many Flash subscribers who take the time to carefully read through its monthly 70-80 pages are often quite critical of its contents. Criticisms we have heard include: "Dankenbring is convinced he is on a unique mission from God; he does not discourage his readers from believing that he is the prophesied Elijah." "Dankenbring can't control himself from setting dates. Just like HWA, Hoeh, and Waterhouse, he thinks the Bible shows us how to predict future historical events down to the year, sometimes the day. He wrote last year that Christ will return on April 11, 1998." "I can't stand all the crazy stuff about the meanings of names. When he says that Joseph W. Tkach means 'He Who Adds or Multiplies Wicked Many-Stranded Webs of Deception' and then says his own name means 'THE STRONG-WILLED, RESOLUTE PROTECTOR AND BRINGER OF THE GOOD NEWS OF THE KINGDOM OF GOD!' he sounds a lot like Gerald Waterhouse." "Mr. Dankenbring says the United States is Ephraim. He's got me confused. Mr. Herbert Armstrong said that Britain was Ephraim and that we were Manasseh!" "Dankenbring is still hooked on that old mistranslation I Jn. 3:4. Hasn't he ever read the Book of Galatians?"

But probably the biggest criticism we hear of Dankenbring's Flash is in regard to his prediction that Saddam Hussein is the Beast of Revelation. What exactly he now believes about this is unclear. In the letters section of his 9-10/93 issue he gave a lengthy explanation of what some claim are his failed prophecies. One rather interesting statement was this:

Although I have discussed dates many times, in an attempt to understand the way things will work out in the future, I have tried to avoid being dogmatic, but always said, "probably," "possibly," "very likely," etc. Why have I done this? To stop the mouths of those critics and heretics who accuse me of being a false prophet! In other words, I boldly make "predictions," but couch them in terms which should show the careful reader that these "predictions," although Bible based, are my personal OPINION - and like anybody else, I have a right to personal opinions. Those "opinions" at times can be wrong, but that does not make me a "false prophet" as these angry and hateful critics argue! [emphasis is his throughout his quotes--ed.]

Nevertheless, on the very next page, Dankenbring, expounding upon Rev. 13:14, very unequivocally writes: "Saddam Hussein WILL BE PART OF THE EMERGING BEAST POWER prophesied to rule the world in the Last Days!"

Just how seriously some of his readers take such statements can be seen in a reader's letter published on the last page of the 7-8/93 Flash:

I was driving along in the car listening to the latest news bulletin on the radio. Saddam Hussein was mentioned and after the bulletin had ended I switched off the radio and began thinking about this man Saddam Hussein as I was driving along. After a few moments my eyes glanced over the instrument panel and at that very instant the numbers on the mileometer changed from 6659900 to 666000. I shook my head a few times, looked again and said something loud which was probably something like WOW!

While some Flash readers are concerned about Dankenbring's authoritative tone on prophecy, quite a few more are concerned about his overall tone which many hear as unreasonably dogmatic and even egocentric. A good example was Dankenbring's article "The Enemy Within" which appeared in the 5/93 Flash. It was essentially a 13-page attack on the ministry of James R. Rector, a former WCG minister who later left Garner Ted Armstrong's CGI to form his own Cornerstone Publications ministry (3802 Olive Street, Texarkana, TX 75503, tel. 903-792-1352.) Incidentally, it should not to be confused with Cornerstone Publications of Chicago.

For some time, Rector apparently gave Dankenbring the impression that he was backing the latter's ministry. According to Dankenbring's article, however, it became clear to him at some point that Rector in his own ministry was using ideas culled from Dankenbring's articles without giving the latter proper attribution. Furthermore, Rector was seen as attempting to lure some of Dankenbring's mailing list onto his own. While we have no reason to doubt that Dankenbring facts are accurate, the article attacking Rector was viewed by many as having been more fanatical and vindictive than anything they had ever seen or heard from Herbert W. Armstrong, himself. And for that reason, some told us they would no longer subscribe to the Flash.

Quoting Jer. 23:30 as if it were some type of ancient copyright law ("I am against the prophets that steal my words"), Dankenbring accused Rector of being, in effect, a type of ministerial Milton Berle. But even more wild, Dankenbring equated such acts with Satan enlisting a third of the angels "in his REBELLION against the Most High God" (p. 4 of article). And, warned the Flash,

"WATCH OUT! BEWARE OF SUBSTITUTE MINISTRIES THAT SEEK TO LEAD YOU TO FOLLOW THEM!" To Dankenbring, Rector was leading "a plot to destroy the Work of God" (p. 6). Then on the next page Dankenbring brought in that old standby, Matt. 12:31-32 (often used to prove the Trinity, by the way), to shift into high gear:

Those individuals who bad-mouth this Work, and speak EVIL of it, are bringing themselves dangerously close to the LAKE OF FIRE!.... [Then after quoting a Rector letter in which Rector says some have complained about Dankenbring's work, Dankenbring wrote:]

Notice! These individuals haven't just attacked me. That could be forgivable. But they have so ATTACKED GOD'S WORK!!! That is another matter altogether. God's Work is inspired by and directed by and follows GOD'S SPIRIT. Thus these evil "complainers" have chosen to attack the very Spirit of God - which is blasphemy against the HOLY SPIRIT!

God hates division. He hates discord. The proof of that is what He did to Korah....

Unity in the faith and truth is VERY IMPORTANT to God! WOE be to anybody who would seek to DESTROY that unity!....

The plain truth is, Jim Rector has STOLEN members and sheep from this Work, and also stolen tithes and offerings in the process....

There CANNOT be TWO independent "works of God," competing with each other, both truly serving GOD!....

Brethren, please let me make this crystal clear: There is ONLY ONE TRUE WORK, TODAY, WHERE GOD IS WORKING! AND THAT "WORK" IS NOT, AND NEVER HAS BEEN, CENTERED IN TEXAS!!! Any work emanating from Texas, which claims to be the cornerstone of God's end time WORK, is misrepresenting itself - it is a rival - a fraud - a seditious competitive, variant THIEF in the sight of Jesus Christ, stealing disciples and sheep AWAY from the TRUTH and TRUE End Time Work! BEWARE!....

The above quotes are but a small fraction of what is a very revealing article. Those who are attracted to TPM should be sure to read that article in its entirety. Incidentally, while we have no reason to doubt that Rector was quoting Dankenbring's material and was hoping to expand his own mailing list, when one AR reader wrote him for his side of the story, Rector (who, incidentally, is reported to be battling cancer) wrote back saying he refused to say anything negative about TPM and its founder. All he would indicate was that there had been some misunderstanding and that he hoped he and Dankenbring could work them out privately.

Finally, there is one aspect of the Dankenbring ministry that needs to be given special attention because it has such amazingly awkward ramifications for the WCG and virtually all of its offshoots. While there are a good number of ex-Worldwidiers who, having not abandoned the traditional Christian canon literally or in spirit, feel that a straightforward reading of Galatians absolves them from any requirement of keeping the Old Testament Holy Days, for a number of reasons many other ex-Worldwidiers still feel the keeping of those days - and at the biblically approved times - is important. Among the Armstrongites who keep those Holy Days, the majority keep the Passover on the evening of Nisan 14 of the Sacred Hebrew Calendar and keep Pentecost on a formula - calculated spring Sunday or Monday (not on a fixed Sacred Calendar date). Now, along comes Mr. Dankenbring - who has become virtually anathema to all his competitors - and in a series of lengthy and quite thoroughly researched articles claims quite forcefully that the WCG and virtually all of its spinoffs are keeping those two Old Testament Holy Days on the wrong days! According to Dankenbring, Passover should be kept on the evening of Nisan 15 and Pentecost on Sivan 6 (see the 8/92 and 3-4/93 issues of PF).

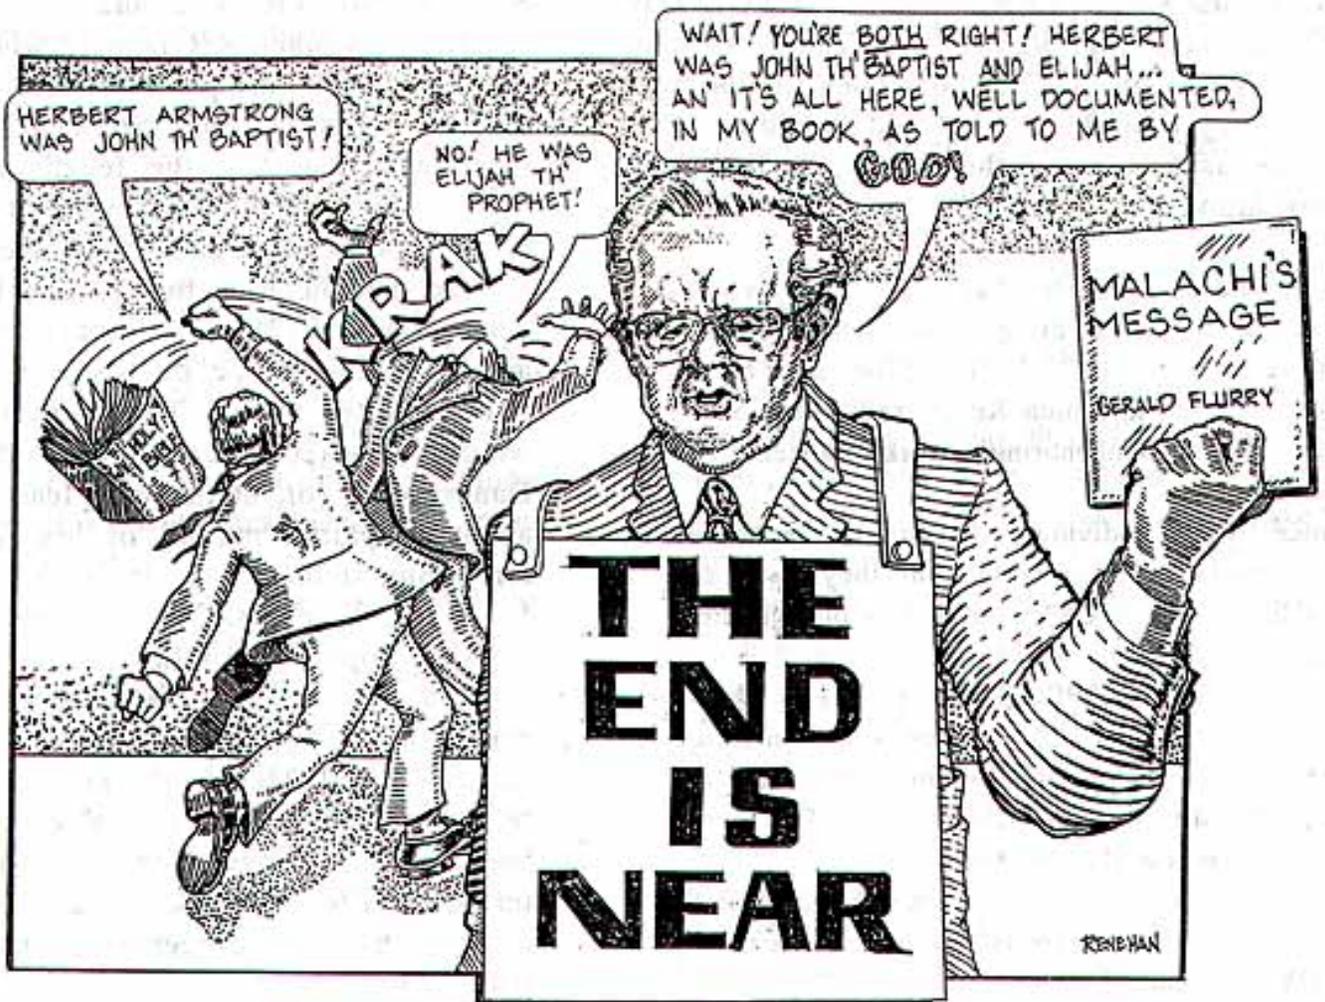

Now, to many AR readers who read Galatians very literally (or who are just plain irreligious), the only reaction to this would be, "So what? Who cares?" But to those who feel that the legalistically correct keeping of such days constitutes a command from God, Dankenbring's claims cause major uneasiness for two big reasons: (1) the data he uses to back up his claims seem very persuasive, and (2), the weight of Jewish rabbinical scholarship appears to be on his side. So what are all the Armstrongites to do? To begin following TPM's view would, in effect, be admitting that God is inspiring Dankenbring (or, at the very least, that he knows more about scripture than all of his Armstrongite competitors). But, if that is the case, then what are they doing following Tkach, GTA, Meredith, and the rest?

One top WCG minister has privately stated that Dankenbring is correct about the dates, but that WCG cannot make too many more doctrinal changes at this juncture. And Meredith's group has been so stymied by the issue, it has ordered copies of Fred Coulter's book on the Passover (see below) to help their ministers refute the Flash. Dankenbring, sensing his competitors' dilemma has of late been emphasizing the issue, saying that submission to the new understanding on the date and manner of keeping Passover and Pentecost constitutes "the Final Test" of God for people at this time (the Flash, 5/93). It remains to be seen how many will pass this new test, but in the meantime it is clear that William F. Dankenbring and his Flash will continue to be a major thorn in the side of Joseph W. Tkach and lot of other religious leaders.

Flurry's Philadelphians

No, we're nor talking about some fifties' singing group, unfortunately. The Philadelphia Church of God (PCG) founded by former WCG preacher Gerald Flurry is one of the WCG's most vibrant - and fanatical - spinoffs. While started by just a handful of Armstrongite zealots just four years ago (officially on Dec. 7, 1989), this small group has shown amazing growth ever since. Today, the PCG (P.O. Box 3700, Edmond, OK 73083), with only about 3,500 members, produces a slick, full-color, monthly magazine called The Philadelphia Trumpet, a magazine for its members called The Philadelphia News, numerous booklets, and at its own new television studios produces its Key of David television program, now seen in eleven major U.S markets and via cable access - throughout the entire U.S., Canada, Europe, and beyond. Besides "Pastor General" Flurry, other key personnel are former WCG ministers Dennis Leap, Colin Sutcliffe, Wilbur Malone, and Flurry's son Steven. (Former WCG minister John Amos, who helped found the group, died of a heart attack a few months ago.)

Reading through back issues of the Trumpet ("Tpt" - to be distinguished from "the PT" - The Plain Truth) and from their booklets, one readily can see PCG's hardcore beliefs. In a paragraph, here they are: We are living in the "end times." God sent Herbert W. Armstrong as the prophesied Elijah to warn the world. At the time of HWA's death Satan was cast down to earth. Joseph W. Tkach became the prophesied "son of perdition" who has polluted most of God's "Philadelphians" into becoming "the Laodiceans." God has now raised up Gerald Flurry to lead those remaining true to God - those still "Philadelphians" - and God, through an Angel, has inspired Flurry's book, Malachi's Message, which is essentially a warning to the Laodiceans: unless they repent of their liberal ways, recognize Herbert W. Armstrong as their "spiritual father" and Gerald Flurry as God's messenger for today ("Elisha"), and begin tithing to his work, they well be persecuted by the Beast and will all die horrible deaths in the Great Tribulation. According to Flurry, his book, Malachi's Message (which they acronym "MM"), is the "little book" spoken of in Rev.10:10 and is therefore a sacred writing. In the Sept./Oct. 1992 Tpt (p. 8) Flurry wrote about his book (and the emphasis is his):

Malachi's Message is a new vision from a mighty angel. It's a NEW REVELATION - not something somebody already knew!

This new revelation is God's way of saying that we must give the little book a special importance and the majesty it deserves. Only then can we properly respond to the great Work of God - much of which revolves around the little book.

Whew! And we thought HWA had an ego problem!

Unfortunately, Flurry's aberrations do not end there. Here are but a few samples of statements made in the monthly Trumpet during 1993:

January: The issue starts off with an article praising HWA in lavish terms (p. 3), gives a poem to their departed hero the "Faithful Warrior" (p. 8), and reprints without permission from the Worldwide News the "18 Restored Truths" of HWA (p. 9). Just as HWA was a type of Elijah, PCG is a type of Elisha (p. 13). "Mr. Armstrong said many times that he was the father of us all either DIRECTLY OR INDIRECTLY!.... we must look upon HWA as our spiritual 'father'.... When prospective members come to the PCG, the first and perhaps most important question we ask them is, 'Do you believe Mr. Armstrong fulfilled the role of the endtime Elijah?' If they don't believe this then we don't invite them" (p. 15, emphasis in Tpt quotes are theirs). "Paying our tithes shows submission to God's government" (p. 19).

February: "THE SYNAGOGUE OF SATAN WAS THE LAODICEAN ERA IN EMBRYO!" (p.

1). The Key of David is essentially the "truths" contained in HWA's booklet The United States and Britain in Prophecy (which Flurry has aptly acronymed "US&BIP") (p. 2). "What is important for all to understand is the fact that God did not stop publishing when our present Bible was canonized" (p. 5).

March: "The other groups who left the WCG are also BLIND to the fact that God is using the PCG, AND NO OTHER CHURCH, to knock on the Laodiceans' door" (p. 1). "I haven't even heard one of these groups claiming they have new revelation from God" (p. 2) [clearly inaccurate]. Joseph Tkach's ethnic background is attacked as being "alien" and based on this Flurry concludes that Tkach is the "end-time Shebna" (p. 9). "God's true Levites" are equated with "true ministers" (p. 10). "Nowhere has Satan's attack on God's truth been more effective since Mr. Armstrong's death, than Christ's doctrine of healing" (p. 14). "Mixing the races only lessens the quality of the original race" (p. 18).

It is, however, in Flurry's editorial attack on Rod Meredith that he outdoes himself: Flurry begins by calling Meredith, in essence, a liar (p. 2). He then writes (p. 28):

Or course, there are different groups of lukewarm and dead churches. But Mr. Armstrong ALWAYS PREACHED THAT GOD WORKS THROUGH ONLY ONE MAN AND ONE CHURCH! The rest are deceived....

This leader I quoted earlier [Meredith] is teaching a satanic doctrine! IT IS VERY UNBIBLICAL TO SAY THERE ARE BRANCHES OF GOD'S TRUE CHURCH!....

Where did I get this new revelation [MM]? As Paul said, it was "NOT AFTER MAN." It came from God! Members of God's Church who can't see that revelation are BLIND!....

A CHURCH COULD HOLD FAST TO EVERY DOCTRINE MR. ARMSTRONG TAUGHT AND STILL BE LAODICEAN-BLIND!

April: The attack on Meredith continues. Flurry's claims that in God's church there has been the worshipping of demons (p. 4). "Mr. Meredith must destroy God's government to get people to follow him instead of the ONE AND ONLY Church that Christ is using today - the Philadelphia Church of God" (p. 5). Collegial and/or democratic government is satanic (p. 7). Meredith is compared to Lucifer (p. 10). "Only one group can be in a covenant relationship with God" (p. 11).

May: The WCG's leadership is referred to as a Judas-type conspiracy and Tkach to "the son of perdition" (p. 1). Satan is using Tkach (p. 7). Tkach Sr. and Tkach Jr. are Russians [inaccurate] and, quoting a October 1963 Plain Truth article, Flurry writes that the Russian people are inherently liars (p. 7). The WCG is the Synagogue of Satan (p. 11). HWA's Mystery of the Ages and Flurry's Malachi's Message go together "hand and glove" [and, therefore, are both supposedly sacred writings] (p. 24). The 144,000 of Revelation are the Laodiceans (WCG and company) who will be "sealed" by God by going into the Great Tribulation and being raped and torturously killed, while the PCG escapes this fate (p. 25). Satan used David Koresh as a means of bringing persecution on the true church (p. 28).

June: "The Laodiceans have to PROVE THEMSELVES BY DYING FOR GOD" (p. 16). A Laodicean does not have to be an active member of the WCG at this time. What is a Laodicean? The Philadelphia Church of God (PCG) teaches that a Laodicean is one who rejects the Philadelphia Standard. The Philadelphia Standard is made up of the TRUTH that Mr. Armstrong restored to the Church during his lifetime (along with what the PCG teaches today)" (p. 17). But on the very same page the Trumpet admits that its teaching on the 144,000 is not in accord with that of HWA who believed that the 144,000 were the Philadelphians.

July: Flurry claims that "God's secret" in Amos 3:7 refers to his own book, Malachi's Message (p. 16).

August: Demons have turned the Laodiceans away from God through philosophy and education (pp. 20-21).

Sept./Oct.: This issue is interesting because a number of statements show how the PCG handles the sordid personal history of HWA. For example, Stephen Flurry, Gerald's son, writes:

If [Satan] can keep repeating lies over and over again, he knows that pretty soon people will believe them....

In this latter half of the twentieth century, Satan has repeatedly tried to discredit Herbert W. Armstrong, both before and after he died....

Pretty soon many lies and rumors were circulating about Mr. Armstrong. There have been manuscripts, papers, reports, and books with hundreds of pages detailing the many sins of Mr. Armstrong. I mean every kind of sin you can imagine! Most of which are so disgusting they are hardly appropriate for printed matter. Very few of these publications try to disprove the teachings, or THE MESSAGE Mr. Armstrong taught. Instead, they put down the man and then THROW OUT THE MESSAGE WITH IT.

[It is very difficult to view this statement as anything other than a calculated distortion of the facts. Obviously, the author is familiar with the AR, as well as the writings of Robinson, Tuit, Dankenbring, and others. AR has criticized HWA, not just for his life style, but for many of his teachings. Robinson, Tuit, and Dankenbring have criticized HWA's life style and, in addition, have been quite specific about where they thought HWA was doctrinally in error and where they thought he was correct. Nevertheless, isn't it interesting that the author nowhere attempts to disprove the serious and well-documented allegations made against HWA. Nor, for that matter, does he give his readers the names and addresses of those making the allegations in order for his readers to make up their own minds - ed.]

November: Gerald Flurry writes (pp. 4-5):

I have been in the ministry over 20 years. In many marriage counseling sessions I have noticed that the wives are zealous and excel in numerous marital responsibilities. But many wives cause some serious problems in their marriages. The root cause is usually not submitting to their husbands as God commands. Their problem is with God's marital GOVERNMENT, and the LAW on which it is based....

Why can't the GCG accept the many REVELATIONS given to the PCG? They simply lack the childlike submission to God's government, so God won't REVEAL to them which Church is doing His Work today.

[In other words, if Dr. Meredith would only be more childlike, and submit to Mr. Flurry, as would any righteous wife to her husband, there would still be hope for him. But Meredith is too stubborn to obey Flurry. Of course, Meredith says the same about Flurry - ed.]

December: This issue is a particularly good one for seeing the unbalanced spirit that permeates the Flurry PCG.

In the lead article, Flurry writes about California's recent economic problems and its natural disasters (the kind that have gone on here for thousands of years): "California is the only state who attacked Mr. Armstrong and his work. Actually, they attacked a lot more than that. California really ATTACKED THE LIVING GOD! Today God is wreaking vengeance on California and all of Israel - mainly the American and British peoples."

In another article, Flurry writes how Christ has only one wife in prophecy - the PCG. All other churches will have no spiritual husband. He expects to see seven different Laodicean churches. "God's own lukewarm people are going to be devoured by the sword.... They are 'murderers' because they are guilty of the blood of Israel" [by not helping to prophesy with MM] (p. 19). On the next page, Flurry writes:

God will look to and use THIS MAN who is childlike before His word (Matt. 18:1-3). For example, this man will read God's revealed word in Malachi's Message and act on it out of godly fear! He KNOWS that book contains God's truth. He trembles and obeys.

Then, on page 21, Flurry writes: "The PCG has the distinct honor to SPEAK FOR GOD!"

How is it that some can believe such nonsense? The answer is given in the same issue of the Trumpet. In an article entitled "Your Living Environment," one of Flurry's associates, Colin Sutcliffe (incidentally, the father-in-law of World Tomorrow broadcaster David Hulme) explains that scientific methods based on observation are inherently wrong. He equates human reasoning to "doing our own thing" - therefore human reasoning is a no no (p. 26). God's plan for managing every aspect of the global environment "is NOT based on either SCIENTIFIC EXPERIMENTATION or ON OBSERVATION, but ON REVELATION!... Revelation is the basis of what will be used in the World Tomorrow" (pp. 26-27).

There you have it. Don't trust your own God-given powers of observation; don't use your own God-given reasoning abilities; just believe the revelation - of Gerald Flurry.

We've covered the Flurry group's beliefs in some detail for two reasons: (1) His own published writings reveal him very clearly to be a cult leader of the first magnitude. And (2) we expect him and his followers to be in the news in the future. Nevertheless, we don't plan any further detailed studies of his writings. The reason for that is simple - reading his "literature" gives us a headache.

In the last few years we have received a good number of letters from individuals who have made the mistake of leaving the WCG for PCG ("out of the frying pan and into the fire" was how one put it). Each told us that the experience cost them many thousands of dollars and much mental confusion. We have heard from a number who have said the experience cost them their marriage. We have even been contacted by mental health therapists who were attempting to treat some who had come out of the PCG, but who found their patients' mental problems overly complex. While Meredith's B&D church may chastise with spiritual whips, Flurry's group likes to chastise with spiritual scorpions. Flurry's outfit is for those into spiritual S&M - real pain. If you want to be spiritually brutalized, the PCG may be the church for you.

While Flurry claims that his church is one that promotes traditional Christian family values, the evidence shows otherwise. One of our readers, after getting involved with PCG along with his wife, soon discovered that PCG put a barrier between his wife and himself. When the husband discovered that his wife wanted a divorce, he also discovered that not only would Flurry not assist the husband in saving the marriage, but that Flurry was encouraging the wife in her divorce plans. Those who would like further details of this case should write to: Mr. Glen Myers, 1407 Iroquois St., Clearwater, FL 34615.

Over the years, AR has shown that many of the cults we have reported upon have had leaders who have tolerated the worst sexual vices within their inner circles. The same appears to be the case with PCG. One PCG exiter has written an open letter in which he claims that the PCG ministry has secretly tolerated homosexuality among some members, and adultery and bizarre sexual acts by some in its ministry. For details of those allegations, write to: Mr. Bill Cline, P.O. Box 22228, Lexington, KY 40522.

Another individual who can shed much light on the Flurry cult is Mr. Don Marshall of Edmond, Oklahoma. He wrote us:

I knew that something was not right within the WCG because of the way our two ministers, Gerald R. Flurry and John Amos, were fired and disfellowshipped. Another man, J. Timothy Thompson, and I helped raise up the "Philadelphia Church of God" in Edmond. If I knew then what I know now, I would not have been a party to that effort. Being very naive, my wife and I helped him produce and distribute Malachi's Message. Little did I know that Flurry would turn out to be a duplicate copy of Armstrong. I regret I had anything to do with promoting the same fraud upon the hundreds of people who became members of the PCG just as HWA had done upon the thousands who became members of the WCG.

-Mr. Don Marshall
Lt. Col. USAF, ret.
4200 East Depel Dr.
Edmond, OK 73034

Mr. Marshall is an individual of high intelligence and character. And yet, for a time, he was misled by a cult leader. Getting duped by a cult leader - even one like Gerald Flurry - can happen to just about anyone. One final bit of information on Flurry. On the evening of Sept. 18 of last year, Flurry was arrested in a parking lot of a university in Edmond, Oklahoma. According to the police report, Flurry had been drinking and fell asleep in his car with empty beer cans on the front seat. What he was doing driving about a college campus late at night is anybody's guess. After discovering that Flurry was unable to either get the car into gear or to stand up the police officer asked to see his driver's license. Instead of complying, Flurry reportedly handed the officer a twenty dollar bill. When the police officer returned the twenty, Flurry upped the ante by five bucks. He was then arrested.

Church of God, the Eternal

As for holding onto the "conservative" teachings of Herbert W. Armstrong, Church of God, the Eternal (CGE) beat out Flurry's group by about fifteen years. Former WCG evangelist Raymond C. Cole began this organization 1975. While a few of HWA's early teachings have been modified slightly with time, this group has essentially adhered to all the doctrines HWA taught before HWA, himself, started liberalizing the WCG in the early seventies. For example, they recognize divorces only in cases of intentional fraud before marriage vows are taken.

There is, however, one significant difference between CGE and the old WCG under Armstrong. CGE appears to be more Calvinistic - specifically, they strongly believe that only those God "calls" can come into "the Truth") and therefore CGE does not have any type of radio or television outreach program. That fact, undoubtedly, is the reason why this group's membership continually hovers around only 300 to 400. Yet, members say they are being fed "strong spiritual meat" via the church's cassette tape program and other materials that emanate from CGE headquarters (P.O. Box 775, Eugene, OR 97440).

CGE's hard-core membership seems very dedicated to their church. And ministers Bryce Clark and Jean Aviolat are still with the group. Nevertheless, CGE has had its share of critics and defectors. Some find evangelist Raymond Cole too authoritarian. "A General Patton with two pearl-handled revolvers," is what one former member called him. One of our readers, Mr. Stanley Daniel of South Africa, even tells the funny story of how he was disfellowshipped by Cole even though he was never even a member of CGE. Mr. Daniels is now with The Church of God (S.A.), P.O. Box 3421, Cape Town 8000, Republic of South Africa.

Ministers who have defected from CGE over the years include Arlie Satterfield, George Leeman, John Mitchell, Robert Sloneker, and the late James Doak. Paul Royer left many years ago to begin the Church of God, Sonoma (4343 Wallace Rd., Santa Rosa, CA 95404) and Richard C. Nickels left to begin "Giving & Sharing" (a mail order bookstore for Sabbath-keepers, but which also has its own printed materials espousing views that seem to the right of Cole's - their new address is: 2014 NE 85th Street, Vancouver, WA 98665-9770).

Church of God Evangelistic Association

This group is headed by former WCG and CGI member David J. Smith. His Newswatch broadcast can be heard throughout most of the United States on a number of clear channel stations. The program has also expanded onto TV and Smith's 30-minute program can be seen in several major markets. Smith's messages deal primarily with his interpretation of news events - in the light of Bible prophecy, naturally - and almost always revolve around various conspiracy theories involving the New Age movement, Trilateral Commission, Council on Foreign Relations, Freemasonry, the Illuminati, and various other conspiratorial organizations all supposedly engaged in bringing about "the final world social system." A few years ago a series of his radio program dealt with the supposed prophetic significance of the ABC television series "Amerika." To listen to Smith, there is a bogeyman hiding in every closet. His scare tactics have apparently proven quite effective in attracting growing numbers of followers and, more importantly, financial supporters. The first year's subscription to his Newswatch magazine is free - after that there is a subscription fee. In addition to Newswatch magazine, Smith also publishes a magazine called Restoring Knowledge of God which deals mostly with doctrinal issues.

CGEA's basic doctrines are similar to those of the old WCG. Public marking from the pulpit is frequently practiced. The authoritarian Smith is in complete control of this organization and no dissent is permitted. Those who long for this type of stifling spiritual environment can write to CGEA at 319 Osler, Suite 160, Arlington, TX 76010.

The Christian Biblical Church of God

Former WCG minister Fred R. Coulter heads this small, but growing, church. He recently wrote us:

We are ministering to many of the brethren who have been twice burned, sometimes three times burned, by various ministers and churches of God. We ourselves, as you know, have experienced that twice burned feeling! It's terrible. But what has pulled us and others through has been that we have kept our hearts with God and our noses in the Bible and let God heal us. It is true that true spiritual growth can be achieved through suffering. Not many of us like suffering, but it certainly teaches us lasting lessons.... As a result of helping so many people who have been spiritually mauled and bludgeoned, we have nicknamed ourselves "the No Hassle, Recycle Church of God."

Besides ministering to a small congregation in California, Coulter, along with Carl D. Franklin, ministers to fellowship groups in about seven states. CBCG has an extensive cassette tape Bible study program and printed materials on numerous Bible topics. Coulter, who has a working knowledge of Greek, has translated much of the New Testament and years ago produced his own harmony of the gospels. Nevertheless, he is not without his critics (Bill Dankenbring is one). And one reader wrote us that she thought "Coulter shows an anti-Jewish bias and is a bit too much like a young HWA for my taste." Nevertheless, in recent months we have received a number of letters from readers who, after leaving WCG, CGI, and other groups, found fellowship with CBCG to their liking.

Of particular interest to many are Coulter's materials on topics that are currently controversial in the WCG and related groups: the Trinity controversy (Coulter is generally in line with the old WCG position on this), counting Pentecost (he favors the Sunday observance - not the Monday observance HWA and even Cole accepted), and the observance of Passover (he favors the Nisan 14 view). In regard to the latter, Coulter has a huge 319-page book on the subject, The Christian Passover (available from York Publishing for $21.95 - write to CBCG for details, they have a free flyer about it). CBCG has a free paper available about counting Pentecost, and regarding the Trinity controversy, Coulter tells us he will send a free booklet and six cassette tapes dealing with the Holy Spirit to anyone who requests that package. (We've seen that booklet and an additional research paper by Franklin dealing with the subject and they represent a considerable amount of serious research.) In addition, they are soon going to publish a 64-page book that focuses on how false teachers work from within church organizations. Their basic premise is that two teachings - hierarchical church government and "one and only church of God" - are false doctrines that form the basis of many heresies. For more information contact: The Christian Biblical Church of God, P.O. Box 1442, Hollister, CA 95024 (tel. 408-637-1875).

One aside. Just as Dankenbring's materials are being read by many of the WCG's top ministers, Coulter's materials are being used by many of the ministers and doctrinal committee people in Global and other groups. Yet, in both cases, members of those churches are told not to study "dissident literature."

The Association For Christian Development

This group evolved out of the Associated Churches of God which formed in 1974 when a major block of WCG ministers bolted from the WCG. The Association (ACD, 4449 S. Star Lake Road, Auburn, WA 98001, tel. 206-859-1017) currently publishes a magazine called The New Millennium. The editor is Kenneth Westby, and the leading contributing editor is Charles V. Dorothy, once one of Worldwide's top theologians. Dorothy, besides having a Ph.D. in theology from Ambassador, earned another Ph.D. in religion from the prestigious Claremont Graduate School in 1989. He has a book in the offing and many articles to his credit. In the December issue of The New Millennium, his article "Judge Not - What Did Christ Mean?" was one many found very insightful. Other contributors to the publication include Gary Arvidson, Dr. Phillip Arnold, Karl A. Hampton, Jerry McClenagan, Ken Ryland, and Robert Wertz.

Another contributor is Steven M. Collins, author of the 400-page book The "Lost" Ten Tribes of Israel - Found! A while back he wrote us:

I am still affiliated with ACD and am very comfortable with its approach and tenets. ACD, I believe, is one of the more mature offshoots of the WCG. We freely tolerate honest differences over scriptural interpretations, prophetic concepts, etc. and we can differ without becoming angry with one another. ACD has jettisoned all vestige of "we-only" exclusivism when dealing with other churches. While I am admittedly a "conservative" on biblical doctrine, I have benefitted from some of the critical canonical analysis that academic "liberals" have presented.

ACD, in my view, is an ideal home for ex-WCG, or ex-CGI people who want to retain many of our traditional beliefs [such as the Sabbath and Holy Days] within an organization that has completely eliminated any vestige of mind-control, intimidation, or oppressiveness.

One final thought on ACD. Of all the groups that we have dubbed "Armstrongite," this one is arguably the least so. In fact, we only list them here because of their historical connection to the WCG.

Splinters

Editor: I am including under this heading the names and addresses of a number of groups - both churches and publications - that can be generally viewed as "Armstrongite." We are using the term "splinters" here because they are either very small groups (usually having only one minister or leader) or because we have too little verifiable information about them to give more data.

Christian Church of God, P.O. Box 7254, Amarillo, TX 79114-7254. The pastor is Jeff Booth. We noticed they were favorably mentioned in a recent ACD publication.

Scriptural Church of God, P.O. Box 15037, Plantation, FL 33318. The pastor is Keith Hunt. Back in 1988, when he was based in Canada, Hunt was teaching, among other less radical ideas, that mushrooms were not to be eaten because they did not qualify as "the green herb" of Gen. 1:29. We currently do not have any more information about this group.

Churchlight Publishing Association, P.O. Box 9901, Colorado Springs, CO 80932. Jack Hines, who pastors the Colorado Springs Church of God, is the editor. What we find most interesting about this conservative Sabbatarian group's small newsletter is the directory of independent Sabbatarian churches they frequently include in their pages. We also found one article in the May 1993 issue particularly interesting. In "How Accurate is the Hebrew Calendar," the author wrote: "lay members are unaware of how this calendar is computed and the fact that it is grossly inaccurate." The computation of the Hebrew Sacred Calendar is increasingly an issue in the WCG offshoot groups.

The Jerusalem Sentinel, P.O. Box 547, Crystal River, FL 34423 is another publication with a special interest in the Hebrew Calendar. Charles Kimbrough is president and Mark Carr is the editor. Apparently this publication serves a number of independent Sabbatarian groups which have a strong aversion to centralized church authority. Many involved with their network of groups are ex-WCG Sabbath keepers.

Church of God (Sabbatarian), 900 W. Alabama St., Anadarko, OK 73005. This group is headed by John Trescott, the editor of Light of Truth magazine. Trescott was formerly a member of the WCG, CGI, and other groups. He still holds to many of HWA's teachings, but in a letter to AR, wrote that he now disagrees with about 30 doctrines HWA taught. His little booklet John Who? explains who he is and gives many insights into the churches he was a part of formerly. One interesting trait that Mr. Trescott has is that he does not isolate himself from the ministries of other groups. His recent contacts with the Global Church of God were mentioned in his July issue. We found one statement particularly interesting:

The only ministers they seem to want, former little Hitlers or not, are those coming directly from the WCG. And they are brought on enjoying a paycheck, as well. I think it would do them all good to get out and try to earn a living by faith first. But then, there would not be the funds to build an organization such as what they have now begun to build.... I believe it would be fitting for all the ministers now coming to the GLOBAL CHURCH OF GOD from Gerald Flurry's group, WCG, or whatever, to publicly apologize for their condoning of the wicked, hierarchical WCG government, and ask the brethren in every one of the Churches of God to forgive them.

Universal Church of God, Route 1, Box 52, Hanna, OK 74845. In February, 1992 AR received a letter from this group signed "Ray Lampley, Prophet of the Most High." The letter explained how he and John Trescott the following month would begin a five-week tour of seven western states to give a testimony to the leaders of those states warning them that The Great Tribulation had begun on March 26, 1991 and that it would last for 1,260 days. We also received a copy of a letter prophet Lampley sent the previous month to the governor of California. The letter began [and the emphasis is his]:

Dear Governor Wilson:

In Accordance with the ORDER OF DESTRUCTION which was filed in the Supreme Court of the United States as the result of failure to answer or to comply with a LAWFUL PROCLAMATION AND DEMAND AT THE COMMON LAW OF GOD, the State of California is presently being destroyed and will continue to be destroyed by authority as stated in Revelation 11:3-13.... The Kingdom of God will be established on this earth beginning October 7, 1994... Please write us if you want to be a part of this end-time work.

The letter was signed the same as the one to AR. Now, we don't know if Governor Wilson ever answered the letter or even saw it. But, we do have to wonder how many tax dollars were spent in surveillance of prophet Lampley and his friend as they made their five-week tour of the west. Trescott apparently is no longer associated with Lampley, but Anderson Fields Jr., another "Prophet of the Most High" is. And so, as you might already have guessed, we now have Lampley and Fields representing themselves as "The Two Witnesses."

Proclaim Liberty, P.O. Box 371, Pasadena, CA 91102 (tel. 1-800-241-4499). Headed by former WCG minister David Fraser, this is another vehemently anti-Tkach, pro-HWA ministry that also claims to be the "Philadelphia era." Fraser puts out numerous free booklets, tapes, and a very thin magazine that leaves some with the impression that it is by and for individuals on LSD. Besides the mismatched colors and psychedelic artwork, Fraser likes to write in simplistic, one sentence paragraphs printed in large type surrounded by much space. During the 1992 presidential campaign, a spokesman for Ross Perot criticized Fraser's publication for using Perot's name and statements in such a way as to leave the impression that the presidential candidate was somehow connected to the Fraser group (Pasadena Star-News, 5/19/92). A good overview of Fraser's ministry is contained in his July 18, 1992 taped message "Goals and Purposes."

Trans-World Publishing, P.O. Box 333, Pasadena, CA 91102. In spite of the ostentatious name of this "group," this is really ex-WCG member Bernard H. Kelly who publishes the inaptly named Common Sense newsletter containing both Armstongism and a few original ideas.

The Masterminder Broadcaster, P.O. Box 2900, Vista, CA 92085-2900 (tel. 619-945-7300). Many readers will recall Al Carrozzo, the popular WCG minister who blew the whistle on Garner Ted Armstrong in 1973 (see AR2). Since then his life has been something of a rollercoaster ride. He went through a divorce, then remarried; went through a bankruptcy and then reportedly made millions on the stockmarket. While his "Twentieth Century Church of God" appears to have fizzled into oblivion, Carrozzo and his son Tom have started something called the Liberty Foundation which publishes The Masterminder Broadcaster newsletter. After reading a few copies we have no idea why it is called that.

Twentieth Century Church of God, P.O. Box 25, Nineveh, PA 15353. This church, which has no connection to the church of the same name stated by Al Carrozzo years ago, is headed by former WCG member C. Kenneth Rockwell. He believes WCG to be Laodicea, puts out doctrinal studies, and has a radio program called The Voice From Afar.

Church of God's Truth, P.O. Box 2951, Corona, CA 91718 (tel. 909-737-0559). Headed by former WCG minister James Russell, this church publishes the Prove All Things newsletter and the booklet Postponements - Another Mystery of the Ages which deals with Sabbath and Holy Day keeping and calendars.

The Total Truth, 30 Barren Creek Rd. Clemdenin, WV 25045. While dubbed "A magazine of love, truth, and understanding," this small, typed newsletter seems merely to reflect editor Lee Grose's personal obsession with prophetic date setting and - you guessed it - calendars.

Restoration Church of God, National Headquarters: 1500 E. Tropicana, Suite 110, Las Vegas, NV 89119 (tel. 702- 251-8343). M. John Allen, the "Pastor General" who heads this group, wrote us: "Being a religious leader is the last thing I want to do right now. What I would really like to do is be a promoter of rock stars. But, unfortunately, that does not appear to be what is in store for me."

Seek and Find! Ministries, P.O. Box 435, Brakpan 1540, Rep. of South Africa. Pastor R.V. Stapleton, a genealogist and former WCG member, puts out articles and attempts to answer religious questions.

Alpha and Omega Christian Foundation, P.O. Box 123, Berowra Heights, N.S.W., 2082, Australia. Coordinator Grigore Sbarcea, publishes The Christian Herald, a theological journal which has included insightful commentary about Mr. Sbarcea's experiences in WCG and CGI. This journal seems more substantive than those put out by many WCG-related groups. That is likely due to the fact that Mr. Sbarcea has a B.A. (majors in religion and ancient history) and has done postgraduate work at an Australian university.

Midnight Ministries, P.O. Box 29, Aylesbury, Bucks. HP17 8TL England. Headed by former WCG member Malcolm B. Heap and his wife Helena, this small group puts out religious pamphlets and the Awake! Awake! newsletter.

One interesting aspect of this ministry is their belief in new revelations. Their son Richard is even believed to have the gift of prophecy. In January of last year it seems God spoke to Richard and revealed that a BMW dealership was about to donate to their ministry a red BMW 325i estate car to assist in the ministry. Heap then wrote to a local BMW dealer telling of God's message. When the dealer didn't respond, Heap went personally to the dealer apparently expecting to collect the free car. Understandably, the dealer thought this a joke. But, the dealer's levity disappeared when he later received a letter from Heap stating, "From this day on, God is going to take away your business to such an extent that in the near future your showroom will close down and most of your staff will no longer have a job." The name of Heap's ministry, coupled with group's letterhead containing a falcon and a sword, didn't help the dealer's disposition much either. The dealer phoned the police and Midnight Ministries made the television news and the front page of the 10/6/93 Bucks Herald.

Top of the Line, P.O. Box 72, Manchester, TN 37355. This is one of our favorites. Under his White Rock logo, former WCG member John E. Kerley, Sr. issues updated bulletins regarding which positions, thrones, and heavenly bodies will be assigned to various living personages in the First Resurrection. How he gets this information we have no idea. But we have been pleased to see that on occasion editor John Trechak has been awarded various planets [not really surprising, some say he's already in outer space, just kidding - asst. ed.]. Others who have made the list are George Bush, Jerry Falwell, Robert Dole, Dolly Parton, and Olivia Newton-John.

We occasionally get letters from individuals asking about Larry Gilbert Johnson, founder of the Laodicean Church of God (see AR33). According to Arizona officials, Johnson was released from Arizona State Prison on 2/29/92 and was last known to be residing in the Phoenix area. We have no other information about him.

The Bible Sabbath Association

The above listing of WCG offshoots is by no means complete. First of all, in order to save space we have not listed many of the offshoots that have been mentioned in AR in the last few years. Second, we have not included groups outside of the "Armstrongite" spectrum. We'll try to cover some of the non-Armstrongite groups Worldwidars are turning to in a future issue. Third, there are now simply so many WCG offshoots it is virtually impossible for us to monitor, or even to find out about, all of them.

For those who would like to find out about other WCG-related groups, our recommendation is to order a copy of the Directory of Sabbath-Observing Groups. Copies of the 1986 edition and the 1989 supplement can be ordered for $5 by writing to Bible Sabbath Association, Rt. 1, Box 222, Fairview, OK 73737. The directory lists many WCG related groups. Unfortunately, there have been so many changes in these groups in the last five years, some of the information it contains is outdated. However, the Association informs us that they are working on an updated directory right now. So, if you know of some group that should be listed, please write them with the details.

The WCG Exiting and Support Network

People need people. It's a basic fact of life. And individuals never need the support of others more than when some personal tragedy hits home.

Most people who have been through a cult exiting experience will tell you it was one of the most difficult, traumatic occurrences of their lives. Family ties are often cut - or have to be reestablished. Friendships, and sometimes lifetime careers, come to an end. Belief structures assumed correct for years or even decades are questioned. There is stress and resultant health problems. Many, for a time, will even question their own sanity. ("How could I have been so blind to the obvious?") For relief, some turn to alcohol or drugs, others to religion - or to another cult. Some simply ignore their own feelings (denial, self-deception) only to discover, perhaps many years later, that those feelings and ideas never consciously acknowledged or worked through are still really there, doing immense emotional damage to the self-deceiving individual. It is a proven and well-researched fact that most ex-cult members need transitional help, education on cult awareness, and support to guide them through the exiting stage and to insure a healthy adjustment while reconditioning their lives.

Over the years, we have noticed that cult victims take several paths upon exiting. Some walk away and sever all contacts or they may be left "shunned" by the group. Sadly, some gravitate toward other cultic, aberrant, abusive religions. Of course there are many who are left mistrustful of any ministry and doubtful of any religious beliefs. That is why cult victims benefit greatly by some sort of support, whether it is an informal support group or just having someone to talk to who understands. Guidance regarding important education relating to this experience is essential.

AR has mentioned a few local support groups in the past, but we have never had the means to put together a complete listing. Nor have we had the means to start up an international network of such groups. Additionally, we have simply not had the means to provide all the help that is often needed by those who have recently exited WCG, or to those thinking about leaving, or to the families of such people. Other organizations and individuals, however, are trying to fill some of those needs. One such individual is Linda Stuhlman, a businesswoman and former psychiatric nurse. She and her husband Paul, a professional management consultant, and their two children were once all dedicated WCG members. She recently wrote us:

It was about two years ago when we first suspected we might be in a cult. Unraveling the whole WCG story was not easy. Extricating ourselves from the WCG trance took a great deal of effort. We read Ambassador Report. We contacted the Cult Awareness Network (CAN) and American Family Foundation (AFF) and met with many of their experts. We travelled to Minnesota to attend the annual, National CAN Conference to aid in our recovery. We educated ourselves by talking to psychologists, social workers, and lawyers. And we spent every spare moment reading the ample available cult books and articles plus the massive amounts of literature written about the real WCG.

Along the way, we came to realize that even though AR, CAN, and many other organizations are doing all they are able, those currently or previously victimized by the WCG have unique concerns and needs. The help available for cult victims, if located, is usually not specifically tailored to the WCG victim.

I am presently a Cult Awareness Network and American Family Foundation representative for WCG cases. I have also established a WCG Exiting and Support Network. The purpose of this network is to provide a central contact point to aid exiting members in streamlining their recovery from the WCG. The objectives are as follows:

1. Offer personal, confidential guidance and provide information and resource data for questioning or exiting members as well as concerned non-WCG family members.
2. Distribute or recommend reading materials for those thinking about leaving, and for ex-members pursuing an investigation about the WCG as a cult.
3. Provide a listing of professional mental health experts who are knowledgeable about cults in general and the WCG in particular.
4. Maintain a referral service for those in need of qualified exit counseling consultants or for those requesting to speak with helpful, supportive ex-members who could aid with specific needs or requests.
5. Institute local support groups in as many areas as possible along with a means of interconnection for the local groups.

The goal of the Network is to provide a helping hand for those who have had their personal lives shattered or who were affected in any capacity by their WCG involvement. Many former WCG members are willing to share their experiences with those now exiting Worldwide, perhaps personally, or via phone, fax, or even computer.

The Network will function as an information and support service. It will not in any way recommend specific churches or attempt in any way to convert the exiter to other belief systems.

Those who would like more information, either to assist The WCG Exiting and Support Network or to request help, should write to me: Linda Stuhlman, WCG Exiting and Support Network, P.O. Box 6104, Hamden, CT 06517. Or, you may call me at (203) 281-7182.

One final request. Dr. Langone of the American Family Foundation is currently doing a research project relating to cult experience and suicide. If any AR readers know of a WCG-related suicide, I would like to hear from you. Of course, all information will be kept strictly confidential.

-Linda Stuhlman

Letters

Editor: Our last issue's listing of the many doctrinal changes going on in the WCG brought in a huge number of comments from readers who are both former and current WCG members. What is most remarkable about those letters is the wide range of opinion they reflect about the changes. The following excerpts show just how wide a range of views there are on the subject:

I got the September issue of AR. It just about blew my mind the changes Mr. Tkach is making in church doctrine. A lot of it doesn't make any sense at all.

-Oklahoma

Well, well. God's Apostle works in mysterious ways, doesn't he? Now let me see if I've got this right. The Kingdom of God is here already. Exactly when did it start? The beast is racism. Toward what race? The Place of Safety is not to be emphasized. I guess that makes sense considering we're living in the Kingdom of God, or maybe it's because there isn't a Place, at least not for the "little people." The existence of God cannot be proven. Does that mean my Seven Proofs God Exists booklet is out of date? The Millennium "may or may not equal 1,000 years." What do they think the word "millennium" stands for?

This is madness! Maybe HWA is turning in his grave. Maybe he resurrected himself and is inside Rod Meredith's body. But at least I know why they decided the Sabbath begins at dark, not sunset. Now they'll still have time to watch Beavis and Butt-head on Friday nights.

-Kansas

I've been in the WCG for 23 years, and I am frustrated to say the least by what I've seen, especially in the last year or so! Mr. Zimmerman [the local WCG pastor] told us, "What changes?" He said there had been only two or three "minor adjustments"! I wasn't bothered too much until this new trinity doctrine - but I have a hard time swallowing this one! I'm beginning to wonder if this is really God's one and only true church anymore. Can you help me? I don't have any money to send you because of tithing. I am not only financially bankrupt, but spiritually bankrupt as well, wondering what is the real truth.

-Arizona

I spent some time going through David Pack's list of 154 doctrinal changes, checking each one. I don't know about any other AR readers or WCG observers, but I found 75 of the 154 - almost half - to be steps in the right direction.

-David C. Strickland
England

It was a shock to read of so many changes in the WCG. It seems my judgment of Joe T. was correct. Not really the con man like HWA. No doubt he would like to correct the hurts of the past.

But for many it's just too late. The damage that has been done cannot be repaired.

-California

I have never felt so positive about the WCG in all the 20 years since I left. I just read the latest AR article about God not being a family - that they were wrong about polytheism. Praise the Lord!

-Alabama

Because of my decades-long association with the WCG I, too, have been shocked at the many recent changes. But, with study I have come to see that there is much that we all need to learn about the New Testament. For instance, many have been ridiculing the idea that racism could be the Beast. I, too, thought that was completely impossible until I read Jesus - a Revolutionary Biography [Harper Collins, 1993]. The author, Prof. John Dominic Crossan, is considered the world's leading scholar on the historical Jesus. Many of his views seem to be in harmony with the scholarship of Mr. Tkach Jr., Mr. Feazell, and Dr. Stavrinides. Dr. Crossan shows how the present or sapiential Kingdom, egalitarianism, and open commensality - for which Mr. Dankenbring has labeled Mr. Tkach Sr. "the Pancake Apostle" - were at the very heart and core of what Jesus personally taught. I therefore think we should not be too quick to ridicule those who are perhaps more learned than we and who have the courage to correct doctrinal errors.

-California

Reading about the WCG adopting the Trinity teaching made me realize how lucky I was in leaving the stranglehold of that group years ago. It just so happened that as your last issue appeared, I was reading Dr. Edmond D. Cohen's brilliant psychological study The Mind of the Bible Believer [Prometheous Books, 1988]. On page 321, there is the following pertinent statement:

The biblical statements implying a Trinity work out so that any coherent summarization one tries to make of them will be wrong. If one focuses on Scriptures indicating that God is "one" and describing the personality attributes of God the Father, then one runs counter to others, indicating the deity of Jesus and the Holy Spirit, making Jesus the ultimate judge, and conferring on the Holy Spirit such dignity that blasphemy against him is a special, unforgivable class of sin. If one focuses on the different consciousnesses and volitions of the three, then one neglects his oneness and the commandment to "have no other gods before Me" - not "before Us." If one tries to make the Trinity one God with three faces or aspects, then the ability of one to be present when another is absent and of one to be literally dead while the others remain alive go unaccounted for. No matter what the novice may understand of God's quantity, the initiate can always force him to be wrong, correct him, and admonish him to be less proud of his sin-cursed, wicked little mind, and more dependent. Having a doctrine flatly stating the contradiction seems to explain the matter. In the development of the Trinity into an express doctrine, there must have been some analogical contamination from the political triumvirates that governed Rome during two crucial periods in the years leading up to the fall of Jerusalem.

In another section of his book (p. 149), Dr. Cohen goes so far as to write that the Trinity doctrine serves as a model for the internally fragmented and confused state of mind of the mind-controlled true believer and is, therefore, useful as a mind-control tool of organized religion.

My suspicion is that, even though in one sense the WCG's acceptance of the Trinity teaching brings them more into the mainstream, in another sense it will only lead to the greater enslavement of the cult's members.

-New Jersey

As a former evangelist in the WCG during its explosive growth under Herbert W. Armstrong, I was genuinely astonished at your September lead article, "WCG Adopts Trinity Doctrine." For the past 20 years, a number of us, including Anthony Buzzard, an Oxford graduate and former instructor at Ambassador College, have made the study of the Trinity one of our primary concerns. It is important to know who the God of the Bible is.

We have found that many Trinitarian scholars reject most of the Scriptures used in support of the Trinitarian position. In other words Trinitarians, themselves, say that the verses often used to build a case for the Trinity are unconvincing. Given the circumstances of the first-century Jewish background of the early Christians and their unflinching conviction about monotheism, it would have been impossible for them to have adopted a view of God as three "Persons." Besides being a most complicated philosophical abstraction (this idea that one is somehow three and three is somehow one), the word Trinity is nowhere found in the Bible. When the authors of the New Testament say "God" (ho theos), where do they ever mean "God in three persons"? Jesus was not a Trinitarian (Mark 12:28ff.). It is hard to see why his followers should be. Paul defined the One God as the Father. I Cor. 8:4,6 is his plainly unitarian creedal statement.

Mr. Tkach, the Pastor General of the WCG, has been badly misinformed by his present cadre of theological advisors when he is quoted in Christianity Today as saying, "The Trinity is Bible teaching." Perhaps he does not know that blood has been shed over this issue. The violence of dogmatic Trinitarianism led to the death, amongst others, of Michael Servetus.

The evidence of competent scholars shows that the Trinity did not attain the status of church dogma until the fourth century and only then under great political pressure from Emperor Constantine at the Council of Nicea in 325 AD. The question one must ask is: Why did it take 300 years for this supposedly "plain Bible teaching" to become installed as dogmatic truth?

Anthony Buzzard and I will be glad to share our research. We can show that much modern scholarship has demonstrated the very shaky ground under the Trinity.

"Orthodox" mainline churches are hardly suitable places for ex-WCG members to find "fellowship." The truth about the sleep of the dead and Gospel of the Kingdom will not generally be accepted. Few Protestants know that Martin Luther and William Tyndale held the Armstrong position on the nature of death long before HWA!

Former Worldwidiers should definitely remain truth-seekers and not just abandon precious truth for the sake of convenience. If our own exploration over the past 20 years is in any way valid, contemporary Christianity is largely based on a twisting of Paul and a rejection of the historical Jesus - especially his message about the Kingdom of God.

The Armstrong experience can be a useful launching-pad to real restoration of biblical faith. Returning to mainstream traditions uncritically is a double disaster. On no account should truth be abandoned. Everything should be examined carefully, as Paul advised. Worldwidiers should now cease playing "follow-my-leader" and take discipleship to Christ seriously.

Among those who have studied cultural anthropology and comparative religion it is well known that cultures tend to create gods in their own images. Before the anthropologists, even many philosophers commented upon this same widespread phenomenon.

Voltaire had inscribed on his chapel in Ferney the cryptic statement Deo erexit Voltaire (perhaps "God arises from Voltaire") and, according to Karen Armstrong in her current best-seller, A History of God, Voltaire "suggested that if God had not existed then it would have been necessary to invent him." In the nineteenth century, Ludwig Feuerbach revealed in The Essence of Christianity that by logical deduction, the only God that man can worship is the one that man conceives of in his own imagination. Thus, in one sense, man begets God in his own image.

Isn't it interesting that when we analyze the cosmologies of the Armstrong and Tkach administrations, we find that God was cordial enough to allow his very nature to evolve into a curious reflection of each WCG administration.

Let me suggest that when Armstrong or Tkach have used the term "God" they were really subconsciously referring to themselves and their administrations rather than to the true Creator God. The parallels are evident in the following ways:

In the days of Herbert Armstrong, WCG members were led to believe that spiritual inspiration was imparted from God into the mind of their "apostle." And they were indoctrinated to accept HWA as God's conduit of inspiration to a world held captive by the invisible Lucifer. Armstrong used no ghostwriter, per se, although he did need a staff of editors. His sources were more ethereal. So, his view of the Holy Spirit was that it had no personality; it was simply an "inspiration." Armstrong's view of the Holy Spirit was that it flowed like water from a reservoir down from God, then through him first to be distributed by him to his community of true believers. (That is, of course, as long as they paid their water bills to the apostle's water company in Pasadena, in the form of tithes and generous offerings. Otherwise they would have their service cut off.) HWA's view of the Godhead gave significance and force to his tenet of government "from the top down." The old reservoir/conduit theory supposedly made Armstrong the only earthly source for the Holy Spirit and conversion.

Armstrong further believed that Jesus was fallible while on earth. Since Armstrong's death, however, his view of Jesus has been cynically dubbed "the big gamble theory" by the WCG's current top Greek scholar, Kyriacos J. Stavrinides, and his cronies. Was God the Father gambling that Christ would not give in to temptations of the flesh and lose out on eternity? In 1990, Stavrinides emphatically answered, "No!" and another Armstrong teaching fell. But Herbert Armstrong had, indeed, taken a big gamble on his own son, Garner Ted, who eventually lost out on inheriting his father's throne. During the sixties, HWA was fond of publicly and proudly referring to GTA, with obvious allusion to Matt. 3:17, as "my son, in whom I am well pleased." But then Ted fell from grace by yielding to the same lusts to which his father had earlier succumbed. Herbert's self-identification with a Father God who gambled on his son Jesus, from his temptation in the wilderness to his agony in Gethsemane, later became a distasteful paradigm for the Tkachs. So they just changed it. And in the process, they changed God.

Now, as all "insiders" are well aware, Joe Tkach is not "inspired" in the same way his predecessor was. He is not an effective communicator and his frequent verbal outbursts are reminiscent of the irrational and wrathful God of the eighteenth-century Protestant preacher Jonathan Edwards. And so Tkach's policies must be revealed to the WCG's membership by his only begotten son, Joe Jr., who seems all too prone to portray himself as a martyr. As for Tkach's "inspired" written words, those are actually incarnated by yet a third person. Yes, a person. Namely, Michael Feazell. Even though he is not as visible as the father and the son, that doesn't mean that he is not a separate and distinct person. When he writes, he does so in the name of the father. And though these three are indeed separate persons, they all speak the same thing - and always in nomine patriae - Joseph W. Tkach.

How remarkable that the WCG's God is led around by the nose so easily by mere mortals. To the fleshly trinity's dotting lemming-like followers, it never seems to occur that truth can be anything other than what their capricious leaders say it is. Under the Tkach administration, the Godview has evolved into something quite unlike that of Herbert Armstrong's. Indeed, it should be obvious to all that in today's WCG the supposed nature of God has complied with the Tkach administration's real life paradigm - the father, the son, and the holy ghostwriter.

-Bruce Renehan

Editor: Mr. Renehan, who is married and the father of four daughters, is a twenty-three year veteran of the WCG. Although 42 years of age, he is now an undergraduate student at a California university, majoring in psychology. He hopes to eventually specialize in the area of religious psychology and cultic therapy. In addition, he is the author of Daughter of Babylon-The True History of the Worldwide Church of God, a 203-page book that many of our readers have called one of the best WCG deprogramming tools they have ever seen. One who read the book said, "as a tool for getting current WCG members to wake up, I think Renehan's book is even superior to AR. AR is a little strong for the fragile minds of WCG true believers. Renehan handles the subject with kid gloves, but his documentation is very, very thorough." Bruce tells us that the number of orders for his book has not warranted it being published in hard-bound form. However, the spiral-bound facsimile (photocopied) version he is sending out is very much worth his asking price of $15 plus $3 for postage and handling. Those interested in obtaining copies should order them directly from the author. His mailing address is: P.O. Box 1551, Tehachapi, CA 93581-1551. By the way, please note the correct zip code. In our last issue we gave it one digit off. Our apologies to any who were inconvenienced by that oversight.

It is certainly amazing to me how so many persons who claim that they are dedicated to Jesus Christ seem to forget what He has said, and what we all have believed in the past, can suddenly just throw up their hands and tell everyone that they were wrong all these years, and take the pronouncements of a nobody that claims to be the representative of Christ, tells everyone that HWA was wrong, and then obey this person's substitutions. Just what are they admitting to today? Can a leopard change his spots?....

When I saw Tkach's last tape to be used as a sermon, and at the end as he was leaving the lectern he stuck out his tongue to the people, I knew that this man was not of the calibre that should be leading God's group....

Now, in your latest release you elaborate the latest ministerial conference items which were discussed. I wonder how these ministers who just several years ago, even just several months ago, were declaring God's doctrine. But now, a few weeks later, they completely change, and with a straight face change the position they had from many years of training just to ensure a paycheck. It tells me they have never known God before, nor do they know him now. They should hang their heads in shame....

With all of this behind me, I will never again join any religious group.

-California

Have you contemplated an "End is Near" issue of AR? Of course I mean an end of the WCG as we once knew it. With Joe Tkach throwing out old doctrines with the speed and finesse of a blind man cleaning out his attic, it won't be long before WCG is just one more steeple on the Protestant landscape. It is interesting that there is talk of making the Holy Days just a "concept." The church membership has picked up on all that has happened, and the falling revenues show that more and more of them now regard tithing as also just a "concept."

-Robert D. Ellsworth

Editor: AC alumnus Bob Ellsworth, besides running a successful tape duplicating business in Pasadena, is involved in marketing a number of significant books about the Bible. Some of his ads have recently appeared in national magazines. Additionally, Ellsworth, along with Dr. Robert Kuhn, Dr. Ernest L. Martin, and Dr. James Tabor, is actively involved in "The Original Bible Project" which is producing a new translation of the Bible. We hope to report on the project in a future AR. For now, those interested in obtaining information about the project may write to the above address for information.

One comment regarding WCG tithing. While rumors persist that many in the higher WCG echelons believe that their tithing doctrine needs total revision, the Tkachs don't seem to see it that way. Joseph Tkach Sr. has recently made it quite clear that he considers non-tithers to be stealing from God. Notice the following:

I have had a long interest in the Waldensians and was interested to learn that there is a town in North Carolina named Valdese which was founded by Waldensians about 1893. They are a Sunday keeping church.

I am also interested in tithing and felt that Joseph Tkach's recently calling people who don't tithe "thieves" opened my eyes to his approach.

Being in the WCG at present is like being in an unhappy marriage - people want to leave but fear the alternative, the unknown.

-Australia

Though maybe not as tough as the old bunch, the bastard offspring of the WCG are still pretty mean. Power and its associate offenses seem to be in the fore. In none of the writings I have received from them have I read much about Faith, Hope, or Love - the foundations upon which all godly fellowships must be built. These great basic virtues may be given an occasional nod, but Power is the true operative word.

-Howard Clark

I was aghast when I read in the last AR how one reader felt that The Spotlight was where to go for all the answers. It looks like many who leave the WCG replace it with right-wing, religious-right, authoritarian type philosophies and views. Let someone else do your thinking for you. Replace one rigid way of thinking with another. It still equals slavery....

Is God a Republican? Is Jesus Christ a "Dittohead"? Are The Forces of Righteousness on the side of ultraconservative, fundamentalist, right-wingers? To hear many ex-Worldwidiers and current Worldwidiers, you would think so. GTA sounds like a Rush Limbaugh wannabe. His Clinton bashing grows tiresome. Think back over the years. When Democrats were in power he would be venomous in his attacks on government evils, quoting scriptures about "the basest" being in charge.

When Republicans were in power, he was strangely silent regarding that, but would quote scriptures about showing respect to the government and about not speaking evil of dignities. (To Ron Dart's credit, on a recent tape he said God is not a Republican and refused to engage in Clinton bashing.)

Now, mind you, there is plenty wrong with Clinton and the Democrats. But same with the Republicans and the conservatives. Do conservatives have a lock on the Truth? I think not. But I think many ministers are closet Republicans. Is not all the world (both the conservative and liberal camps) deceived by Satan? Each side has some truth. It therefore angers me when ministers give a wink and a nod of approval to the conservative political camp - it shows partisanship and lack of objectivity.

-Ron Wagner

Editor: Accompanying Mr. Wagner's interesting letter was an article that appeared on the Op-Ed page of the June 12, 1993 Seattle Times. In the piece entitled "Asking twenty questions about the 'liberal media'" columnists Jeff Cohen and Norman Solomon quite persuasively demonstrate that the U.S. mass media, in stark contrast to its "liberal" public image, is actually, in fact, covertly very much politically ultra-conservative. Those interested in obtaining a free copy of that eye-opening article may write to the two columnists at P.O. Box 13193, Oakland, CA 94661. Be sure to include a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

My wife and I have been members of the WCG for about 10 years. It has only been for the last two years or so that we had begun to realize that something was seriously wrong with this "cult" group that we have been associated with.

During a time of severe personal troubles with our son's suicidal mental condition and my father's terminal cancer we found that our supposed "spiritual family" were more than unsupportive, they were actually critical of us spending time assisting our loved ones' needs. This and other factors have led us to the point of "opening our eyes" to what is really going on within this WCG cult that we had been active in for so many years....

I have just read my first Ambassador Report (AR52).... it is a breath of fresh air to find that we are not alone in the feelings of anguish from the years of mental abuse that we endured through the WCG.... Thanks for the peace of mind that I have already received through this one single copy I have read. I look forward to receiving many more in the future.

I read the Report last night before going to bed. Then I dreamed that I was shanghaied into a UFO piloted by Joseph Tkach. The stewardess - I think her name was Ellen - was serving spring water at room temperature.

Please, please, please continue to send me the AR. I will contribute as I am able. After 25 years in the WCG we are brain dead and almost destroyed.

Editor's Note

In closing this issue, let me first draw your attention to the last letter above (and, yes, it is a real letter). The reader's language may seem particularly stark, but, in fact, we receive many letters that are just as pointed. Many hundreds of WCG members, both former and current, have been expressing similar feelings. The WCG's recent history, and particularly the last few years, have left thousands of people in a state of real mental confusion and emotional distress. To many such individuals, AR represents a means of coming to grips with reality and a way of gaining emotional and spiritual stability.

We don't make it a policy to run pages and pages of letters praising our own efforts. Like other publications, we could do that. But, I think our limited resources are better used in other ways. However, I do want to emphasize to all of you who are supporting our efforts: besides providing you personally with information, your contributions are significantly helping hundreds (and quite likely, thousands) of confused and hurting people.

Regarding another matter: my thanks to all of you who wrote us after the terrible Altadena fires in late October and expressed your concerns for our safety. As some of you know, Altadena (just north of Pasadena) was the virtual center of our activities for quite a few years. As it turns out, the old Gerringer home was not harmed. (Although, in actual fact, because they are in the process of moving to Missouri, they had just sold the residence where AR had been typeset for many years and where we kept many of our files until just a few weeks before the fires.) As for the Zolas' home - they were not there at the time because their careers require them to travel so much. But their home was in real danger. One nearby house was destroyed only a block to the east, another was severely burned a block to the south, another was completely destroyed a few hundred yards to the west, and the enormous Mt. Wilson blaze actually came to within a few hundred yards of the north end of their property (this was close to the same ridge where just a few weeks earlier four firefighters lost their lives while battling another fire in the area). At one point, those of us hosing down the Zolas' home were forced to evacuate on orders from fire officials because of the thick smoke and high winds. Nevertheless, the Zolas' property was completely saved - as were the properties of our other AR friends in the area.

In addition, some wondered how we fared through the January earthquake centered in Northridge. While our nerves were jangled a bit, all of us came out OK. And now in February (tonight, just as I write this, the rains and the winds are just starting to die down), I can report that we have also survived the Altadena mudslides. So, in spite of the near-Depression economic conditions we have in Los Angeles County, we do have much to be thankful for.

Once again, my thanks to all of you who expressed your concerns and to those who are supporting our efforts.

With warmest regards,
John Trechak

---

May 1994 (AR55)

Editor: Whatever we may think of the late Herbert W. Armstrong, one thing is certain. He was the founder of a small religious empire. That empire included not just the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) and Ambassador College, but the Ambassador Foundation, the Plain Truth magazine, and, of course, The World Tomorrow broadcast and telecast. As we have previously reported, Armstrong's successor, Joseph W. Tkach, has not been so successful. While attempting to modernize and revamp the Armstrong inheritance, Tkach's efforts have resulted in the continuous decline of the organization that was left to him. Ambassador's Pasadena campus was closed and is eventually to be sold, the Plain Truth's circulation has gone from about 10 million down to under 2 million. And still the decline continues.

No More World Tomorrow

To the absolute shock of many long-time WCG observers, Tkach, in his February 24 letter to the church's members, informed his followers that after the current TV season ends there will be no more World Tomorrow telecasts. The announcement is surprising because the WCG's broadcasts and telecasts have played an important part in the WCG's history for fifty years. Not only was the program the key to bringing in new tithe-paying members (and important in replenishing the flock as many left the church), but the broadcasts were seen as an important part of "the Great Commission" of "warning modern Israel." Just last year the entire format of the telecast was changed from a one topic lecture style to a "magazine style." (The WCG's television marketing experts believe that most of the people that are attracted now to the WCG's message have difficulty keeping their minds on only one subject for a whole 20 or 25 minutes.) But even with the change in format, the responses to the telecasts have been in decline.

Current members, who are often completely confused about the direction Tkach is taking in leading the WCG, write us virtually every day asking, "What in the world is going on in this church?"

Of course, trying to figure out what is really going on inside the secretive WCG hierarchy would require the sleuthing skills and intuition of a professional Kremlinologist. But from what we have been able to piece together from sources inside the organization, it appears that Tkach may know what he is doing. To quote Shakespeare in Hamlet, "Though this be madness, there is a method in it."

The current plan appears to be to totally transform, not just the doctrines of the WCG, but its marketing plan, as well. In recent weeks, for instance, television commercials promoting the Plain Truth have been appearing between segments of many different nationally popular programs just like commercials for Scientology's Dianetics have for some time. The PT commercials have even been placed directly after the popular Rush Limbaugh show, giving the impression that they are now a sponsor of that program. (If Judd Kirk and company can't do the job, what better promoter for the WCG than Limbaugh?)

But increased use of TV advertising is only part of the shift in game plan. Tkach favors a much more open church than did his predecessor. He also senses that there is much more that he can get out of the membership than mere tithes. Already many WCG congregations have been holding "open houses" which bring to services the curious who may have only gotten a few issues of the PT. When they attend they are "love bombed" and frequently are indoctrinated into Tkachism quite rapidly. The importance the Tkach administration places on this new technique can be seen in one Worldwide News (WN) subhead: "Open houses created to move congregations toward evangelism" (WN, 7/6/93, p. 10). The new emphasis on "evangelism" is being coordinated by the WCG's new Evangelism Support Services Department headed by Tom Lapacka. And, as we reported in AR54, the WCG with its new "fundraisers" has discovered what many other denominations did years ago with their raffles and bingo nights. With the open church and fundraiser policies seen as successes, there is now talk of transforming each WCG member into a smiling and roving ambassador for the Tkach gospel. While WCG insiders claim the church has no intention yet of having members go house to house, the opening article of the September 14 WN began this way:

"Church members are our best ambassadors," said Tom Lapacka, Evangelism Support Services manager, at the open house conference in Pasadena, Aug. 19 and 20. "If evangelism is going to take place it will take place through them."

Now, if this sounds like the WCG may one day be imitating the Jehovah's Witnesses with their annoying neighborhood "ministers" or the Mormons with their youthful and self-righteous "missionaries," you are probably thinking the way Tkach is. Because the dedicated members of the JWs and the LDS churches have made their denominations among the fastest growing in the U.S., if not the world. And in what better group to attempt such a low-cost marketing plan than in the WCG - in which more than twenty years of journalistic exposés and dozens of splinter groups have not dented the total faith of its genuine true believers? To facilitate the open house marketing method, Tkach believes it would be wise for local congregations to have their own church buildings now. So he has announced a plan whereby some local congregations will build their own local church buildings.

Eventually, what takes place in these buildings may be quite different than what WCG members have experienced in the past. Tkach intends to put the WCG's television studios to work producing more video-taped "training programs" and sermons for local congregations. The plan will obviously accomplish a number of goals: The messages that WCG members will hear will be much more monitored. There will be less chance for local ministers to lead their congregations out of the WCG. There will be less of a need for local pastors. (Indeed, with a flood of video sermons from headquarters, all Tkach would really need in local areas are deacons who can set up and turn on a TV.) And, finally, videos with their editing and special effects are a much more effective method of mind control than traditional sermons and sermonettes.

Another area that Tkach is giving a new emphasis is in the recruitment of young people. This is another major WCG policy shift. For years, the WCG was one of the few cults that primarily aimed its recruitment toward older people. Worldwide stood in stark contrast to most of the other major cults which have traditionally emphasized nabbing the young. All that may now be changing. The Summer Education Program, YES (Youth Education Services - for pre-teens), YOU (Youth Opportunities United - for teens), Youth magazine, and other programs designed to keep young people in the WCG and to attract the young from without are all getting new emphasis.

Finally, look for changes in the very spirit of WCG services - services that are now to be called "Saturday services," not "Sabbath services." Already ministers are being told to keep sermons down to 45 minutes so as not to tire out the newcomers in their midst. Insiders even report that Tkach is seriously entertaining the idea of adding on a testimonial or public confession section to church services wherein men and women can rise and give short testimonies of how they overcame personal problems via "the Church." It is not clear if Tkach got the idea from the Church of God-7th Day or Church of God, International, which have both had the practice, or from Ellen Escat who was once a Pentecostal. Whatever the case, the public confessions should make for some very entertaining moments in Saturday services.

More Defections and Demotions

The WCG's historical proclivity for musical chairs continues unabated. The latest WCG big wig to leave the employ of the organization is World Tomorrow broadcaster Judd Kirk. World Tomorrow broadcaster David Hulme, while still in the WCG, is said to be "in the doghouse." What his future responsibilities, if any, will be are not known. It appears his main interests lie in the area of concert promotions. Others who have left recently include Larry Salyer, who has joined the Meredith organization.

Dennis Van Deventer, once thrown out of Ambassador College for performing a homosexual act, has been removed as head of WCG security. In that position he required WCG security personnel to carry Mace and wear black uniforms with black leather accessories. One of the things that apparently got him fired was getting drunk and loudly badmouthing Tkach while having lunch at the local Elks Club in Pasadena, a popular watering hole for WCG executives. We understand he will be kept on as a WCG minister.

Waterhouse Is Loosed Again

Just when some thought it was safe to go back into WCG services again, Pastor General Tkach has called evangelist Gerald Waterhouse out of retirement and has loosed him upon a number of "problem congregations."

During the last Feast of Tabernacles in the Philippines, Waterhouse gave his new tour sermon. The message was vintage Waterhouse: The WCG is the only true church. To Waterhouse that is a given, a supposition upon which all of his other propositions rest. Thus, to Waterhouse, based on the Roman Catholic interpretation of Matt. 16:19, God backs up any decision made by Pope Tkach "whether it is right or wrong." In the sermon, heavy on references to hell fire, Gerald Flurry ("a snow flurry") and Rod Meredith ("he loves to wield the rod, he loves authority when he is the one who has it") were attacked by name. Waterhouse claimed that Tkach was on the road almost every week speaking before local congregations. According to Waterhouse, one reason for Tkach's travels was to combat homosexuality in the church. And, said Waterhouse, "God is... revealing his nature through... Mr. Tkach." (Compare that statement to Rm. 1:20. - ed.)

To those who doubt that HWA actually appointed Tkach as his successor, Waterhouse offers three "Proofs": (1) In the last sermon he ever gave (at the Fall Festival in 1985), HWA told the members that they should be loyal to whomever is the Pastor General of the WCG. (2) In HWA's last co-worker letter, written six days before his death, HWA announced that he had designated Tkach as his successor. And (3), just days before his death there was a press release that indicated that HWA had appointed Tkach as his successor. No other evidence was offered by Waterhouse that Tkach's appointment is legitimate.

Was HWA's Designation of Tkach Valid?

There are some big problems with Waterhouse's three "proofs," above, that HWA legitimately left the Worldwide organization to Tkach.

First of all, in the last HWA sermon, Tkach was not named; HWA was just restating the well-known WCG teaching that members should be loyal to the Pastor General. Second, as regards the co-worker letter, there is much reasonable doubt that HWA, in a near-death condition and legally blind, could have knowingly signed the letter, let alone written it. Third, and most important, even if HWA designated Tkach as claimed, was the appointment valid? In the law of wills, a will is not valid if the testator is not mentally competent (for instance, if through physical illness or mental delusion he cannot fully understand what he is doing in making the will), or if he is under undue influence (as when a counsellor or aide exerts psychological persuasion for self profit), or where there is coercion (as where an aide might threaten to reveal the testator's sins after his death), or where there is fraud (as where an advisor knowingly provides the testator with false information - such as "I will never chage a thing after you pass away - and thereby benefits under the provisions of the will).

Every indication that we have is that all of these factors were quite likely in operation when HWA designated Tkach. Why HWA's son, Garner Ted Armstrong, Evangelist Roderick Meredith, or the WCG's board did not take any legal action to remedy the situation remains unanswered to this day. In fact, it remains a mystery why the WCG's current board - many disgruntled with Tkach - does not take legal action against him now.

The Mt. Pocono Mystery

With the WCG in ever increasing financial difficulty, it is not surprising that Tkach has been telling aides that he wants the church's Pasadena properties sold off, even if the WCG has to accept less than the $300 million or so it had hoped for. Such a visionless approach is one that brings shudders to many long-time members who have taken pride in the Pasadena properties that once housed Ambassador College and now are the church's headquarters. Their fears are further compounded by the realization that WCG leaders have made some atrocious land deals in the past.

One example is the WCG's quiet sale of the church's Mt. Pocono (Pennsylvania) festival site in 1987. While such a large sale could not be completely hidden from the church's membership, the lack of details provided the membership regarding the sale prompted more than a few to write us asking if we knew what was behind the transaction. It was not until last year that we at AR were able to make any inquiries about the matter. But the few facts we uncovered did give us reason to feel that members' concerns were justified. What follows is a recent letter written by AR editor John Trechak to the Board of Trustees of the Worldwide Church of God regarding the Pocono property sale:

April 1, 1994

Board of Trustees
Worldwide Church of God
300 West Green Street
Pasadena, CA 91123

Gentlemen:

A number of my readers have asked me to look into a matter that relates to your responsibilities as trustees for the Worldwide Church of God ("the Church"). Specifically, some have alleged that the board acted improperly in selling off the Church's Mt. Pocono festival site in 1987. When the allegations were first made a few years ago, I was not convinced that there was sufficient evidence to warrant such a claim. In recent months, however, after reviewing a number of legal documents and newspaper articles relating to the sale, I have come to a different view. Before publishing anything about the matter, I wish to give the Church's Board of Trustees the opportunity to answer a few questions, and that is the purpose of this letter.

The Mt. Pocono property, located in beautiful Monroe County, Pennsylvania, consisted of more than 247 acres of land, much of it landscaped, with parking lots, outdoor recreation facilities, and numerous structures including a 7,000-seat auditorium complete with sound system. Much of the property's value, you will recall, resulted from the many thousands of hours of volunteer labor donated by Church members over the years in the belief they were contributing to the long-term effectiveness of the Church. I, myself, worked at the site as a nonpaid volunteer in the summer of 1967. The property was a popular site for Church festivals and other Church activities. Not surprisingly, numerous Worldwide News articles since the sale have indicated that the Church has had some difficulty finding new festival sites that are comparable. Therefore, Question No. 1 is: Why was the property ever sold?

Some have assumed that the Church was strapped for cash in 1987 and that cash flow problems were behind the sale. But if one looks at the deeds on file with the Monroe County Recording Office, one notices that the transfer of the two tracts comprising the 247 acres were each made for "one dollar and other valuable consideration." That phrase is an interesting one. It is normally only seen on deeds where the grantor is making a gift to the grantee. The grantee in this case was a Japanese corporation called the U.S. Senda Group, Inc. This leads to Question No. 2: If the Church was actually making a gift to the Japanese corporation, what was the reason for the gift?

In spite of the "one dollar and other [unspecified] valuable consideration" language, there is evidence that some money did change hands. On the deeds for the two tracts it is stated that a Pennsylvania realty transfer tax was paid. The total amount was $25,500. In Pennsylvania, the property transfer tax rate is two percent. Therefore the required affidavit shown the county tax collector must have stated the sale price as $1,275,000 (or about one third of what WCG members were spending in the Pocono area during each year's fall festival). Now, here is where I have problems understanding this deal. Not only does the tax amount contradict the deed's language of gift, but Pennsylvania State Representative Joseph Battisto says the Senda Group actually paid $3 million for the property (see the Pocono Record 9/25/92, p. A1) which in 1986 had been appraised for $2.2 million (Pocono Record, 10/30/92, p. B2). Furthermore, in spite of the fact that Pennsylvania real estate prices have been dropping for some years now, Senda is in the process of selling the property to the state of Pennsylvania (for the creation of an arts and exhibitions center) for $4 million to $5 million (Pocono Record, 10/30/92, p. B2). These facts lead me to ask the following: Question No. 3: How much did the Senda Group actually pay for the property? And, distinctly separate, Question No. 4: How much did the Church actually receive for the property?

Perhaps the fourth question could be answered if one were to see a copy of the Church's financial statement for 1987. Because the Church regularly published complete, audited financial statements in The Worldwide News before Mr. Armstrong's death in 1986 and has done so in the last few years, one would think that the Church would have published its 1987 financial statement sometime in 1988. However, for some reason, the Church did not make available its complete 1987 financial statement for its members. That leads me to Question No. 5: Was the lack of a published and complete 1987 financial statement connected in any way to the Mt. Pocono land deal?

The suggestion some have made that the Mt. Pocono site was not sold at fair market value is one that troubles me. It is particularly troubling because the Mt. Pocono land deal received such scant coverage in The Worldwide News and other Church publications. Even the ministry was kept in total darkness on the matter. The Pastor General's Report Index for the relevant years shows that no articles mentioned the impending sale. I'm sure you realize that your fiduciary duties as trustees would have made it legally imperative that in selling off the Mt. Pocono site the board would exercise great care in getting a fair return by properly listing the properties, widely advertising its availability, asking the field ministry's help in locating potential buyers, taking bids, etc. I have not heard or read anything regarding the sale that would indicate such care was exercised by the board. In fact, certain board members from that era have stated that it was common for Church officers to routinely make decisions of that magnitude independently and to inform the trustees post hoc. While I know that Pastor General Tkach, his assistant Michael Feazell, and church treasurer Leroy Neff were privy to the sale, I wonder to what degree other board members knew what was actually transpiring. That leads me to Question No. 6: Did the board actually agree to the sale based upon full disclosure of its details and with full discussion of its merits before the decision to sell (as is legally required) - or was there only supposed agreement after the decision to sell by what Herbert Armstrong used to refer to as his "dummy board"?

The Worldwide Church of God is not the only organization that likes to operate in secrecy. Those currently negotiating the sale of the Senda Group's Mt. Pocono property have been criticized similarly. For instance, Charles Sperrazza, Republican candidate for Pennsylvania's 118th state House district, said of the Senda-Pennsylvania negotiations: "This project is being foisted on the taxpayers in virtual secrecy.... We need a full disclosure about the project - facts will show that the beneficiaries will be bureaucrats, with the burden falling on the taxpayers." (Pocono Record, 10/30/92, p. B2.) So secrecy surrounds the property to this day. But not just the property, the Senda Group, too.

In reading a report I received from Dun and Bradstreet, I discovered that U.S. Senda is a corporation formed in California on 2/9/87 - in other words, just weeks before the Mt. Pocono land deal was consummated. The report states that U.S. Senda is primarily involved in "amusement and recreation," but virtually no other information about this corporation is publicly available. Dun and Bradstreet did not even have figures as to any of its revenues or its number of employees. From incorporation papers I received from an investigator in Japan, I discovered that U.S. Senda Group is a subsidiary of Nihon Format, Inc., a corporation whose board is composed of only Senda family members and whose president is Katsuhiko Senda. Now, while U.S. Senda may be involved in only amusement and recreation, Nihon Format is involved in much, much More: Buying, selling, leasing, and administration of real estate; management of hotels, restaurants, and bars; sale of medical equipment; manufacture of telephone devices; sale of furniture and sports equipment; sale of language study equipment; sale of precious metals; consultation regarding the establishment of sites for conventions and trade fairs, etc. In other words, U.S. Senda is a part of a fairly large and diversified parent corporation. Nevertheless, a few weeks ago, while looking over the deeds in the Mt. Pocono land deal, I noticed a very curious thing. In the filed recording papers, the official representative for Senda in California was a gentleman with an office not in San Francisco, downtown Los Angeles, or Century City as one might expect, but in Pasadena, of all places. What a coincidence, I thought. Then when I went to the address listed on the papers, I found that U.S. Senda was no longer there. The building was not an office building, but an indoor baseball batting club. Later I discovered that in 1987 the building was ostensibly only a warehouse. You know the building. It is directly behind Mijares Mexican Restaurant, not more than a few hundred yards from the Church's Hall of Administration. In fact, it is just across the 210 freeway from the section of Waverly Drive where former WCG attorney and chief accountant Stanley Rader lives. Another strange coincidence, I thought. But that's not all. When I discovered where U.S. Senda had moved to (200 E. Del Mar Blvd. in Pasadena), deliverymen told me that the suite at which the Senda Group received mail is also an address where Osamu Gotoh and associates received mail. I'm sure you gentlemen are well aware of the serious and well-documented allegations made against Mr. Gotoh, Mr. Rader's friend, in the 1977 issue of Ambassador Report. With that in mind, Question No. 7 is: Did Mr. Gotoh have anything to do with the Mt. Pocono land deal?

In the last few years, numerous articles have appeared in the Los Angeles Times regarding the vast amount of U.S. real estate purchased by Japanese corporations in the last decade. Some of those corporations are known to have ties to organized crime. I have no information that the Senda Group is such a corporation. Nevertheless, the manner in which the Mt. Pocono land deal was carried out makes me wonder what was really behind the deal. You should too. Let's not forget how the Senda people were able to renege on a key part of the deal with Worldwide in 1988 when they refused to honor a contract provision allowing WCG to lease the property for the Feast (Worldwide News, 8/8/88, p. 1). That such a major contract breach was possible leads me to Question No. 8: Were the attorneys representing WCG in the deal exclusively interested in protecting the WCG's interests, or were they more interested in facilitating a good deal for Senda?

This leads me to one final query. Question No. 9: Will the Church's Pasadena properties now be disposed of in the same manner?

Gentlemen, I look forward to your timely response.

With warmest regards,
John Trechak
Editor & Publisher

Editor: What follows is the complete and unedited April 11 response of Leroy Neff, Secretary of the WCGs Board:

Dear Mr. Trechak:

This will acknowledge receipt of your letter of April 1, 1994, directed to the Board of Trustees of the Worldwide Church of God.

The other time I wrote you was to ask that you discontinue sending me your unsolicited publication. Thank you for complying with my request.

I do not read your material, but others who do, tell me that the avowed purpose of Ambassador Report is to destroy the Worldwide Church of God. Also, that your writings have been salacious and slanted. Based on what little I read years ago, this evaluation would appear correct.

In view of this kind of a comment, we do not view you as being the appropriate candidate to oversee the Church's finances, or instruct its trustees on their legal responsibilities. We respond to your letter only to impede what we believe is an obvious intent to mislead your readers with misstatements and false innuendos - not because we feel you have any credence or credibility.

Contrary to what you say, the Church has not had difficulty in finding new Feast sites.

We are advised by legal professionals that "one dollar and other valuable consideration," is not normal on deeds of gift. A gift is without consideration.

The property was not gifted to anyone, but rather, sold for a full and valuable consideration.

You asked what was paid for the property and how much the Church received for the property. The price that was paid was the price that was negotiated in an arms length transaction. The price was not, as you have falsely suggested, below fair market value. The property was in fact sold for a price which exceeded the appraised value as determined by two licensed appraisers.

The sale was completely audited by Arthur Andersen and Co. If the complete financial statement for 1987 was not published in the Worldwide News, it had nothing to do with the sale of the Pocono property.

You are incorrect that the fiduciary duties of the Trustees require the specific action you refer to. The Board did act with full disclosure before, not after, the transaction.

You raise a lot of irrelevant and unfounded speculations regarding the "Senda Group." We suggest you refer any such questions to the Senda Group.

The attorneys representing the Church in selling the Pocono property were interested in protecting the Church's interest and they did not represent the "Senda Group."

There are other false and misleading innuendos in your letter and the fact that we do not take time to address them all should not be considered an admission to the truth of any of the matters in your letter.

Sincerely yours,
Leroy Neff
Secretary of the Board

Editor's reply:

Dear Mr. Neff:

I want to thank you for your enlightening and entertaining letter. But there are a few points I want to mention. I would have written you a personal note, but as you do not want to receive mail from me I thought this would be the proper forum to address those points.

First off, however, let me just comment that although I have not been made aware of what law firm you are currently relying on for your legal advice, I want to express my admiration for their chutzpa and/or sense of humor. As one who has had a tiny bit of legal training myself, I find those qualities quite admirable, especially in young lawyers. Let me draw your attention to but one example of how that chutzpa/humor manifested itself in your comments. Paragraph six of your letter states: "We are advised by legal professionals that 'one dollar and other valuable consideration' is not normal on deeds of gift. A gift is without consideration." Now I ask: "and other valuable consideration"? Like what? A buck's worth of wampum beads? Marbles? Baseball cards? Well, let's put that question aside just for the moment so we can review some legal fundamentals.

As every law school casebook on contracts points out, consideration does usually distinguish a contract from a mere gift. Furthermore, courts generally will not examine whether the value of the consideration was commensurate to the bargained for exchange in a contract. However, with perhaps a very few exceptions, judges are not idiots and so the courts do recognize the concept of "nominal consideration." Essentially, nominal consideration exists when a donative promise is falsely put by the parties into the form of a bargain. Now, I don't want to bore you with a long list of cases, so let me just quote from a popular legal work you probably have in your own library, Black's Law Dictionary:

Nominal consideration. One bearing no relation to the real value of the contract or article, as where a parcel of land is described in a deed as being sold for "one dollar," no actual consideration passing, or the real consideration being concealed.

Now notice what law professors John D. Calamari and Joseph M. Perillo write in their famous Contracts hornbook (2nd edition, p. 139):

Economic inadequacy, then, except in one unusual situation [Where "Unthinking lawyers have sometimes run afoul of the general rule by drafting such meaningless clauses as 'in consideration of $1.00 by each to the other paid.' " - p.138], does not prevent any bargained for detriment from constituting consideration. On the other hand, economic inadequacy may constitute some circumstantial evidence of fraud, duress, overreaching, undue influence, mistake or that the detriment was not in fact bargained for.

I don't want to turn this note into a legal brief, but let me suggest that your lawyers were either pulling your leg or have simply just not done their homework. I suspect your law firm is a young and impoverished one without access to the Lexis or Westlaw computerized research systems. So let me suggest that your lawyers begin their legal research with the long line of cases beginning with the famous old case of Fischer v. Union Trust Co., 138 Mich. 612, 101 N.W. 852 (1904). They should also read the Restatement of Contracts, Second, Sec. 87, Comment b.

I'll summarize for them. Where consideration is only token, courts will usually conclude that a gift was involved, rather than a bargained for exchange. In such cases, many courts will void such pseudo-contracts. In the case of the Pocono land deal, the use of "in consideration of one dollar and other valuable consideration" on the deeds for the purchase (?) of hundreds of acres of land logically leads to what I asked in Question 2: If the Church was actually making a gift to the Japanese corporation, what was the reason for the gift? You have not answered that yet to my satisfaction. By the way, if you have any doubt what "for one dollar and other valuable consideration" means in Monroe County, Pennsylvania, just do what I did. I called the county register's office and asked the young lady clerk what it meant there. Her pointed answer? "It means a gift was made."

Now, with that preliminary comment out of the way, let me be more to the point. I am truly sorry that you have clouded the issues surrounding the Pocono land deal with vague references to what you believe to be the Report's avowed purposes. (By the way, our actual purposes were clearly stated in our very first letter of 1976 and I will be glad to send you a copy should you ever decide to come out of your hiding ostrich posture.) You admit your opinion of our purposes are based only on hearsay and a brief perusal of perhaps a few of our early issues. Ostensibly based upon such unfounded views of our supposed purposes, you (and I must assume the rest of the board) have refused to clarify why so many dubious coincidences surround this real estate transaction - a transaction for which, in spite of the deeds' language of gift, there is every indication that there were millions of dollars involved.

With so many serious questions raised, I cannot understand why you could not have put aside your prejudiced view of the Report and simply answered our nine little questions. While you and your lawyers were careful to justify your own actions and the actions of the unnamed lawyers who were involved in the 1987 deal, you specifically evaded answering questions 1, 3, 4, 7, and 9. The evasion of answering question 7 regarding Mr. Gotoh is all too obvious. But even more amazing is the evasion of answering questions 3 and 4. The significance is this: If newspaper reports are correct that Senda actually paid $3 million for the property, and if Monroe County tax records, are correct that WCG received only $1,275,000 for the property (in spite of the language of gift on the deed), then what became of the difference - the $1,725,000? Who got that?

Most important today, however, is this question: Is history now about to repeat itself in the sale of the Church's Pasadena properties? That was question 9 and you chose not to answer that one either.

Mr. Neff, is it Ambassador Report, or isn't it really the Worldwide Church of God's Board of Trustees, you included, who are the ones with "an obvious intent to mislead readers with misstatements and false innuendos"?

Incidentally, my recent letter to the Senda Group's president in Japan was returned unopened. We are presently attempting to locate his whereabouts.

-J.T.

WCG Ministers Rake in the Big Bucks

Have you ever wondered what the WCG's ministers and executives make? A highly reliable WCG insider recently disclosed what Tkach pays himself and his underlings. Tkach's salary is $335,000 per year. Evangelist rank ministers get $120,000 to $130,000 per year. Department heads and regional directors get $80,000 to $81,000 per year. Field ministers with 15-25 years experience get $50,000-$55,000. Ministerial assistants receive about $36,000. And ministerial trainees $26,500. These figures do not include numerous perks such as parsonage allowances, health and life insurance, use of company cars, travel allowances, gifts of ample second tithes to spend, etc. Our insider indicates that like HWA before him, Tkach has virtually all of his daily living expenses paid for him by the church in addition to his salary. Tkach is said to give about $80,000 back to the church in tithes and offerings each year. Retirees from the church are paid up to 80 percent of what they earned while in - as long as they keep their mouths shut.

The Puzzling Pogorelich

The World Tomorrow may soon be gone, Ambassador College's old Pasadena campus is on the chopping block, and the WCG may be disintegrating, but the music continues on with the Ambassador Foundation. Subsidized by the WCG's tithepayers to the tune of about $1.5 million per year (necessary because even with the exorbitantly high price of tickets to Ambassador shows and concerts, the Ambassador concert series is not self-supporting), this year's series continues with a line of world-class artists. (One example: the August 7 Brazilian jazz show was a huge success.) But not only does the concert series continue, this year Ambassador added a new event - The Ivo Pogorelich International Piano Competition.

The competition was held at Ambassador Auditorium December 2-16. Beginning with 40 pianists from 13 countries, by the third round the group was whittled down to eight finalists. At the competition's conclusion there was a tie for the silver medal with Evgeny Zharafants, 34, of Russia and Irina Plotnikova, 39, of Russia each being awarded a silver sculpture and $5,000 in cash. There was also a tie for the gold medal with Michael Kieran Harvey, 32, of Australia and Juilliard student Edith Chen, 23, each receiving a gold sculpture and $75,000 in cash. All eight finalists received recording contracts with the Naxos and Marco Polo labels. Presenting the awards were Carmen Romano Lopez de Portillo, former first lady of Mexico, and Sir Edward Heath, former prime minister of Great Britain.

Those of us who attended the event were impressed not only with the high calibre of piano artistry displayed by all the participants, but also by the overall excellence of the Ambassador Auditorium personnel. Nevertheless, there were some disturbing aspects to the competition.

The first question raised by many who followed the competition was: Was it rigged? While no one would claim that the four medalists were not all very fine musicians and may have won even under different circumstances, many pianophiles in the audience came away unhappy with the results. For instance, listening to the audience's applause at the final awards presentation, one got the impression that the majority of the audience avored the dynamic, yet very poetic, Olivier Cazal of France. Undoubtedly, Cazal felt similar to many of his fans. At the awards ceremony the day after the winners were announced, Cazal's encore consisted of only the funeral march from Chopin's Second Sonata.

Cazal was not the only participant who was disappointed with the way the contest was structured. Pulitzer-prize-winning critic Martin Bernheimer wrote in The Los Angeles Times (12/15/93, p. F1, "More Questions Than Answers"):

Some experts were surprised that the makeup of the international jury was kept a secret until the day before the first round. When the roster was finally announced veterans of both foreign and domestic wars found it oddly constituted at best, lightweight at worst.

A noted artists' manager in attendance, Maxim Gershunoff, charged cronyism. The names of famous teachers and performers were scarce, in any case, and some of the judges' credentials seemed inflated. The 13-member panel includes only three Americans, two of whom find primary employment as radio announcers.

(The competition's jury contained not one famous pianist from the Southern California area in spite of the fact that many make their homes here. There was no Leon Fleisher on the jury. No Daniel Pollack. No Leonard Pennario. - ed.) Bernheimer continued:

More disturbing, however, were recurring worries about nepotism. To serve as president of the jury, Pogorelich appointed his wife, Alice Kezeradze, identified in the puffy program book as a pianist with "a brilliant concert career" and "an outstanding pedagogue." She would function as an active, voting president, and was given veto power over her colleagues.

Troubles began, as always, as soon as the first contestants were eliminated. Several of the instant losers were artists already enjoying distinguished careers, but that happens. One person's Cliburn is another's Votapek.

Among the predictable cries of distress, however, one heard strange accusations regarding Kezeradze. One contestant, speaking on condition of anonymity, claimed that four colleagues in the competition had studied with the jury president, and that one of them was related to her - possibly a niece.

Specific queries about these matters were duly addressed to the Ambassador information officer. After checking the matter out, he said only Pogorelich could answer, and would do so during the first intermission at the finals, Monday. Later he said Pogorelich would be too busy to speak to the press. Meanwhile, Kezeradze said her husband would speak to the press, but she herself could do so only after the contest was over.

After four hours of obfuscation, an angry Pogorelich agreed to an impromptu all-too-public chat when encountered on the steps of the auditorium.

"I'm ashamed to be shaking your hand," he shouted upon being introduced by the information officer. Finally, he and his wife grudgingly answered a few quick questions.

The questions concerning the competition did not end there. When at year's end, Times critic Bernheimer gave the Pogorelich Competition one of his infamous Beckmesser Awards (the "So-who-needs-judges award"), many pianophiles wondered why the WCG was so careless in not avoiding the appearance of evil in a competition supposedly designed to enhance the Foundation's, and the WCG's, image. Many WCG members wondered why the WCG would even be financing such an event when church income has been seriously declining for over two years. Those fearful of the "New World Order" wondered why the WCG asked so many multinational corporations to participate (some, like Occidental Petroleum, PacTel Cellular, and Lufthansa Airlines, donated funds). Many local Christians could not understand why, as one of the special prizes awarded, the Foundation gave a Croatian sculpture of a reclining nude with her breasts high in the air. (The sculpture, titled "Sunbathed Woman," is now on display in the church's Hall of Administration.) And the four winners' sculptured trophies - looking like a burning bush viewed from one side, but a cupped hand containing a piano when viewed from the other side - were suspected by some conspiracy buffs as having overtones of Masonic symbology.

The most intriguing question, however, is why did the Ambassador Foundation decide on Pogorelich as their front man? The Yugoslavian pianist, who records for Deutsche Gramophone, is no amateur. He is often praised for his imaginative Bach, and critics have hailed his recording of Ravel's Gaspard de la nuit (three pieces about the seductions and terrors of demons). Nevertheless, many critics have called Pogorelich's playing uneven and his interpretations frequently eccentric. One critic even referred to one of Pogorelich's performances of the Tchaikovsky First Piano Concerto as "perverse." Ironically, that performance took place at Ambassador the night Tkach presented Pogorelich with a special award for excellence. In his highly respected work The Art of the Piano (Summit Books, 1989, pp. 203-4), distinguished Juilliard professor David Dubal writes that Pogorelich is a master of publicity and self-promotion, but that:

Pogorelich is not comfortable in Romantic music. He is inhibited in it and relies on an unconventional, often overblown approach. His Scriabin Second Sonata, Poems, and Etudes are straightlaced, stiff, and tasteless, with no sign at all of the music's eroticism. Nor is he a master colorist, and his Chopin, while sometimes refreshing, is stern, even puritanical. It is seldom saturated with youthful verve, and it can be pedantic, as in some etudes or the C-sharp minor Scherzo. His Chopin Polonaises in F-Sharp minor and C minor are gloomy conceptions....

He is not a truly successful concerto player. Pogorelich needs the stage to himself.

Most certainly, Ambassador's claim that Pogorelich is the "No. 1 Piano Superstar of His Time!" is a highly inflated one. Even critic-broadcaster Jim Svjeda, who was one of the competition's judges, has referred to Pogorelich as a "largely self-indulgent punk" (The Record Shelf Guide to the Classical Repertoire, p. 307).

That the supposedly Christian Ambassador Foundation would settle upon Pogorelich as a front man is even more surprising when you consider his personal image. Aloof and notoriously arrogant, frequently seen smoking in public, and with an eastern European accent reminiscent of Bela Lugosi's Count Dracula, no less, many find him inaccessible. (Rather like David Hulme - a kindred spirit perhaps?) Pogorelich's wife, Alice Kezeradze, is many years Ivo's senior - she was teenage Ivo's piano teacher, in fact. (She has been described as a female tyrant not unlike Tkach's female mistress Ellen Escat - another coincidence?) And then there are those persistent rumors in classical music circles that baby-faced Ivo is HIVpositive. (As we go to press, Pogorelich has yet to respond to our letter to him about the matter.) Could it be that the Tkach organization chose Pogorelich to represent them out of sympathy? Far more important, however, are two questions. One is frequently asked by leading authorities in the classical music field: Are not great music and the spirit of competition completely incompatible? The second is frequently asked by religious thinkers: Is the way of competition to be God's way in the World Tomorrow?

Questions, questions. But as Martin Bernheimer, the Times' famous music critic wrote, the Ambassador Foundation gives us few answers.

Flurry Again Praises Flurry

It's embarrassing to have to report a story like this. But Gerald Flurry is at it again. In the February 1994 issue of his Philadelphia Trumpet he again blew his own horn - loudly. The cover story was a piece by Flurry in which he extolled his own prophetic powers in supposedly having predicted the January Northridge earthquake. Flurry began his editorial: "I made some astounding statements about the California earthquake - BEFORE IT STRUCK! Let me quote myself from a sermon given to our Church on December 21, 1991..." He then went on to give a quote from his sermon which contained this "prophecy":

What if there is another massive earthquake on this earth - maybe from two years by the time this booklet [about the book of Amos] goes out? I'm not saying that's going to happen. I don't know. But I KNOW THAT THE LION HAS ROARED, BRETHREN!

Later in the article he quoted from his own work, Malachi's Message: "You are going to see THE DATE OF MR. ARMSTRONG'S DEATH TAKES ON MORE SIGNIFICANCE AS TIME GOES ON. Mr. John Amos and I were disfellowshipped on December 7, 1989 - 40 days before the anniversary of Mr. Armstrong's death. The number 40 is significant in the Bible."

The fact that the Northridge quake (actually centered in nearby Reseda) happened on January 17, not on January 16 (the anniversary of HWA's death), didn't phase Flurry. After all, he was just a few hours off in his prophecy. So, he said, that didn't matter.

Herbert Armstrong did not see it that way. He used to say that a true prophet could predict totally unexpected events to the exact time of their happening (see his booklet The Proof of the Bible - that is, if you can locate a copy). That reasoning actually made some sense. To illustrate, what if the editor of this publication suddenly thought he was a prophet and made the following pronouncements:

I don't know what his name will be, but I prophesy that the next President of the United States will be accused of having had an affair and he will also be accused of financial improprieties sometime in his past. This will show that he has human faults.

I don't know exactly when it will occur, but I prophesy that within the next two years, there will be tornadoes in the state of Oklahoma. This will show that God is not pleased with the Philadelphia Church of God headquartered there.

I don't know the exact date of the article, but I prophesy that next year there will be a newspaper article about a major natural disaster involving snow and in that article the author will use the word flurry. This will be proof positive that Gerald Flurry is a curse upon the earth and that I am a prophet.

Now, aside from the fact that making such prophecies would bring in much income (because there are SO MANY foolish people out there who love such nonsense), those statements are not worth anything. That is because, as they are phrased, they only express the normally expected, and anyone who thinks about it for a few minutes could make the same "Prophecies." (Actually, if someone regularly made statements to the opposite of the above, and they all came true, he might have a better claim to the title of prophet.)

All of this seems lost on Flurry. In his editorial he humbly writes: "We must understand that my stunning statements are not based on human reasoning [true - ed.] or on human prediction [not true - ed.]. They are based on God's word and His Work."

The Northridge quake was certainly no picnic - especially for those who lost loved ones or property in the ordeal. Nevertheless, it may not have been the total disaster that Flurry has envisioned.

Aside from the fact that the quake helped wake up California to the dangers inherent in some of its building code miscalculations and has spurred industry to switch to "telecommuting," something badly needed in the crowded area, it may have helped Southern California in other unexpected ways. Notice this quote from the Los Angeles Times (3/7/94, p. A1, "Quake Seen Speeding Recovery of Economy"):

... seven weeks after the Northridge earthquake sparked fears of regional paralysis, the surprise is that Southern California's economy is not faring worse.

Sky-high estimates of up to $30 billion in damage have been slashed to $13.5 billion in a UCLA study. Freeway repairs in Los Angeles are preceding much more rapidly than in the Bay Area after the 1989 Loma Prieta quake. Federal money is coursing through the pipeline from Washington.

"The irony of it is that this bad event that created a lot of hardship is going to start economic expansion about a year before it would have happened otherwise," said private economist Mark Zandi, who expects a recovery this summer, based on his analysis of Hurricane Andrew and other natural disasters on their regions.

Flurry is just not getting the respect he thinks he deserves. In England, when the Daily Express ran one of his ads (with a photo of HWA) on Feb. 12, the editors fittingly put it next to a wristwatch ad that had in large print the headline, "Watch out - there's a fake about." Then, on Sunday, Feb. 20, the Edmond Evening Sun (pp. 1A and 6A) ran a front-page exposé on Flurry titled "Is It A Cult Or 'God's Church'?" (those who would like a photocopy of that article by Curtis Killman may obtain one for $2.50 by writing to the Edmond Evening Sun, Circulation Department, P.O. Box 2470, Edmond, OK 73083. Be sure to give the name of the article, date of issue, and the pages.)

One final comment on Flurry. In our last issue we reported how in October, Flurry had been arrested when found drunk behind the steering wheel of a car parked in a university parking lot. To his followers, Flurry explained away this episode by saying the law was unfair and should be changed and by claiming that the officer who arrested him, Brandon C. Berryhill, was a WCG member (the WCG denies this). On February 23, Flurry pleaded nolo contendere to the main charge of "APC" - being in actual physical control of an automobile while intoxicated (like DUI - Driving Under the Influence) and was fined $400 plus $200 in victim's compensation plus court costs. In addition, he may face a term of incarceration. His date of sentencing has been suspended to Feb. 23, 1995. But Flurry apparently doesn't feel he will ever have to show up. He has been telling followers he expects to flee to Petra in Jordan sometime this year and perhaps as soon as June. We here at the Report wish him a pleasant journey.

Petra in the News

Flurry and thousands of others in the WCG and its spinoffs who have a hankering to spend a few years living in a dry, dusty cave in the Near East will be interested to know that an absolutely fascinating article on Petra recently appeared in The New York Times (1/4/94, p. B9). Titled "Ancient City of Petra Is Yielding Its Secrets," the article contained a wealth of information many Petra buffs will find mesmerizing.

For example, while most of us know of Petra's caves and cliff dwellings where Lawrence of Arabia and 500 of his men briefly lived during WWI, few know that under Petra's sand dunes lies an ancient city that once housed perhaps 30,000 people. Archaeologists are now attempting to remove the sand. The ancient metropolis, located in an area the Bible calls the Valley of Moses, was an important city from the third century B.C. until the second century A.D. During the Augustin Age, the Nabatean kingdom which contained Petra was responsible for 25 percent of the gross economic output of Rome. It was even a center for artists and scholars. Most significant today, however, is that the new excavations at Petra are turning up scores of papyrus scrolls, some dating from biblical times, that may eventually prove as revealing to historians as the Dead Sea Scrolls.

Petra buffs who want to read the lengthy article should first check with their local libraries. If they do not have it, a photocopy of the article may be obtained by calling the Times' clipping service at 1-800-543-6867. Petra buffs may also want to see our article on devil worship at Petra in AR32.

More Groups!

In our last issue we mentioned numerous WCG offshoots that we view as "Armstrongite." The list was by no means complete. Since that issue went to press we have learned of the existence of more such offshoots. Although we have few details about what they teach, here are some we learned about in just the last few weeks: Biblical

Church of God, P.O. Box 612440, San Jose, CA 95161. Bible Study Association, 28877 Sumerville, Eugene, OR 97405. Family of God, 7119 Western Trail, San Antonio, TX 78244. United Biblical Church of God, P.O. Box 547, Crystal River, FL 32623. Bible Education Services (Donald L. Hudgel, Executive Director), P.O. Box 736, Troy, OH 45373. The Church of the Great God (John Rittenbaugh, Pastor), P.O. Box 471846, Charlotte, NC 28247-1846. The Fellowship Church of God (Les Pope, Pastor and Editor of The Fellowship Newsletter), P.O. Box 300143, Midwest City, OK 73140-0143. And Church of God (of Peace), P.O. Box 53, Farnborough, Hants. GU14OYZ, United Kingdom.

Those who are fascinated by the WCG offshoots and their histories will find the research of one of our readers very helpful. Mr. Alan Ruth has put together an amazing flow chart of the WCG's offshoots, complete with the names of their leaders and their dates of creation. He has also written a 15-page paper on the subject. Those who would like a copy of the flow chart and the paper should send $2 to Mr. Alan Ruth, 30290 W. 12 Mile Rd., Apt. 204E, Farmington Hills, MI 48334.

Where Do They Go?

One of the questions we get asked quite frequently is: When members of the WCG leave, where do they go? There is no way for us to provide anything other than a very general answer to that question. We have never had a means of doing a survey or careful study of the question. But based on almost twenty years of doing AR and receiving many thousands of letters, we have a rough idea of what a survey would reveal.

A very large percentage of those who leave Worldwide gravitate to other churches that are Armstrongite (we reported on the major ones in our last issue). Very, very few join mainstream, orthodox denominations. In fact, we at AR have personally known only about two or three dozen individuals over the years who have done so. One who did is Ambassador graduate and former WCG employee Bob Gentet (211 Probasco St., Lawrenceburg, IN 47025) who now pastors a Missouri Synod Lutheran Church congregation in Indiana.

A few former WCG members attend Unitarian-Universalist Church services as a way of giving their children church-attending experience without strong indoctrination. (See our letters section for one example.) A Pasadena Unitarian minister once told AR that his denomination was ideal for people who were no longer religious but who still wanted to attend church services.

Many who leave the WCG are so disillusioned with organized religion that they almost never attend any church services and want nothing to do with any church organization. One California reader recently wrote us:

I am grateful to Herbert Armstrong for two things: First he showed me by scripture that all other churches are wrong. Then by fourteen years of example he showed me that his church was also wrong. Now I know I will never need some man or group to tell me about God.

Nevertheless, while many who have been in the WCG leave with the attitude that they would prefer to keep all other religious groups at arm's length, many in this category still retain a strong interest in spiritual matters and the Bible. What follows is a summary of what such non-Armstrongite ex-WCG members frequently find interesting and often comment upon in letters to AR. As in past issues we are giving various addresses. However, we must again emphasize: this is done only so that readers can do their own research. By mentioning a group or publication, we are not endorsing all their ideas. Nor are we implying that they endorse all of ours.

Associates for Scriptural Knowledge (ASK), P.O. Box 2500, Portland, OR 97225.

While some would call this organization "Armstrongite" because its director is Dr. Ernest L. Martin, once the head of Ambassador College's Theology Department (and later president of the Foundation for Biblical Research), Martin's theological and historical views often differ so much from those of both Herbert Armstrong and Joseph Tkach, we don't believe it best to classify ASK as a WCG offshoot. However, we do believe that of all the ministers and college professors that have left the WCG over the years, no one has had more of an impact on the WCG, and beyond, than Martin.

Although most of Martin's theology can be described as Pauline, some of his ideas are quite original, even controversial, and have produced a good number of critics. Nevertheless, Martin also has had some important publishing successes. The scholarship in his book The Star That Astonished the World has been used as the basis for Christmas and Nativity programs in over 600 planetariums around the world. Many astronomers now consider this book the authoritative work on the subject (see the 12/93 issue of Imprimis). His book Secrets of Golgotha, in which he argues that Jesus was actually crucified on a tree on the Mount of Olives, has received a number of favorable reviews. A number of scholars have stated that in his book The Original Bible Restored, Martin has actually discovered the correct ordering of the books of the Bible. Martin's book 101 Bible Secrets and The Tithing Dilemma are very popular among those new to Bible study. And many ex-Worldwidiers have said that his booklet The ABC's of the Gospel is the best work they ever read concerning a modern Christian's legal position in Christ.

Over the years Martin has written and spoken on numerous topics that continue to be debated in WCG circles: the nature of the New Covenant, the Jewish Calendar (he has studied its problems for more than thirty years), "counting" Pentecost, the Trinity (he has articles and tapes on the subject which seems to echo some of the views of Anthony Buzzard), universal reconciliation (some of his views are similar to those of the Concordant organization), and progressive revelation (among his many writings on that subject, his March, 1994 article is highly recommended).

Martin's latest book is titled The Place of the New Third Temple. In it he puts forth the astonishing theory that not only will there soon be a new Temple built in Jerusalem, but that Christians will have a part in building it and that "the Jewish authorities will actually devote the building to Christ Jesus and to the basics of his Gospel message."

In addition to his books, papers, and lecture tapes, Martin publishes a newsletter, The ASK Communicator, in which he discusses the Bible, ancient history, and Bible prophecy with its possible applications to modern times. Many of his insights on the Near East are undoubtedly based on his many years of doing archaeological work in that region. Those who would like more information about ASK should write to their Portland address and request a price list for their publications.

Dr. Gene Scott, Box 1, Los Angeles, CA 90053. W. Eugene Scott, Ph.D. is someone a number ex-Worldwidiers have turned to for answers. Scott has written 20 books and publishes Truth magazine for his contributors. His Festivals of Faith program is usually taped at his University Cathedral, a restored United Artists theater in downtown Los Angeles. His telecasts can be seen 24 hours a day in many markets and his shortwave broadcasts can be heard 24 hours a day around the world. He broadcasts live over Radio Moscow in Russia and from Mt. Hermon in Israel.

Those who have never seen one of Scott's programs have missed one of the great entertainers of our time. Tune in to one of his telecasts and you will see Scott, bearded and with long silver hair, probably wearing a cowboy hat, a jockey's cap, or the tricorne of an eighteenth century admiral. Or, if he's in the mood, he might be in black wearing a clergyman's collar. He also frequently wears two pairs of glasses simultaneously and often puffs on a large cigar while doing Bible studies. Nevertheless, while being one of TV's most colorful characters, Scott is no dummy. He earned his Ph.D. in philosophies of education at Stanford. In addition, Scott is an artist and occasionally he will take bids on some of his paintings during his telecasts. He's also not poor. He lives in one of Pasadena's largest mansions. Some say he now has two.

Scott's theology is mostly Pauline. On a recent broadcast he stated that the "judaizers" of Galatians were probably none other than the followers of James, the brother of Jesus (see Acts 15). Scott frequently teaches about demonology, pyramids, Atlantis, and a number of other exotic subjects. But over the years, he seems to have also picked up a good number of ideas from Herbert Armstrong. During the WCG's legal battles in 1979, Scott, who was then having his own legal problems with the government, sided with the WCG, and Stanley Rader appeared on Scott's TV program as an adoring guest. It was soon after that Scott began teaching his own brand of Israel Identity. Today he also teaches that Jesus had the last supper on a Tuesday night Passover, was crucified on the afternoon of the next day, a Wednesday, and was resurrected late Saturday, not Sunday. HWA, of course, taught the same thing.

Naturally, Scott is big on the tithing doctrine. To those that promise to listen to "the teaching" at least once per week, contribute weekly, and call in to the station at least once per week Scott grants the privilege of becoming a "King's House" and those so privileged are given a "King's House number" when they make their initial pledge. Those that promise to tithe are given a "King's Tither" number. Scott is very serious about this. If he gets the feeling that of his 50,000 King's Houses not enough are sending in their money, or if not enough are calling the hot line of his program when it is on the air (and in many places that is 24 hours per day), then Scott simply yells at his viewers and refuses to preach until enough phones are busy. In the meantime, he puts on slides of Los Angeles with jazz or rock and roll music or videos of his race horses, with his pledge phone number superimposed. Before too long, the Cathedral's phones start to ring and then Scott starts preaching again.

Yes, some ex-Worldwidiers now follow this guy. And some even speculate that he will be the one to eventually acquire the WCG's Pasadena properties.

Concordant Publishing Concern, 15570 W. Knochaven Rd., Santa Clarita, CA 91350, tel. 805-252-2112. The Concordant organization puts out books and papers on biblical theology that many ex-Worldwidiers praise for their thoroughness and insights. To some, Concordant is an organization for intellectual Bible fundamentalists, in that while holding to the Bible as inspired by God and attempting to allow the Bible to interpret itself, they, nevertheless, are quite adept at tackling some of the Bible's biggest mysteries. Jim Coram, who directs this group's California office, is a former WCG member who is always sympathetic to WCG members in search of biblical understanding. Concordant puts out an introductory package for those who write to them for the first time. Their booklet Eonian or Everlasting? is a good introduction to the doctrine of universal reconciliation. Their book The Problem of Evil and the Judgements of God by A. E. Knoch is a more lengthy discussion of that topic. The group's newsletter for 1/2/92 contained a very outstanding explanation of various views on the nature of God ("Notes on Trinitarianism, Modalism, and Arianism") which many WCG members could read to their benefit. One final comment about Concordant. This is a very non-authoritarian group. Those who enjoy being beaten over the head by an obsessive pastor will probably not find this group to their liking.

Ralph Woodrow Evangelistic Association, P.O. Box 124, Riverside, CA 92502-0124. Over the years we have received many letters from ex-WCG members who have stated that Ralph Woodrow's ministry has been of great benefit to them. Indeed, even among current members, his book Babylon Mystery Religion has been very popular.

Last year, Woodrow published a carefully researched, 64-page book titled "Three Days & Three Nights" - Reconsidered in Light of Scripture ($4, including postage). The booklet may cause a stir in WCG circles because Woodrow now believes he was in error in teaching, as HWA once did, that Jesus was in the grave for a full 72 hours from a Wednesday to a Saturday. He recently wrote us:

My change on this doctrine has upset several people who have written letters of irritation. I guess I had not realized that some apparently feel the time factor is such an essential point of doctrine! I would think the fact of the resurrection itself would be the big thing.

Some incidental remarks in your paper have prompted me to reconsider also some teachings from Armstrong regarding Babylon mystery religion. As I have re-read Hislop after many years, I see that some of his conclusions are not consistent. When I hear people make statements like "Nimrod was the first Santa Claus," I realize how wild things can get.

Other publications by Mr. Woodrow that we have found interesting are his booklet Does the Bible Teach a Jewish-Type Millennium? and his papers "Reckless Rumors" and "The Lost Books." His article on the twenty-third psalm is one of the finest commentaries we have ever seen on the subject.

Original Language Text Unfolding, 130 W. Main St., P.O. Box 1, Little Chute, WI 54140. John J. Purvins, who describes himself as "one of the elders in God's Church in the Appleton area" is the coordinator of this ongoing Bible research program. He writes,

"If you harbor anti-Jewish sentiments, the Text Unfolding is not for you.... Most of the errors in the King James and other English translations began with the anti-Jewish and anti-law mind set of the translators."

Finally, let us mention three groups that are doing very substantial biblical research. Each deserves a full AR article, and we apologize that our limited resources must curtail our comments this issue. Genesis 2000, P.O. Box 561476, Charlotte, NC 28256. Headed by Dr. James Tabor (see AR41), this group is involved in many projects that are of great interest to ex-WCG members. Perhaps most important of these is The Original Bible Project, 408 So. Pasadena Ave., Suite 4, Pasadena, CA 91105. Another group producing biblical materials is the Great Lakes Society for Biblical Research, P.O. Box 63, Jenison, MI 49429-0063. Headed by former WCG minister John Cheetham, this group has been doing much writing on the subject of angels, a subject oddly absent from much modern Christian literature. Lastly, we must mention Reunion, P.O. Box 981111, Houston, TX 77098, tel. 713-523-1861 (J. Phillip Arnold, Ph.D., Executive Director), a teaching fellowship that is regularly turning out some of the most intelligent and thought-provoking biblical studies we have ever come across.

Support Groups

In our last issue we mentioned The WCG Exiting and Support Network (generally speaking, a secular, non-sectarian organization). Its founder, Mrs. Stuhlman, recently wrote us the following:

Many past and current exiters and questioners have found their way to The WCG Exit and Support Network through the Ambassador Report, others via the Cult Awareness Organizations, or by word of mouth. These individuals have expressed much gratitude for the help we have offered them in a variety of ways. WCG abuse is a rampant problem. The healing process begins when the WCG-abused victims make a personal decision to take back their power and control by reporting the emotional, psychological, physical, spiritual, financial, and, all too often, sexual abuse inflicted on them. This is easier said than done, but very possible to accomplish.

No WCG victim escapes abuse completely. All survivors of cultic abuse are left isolated to work through the destructive effects and ramifications. If you have been victimized by disfellowshipping or abuse in any way, it is time to do something about it! Don't keep the pain to yourself. You are not alone. More and more people are sharing their experiences with others through the NETWORK. Let others who understand help you. Victims do not have to succumb to the control and fear tactics that once permeated their life. Exiters, you are now free - to think, question, make decisions, and speak up. You have a personal story; please share it with us. Get connected to people who have been there and can relate to your situation. Don't put off until tomorrow what can heal you today. Something can be done about the abuse by working together.

Contact: The WCG Exit and Support Network, P.O. Box 6104, Hamden, CT 06517; tel. 203/281-7182.

-Linda Stuhlman
Network Founder

A related group is The WCG Exit Resource Link of Canada. Headed by Brent Leeson and Steve Richard, this support group can be reached at Transcona RPO, P.O. Box 62075, Winnipeg, Manitoba, Canada R2C 5G2; tel. 204/222-0002.

In the north-central part of the U.S., one group that is helping WCG exiters is Help Net. Mainly the concerned Christian work of former WCG member Louise Doescher, she can be reached at N2954, Hwy. 107, Merrill, WI 54452; tel. 715/536-3094.

Another support group for those exiting the WCG is: I Think - International. The Founders are Kerin Webb in the U.K. and Mark and Collette Stallard in Canada. Besides providing support for current and past WCG members, they are active in making the truth about the WCG and other cults better known to the media and to church and government leaders. Whereas a few of the ex-WCG support groups we know of are secular or semi-secular in approach, the U.K-Canadian group is evangelical. Mr. Webb and the Stallards tell us they would very much like to hear from ex-WCG members who would like to occasionally be of assistance (through letters, phone calls, or personal contact) to those who are in the process of exiting Worldwide and other cults. Their address in Britain is: I Think-International, P.O. Box 1953, Bournemouth, Dorset, BH8 OYQ, United Kingdom. In Canada their address is: I Think-International, P.O. Box 2921, Winnipeg, Manitoba, R3C 4B5, Canada.

One final comment on the support groups. They provide an important service in giving those exiting WCG a chance to have contact with some who have gone before them. While readers should avail themselves of such services, please remember that those providing such services are often making a real sacrifice in time and money to help others. Whenever possible, please make an effort to help them recoup losses for printing, postage, phone time, etc.

Letters

Jesus said that in the last times there would be many false teachers. Well there certainly are and in your last issue you listed some.

-Wisconsin

I think all of your readers owe you their thanks for one of your unique policies - that of giving the addresses of competing organizations and others. I'm sure you realize that by doing so you must lose considerable income as many probably contribute to the groups you mention and ignore AR. But by giving those addresses many of us are learning a great deal. So keep up the good work.

One final comment. I wrote to Mr. Glen Myers regarding Gerald Flurry and he sent me a great paper he has written. I wish to point out, however, that even though my letter got through to him, the address you gave for him contained a typo. The correct address is Glen Myers, 1047 (not 1074) Iroquois St., Clearwater, FL 34615.

-Washington

Most of the changes [in the WCG] are for the good. But how long will it be before they tell us the Old Covenant is done away and we no longer have to keep certain days or tithes? (My husband stopped tithing long ago.) And when will they tell the people that we are not the "one true church"?

-Current WCG Member
Colorado

Since WCG is now talking "freedom from the law," let us test them. Paul wrote: "Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise. But as then he that was born after the flesh persecuted him that was born after the Spirit, even so it is now. Nevertheless what saith the scripture? Cast out the bondwoman and her son: for the son of the bondwoman shall not be heir with the son of the freewoman. So then, brethren, we are not children of the bondwoman, but of the free." (Gal. 4:28-31, King James Version.)

So if the leaders of WCG are sincere they will let go of all the Old Covenant law from Sabbaths to tithes - if not, they are going to be rejected by Christ. There is nothing "hatched in the hot place" more anti-Christ than what the WCG has done with the law. Is it any wonder that this nation is experiencing a turn to the faith that goes with the bondwoman? The law-oriented ministries have circled the earth with the law and what we see coming to pass on the earth are the curses for breaking their law. They have really hung a trip on this nation and on the body of Christ. May God deliver us from them. Jesus said, "According to your faith be it unto you." They bought it - now they've got it.

-Former WCG member
California

Astounding, the new directions of my former alma mater and former church. In the past, many left the WCG because of oppression. Now it seems more are leaving to maintain their hold on what they believe to be the truth. I guess the only ones left are those who never took any of it very seriously!

Two items in AR53 stood out: (1) the new "follow us... not because we have the truth... but follow us because of the loving feelings you get..." and (2) members can now "privately believe anything." If this organization keeps heading in those directions, they might as well affiliate with the Unitarian-Universalist Church and be done with all the hype!

I take my six-year-old son to one, at his request for church attendance, because I feel it will do the least damage to his belief system of all the religious organizations (I would not be in any for my own benefit). Wouldn't it be amazing if the WCG evolved to the point I would be comfortable taking my child to WCG services? What goes around, comes around.

-Guy Gipson

Pennsylvania

Editor: I'm not sure you would be comfortable there. But the WCG is already encouraging non-critical former members to attend their services. We have even heard of cases where WCG ministers, upon instructions from Tkach, have contacted ex-members and apologized for the way they had been treated in the past. As for children attending, the WCG is now especially interested in attracting children, teenagers, and those of college age into their ranks.

Recently my wife and I were invited back to the WCG by the senior minister of the local WCG congregation. Because of colds, flu, rainy weather, and disinterest, we still haven't visited with them. In the meantime, last month we both received three-page letters from Joe Tkach welcoming us back as reinstated members! It amused me but upset my wife and it is one of the reasons for our three-month delay in not attending. Rich Nichols says we should go just to set the record straight. Bill Dankenbring said, "Go - if you're a glutton for punishment." Some friends agreed with me when they said, "Go out of curiosity." We will go, but probably just this one time, because we really have very little in common with them. When they take the centuries-old stand that "God is one" and, therefore, "Jesus was essentially praying to himself," as one 25-year member admitted to me a few weeks ago, then we are definitely on different wave lengths.

-Canada

Please help me! I think I am losing my mind! Last summer Mr. Tkach ran a series of articles in The Worldwide News concerning God's nature and number. I have read those articles over and over and over. The more I read them, the more I get confused.

Let me explain. In the August 16 issue, Mr. Tkach wrote that "the Bible reveals that the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit are distinct, that is they are not the same - but neither are they separate Beings." I just can't understand that, no matter how hard I try. Then he wrote: "A popular misconception of the nature of God is to think of three God Beings in one Godhead, with the Holy Spirit as a third separate Being. To us, such a concept, that the Holy Spirit is a third, separate Being, is, and has always been, entirely foreign to our thinking. The Bible teaches that there is one God, and any concept that makes the Holy Spirit a separate Being is not biblical."

But then someone showed me a copy of The Watchman Expositor [Vol. 11, No. 1; P.O. Box 13340, Arlington, TX 76094-0340] and in it I saw an official statement on WCG letterhead from headquarters, written by Mr. David Hunsberger. In it, he said: "Yes, the Church teaches that the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit are co-equal, co-eternal, omnipresent, omnipotent, omniscient, indivisible, of one essence, and immanent.... The Apostles' and Nicene Creeds are universally accepted in Christendom and we have no objection to their statements." In the official letter Mr. Hunsberger also wrote: "The Worldwide Church of God does teach a form of the Trinity..." Yet, Mr. Tkach has said we do not teach the Trinity! Mr. Hunsberger then wrote: "We do not mind using the word 'Person' in reference to the Holy Spirit.... But since the common usage of the word creates confusion, we prefer the term hypostasis." So now everyone in the church is using the word hypostasis. But when I looked it up in my dictionary, the religious definition was "a person of the Trinity."

Can you see why I am confused? God is one, but God is three. The three are "co-equal," but the Holy Spirit is not a person. He/it is a hypostasis. Yet the dictionary says a hypostasis is a person! Furthermore, if he/it is not a person, then what does that make the Father and the Son? The Father is a hypostasis also and so is the Son. So if they are "co-equal" with the non-person Holy Spirit then that would make them also non-persons. But I think the Bible says they are persons. I can't find any place where Jesus prayed to the Holy Spirit. If the Holy Spirit is co-equal with the Father, why didn't Jesus also pray to him? And when Jesus taught his disciples to pray, he didn't start out, "Our hypostasis which art in heaven." I also can't figure out now how, if the Jesus hypostasis was God and omnipotent, like Mr. Hunsberger says, how could he have died on the cross? I guess only his body did. But it seems to me that such a doctrine means we also have to believe in the eternal soul doctrine (which Mr. Armstrong condemned) and the doctrine that Jesus' soul preached for three days in Hell while his body was in the tomb. Maybe I'm just stupid, but I'm beginning to think that this hypostasis stuff is hocus pocus. Please add me to your mailing list.

-California

Editor: You are not the only one having problems with the new doctrine. So many WCG ministers have shown that they can't understand it that WCG headquarters sent each pastor a 16-video-tape lecture series by Kyriacos Stavrinos who attempts to explain the new doctrine. The 35 hours of lectures did little to convince some ministers that the new doctrine was sound Some have privately indicated they are very opposed to the new teaching.

I feel that you have constructed an erroneous conclusion in your example on page two of [AR54] regarding tradition. When Joe Tkach refers to the tradition of Jesus and the apostles, he is still referring to Scripture. Observance of the Lord's Supper and Pentecost are biblical traditions. Observance of Christmas is an extrabiblical tradition. There is a difference.

-Robert J. Romagnoli, Ph.D.
Reseda, California

Editor: Thank you for your criticism, but I suspect you may have missed one article that appeared in Tkach's Worldwide News. In the September 14 issue (p. 4), there was a Neil Earle article titled "The role of theology: What it is and why we need it today." In it, Earle wrote:

...some issues ...are not directly addressed in the Bible. These, and many other such questions, belong to the discipline of theology.... Theology is simply humanity's reasonings and conclusions about God arranged in a systematic and formal way.

Earle then goes on to praise Greek philosopher Heraclitus of Ephesus, the "first theologian," and St. Thomas Aquinas, the thirteenth century Roman Catholic theologian.

While Earle does say that the Bible still retains a special, superior place in the WCG's belief system, his article in the official church newspaper makes it very clear that nonbiblical or extra-biblical theology is creeping into his religious organization. Whether that is necessarily a bad thing is not the issue. But it is a development that Herbert Armstrong would never have tolerated.

Thank you for the latest issue of AR. Your insightful comments that the WCG is deemphasizing the Bible hit the nail on the head. If you were Rush Limbaugh, you would be praising yourself for your great wisdom.

We have moved from Washington to Wyoming due to a job transfer. The Giving & Sharing book service is now being conducted by Earl Lewis. The new address is: Giving & Sharing, P.O. Box 100, Neck City, MO 64849. I am concentrating on doing more writing.

-Richard C. Nickels
Gillette, Wyoming

I knew early-on the WCG was wrong, but it took me years to become normalized again.

Their subtleties are always grabbing the unindoctrinated and putting them in bondage. Just tonight, during the evening news, they had a very good Bible come-on for the upcoming telecast. II Pet. 2:3 tells of those who make merchandise of sincere seekers through feigned words. Verse 19 continues, "while they promise them liberty, they themselves are the servants of corruption."

-Washington

Our local pastor recently said the wildest thing. That top leaders in the Worldwide actually talk to, and receive messages from, demons. Then, he said, "the Ambassador Report has all the facts in a file and it will probably all come out later in the year." Is there any truth to what he said?

-California

Editor: yes.

I had to leave my family to get into the WCG in 1965. So I've been away from my children ever since. Boy have I been done wrong by. And I'm very weary of being stepped on by others. I guess I'll never be liked much by this world's society being I'm not in any of their lodges or clubs. Neither was Christ and they hated him too.

-Oklahoma

What news to learn that Judd Kirk, the GTA clone, was not a Hollywood actor, as I presumed, but a WCG minister. I figured that Tkach had held a casting call for a GTA look-alike and dug up Mr. Kirk at Warner Brothers or Universal. One can only wonder what dark Freudian impulse drove Tkach to seek out a GTA double in the first place....

By the way, what ever happened to the Bible?.... A careful reading of recent Plain Truth issues and a comparison with issues of, say, even two or three years back, would show that the Bible is being quoted less and less in its pages. Love and grace pour forth out of the PT in abundant and flowing quantities. And it seems as if repentance, overcoming, and achieving a certain standard of righteousness have been relegated to the WCG basement to gather dust alongside the other multitude of doctrinal castaways notated by minister Pack in a previous issue. Tkach and his sidekicks seem to be living in an Alice in Wonderland world deep in their Pasadena bunker: What was "truth" yesterday becomes "untruth" today. And tomorrow? Who knows?

Meanwhile, such eminent personages as the inspirational Protestant writer C. S. Lewis and the Protestant theologian Dietrich Bonhoeffer are being quoted in the PT with increasing frequency, and the content of the magazine itself is now reminiscent of the publications produced by the Billy Graham organization. A lot of easily digested spiritual pabulum signifying nothing. Can it be that the "strong meat" which HWA touted is no longer being served in WCG Sabbath services either? I can only guess....

As one of your letter writers said, Worldwide is destined to become just one more Protestant steeple on the horizon. So Worldwidiers had better get used to hearing more about C. S. Lewis, W. B. Yeats, Dietrich Bonhoeffer and company, and less and less about what the Bible has to say about repentance, righteousness, and overcoming. Just one more Protestant steeple.

As for the assortment of crackpots, looneytunes, goofballs, practitioners of quack religion, barmy souls, conspiracy theorists, and so forth and so on, who claim lineal descent from Prophet Armstrong (he is spinning so rapidly in his grave these days that one can only wonder if his underground activity was the actual cause of the recent L.A. earthquake), what can one say? ....To cry or laugh? That is the question. For lost souls who have succumbed to their song, I weep. For those who assume greatness in the guise of a servant of God, I can only laugh. Didn't both Ezekiel and Jeremiah have harsh words to say about false prophets who lead the sheep astray?

Well, as the ancient Chinese curse goes (or was it something Yogi Berra is reputed to have said?): May you live in interesting times. Interesting, indeed. I look forward with anticipation to the next AR.

A Note From the Editor

In all the years that I have had a part in putting out the Report, there have been few issues that have taken more out of me than this one. Not only did it require more than three full months of my time, with considerable stress, but it also has taken thousands of dollars of my own funds. I think most of you will agree, however, that AR55 is one of the most important that we have ever produced. I hope all of you will contribute to the Report as you are able.

My thanks to all of you who are helping in this effort.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

October 1994 (AR56)

The religious-educational edifice erected by the late Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA) continues to transmogrify. The Worldwide Church of God (WCG), Plain Truth magazine, Ambassador College, and other institutions he built are ever evolving under the direction of Armstrong's heir Joseph W. Tkach, Sr.

Ambassador Finally Accredited

In the June 28 issue of the Worldwide News (WN) Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach announced that Ambassador College (in Big Sandy, Texas) has finally been officially accredited by a recognized accrediting association, the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools. Additionally, Tkach announced that the college will now be officially called Ambassador University. The editor and founding publishers of the Report congratulate Mr. Tkach and his staff for having accomplished a goal that many others failed to achieve in the past. We are sure that the college's new status will be a blessing to all Ambassador alumni.

Some indication of just how much Ambassador has changed under Tkach's leadership can be seen in recent announcements. Examples: The university has now been granted an FCC license to have its own radio station (it will be broadcasting "acoustic, light jazz and classical" music). Three Ambassador executives - Thomas Delamater, William Stenger, and Dyle Koch - now serve on the board of the Big Sandy Chamber of Commerce. In April the university served as host to an invitational semantics symposium. And the university's men's volleyball team finished the season with a 29 and 8 record while both the men's and women's tennis teams were also quite successful this past year (WN, 5/3/94, p. 5).

Incidentally, since Tkach's June announcement regarding accreditation, many Ambassador alumni have asked if the institution's new status is retroactive for those who received their Ambassador degrees in years past. Here is what the university has stated about that:

Technically, accreditation is not retroactive to past graduates. (It is officially retroactive to Jan. 1, 1994.) But with most universities and employers, most graduates will fall under the accreditation umbrella.

Now that we are accredited, Ambassador University will be listed in various directories of higher education. The two most important of these are Transfer Credit Practices, published by the American Association of College Registrars and Admissions Officers, and the Higher Education Directory.

As Ambassador University gains a reputation as an accredited institution, the date of accreditation and the name will cease to be issues. (When graduates apply to graduate schools or for jobs, they should use the name Ambassador University. Accreditation should not be raised unless others raise it. Then merely state that Ambassador University is accredited, not when it was accredited.)

The above statement is found in a helpful article that appeared in the WN dated July 26, 1994 (p. 3). Anyone holding an Ambassador degree and suspecting it may be a factor in future studies or employment would do well to read the entire article. Those with questions about their degrees should write to Ambassador University, Big Sandy, Texas 75755.

Tkach: There Are True Christians In Other Churches!

During the past year or so, one of the most hotly debated topics in WCG circles has been the question of whether there are "true Christians" in churches other than the WCG. Statements on the issue made by WCG ministers revealed many conflicting views and much double talk. But with increased frequency, Tkach started to reveal where he, himself, was headed on the issue.

While HWA lived the WCG seemed to be united on the "true church" issue. To Armstrong, there was only one true church - his own, and there was only one main representative of God on earth - himself. While there was an occasional ambiguity on the subject of the sabbatarian groups from which HWA had separated years ago, he got around that issue by declaring those sabbatarian organizations part of the "Sardis era" - that is, spiritually dead. As for all other Christian churches, they were not just dead, they were anti-Christ "pagan." Now Tkach has taken a decidedly different position.

For months, a leaked February 9, 1993 letter written by Tkach was making the rounds in WCG circles. Tkach's letter was a response to a letter from church member Colleen Miller of Gardnerville, Nevada. The member had asked why the WCG should be preaching the gospel (as currently defined by Tkach) if other churches are already doing that on a very large scale. Instead of answering the way HWA would have (that the WCG was the only church preaching the true gospel), Tkach readily admitted that other churches besides the WCG were preaching the gospel, that there were converted Christians in churches other than the WCG, that some in the past left those churches for the WCG for reasons that were improper, and that "The criterion for salvation is faith in Jesus Christ, not membership in a particular denomination."

Copies of the Tkach letter began circulating wildly among confused WCG members and ministers. When Colleen Miller allowed her own minister, Randy Schreiber, to read the Tkach dictum, he promptly mailed his own five-page letter to Tkach. Schreiber pointed out to Tkach that if any member of any church could genuinely be converted, would it not follow that members of the WCG spinoff groups could also be converted? Tkach was not amused and, we hear, Schreiber is no longer in the WCG ministry. Those who would like copies of Tkach's letter to Mrs. Miller along with Schreiber's pointed letter to Tkach and Tkach's secretive response to Schreiber should write to WCG historian Bruce Renahan, P.O. Box 1551, Tehachapi, CA 93581-1551 (please include $3 to help cover photocopying and postage).

In the spring, Tkach felt compelled to make his views even more plain in a front page editorial in the church's newspaper (WN, 5/17/94). There he emphasized that there are true Christians in many denominations:

Many of us know people who are indeed dedicated Christians, yet are not of our Church.... It doesn't mean that we aren't the true Church of God. It simply points out the fact that the true Church of God is not limited to any corporate entity nor any human organization.... It is the people in whom God dwells by his Spirit that make up the Church, the Body of Christ.... That means that all who are converted are members of the one and only true Church.... We might know of some, as we come into contact with them and see their fruit. But God has not set us as his watchdogs to try to determine to what extent he has children in other organizations.... So, how are we to regard those who attend "other churches"? With love. Does anyone think

God would approve of our ridiculing them? Yet, that is just what many of us have tended to do over the years.... Let's get this vital point: It is the Holy Spirit that identifies and unifies the true Church of God, not any humanly incorporated church organization. That is what the Bible teaches, and that is also what Mr. Armstrong taught. [Emphasis is his - ed.]

Tkach's teaching that there are true Christians in other denominations seems to have been accepted by a good number of his field ministers. One of our readers wrote us: "Apparently [our local WCG minister] has accepted my wife's baptism as being valid even though she was not baptized by a Worldwide Church minister." And in June, Dale Lawson, a minister of the "Sardis" Church of God (Seventh Day), was invited to give a sermon before the combined Atlanta East and Northeast congregations (WN, 7/26/94, p. 8). Yes, the WCG is really changing.

More Trinity Confusion

Recent issues of the Report have covered the WCG's struggle with the trinity doctrine. Some cult monitoring organizations have become convinced the WCG has now fully adopted the orthodox trinity position. But whether the church as a whole has really adopted it remains open to debate. One of our readers in England wrote to WCG regional headquarters there inquiring about what the WCG's teachings on the subject really are at this time. In an April 1994 letter, WCG minister Robert C. Boraker responded:

The word "trinity" is not found in the Bible and we will refrain from using it for that reason. It merely means "threefoldness." In that sense, we do believe in the "threefoldness" of God - being the Father, Son and Holy Spirit - and always have. But we do not accept the traditional teaching about the "Holy Trinity" and never have. We still do not believe that the Holy Spirit is a person and will refrain from using the word "persons" in reference to the Godhead.

A comparison of the above with the WCG's other official, and often conflicting, statements on the subject seems to reveal the utilization of what psychologists refer to as the creation of "cognitive dissonance"- a propagandistic tool used for mind control by many cults. On the other hand, Christian theologians have debated the nature of God issue for hundreds of years and many have admitted their difficulty in understanding the subject. In defense of Tkach's new position, one knowledgeable reader pointed out to us:

Mr. Tkach's views on the trinity may not be as foolish as many make them out to be. The great theologians have always recognized serious problems in the area. If we accept the fact that God is beyond space and time while believing the Bible stories that Yahweh appeared in the form of a burning bush, a cloud, a small voice, a thunderous voice, etc. then we begin to see there is a problem with our finite minds grasping what we must admit is an unfathomable set of paradoxes relating to the infinite.

Granted, the WCG's attempts at articulating a very complex concept have been weak at times. But there is merit to what they are trying to accomplish theologically. If I were explaining the trinity doctrine publicly, I would do it this way: God is a mystery beyond time and space and therefore no human being is capable of truly "seeing" or "hearing" God in God's totality. But to the very limited minds of the human race, God has revealed himself/herself/itself over the centuries in different ways: in the OT as Yahweh, in the gospels as Jesus, and in the NT church as the Holy Spirit. Each of the three is a manifestation (a hypostasis) of God. Yet because God is beyond space and time, in each we do not comprehend the totality of God (what was referred to as "the ousia" or modernly as "the Ground of all being" or as "the Ein Sof" of Kabbala). Trained theologians recognize Mr. Tkach's view of the trinity as differing somewhat from that of the Roman Catholic Church and being somewhat closer to that of the Orthodox Catholic Church and perhaps Kabbala. Let me suggest that those wishing to achieve a better understanding of the subject read Professor Karen Armstrong's book A History of God [Knopf]. Those who do will discover that Mr. Tkach is a lot smarter than many of his critics.

Maybe so, but most of his followers seem totally bewildered by his new trinity teaching.

More Doctrinal Shifts

If one wants to see what the latest WCG changes are, one only has to read the Plain Truth (PT) magazine. For example, the cover story of the May/June issue was all about the importance of getting help from psychologists when one has emotional problems (a solution frowned upon by most WCG ministers in HWA's time). The issue even included an interview with a Christian therapist.

Evolution versus creationism is another subject that has been covered in the church's magazine of late and is a topic of great interest to many. One of our Arizona readers wrote the Report criticizing us for not putting more emphasis on the matter:

The PT magazine recently revealed a major sellout to the evolution theory after years of quality, devastating articles, booklets, telecasts, and radio broadcasts that exposed evolution as an unrealistic, phoney, fraudulent, combined "science" (so-called) and scam that is inherently an atheistic, de facto state religion. That doctrinal switch is as religiously, momentarily fundamental as any could be, but in AR it has only been indirectly reported upon.... Given their inner-circle sabotage capitulation to evolutionary thinking now, in time practically all the other doctrinal switches will be automatic, very predictable, or at least unsurprising.

While many see the WCG as having "sold out" to the evolution theory, a careful reading of the WCG's writings on the subject reveals a certain ambivalence on the subject. Recent PT articles by Neil Earle and John Halford (March and August 1994 issues) show that the WCG's intellectuals do not fully accept Darwin's slow evolution views (neither do many evolution-believing scientists) but neither do they want to discount scientific evidence. At the same time, they do not appear ready to throw out a literal reading of the Genesis account. We have not seen a clear statement as to what the WCG's position really is, or will be. Our sources within the organization indicate that the WCG's top leaders have yet to reach a consensus on the issue. However, there seems to be a new position on at least one point. HWA's teaching that a gap of eons separated Gen. 1:1 and Gen. 1:2 is now only referred to as "a theory" (see the March PT article by Earle, p. 21).

Finally, it should be pointed out that some things in the WCG never change. One Ohio member wrote headquarters about the fact that so much of what headquarters was claiming to be true (as regards doctrine and WCG history) did not square with what she was being taught by her local minister or with what she recalled from her own years of experience in the church. Top church administrator Tkach Jr. wrote her back in an attempt to smooth things over, but in the process he very clearly stated, "Members are not responsible for the teachings of the Church, but only for whether they believe them to be true." In other words, headquarters will determine what is truth and you folks out in "the field" must accept it and submit.

New Questions Raised About HWA's Death

Almost nine years have now passed since Herbert W. Armstrong passed away in early 1986. Yet, many still wonder about the circumstances surrounding his death so soon after "passing the baton" to Joseph W. Tkach. Now William F. Dankenbring has raised new questions about the end of the WCG's founder. Writing in the August edition of his Prophecy Flash!, Dankenbring made the following shocking statement:

I recently learned that the night Herbert Armstrong died, there was a frightful row - a shouting match - which occurred in his bedroom in his home on South Orange Grove Boulevard, in Pasadena. In the room were just he and Joseph W. Tkach. The security guard on duty in the home, whose name I won't mention, heard Herbert loudly scream, "YOU ARE FIRED!!!" He then heard a sound of scuffling, and then silence. The security guard, shortly after that, saw Mr. Tkach leave Mr. Armstrong's bedroom, straightening his tie, and exiting. The next morning Herbert Armstrong was found dead in his bed - not in his wife's favorite chair, as the Worldwide News incorrectly reported in a subsequent article which was nothing more than a propaganda piece. The apostle was dead. But the mystery deepened. What really happened?

The loud and heated exchange of words in Mr. Armstrong's bedroom that night brings to mind many serious questions. Those around Mr. Armstrong knew that he had heart trouble, and that he had been warned by his physician not to lose his temper or become angry - as it could lead to deadly repercussions, such as another heart attack, or stroke, ending his life. Yet that night there was screaming and a loud and heated explosion from his bedroom. It has been suggested that the thing that ticked Mr. Armstrong off was that Joseph Tkach - after ostensibly getting from Mr. Armstrong a signed statement appointing him as his successor - told him that night in no uncertain words that he was going to CHANGE EVERYTHING, doctrines, policies, etc. As a result, according to this scenario, seeing that he had been totally betrayed, Mr. Armstrong "hit the roof" and exploded in uncontrollable anger, leading to his own death that very night!

Many WCG oldtimers are appalled by the way Tkach has allegedly taken over the WCG. On the other hand, there are some who view Tkach as a genuine hero because, as one put it, "Tkach gave HWA exactly what he deserved and now he's taking care of all of HWA's lackeys!" Those who would like to see Dankenbring's article in its entirety should write to Triumph Prophetic Ministries, Box 292, Altadena, CA 91003.

The Exodus Grows

Pastor General Tkach continues to purge the WCG ministry of those out of step with his leadership. Two WCG ministers "retired" very recently are Dean Wilson and James Friddle. These "retirements" come in addition to the many transfers announced just months ago. In the April 19 WN it was announced that over 80 WCG ministers were being transferred to new areas. The list included Robert Spence, Billy Bryce, and Les McColm who were retired (we assume because of age or health). Since then, others retired because of age, budget reasons, etc. include Ambassador administrator Dr. Lynn Torrance and WCG minister and Ambassador instructor Stan Bass (WN, 6/14/94, p. 8). One important demotion a few months ago was that of Tom Lapacka who had briefly been in charge of the WCG's Evangelism Support Services Dept. (see AR55, p. 1). Replaced by Victor Kubik, Lapacka is now over the less prestigious Church Relations Department, the WCG's de facto PR section.

Besides those demotions, retirements and defections that are reported in WCG publications, there are often those that are given little, if any, publicity. For instance, from sources in South Africa we have learned that minister Frank Nelte was suspended, perhaps permanently, for questioning new doctrine, and that minister Jonathan McNair was disfellowshipped months ago for being in sympathy with his father, evangelist Carl McNair who is now with the competing Global Church of God.

One of our readers wrote us: "Here in Australia a lot of people are going over to the splinter groups. Over 200 to the Philadelphia Church of God, some to Dankenbring's group, some to Garner Ted Armstrong's CGI, and now a large number have gone to the Global Church." Another Australian reader wrote us: "I have just heard that Bruce Tyler, the WCG minister from Canberra, has flown the coop, taking 60 members with him to Meredith's Global Church."

As regarding Australia, one of our Texas readers wrote us: "We have heard that in Australia some ministers and members have initiated a lawsuit against the WCG demanding their tithes back, saying they have paid them to a false church. Headquarters is trying to keep this quiet as they are afraid it will spread to other areas." If any of our readers have information of this alleged lawsuit, AR would appreciate further details.

WCG Revenues in Decline

In June the WCG released its "1993 Audited Financial Report" (WN, 6/28/94, pp. 5-10). The statement, prepared by the respected CPA firm of Coopers and Lybrand, shows that in 1993 the WCG's total revenues were $175.6 million, down almost 10 percent from the WCG's total revenues of $191.3 million in 1992. Recall that the WCG's income for 1992 was down from the $196.9 million received in 1991 and that WCG revenues for 1991 were down substantially from the record WCG revenues of $211.2 million made in 1990 (see AR51, p. 1).

Now, the latest information on WCG income is that for 1994 revenues are still falling. For example, in his August 25 co-worker letter, Tkach stated that WCG income for 1994 is down seven percent from that of 1993. Furthermore, not only is The World Tomorrow telecast off the air completely (the telecast for September 11 was the last), it appears that the WCG is presently not even buying much advertising time on TV. So the slide continues.

More Real Estate Deals

In our last issue we gave some of the details surrounding the WCG's 1987 sale of its Mt. Pocono festival site to a mysterious Japanese corporation. Now, another WCG festival site has been put up for sale. One of our Wisconsin readers tells us that a for-sale sign now sits on the grounds of the WCG's Wisconsin Dells festival site. The realtor is United National Real Estate (tel. 608-297-7123).

Spinoff News

In an August 1, 1994 letter to his followers, Garner Ted Armstrong (P.O. Box 2530, Tyler, TX 75710) announced that his Twentieth Century WATCH magazine will again be published (it has been in limbo for the last four years). The same letter also contained some remarkable international news: Based on Information from Israel that came via Dr. James Tabor, Armstrong reported that the government of Israel has been quietly negotiating with representatives of the Pope to turn over control of Jerusalem's "Old City" to the Vatican. If true, it puts a feather in the cap of Armstrong as he has been predicting such an event for many years.

The Global Church of God (GCG), under the direction of Pastor General Roderick Meredith, continues to grow. Among those who have gone over to the Meredith camp are WCG minister Bill Swanson and former WCG member Carol Little, daughter of one-time WCG powerhouse Stanley Rader. The GCG recently moved its headquarters to San Diego, California (P.O. Box 501111, San Diego, CA 92150-1111). GCG insiders say that Meredith recently purchased a new San Diego-area residence, the opulence of which has shocked some of his followers. Meredith, however, has defended the propriety of his new home saying, "God expects me to live this way."

Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Church of God continues to grow. One of our Scottish readers tells us that Flurry is picking off more WCG members in Britain than even Rod Meredith. One of Flurry's new fans in the U.S. is Gwen La Ravia, wife of WCG evangelist Ellis La Ravia.

The Truth of the Matter, edited by Keith Hunt, has a new address. It is 4955 N.W. 47 Ter., Tamarac, FL

33319. The September 1994 issue had a lengthy article on the WCG's new trinity teaching titled "WCG's Nothingness God."

In AR 55 we briefly reported on Midnight Ministries of England. Minister Malcolm Heap, who prefers that we refer to him by his Christian name Malcolm, wrote to us complaining that we did not give him fair coverage. Furthermore, he wrote:

If you want to give us a "fair chance" to prove our validity as an authentic prophetic ministry that God is using, then I would like to submit another prophetic claim. We have made the statement over a year ago - and we still stand by it - that a young boy aged four who died tragically of cystic fibrosis about eleven years ago, (the son of two former members of the WCG) will soon be raised back to life through our ministry. God has told us He will do this to demonstrate that He has spoken through us, and is using us for a function in the Body of Christ.

We will see if this "prophecy" is fulfilled in our time. Meanwhile - Malcolm now claims that his prophecy that the automobile dealership which would not give him a free BMW would be closed has come true. The dealership is still operating but has been sold to a new owner (The Bucks Herald, 3/17/94). Apparently the sale of the dealership constitutes a fulfilled prophecy. Those who want more details can write to Malcolm at P.O. Box 29, Aylesbury, Bucks. HP17 8TL, United Kingdom.

More Groups

We continue to learn of new ministries which have ex-WCG members as either leaders or followers: Mystery of the Kingdom, 5202 N. Hwy. 52, Wausau, WI 54401 (headed by Pastor Martin Muzynoski, a former WCG member who now teaches a Sunday sabbath); Church of God Elohim, P.O. Box 111131, Cleveland, OH 44111; The Cincinnati Church of the Savior, c/o Cliff Robinson, 154 Country View Dr., Harrison, OH 45030; The Countdown (Alex Cain, Editor), Church of God, P.O. Box 53, Farnborough, Hants., GU14 OYZ, United Kingdom.

In England, there are a number of groups of former WCG members who meet informally. For details about one such group contact our friends John and Kathleen Peckett, 38 West Bank, Carlton, Nr. Goole DN14 9PZ, United Kingdom.

The Reunion Talkline

In Britain, Reunion News (not to be confused with the Reunion organization in Houston, Texas) continues to assist people who are exiting the WCG. Peter Griffiths, the group's secretary, recently wrote us that, although their publishing operations have slowed down of late, both he and Mac Kachere are operating "Reunion Talkline," a phone-in service for those who would like to share their WCG-related experiences, locate former WCG friends in Britain, gain information about the WCG, etc. Kachere can be reached in London at: 081-200-5527 and Griffiths, in the Birmingham area, can be reached at 021-744-1277. Griffiths does ask, however, that although he and Kachere will be happy to take phone calls from around the world (of course, not collect!), they ask that no calls be made later than 20:00 GMT - in other words, please do not get them out of bed in the middle of the night to talk about the WCG. For those who would prefer to write to them, their mailing address is: Reunion News, 190 Tythe Barn Lane, Whitlocks End, Shirley, Solihull B90 1PF, United Kingdom.

Alan Ruth Updates His "Splits" Research

In our last issue we mentioned how Alan Ruth, one of our readers, had put together an outstanding listing of the many WCG offshoots. Mr. Ruth now informs us that his paper, "The Worldwide Church of God Splits: Their Triumphs and Troubles," which includes a five-page flow chart of major WCG offshoots and addresses of the many groups is now 69 pages in length. Those who would like a copy of the enlarged paper can obtain one for $5 by writing to Alan Ruth, P.O. Box 4373, Troy, MI 48099.

Ex-Worldwider Fascinations

In the last year we have reported on a number of religious groups that are absorbing former WCG members. The listings we have given are by no means complete. From our mail it is evident that many former members are interested in a very wide array of esoteric religious, spiritual, and philosophical movements. While it is not possible for us to go into much detail on all of these movements and their leaders, we are listing below a number that are increasingly being mentioned in letters to the Report.

Sacred Names groups. This religious movement, which predates Armstrongism, is keenly aware that the words "God," "Lord," and "Jesus" (as found in the English translations of the Bible) are translations of Hebrew and Greek words that are quite different in sound. The groups that comprise this movement put great emphasis on such biblical passages as Exodus 23:13, Joshua 23:7, Acts 4:12, and Revelation 3:8 which seem to emphasize the specific names of the deity as significant for proper worship. Because most of these groups, like the WCG, emphasize a theology that incorporates the keeping of the Old Testament law, many former WCG members have made a smooth transition to these groups. Some of these groups are Yahweh's New Covenant Assembly (P.O. Box 50, Kingdom City, MO 65262) which publishes Light magazine, The Assemblies of Yahweh (Bethel, PA 19507) which publishes The Sacred Name Broadcaster, The House of Yahweh (P.O. Box 2498, Abilene, TX 79604) which publishes The Prophetic Word Magazine, and Yahweh's Assembly in Messiah (401 N. Roby Farm Rd., Rochesport, MO 65279) which publishes The Master Key. (For a more comprehensive list of Sacred Names groups see The Directory of Sabbath-Observing Groups, published by The Bible Sabbath Association, Fairview, Oklahoma 73737.)

One former WCG member who does not claim to be a part of a Sacred Names group, but still seems to have adopted some of their ideas, is Vello Kulbin (31731 Outer Hwy. 10, Redlands, CA 92373). In "What is to Happen Next in Bible Prophecy?", a paper he has been distributing, he wrote (his caps and underlining deleted here): "A Jesus will come! Joshua is our true Savior's name. Jesus will be the Antichrist's name. First, Jesus will come and reign on the earth. Then, our true savior Joshua will come and overthrow the world government established by Jesus."

Sacred Names teachings have become so widespread among former WCG members that former WCG ministers Garner Ted Armstrong, Dr. Ernest Martin, and Fred Coulter have all written papers critical of its premises. Some ministers in the Church of God International, which seems to be filled with Sacred Names adherents, have called the Sacred Names doctrine a major heresy.

Pro-Jewish groups. "The Jews" continue to hold a special fascination for many former WCG members. This fascination runs the full gamut from very anti-Jewish sentiments to very pro-Jewish sentiments. Groups that fall into the latter category include numerous ministries aimed at either bringing Jews to Jesus or bringing Christians to some type of Judaism. Those in the "Messianic Jewish" movement most often keep the seventh day sabbath, the annual Jewish holy days, revere the sacred names, and keep many Jewish customs, yet view Jesus of Nazareth as the Messiah. Because of their faith in Jesus, the Israeli Supreme Court in 1989 ruled that Messianic Jews are not entitled to automatic Israeli citizenship (Los Angeles Times, 12/27/89). Yet most Messianic Jews are very loyal to Israel. Some of the American groups that fall into the Messianic Jewish category include Zola Levitt Ministries, Box 12268, Dallas, TX 75225-9987; Hatikva Ministries (Joseph Goode, President), P.O. Box 3125, Port Arthur, TX 77643 -3124; Jewish Voice Prophetic Magazine and Jewish Voice Broadcasts (Evangelist Louis Kaplan, President), P.O. Box 6, Phoenix, AZ 85001; Lederer Messianic Ministries (Barry Rubin, Executive Director) 6204 Park Heights Ave., Baltimore, MD 21215; and the umbrella organization Messianic Jewish Alliance of America, P.O. Box 417, Wynnewood, PA 19096 (tel. 1-800-225-MJAA).

While a number of former WCG members have been attracted to the Messianic Jewish groups, a few have begun attending regular Jewish synagogue services. One such individual told the Report, "I feel very much at home there. I just never mention my faith in Jesus."

One individual who is quite at home with both Messianic Jewish and Rabbinical Jewish groups is Dr. James Tabor (see AR41). Tabor, a prolific writer who once taught at Ambassador and who now teaches at the University of North Carolina, recently announced that he was closing down his Genesis 2000 publication so that he could devote more time to his work with United Israel World Union of New York (UIWU) and United Israel of Jerusalem (UIJ). The two organizations publish, respectively, the United Israel Bulletin (1123 Broadway, New York, NY 10010) and Jezreel's Call (P.O. Box 33078, 91033 Jerusalem, Israel and in the U.S.: P.O. Box 345, Lenoir, NC 28645). UIWU was founded in 1943 by David Horowitz, a journalist who maintains an office at the United Nations headquarters in New York. According to Tabor, now a vice-president of UIWU, the main purpose of UIWU is:

....to foster Torah faith for all nations, or as David Horowitz expresses it: "Mosaic Law for One World," based on the vision of Isaiah 2 and 11 and other related texts. An integral part of that vision is the UNION of all twelve tribes of Israel - not only the Jews (Judah), but the so-called "lost tribes" of Israel as well. [From Tabor's August 8 letter to his Genesis 2000 subscribers.]

UIJ is a separate organization founded in 1993 by Tabor, Dennis Jones (who has completed a Nazirite vow), and John Hulley (who graduated magnum cum laude from Harvard University with a degree in international economics and then was a senior economist for ten years at the headquarters of the World Bank in Washington, D.C.). The purpose of UIJ is to publish both biblical research and historical material based on Hulley's research dealing with the identity of those portions of the so-called "lost tribes" of Israel which they believe once migrated into northwestern Europe. Those who would like to know more about UIJ or UIWU may write personally to Tabor at P.O. Box 561476, Charlotte, NC 28256. Those who would like to know more about Dr. Tabor's views about the Bible and the B'Nai Noah movement in which he is active, may obtain some of his writings from Emmanuel, P.O. Box 442, Athens, TN 37371-0442.

Anti-Jewish groups. While many former WCG members seem enamored of all things Jewish, many others have gone to the opposite extreme and have become affiliated with organizations that are quite anti-Jewish. Some of the groups are clearly neo-Nazi. For instance, there is the German American National Political Action Committee (P.O. Box 1137, Santa Monica, CA 90406) led by Hans Schmidt who claims the Holocaust was a myth created "to obscure the fact that Hitler was right" and Thatcher Thunders! (A.C.C. Services, P.O. Box 509, Anderson, TX 77830) run by R. G. Thatcher who claims that the Two Witnesses of Revelation 11 are none other than Zerubbabel and Eliakim of the Old Testament who were supposedly resurrected already in this century as Adolph Hitler and Joseph Goebbels! Other anti-Jewish groups believe in various varieties of the Israel Identity theory and sometimes even keep the seventh day sabbath, the OT holy days, and other OT laws, while being at the same time anti-Jewish.

Conspiracy theory groups. Very popular with both former and current WCG members are "conspiracy" views of the world - world views that emphasize the idea that the course of history is being directed by secretive, self-advancing groups, often seen as the super rich, leading bankers, the Masons, the Jesuits, "the Jews," nationalists, internationalists, leftists, rightists, Marxists, fascists, the Illuminati, the Trilateral Commission, etc., etc. Space does not permit us to cover this fascinating area in any detail. An overview of some of the more prevalent - and outrageous - theories can be found in New World Order - the Ancient Plan of Secret Societies by William T. Still (Huntington House Publishers and available for $10 from Religion Analysis Service, P.O. Box 22098, Robbinsdale, MN 55422-0098-note new address).

Of all the publishers that specialize in the area of conspiracies and secret orders, the most popular among ex-Worldwidiers is Emissary Publications run by author Des Griffin and his wife Karen. The Griffins publish Midnight Messenger, a controversial, yet thought-provoking, newspaper. For a sample copy and catalog of their many intriguing publications, send $3 to Emissary Publications, 9205 S.E. Clackamas Rd., #1776, Clackamas, OR 97015 (tel. 503-824-2050).

Another ex-Worldwidier (and ex-CGI minister) whose current ministry emphasizes conspiracy theories is Jim Rector, Cornerstone Publications, 3802 Olive Street, Texarkana, TX 75503; tel. 903-792-1352. His 1994 series of taped lectures on "The Specter of Globalism" is very popular among many ex-Worldwidiers. In his November 1993 letter Rector wrote:

For a number of years now, many events have been transpiring behind the scenes on the world stage - events that all will ultimately contribute to the most diabolical, demonic and deceptive plan for complete world domination ever attempted or foisted off on an unsuspecting and unprepared mankind. The Beast of Daniel 7 and Revelation 13 is in the wings now. It is only a matter of time before this hideous monster is unveiled.

Rector sees Satan as the mastermind behind the emergence of the "The New World Order" and in his complex Bible prophecy theory Rector brings in almost every possible factor of fundamentalist demonology: New Agers, occultists, channelers, UFOs, Benjamin Creme and Lord Maitreya, the Federal Reserve Bank, the Rothschilds, the Rockefellers, the Bilderburgers, the Trilateral Commission, the Club of Rome, virtually all international bankers, the Priory of Zion, the Knights of Malta, the National Council of Women, the Pro-choice groups, the Sierra Club, the World Council of Churches and many leading religious figures, virtually all of the great philanthropic foundations of America, Henry Kissinger, George Bush, President Clinton, and even Stanley Rader (who Rector claims is a 33rd degree Mason, the group's highest honor, he says). All of these individuals and groups are seen as in league with the Devil and are supposedly working toward "globalism" (Jan. 10 and Jan. 17, 1994 letters to his subscribers).

Survivalist groups. A number of former WCG members are involved with groups that are often called "survivalist." These are usually composed of individuals who see Armageddon in the near future and, having little confidence in the ability of modern government to stem the downward slide of Western civilization, feel they will have to go it alone. One organization that seems to fit into this category is Center For Action, 1106 N. Gilbert Rd. #2114, Mesa, AZ 85203 (tel. 602-969-9260). This organization is headed by former Vietnam war hero and U.S. Presidential candidate Bo Gritz. Additionally, one publication that is popular with survivalists is American Survival Guide, P.O. Box 70015, Anaheim, CA 92825-0015.

Deprogramming Yourself - The Editor's View

As editor of the Report, I want to share with all of you some thoughts I have on the Worldwide experience and on exiting it, in particular. One of the more positive aspects of putting out a publication such as this one is getting letters from readers who share with us their many many insights, life experiences, and problems. But there is a down side to this, as well. All too frequently readers tell us of their problems and ask for help we are not in a position to give. Unlike the ministry of the WCG, which seems all too willing to give advice on virtually every facet of life, we have never thought ourselves qualified to do so. There is, however, one very frequently asked question for which we may be able to offer at least a few suggestions.

The question is often put like this: "I have been a member of the WCG but suspect that it is a destructive cult. What should I do now?" Readers who ask such questions are often looking for a quick and easy solution to their spiritual problems. Frankly, I doubt that there is such a solution. My own observations convince me that each of us must work out our own solutions to our own problems. That does not mean, however, that I cannot offer a few suggestions. (And they are just that - mere suggestions. They may not apply to many, or even most, readers). To those exiting the WCG, I have two initial suggestions: First, don't be too quick to join another group. All too often people burned by the WCG jump into some other group that is just as harmful as the WCG. Many cult experts suggest that those leaving a destructive cult allow at least one year before joining a new group. If religious fellowship is sorely missed, then why not make a point of visiting - without joining - a different denomination's services each time you want to fellowship?

Second, with the increase in time that comes from not being a regular WCG member, devote a good portion of that new-found time to studying those topics that underlie the WCG's doctrines. I can't stress the importance of this too much. So often I have noticed that some will leave the WCG over one or two doctrinal matters or because of some corruption problem, all the while assuming that most of what they have come to believe is still correct. (When I left the WCG in 1973 I was in this category.) Unfortunately, many go on to discover after years of negative, and often painful, experiences that a very large amount of what they had come to believe was true is really fallacious. Most of those who leave the WCG could benefit from going back to college. Obviously, very few have the time or money to do that. However, through a systematic program of independent reading one can gain a considerable amount of valuable insight and information. What follows is a list of books I frequently recommend to those who not only want to deprogram themselves from the WCG's propaganda, but also want to gain a better understanding of many of the topics the WCG stressed.

Books About Cults and Mind Control

Every so often I receive a letter from someone who has read a number of our past issues, suspects the WCG is a cult, but somehow has lingering doubts about it. For those in this category I would suggest reading one or more from the following group:

Steven Hassan, Combatting Cult Mind Control (Park Street Press, 1989). I thoroughly reviewed this book in AR44 and still think it is one of the finest books available on the subject. The paperback edition sells for $12.95 and a new audio cassette version sells for $17.95. You may order directly from the publisher (there is a $3 charge for shipping): Park Street Press, P.O. Box 388, Rochester, VT 05767 (tel. 1-800-488-2665).

Stephen Arterburn and Jack Felton, Toxic Faith: Understanding and Overcoming Religious Addiction (Oliver Nelson, 1991). The relevance of this book to WCG members is apparent from the fact that Joseph Tkach Jr. is highly critical of it. I highly recommend it.

Ronald M. Enroth, Churches That Abuse (Zondervan, 1992). In this book Enroth, a professor of sociology at Westmont College in Santa Barbara, offers "help for those hurt by legalism, authoritarian leadership, manipulation, excessive discipline, and spiritual intimidation." After reading the Enroth book, Bruce Renehan wrote, "This is a book that could help many Worldwidiers. Professor Enroth has done a wonderful job of exposing the world of abusive religion."

Father Leo Booth, When God Becomes a Drug: Breaking the Chains of Religious Addiction and Abuse (Tarcher/ Perigree, 1991). In reviewing this book psychologist John Bradshaw, himself a former monk, pointedly wrote, "No addiction is more toxically shaming and soul-murdering than the religious abuse that flows from the actions of religious addicts." Rev. Booth views religious addiction as a disease that can be treated by application of a modified version of AA's twelve steps. (Incidentally, many psychologists see religious addiction as similar to drug addiction. See, for example, Milkman and Sunderworth, Craving for Ecstasy: The Consciousness and Chemistry of Escape, chapter four, Lexington Books, 1987.)

Marlene Winell, Ph.D., Leaving the Fold: A Guide for Former Fundamentalists and Others Leaving Their Religion (New Harbinger, 1994). Dr. Winell, a psychologist, offers almost 300 pages of guidance and resources for those who have become convinced that they are in a destructive cult or abusive denomination.

Robert Jay Lifton, Thought Reform and the Psychology of Totalism (Norton, 1961 and University of North Carolina Press, 1989). While subtitled "A Study of Brainwashing in China," this famous work has become the most often-quoted by experts in deprogramming and exit counselling. Those who may find it too technical or long should skip over to chapter 23 where the author outlines the "eight psychological themes which are predominant within the social field of the thought reform mileau." Former Worldwidiers who have read this chapter have often commented how Lifton has succinctly captured the essence of the Armstrongism experience.

Books About Learning to Think

Over time it has become all too obvious to us at AR that one reason why some leave the WCG, only to become engrossed by some movement even more unbalanced, is that many have never had any formal or systematic training in how to think clearly. If one were to go to college specifically to learn how to think more clearly, one would take a number of courses in the area of philosophy. Such courses would include logic, the study of fallacies, semantics, epistemology (which includes the study of what justifies belief), metaphysics (including ontology and cosmology), ethics, aesthetics, politics, and the history of philosophy. In some Christian denominations, seminarians are expected to master the essentials of each of these areas before beginning graduate-level studies in theology. A young person desiring to eventually be a scholar would do well to read college-level textbooks about all of these subjects. Unfortunately, many do not have the time or the energy to invest in such a program of self help. For such individuals I would recommend the following books (in fact, they would be just as helpful to the budding scholar):

Jerry Mander, Four Arguments for the Elimination of Television (Quill, 1977). Some will think it odd that I would rank this book so highly - that is, until they read it. More than any book I know, this one will make you suspicious of information and ways of thinking absorbed from the mass media. It should encourage you to want to spend less time watching the boob tube. Additionally, it contains valuable insights into the conspiratorial nature of modern society. If you read only one of the books I suggest, this should be it.

Mortimer J. Adler and Charles Van Doren, How to Read a Book (Touchstone, 1940, 1972). This work will not simply make everything you read more understandable, it will greatly expand your view of the world of the intellect. One Ph.D. candidate who read the book told me, "Why didn't they make this required reading when we were just starting college? It would have made our college years so much easier." One caveat, however. I personally disagree with one small section of the book - the section on canonical writing (assuming the authors were not writing with tongue in cheek). I think canonical writing should be read with the same critical care that the authors advocate for other types of writing.

Rudolph Flesch, The Art of Clear Thinking (Barnes and Noble, 1951). Like some other books on this list, locating a copy of this one may take some time. Nevertheless, doing so will be worth the effort as it is easy to read and teaches important skills that will make all of your studies more productive.

V.A. Howard and J.H. Barton, Thinking on Paper (Quill, 1986). While this very short book is mainly about writing (and for that it is very good), its opening chapter offers such a major insight into how to think more effectively that it alone makes this book very valuable.

S.I. Hayakawa, Language in Thought and Action (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, 1939, 1978). While Hayakawa perhaps slightly overstates his key premise, this book still remains a classic introduction to the study of semantics. In particular, it is invaluable for the study of religious and philosophical literature.

Will Durant, The Story of Philosophy (Washington Square Press, 1926, 1961). Durant's book, one of the best-loved of our time, presents a concise overview of the lives and opinions of some of the greatest thinkers of Western civilization. While this is not a college textbook on the history of philosophy, it is, nevertheless, a very readable introduction to the subject.

Encyclopedia of Philosophy (Crowell Collier and MacMillan, 1967), Vol. 3 article on "Fallacies." I know of few subjects that can prove as valuable to Worldwidiers (or to just about anyone else, for that matter) as the study of fallacies - erroneous ways of reasoning that have the appearance of soundness. Although it does not cover formal fallacies, a helpful and concise work is With Good Reason: An Introduction to Informal Fallacies by S. Morris Engel (St. Martin's Press, 1976). When I first studied the subject of fallacies two decades ago, it was via Irving M. Copi's excellent college textbook Introduction to Logic (MacMillan, 1972). It's very good, and because there is a new 1994 edition out, you may be able to locate a copy without too much trouble. Nevertheless, most will find the above encyclopedia article (available in many libraries) quite adequate. Additionally, I would recommend Arthur Schopenhauer's short work 38 Ways to Win an Argument to anyone who wants to be able to spot fallacious reasoning in action. Whether one wants to see through the specious arguments of politicians, lawyers, advertisers, clerics, or just about anyone else, this short work - frankly, about how the cleverly devious do their devilish persuading - is invaluable. Unfortunately, locating a copy of this nineteenth century treatise may prove difficult. I found a short translation of it in Five Rings, Six Crises... by Boswell and Starter (Viking, 1990).

Books About the "Real World"

After this section, I list a number of works I believe offer significant help in understanding the Bible. But I am here giving a few books higher priority for a reason. One may know how to think clearly, but if one just dives into biblical study what usually happens is that the student goes down a lot of dead ends and wastes a lot of time. The reason? The biblical literature was not written in a vacuum. It relates to the real world - both spiritual and physical. And if the student does not have an adequate understanding of that world, then much of what is in the Bible will not be understood or will be misunderstood. An obvious example of this relates to historical context. If one has no grasp of ancient history then one will have a very difficult time in both the Old and the New Testaments. But there are many other areas of knowledge that are also very relevant. Here are a few books that provide important information on a number of those areas:

Thomas R. Malthus, Essay on the Principle of Population. Malthus, considered one of history's earliest economists, was a young cleric in 1798 when he brought out the first edition of what was to become one of the most influential writings of all time. Not only is the work acknowledged as a classic of political economy, its profound influence has extended to the areas of biology, theory of history, sociology, moral philosophy, and even theology. Although Malthus was later to do a number of significantly enlarged editions of the original work, the concise first edition makes its arguments most cogently. In 1959, The University of Michigan Press (Ann Arbor Paperbacks) republished the first edition as Population: The First Essay. This work provides an important introduction to the books that follow in this section.

Gordon Rattray Taylor, The Great Evolution Mystery (Harper & Row, 1983). While this is not the most current work on the theory of evolution, it is one of the most readable and interesting. The author is no theist and he has faith in the general evolutionary theory. Yet he sees problems with Darwin's version of it. While the author does not admit to teleology (the concept that the future draws us into it or that there is a cosmic plan), virtually all that he writes seems to point in the direction of physical life having come about from a supernatural, guiding mind.

Robert Ardrey, The Territorial Imperative: A Personal Inquiry into the Animal Origins of Property and Nations (Dell, 1966). Don't let the intellectual-sounding title throw you. Newsweek very aptly called this book, "One of the most exciting books about the nature of man that has ever been presented." Unlike the great personages of the Bible, most of us have grown up estranged from earth, sea, animals, and the rest of creation. Ardrey helps us get back in touch with the reality of the biological world. One warning, however. If you start this book, finish it. I know one individual who read only a third of it and came away with conclusions diametrically the opposite of what the author intended and clarified by book's end.

Peter Farb, Man's Rise To Civilization: The Cultural Ascent of the Indians of North America (Penguin, 1991). This very readable book makes an excellent introduction to cultural anthropology. Many Bible students will be surprised to learn how much a study of anthropology and American Indians can add to their appreciation of the Bible and life in general.

Sir James Frazer, The Golden Bough. The first edition of this work appeared in 1890. Generally regarded as one of the great classics in anthropology, it offers many profound insights into the history and nature of Western religion. While the complete version of this work is quite lengthy (13 volumes), many will find one of the condensed, and sometimes illustrated, versions adequate.

Books Specifically About the Bible

There are so many interesting and valuable books available about the Bible that it is impossible to provide any kind of comprehensive list. However, based on personal experience and the experiences of hundreds of our readers, I can suggest a number that will dramatically help many gain a better understanding of history's most important collection of writings:

Hershel Shanks, editor (in collaboration with a team of scholars), Ancient Israel: A Short History from Abraham to the Destruction of the Temple (Prentice Hall, 1988). Based on the most authoritative and up-to-date scholarship, this book is one of the finest short histories of ancient Israel available today. Hershel Shanks is founder, editor, and publisher of Biblical Archaeology Review and Bible Review magazines. Incidentally, the latter may very well be the most informative Bible-related publication available today for the non-academic public. Those who would like more information about it, or the Ancient Israel book, should contact: The Bible Archaeology Society, 4710 41st Street NW, Washington, DC 20016; tel. 1-800-221-4644.

Richard Elliot Friedman, Who Wrote the Bible? (Summit Books, 1987). I wish the catchy title of this book had actually been something like, "How Did the Old Testament Come to Be?" It would have more accurately described the content of this most interesting book. While many in the general public might have some difficulty understanding this work, those with WCG experience should grasp its central ideas with no difficulty. While, admittedly, Professor Friedman is presenting a theory, it is a very plausible one which recognizes, among other things, the significance of there having been a House of Judah that was distinct - even as to religious particulars - from the House of Israel.

Bruce M. Metzger, The Text of the New Testament: Its Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration (Oxford University Press, 1968). This is a scholarly work and many will find portions of it difficult reading. Nevertheless, the average reader can skim or even skip some of the more technical portions and still read this work to great benefit. I am always amazed how the vast majority of Christians claim faith in the New Testament, yet have so little idea of how it came to be. Dr. Metzger's book answers many basic questions. By the way, while some bookstores charge $30-$40 for a copy of this outstanding work, copies can be obtained for only $19.95 from Watchman Fellowship, P.O. Box 13340, Arlington, TX 76094-0340.

Ian Wilson, Jesus: The Evidence (Harper & Row, 1984). Who was the historical Jesus? That extremely important question is addressed in quite a number of books that have appeared in recent years. Journalist Wilson presents a fairly objective overview of the evidence. Both believers and non-believers can find valuable information in his work. A more reverential and apologetic work is James D. G. Dunn's The Evidence for Jesus (The Westminster Press, 1985), a thoughtful book that apparently was written in response to Wilson's. A third book about the historical Jesus is John Dominic Crossan's Jesus: A Revolutionary Biography (Harper Collins, 1994). While Professor Crossan does not view Jesus in supernatural terms (he discounts the possibility of a resurrection), he is, nonetheless, quite sympathetic to his subject. It is difficult to see how even the most coldly analytical non-believer could come away from Crossan's work without recognizing Jesus as the most significant individual in human history. While fundamentalists may find some of his conclusions disquieting, Professor Crossan's book contains many valuable insights about the life of Jesus.

Elaine Pagels, The Gnostic Gospels (Vintage Books, 1979). This outstanding piece of historical scholarship won the National Book Critics Circle Award and the National Book Award in 1980. And very justifiably so. This easy-to-read book not only concisely offers a vast amount of information about the earliest years of Christianity, but to the thoughtful Worldwider (or recent exiter) it shows the amazing parallels between Christianity of the late first to early third centuries and the recent history of the WCG. Those who find Dr. Pagels' ideas thought-provoking may wish to follow up this book with two important writings by early Christian leaders: "The Letters of Ignatius, Bishop of Antioch" and "The Letter of Polycarp to the Philippians." Both are found in The Apostolic Fathers, Second Edition, translated by J. B. Lightfoot and J. R. Harmer and edited by Michael W. Holmes (Baker Book House, 1989).

Morton Smith and R. Joseph Hoffman, editors (with a team of scholars that included the almost ubiquitous James Tabor), What the Bible Really Says (Prometheus, 1989, Harper Collins paperback, 1993). In this book's conclusion co-editor Hoffman states, "It can be taken for granted that 75 percent of what the average Christian or Jew 'thinks' about the Bible is interpretation and not scriptural at all." Worldwidewiders who understand that the sabbath is the seventh day of the week, who know the difference between the House of Judah and the House of Israel, who know how the Saturnalia was incorporated into Christianity, etc. will not find Hoffman's comment too surprising. Nevertheless, this work contains enough startling information to educate - or offend - just about everyone.

A few final comments. The above list is structured so that the more general and basic books usually precede the more advanced and specialized. For that reason many who do not have a college education will still find it manageable. It should be pointed out, however, that the list is not an exhaustive one. There are many more books that could be recommended to those trying to "deprogram" themselves from the WCG experience. Nevertheless, the above will provide a good start to those who have sufficient intellectual curiosity coupled with the time and energy to pursue a program of self-education - especially in those areas where the WCG laid down dogmatic, and frequently erroneous, "answers" to many of life's biggest questions.

Obituaries

We at the Report were very saddened to learn of the recent death of our one-time classmate Richard Paige, 51, from cancer. In addition to an M.A. in history from New York University, Richard had a B.A. from Ambassador College (Pasadena class of 1970) and a bachelor's degree in medical technology. In recent years the former Ambassador professor of history and archaeology worked as a medical technician at Mother Francis Hospital in Tyler, Texas. He is survived by his wife Deanne and children Michael and Shoshan (WN, 8/9/94, p. 11).

Sometimes the Report is not as timely as it should be. A few weeks ago one of our readers asked us what had become of writer and Ambassador alumnus (Texas, 1970) Gene Justice of Alabama. When we made inquiries we were shocked to learn that Gene, an old friend, had been killed in 1990 in a head-on collision with a drunk driver who had crossed over into his lane. In the '80s, Gene's biblical research and writings helped many of our readers who, like us, will be saddened to learn of his passing.

Letters

I left the WCG four years ago. Two weeks ago I saw a lady who is still in the church. I told her, "They sure made a lot of changes in the church, haven't they?" She said, "No, they haven't changed anything. Everything is still just the same as always."

-Wisconsin

I've been told by friends still in the WCG that they have a different Passover service, but it won't be implemented until next year; that outsiders may come and observe Passover services, but not partake; and that Passover will no longer be considered a solemn service, but rather a time of fellowship. Boy, I wish that had been the case when I was in - then the hall was always as quiet as a tomb.

-Wisconsin

If the WCG finally becomes almost like orthodox Christianity how long will it take - years? Sure, they're starting to talk more about Jesus Christ now, but how much do they really know about the freedom of being in Him and not under the law? Hardly any of the songs in the new hymnal are really about Christ. In looking through the new hymnal I discovered that only about 23 out of 234 mention Christ or Jesus and most of those only had His name mentioned once!

-Colorado

Recently I was taken aback to discover that Joe Tkach Jr. had actually excused church members from sabbath services in early July so they might attend a church-recommended therapy seminar costing participants $500 each. (Isn't the 10 percent of one's salary, paid to "spirit led" church counsellors, enough anymore?) The members who doled out the small fortune were taught the pop psychology theory called "synergism." What's that? Actually, it is not a psychological term. It is really a sixteenth-century theological concept. It is the belief that if enough people believe in the same thing simultaneously - love, wealth, or success, for example - then an energy force is created that will actually bring about the desired effect. Some pop psychologists refer to synergism by the term "critical mass theory."

This type of experimental psychology is not really supported by true scientists any more than blood-letting is by reputable modern doctors. Such charlatanism is not new in the field of psychology. In the eighteenth century, Dr. Franz Anton Mesmer created the rage in Paris by advocating bathing with magnetic copper rods to correct physical and mental maladies. A few years later Franz Joseph Gall developed phrenology, the theory that a person's character can be ascertained by feeling the bumps on his head. The theories of both Mesmer and Gall have since been thoroughly debunked, just as those of the synergists have. Maybe Joe Jr. should stop dabbling in pop psychology. It's no better than his pop theology.

We still attend services (tongue in cheek) as it is a good social club and we are waiting for Tkach's announcement that the commandments are done away with and therefore are obsolete. We no longer pay tithes but have many friendships which we have made over the years.

-South Africa

Editor: In recent months we have been amazed at how many WCG members have written saying they no longer are in harmony with official WCG teaching but they still attend services because the church functions as a "social club."

Your AR54 issue was just great. But there was one letter and editor's comment that left me a bit confused. Mr. Wagner's letter and the editor's comment is one that I can't understand. How can anyone in, their right mind think that our news and entertainment media are "ultra-conservative." Just watching TV should tell all of us that the media are "ultra-liberal." Could you explain how you came up with your opinion?

-Missouri

Editor: In our culture we use the words "conservative" and "liberal" in a variety of ways and nor always with great precision. In addition to common media parlance, which uses the terms to designate political alliances, religionists and political scientists use the words quite differently.

If you are talking about scriptural exegesis, "conservative" generally refers to views that favor a more literal interpretation of scripture and "liberal" to a more allegorical interpretation of scripture. If you are talking about Christian ethics, then "conservative" most often refers to traditional viewpoints on morality issues. Examples include viewpoints that are in favor of traditional family structures and against promiscuity, divorce, premarital sex, and homosexuality. If you use the words conservative and liberal in that way, then you are most certainly correct. The media are not just liberal, but ultra-liberal. As an example, ten years ago who would have ever thought that we would see a pop music concert (in this case Michael Jackson on TV doing an hours-long show before thousands of screaming fans) during which the star stroked his crotch throughout the entire show? Yet one cable TV station literally broadcast such a concert from eastern Europe last year. Is that "liberal"? If you are talking, Christian ethics, you bet it is.

But there is another way that the terms "liberal" and "conservative" are used. In the areas of political science economics and sometimes history, the terms more frequently refer to one's viewpoint about the control-of-power status quo. In layman's language, we could define those terms this way: "Conservatives" want to conserve the status quo-that is, they want those who now have privilege and power (whether political, economic, or social) to be able to hold onto it, and conversely, for those who do not have it not to be able to gain it. "Liberals," on the other hand, can be viewed as those who do not have the power they feel they are entitled to, and therefore they generally feel that we, as a people, should be more liberal or generous in how our society's power is distributed. In watching Congressional debates, I have noticed that liberals usually tend to be quite generous with other people's money (and power), whereas conservatives, the ones who seem to perceive themselves as having the money (and power), are more restrained regarding other's taking it from them.

As an aside, let me point out another interesting facet of this subject. Some years ago I had the privilege of hearing a lecture by law professor Daniel L. Stewart, one of the country's leading experts in the fields of property law and Constitutional law. He very adroitly commented that if one looks at the political positions of American liberals and conservatives (a prime example would be written opinions of the liberal and conservative justices of the U.S. Supreme Court), one would very consistently find some glaring inconsistencies of logic. He pointed out, for instance, that liberals, while frequently more liberal or generous or tolerant on matters regarded as social (free speech, for instance) are frequently more intolerant or pro-government restrictive regarding economics (corporation regulation, for instance). Conservatives, on the other hand, while often backing or upholding ever more legislation that may impede social freedoms, are generally quite tolerant or anti-law-and-order in regard to laws that impede large corporations and the wealthy. One can look back on a number of self-described conservatives in our recent political past to see that some "law and order" candidates were also the ones calling for "deregulation." If you think about it, this is logically a self-contradiction. Regulations, in a practical sense, are laws. Of course, the term "regulations" is usually used in general discourse to refer to rules that impede corporations, businesses, and the wealthy - not those that impede shoplifters, burglars, and other so-called "common" criminals. So what you are left with from those politicians is the message that they want to be tougher toward the poorer, less empowered segments of society, but less demanding (more liberal) toward those who are empowered by privilege, wealth (often inherited or gotten by sophisticated manipulation of our legal system), or resultant political strength.

Columnists Jeff Cohen and Norman Solomon in their article "Asking twenty questions about the 'liberal media'" were obviously using the terms liberal and conservative in the political-economic sense. (Incidentally, you can still get a free copy of their article by writing to Cohen and Solomon at P.O. Box 13193, Oakland, CA 94661. Please be sure to include a stamped, self-addressed envelope.)

For an example of the press being criticized from another point of view you might want to see a copy of a new study called "Faith in a Box: Network News on Religion" put out by an affiliate of Pat Robertson's 700 Club: Media Research Center, 113 S. West Street, Alexandria, VA 22314 (it sells for $2). Both papers contain valuable insights about the press and for many, a comparison of the two papers will prove very educational.

I think the Tkachs may be the ones who finally blow the WCG apart. In many ways the WCG is already starting to look like the Jehovah's Witnesses! They could dump the trinity doctrine just as fast as they adopted it, get rid of the word "Church" in their name, and accept the doctrine of the 144,000. Then the members could be duped into local Kingdom Halls! There they would be duped into going from door to door doing their "personal evangelizing." A friend of mine is a JW and he talks just like a WCG member.

My sister and brother-in-law are still staunch WCG members. I also have a lot of good friends who are still in the WCG and I see them quite often. They now have the "TKACH FRIENDLINESS" and have invited me to services many times. I still consider many people in the WCG my friends. Many of them are sincere and well meaning and it would not be right for me to insult them. But I do not want to go back to that dog vomit! The scripture states that Jesus Christ is "the same, yesterday, today and forever." If the WCG was the one and only true church, its members would not be buffeted to and fro by every wind of the continuously changing doctrines they are creating! They are being careless with the scriptures! I suspect many will wake up soon and leave. Those that remain will probably be convinced that this is the great falling away.

Last week I went to my second church service in the Worldwide Church [in recent years]. Each time I went they made me feel very welcome. I have not had to repent or humble myself in any way to the ministers. In fact it was Mr. Dennis Luker who called me and said we were all welcome to come back! It all started when I kept hearing that Joseph Tkach had said that many members of the church had been disfellowshipped unjustly. So I thought I would see if he really meant it. I wrote him an honest, open letter last September and told him of our family's case and sent him copies of our disfellowship letters. In just a few weeks we all got a call from Mr. Luker who said our disfellowshipments had been made null and void and that our memberships had been restored! Mr. Luker said that the ministers who put us out would also be disciplined. They were Richard Rice and Lawson James Tuck. While we may never support the church 100% again, I can't tell you how wonderful it is to get to fellowship with my old friends in the church again without them being afraid to speak to us.

Whatever his reasons, I commend Mr. Tkach for at long last taking the club away.... John, it has now come full circle. Those who really loved the church and wanted to reform it are being welcomed back, and the hardliners like Roderick Meredith are being thrown out! God's justice may seem to move slowly to us but it gets here!

There is a WCG breakaway group nearby that publishes that Winston Churchill was the King of the South and that Christ died to abolish the Book of Exodus and bring into force the Book of Deuteronomy and, of course, that HWA was the Elijah. The bizarre and painful thing is that the leader of this group is very intelligent and sincere. You probably get reports of thousands of such groups.

-Australia

Editor: Not thousands, but it does seem like hundreds. There are so many, in fact, we just can't keep up with all of them any more.

Needless to say, I am still suffering emotionally from the jackasses [of the WCG ministry]. Everything I built by their teachings has been taken apart twig by twig until there is only a barren stump.... I just feel like a pile of worthless manure. The gigantic stress and coercion by the WCG over the years with fear and terror has damaged my health, nervous system, and brain, I think.... In my wildest dreams I never, never could have believed that religion could deceive anyone like it has, nor the damage afterward. I have been out three years and I am constantly getting flashbacks of all sorts concerning how I was so cleverly tricked and I'm emotional about it. I would have to be dead not to feel many things.

John, as you may remember, back in January I sent AR a check for a complete set of all your past issues. After reading through all of them, I realized what a smart investment I had made. I have been greatly helped psychologically, spiritually, and even financially by reading about my church's history as documented in AR. I have also been amazed at how many of your predictions about the WCG have come true. You really have a handle on what is going on. You know, I just got the July 12 issue of The Worldwide News and Mr. Tkach's front-page editorial is titled, "Being constantly vigilant to stay biblical." Seems our Pastor General has just discovered that his church is drifting into unbiblical waters. Had he been reading the Report, he would have discovered the problem way back in February when your publication's lead story about the church was "The Bible is Being Deemphasized."

-New York

Thanks for the latest AR. Your coverage leaves me with a sense of "wonder" at the extent of charade in "The World of Church." This leads to incredulity that finally breaks over into a paroxysm of laughter. That is the best medicine.

At times it is hard to believe all this can be happening. There are so many diverse bacterial strains that have mutated out of the mother virus WCG. This issue of AR was enough to convince me that all this infected behavior indicates the source must be a retrovirus with unlimited potential for diversification. How bizarre. The WCG fountainhead may even have "one leg up" on AIDS in its speed and capacity for proliferating in different forms.

We contribute financially only to AR since it is the single effort that identifies the sickness (religious addiction) and attempts to inoculate the required antibodies. Unfortunately, some still experience that occasional malaria-like attack. Is there any hope? Is the final solution only the final event?

This is a follow-up to your Ambassador Report issue of February and the reference to the questions surrounding the Boston Church's activity fund and just where all the money is going.

In early April, the minister gave a scathing sermon about gossip and took the opportunity to bring up the matter of the "gossip" that was circulating in the Boston and Worcester WCG congregations about what he was doing with the money from the fundraisers. Speaking in his own defense, he said that he would post a listing of where the money was spent. That was in April. It is now September and the list still has not been posted. Tells you something, doesn't it!

-Boston Church member

My late husband Len and I were the chief fundraisers in the Brisbane North congregation. We thought the thousands of dollars we raised were being put towards making the Y.O.U. camp at Lake Moogerah the best in Australia. It was some time before we realized that such was not the case. Even though the signs on our continuing street stalls and our police permits read, "Proceeds to Lake Moogerah Youth Camp," little of the money was going there and the camp is now defunct. The crunch came a few months before my husband died of cancer. We always handed currency and checks into the ministry, but suddenly we were not being issued with receipts for same. When we protested and asked why, we were told we had a bad attitude in not trusting the ministry.

As we were both pensioners and many checks were our personal ones, we had to answer to the government's Social Security and Taxation Department as to what these monies were that were going in and out of our bank account. They said receipts were necessary. That fact didn't phase the money-crazed ministers one iota. So we dug our heels in and continued fund raising, but for the Queensland Cancer Fund and the Children's Hospital. (We knew they would issue receipts and we didn't wish to just throw away the fundraising expertise we had gained.) In the WCG this made us about as popular as pork in Jerusalem. To make a long story short, Len died after an eleven week illness. I carried on the fundraising with help from friends....

In hindsight, I could write a book about our experiences in Worldwide. Len, who was my second husband (we had both lost earlier partners to cancer) was the first man baptized into the church in Queensland. That was in the late '50s by windbag Waterhouse. I came into the church in 1970 in Bill Bradford's time. After departing the church, I attended with CGI for a short time, but soon found out that money and mind control were also the name of their game. Now I am associating with a small group of Worldwide escapees. We fellowship regularly at my home and have Bible studies.... We are a happy group.

Editor: After I wrote to the above reader for permission to run her name along with her letter, she responded with a few more details of the story:

Certainly use my name and address if it will help. With God on my side, I will not be losing any sleep over upsetting those my letter will expose or offend. I still retain documentation of our letters going to and fro to Worldwide headquarters at Burleigh Heads asking - almost begging - for receipts for the money we forwarded to them. I also have all the receipts that were promptly forwarded to us by the charities I mentioned, along with glowing letters of appreciation from them.

In my last letter I don't think I mentioned all the things that occurred just prior to my late husband's death.... As soon as Len was diagnosed with cancer and admitted to hospital, I informed the ministry and prayers were asked for him in the local churches. He received quite a few visits from members, but the ministry was quite conspicuous by its absence. Len was responding to radium and chemotherapy but then they discovered that the cancer had spread to the bile duct. The surgeons decided to operate immediately to reduce his pain. The operation was quite a major one and the prognosis was that Len had only a few more weeks to live. Now, you are not going to believe this. (Or are you?) Three days went by after the operation and although Len had visits from Catholic priests, Anglican and United Church ministers, and Salvation Army personnel - all offering their kind services - not one minister from Worldwide bothered to call. Here was this wonderful, decent Christian man who had served the church and the community so well, lying there, knowing that his life was ebbing away and not one so-called minister of the church he had served wanted to know about it! [It was only after this woman made an angry call to a WCG minister that her husband finally got some attention from the ministry in whose church he had been a longstanding member - ed.]

Len died with dignity and one member of the medical staff told me his attitude touched all their lives. The doctors said that even though Len must have suffered excruciating pain, he never asked for morphine, but calmly accepted death. They just shook their heads and admitted that they had never witnessed such faith. I know that God was with Len....

I continued in the church for almost another year.... It was over another fundraising incident that I finally blew my stack and resigned. Even though I had sent a letter of resignation to headquarters at Burleigh Heads, our local apology for a minister announced to the congregation that he had been forced to "stand me down" for a few weeks until I repented of my bad attitude....

It was not until some few weeks after my exit from the WCG that I was given some copies of AR by friends who had already departed the church. They were a wonderful help and comfort to me. I can truly thank God daily that He released me from bondage and gave me the truth that really does set us free.

A Christian Hero Passes Away

In May, Ambassador Report lost a good friend. He was Mr. John Weidner, the owner of a chain of local health food stores, who, although never a WCG member, had a keen interest in our publication and the people of the WCG. For quite a few years now there was never an AR issue that went out that did not receive a very prompt contribution from Mr. Weidner, often accompanied by much appreciated words of encouragement. Because of limited space, what few obituaries we run are usually short. But, in this case we believe that many of our readers would appreciate reading the following excerpt from a Myrna Oliver article about Mr. Weidner that appeared in the Los Angeles Times (5/23/94, p. 3):

John Henry Weidner, the Dutch-born hero decorated by many nations for rescuing more than 1,000 Jews and Allied airmen from the Nazis during World War II, has died at his home in Monterey Park. He was 81.

Weidner, who moved to the United States in the mid-1950s to escape memories of the war, died Saturday of heart failure, the Southern California Conference of Seventh-day Adventists announced Sunday.

The pacifist son of a Seventh-day Adventist minister, Weidner [whose sister, Gabrielle, died in a Nazi concentration camp] was a leader of the Dutch-Paris underground, which operated escape routes from war-torn Holland, Belgium and France into neutral Switzerland.

He was captured repeatedly, interrogated by Klaus Barbie, the infamous "Butcher of Lyon," and tortured by the Gestapo and France's Milice secret police. He always escaped, jumping off trains, swimming the Rhine under Nazi fire, and once diving out a third-floor prison window just prior to his scheduled execution.

For his efforts, Weidner earned the Order of the British Empire, the Dutch Order of Orange-Nassau and Medal of Resistance, the French Croix de Guerre and the Medaille de la Resistance, Belgium's Order of King Leopold II and the U.S. Medal of Freedom with Gold Palms. He was also designated an officer of the French Foreign Legion of Honor.

Israel, recognizing him as a "Righteous Gentile," entered his name as a hero in the Golden Book of Jerusalem and planted a tree with his name on the Hill of Remembrance at Yad Vashem. Also recognized by the Simon Wiesenthal Center, Weidner was one of seven people chosen to light candles at last year's opening of the Holocaust Memorial in Washington, D.C.

Weidner's wartime exploits were chronicled in the 1966 book by Herbert Ford titled Flee the Captor.

Atlantic Union College last year established the John Henry Weidner Center for the Cultivation of the Altruistic Spirit, which will sponsor lectures, concerts, classes, exhibits and social programs promoting altruism.

"During my father's lifetime," Weidner said in a speech in Pasadena honoring Holocaust victims in 1989, "he taught me, my family, his parishioners and the community that the most important quality in a human being was to love, respect and treat our fellow man as we wished to be loved, respected and treated."

"I was a witness to the barbaric treatment of the Jews by the Nazis. I personally observed the crushing of the skull of a Jewish infant who was torn out of the arms of its mother," he said. "I was determined to heed the teachings and example of my father and I did everything that I could to save as many lives as possible."....

With the above thoughts we bring this issue to a close. My apologies for the long delay between issues, but like many of you, I have been burdened of late by my own set of personal problems. I thank all of you for your patience. And, as always, my special thanks to those of you who are helping to make our publication possible.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

January 1995 (AR57)

As has been the case for over two decades now, the Worldwide Church of God (WCG), with its Ambassador University and ever-evolving Plain Truth magazine, continues to be one of the great soap operas of the religious world.

Sabbath in Crisis

Since its very inception the WCG's sabbath doctrine has been one of its distinctive features. In fact, it was church founder Herbert W. Armstrong's study of the subject in 1926 that led to his initial religious conversion. The essentials of Armstrong's teaching on the subject were that the sabbath of the Ten Commandments is the seventh day of the week and that its non-observance constituted a sin which had to be repented of for salvation. Strict sabbath observance therefore constituted a requirement for Christian living.

When Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA) died in 1986, it was inconceivable to WCG members that such a fundamental doctrine of Armstrongism would ever be questioned by those that had followed him. In recent years, however, as HWA's successor Joseph W. Tkach, Sr. changed scores of WCG doctrines, many WCG observers openly wondered whether Tkach would eventually change his predecessor's sabbath doctrine as well. But numerous ministers of the WCG, particularly church administrator Joseph Tkach Jr., from the pulpit repeatedly scoffed at such suggestions. Nevertheless, the Report has now learned that the entire sabbath doctrine is indeed being reevaluated by a very large number of WCG ministers and particularly by the organization's top leaders. Not only is the old doctrine being questioned, but preparations have already begun for the eventual watering down that many insiders say is inevitable.

A key ingredient in those preparations is the widespread dissemination of the 345-page book Sabbath in Crisis among WCG ministers. Sabbath in Crisis was authored by former Seventh Day Adventist minister Dale Ratzlaff who now heads Life Assurance Ministries. In his book Pastor Ratzlaff argues quite effectively that under the New Covenant, observance of the Old Testament sabbath is simply not required. While the argument has been made before, what makes Ratzlaff's book so remarkable is the thoroughness with which he approaches the subject. While his book is very easy to read, Sabbath in Crisis contains over 800 scriptural references. It is perhaps for that reason that his book has had such a profound effect on the thinking of so many WCG ministers. We have learned that although WCG headquarters does not yet want the book widely disseminated to its members, hundreds of WCG ministers have already purchased and read the book. Pastor Ratzlaff tells us that WCG headquarters in Pasadena has even purchased bulk shipments of the book for distribution to key church personnel. (We have had this information verified by headquarters executives and sources in the field ministry.) Sabbath in Crisis is available in many Christian bookstores, but it can also be ordered directly from Life Assurance Ministries, P.O. Box 3745, Sedona, AZ 86340-3745; tel. 602-282-4319. The price is $14.95 per copy (plus $2 for shipping to destinations outside the U.S., and California residents must add a 6% sales tax). Those who would like more information before ordering, or who would like information about bulk order discounts, should send a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the above address.

While it appears inevitable that the WCG will in time be modifying its sabbath doctrine, does that mean that the WCG will soon be keeping Sunday? We asked a number of WCG insiders that question. While demanding anonymity, one frankly said, "Mr. Tkach knows he can't go that far yet because sabbath keeping is important to the members' feelings of being special. But what will probably happen is that Mr. Tkach will slowly modify church policies regarding the sabbath. I think we are going to start by allowing members who have to work on Saturdays to go ahead and do that without being disfellowshipped. Besides, it will help church income. How open that policy will be, I can't say for sure right now. But frankly that has already been quietly happening in some church areas. In some congregations, as long as the member continues to tithe and does not create division by openly opposing church authority, he may go ahead and work on the sabbath without being disfellowshipped. Of course, that is not yet the policy with all of our pastors, but it is a policy we hope will eventually be the norm."

Been Reading the PT Lately?

No, we're not kidding. Every AR reader should subscribe to the Plain Truth (even if you're disfellowshipped and have to use a pseudonym to get it). Why? Because it's so funny to see the PT's writers systematically decimating every last vestige of Armstrongism before our very eyes.

For instance, take the October issue - please! (Sorry, couldn't resist that.) There on page eight began an article in praise of "Contemporary Christian music" - what the article explains as the Gospel (read "Protestant") message when combined with rock music. Could you imagine what Handel-loving HWA would have done to a writer who submitted such an article to him? Yet there it was in the PT, complete with photos of all the latest Christian-rock stars.

Then there was the Nov./Dec. issue. On page 14 Neil Earle explains that the gospel is "your invitation to the Kingdom." Sounds OK, but then a couple of pages later he tells us most emphatically what the gospel is not: It's not "the Social Gospel" (ironically, the very thing many say Joseph Tkach has been preaching the last few years), it's not "the Health and Wealth Gospel" (what many Protestant ministers preach and what some WCG ministers in the past have preached), it's not the Gospel of Works (what Herbert Armstrong was accused of preaching), and most certainly it is not "the End-Time Gospel" (what Herbert Armstrong most definitely preached and what Garner Ted Armstrong, Roderick Meredith, Gerald Flurry and others preach today).

But turning to page 20, we get an even bigger shocker. There, John Halford does homage to Mary, "the mother of Christ" and "the first Christian." The article comes complete with 12 (count 'em -12!) different paintings of "the Madonna" by mostly Catholic painters. Remember when the WCG eschewed everything Roman Catholic? No more. It's all great stuff now.

Here at AR we wondered about the phrase "mother of Christ." On the surface there might not appear to be anything wrong with it. But HWA avoided the phrase - undoubtedly because it comes so close to the Catholic phrase "Mary, Mother of God" which, itself, comes so close to the biblically condemned worship of the "Queen of Heaven" (Jer. 44:17,25). So we contacted one of our "inside sources" and asked, "What gives with this new recognition of the Madonna? Is the WCG trying to capitalize on the new goddess worship thing? Or the wave of fervent Marianism that has been sweeping the Catholic world in the last few years?" Our insider replied, "Not at all. Mr. Tkach simply recognizes the importance of women, not only in modern society but throughout the Bible." "Fair enough," was our reply. "But isn't 'mother of Christ' simply a euphemism for 'Mother of God'?" After a long pause, all the man could say was, "Well... let's be honest. Jesus is a hypostasis of God. Therefore Jesus is God. So, yes, yes, I guess that's right, Mary is the Mother of God, in a sense. But please, PLEASE don't quote me by name."

How Many Members?

Readers frequently ask how many members are currently in the WCG. The official WCG position is that WCG "membership remains constant at around 100,000 members" (see Mark A. Kellner's excellent article in the 11/8/93 issue of Christianity Today). There are a number of reasons why we question that figure. First of all, the many WCG splinter groups continue to drain away WCG members at an accelerating rate. Rod Meredith's organization alone is reported to have pulled away over 6,000 Worldwidiers in just the last year. Flurry and GTA are likewise pulling away WCG members. The drain is plainly visible in Pasadena where there used to be four WCG congregations., but now there are only two. Another reason why we doubt the WCG's claim of having 100,000 members is that the way members are counted appears to have been changed. No longer is one either a member or a non-member. There is now something called "an associate member." Notice the following letter from a reader in Iowa:

Yesterday I spoke briefly to Dan Fricke, our pastor here at the Des Moines Worldwide Assembly. His evaluation was that I had been sending out some strange letters and that it would be more appropriate to communicate by telephone. I am now an associate member. I explained that perhaps the reason my letters seemed strange is that I am actively ministering in at least two other organizations and that I had gotten into the habit of communicating by memos because that's the way we do it at the office.

Of course, I know my letters are strange. If they seem somewhat strange to me, how much stranger must they be to you?

(Editor: According to one Pasadena source, the WCG's actual active membership is now down to about 60,000 members and that number is continuing to drop.)

Gary Alexander - Optimist

One of the most remarkable individuals to have ever gone through the Ambassador experience is Gary Alexander, writer, editor, publisher, musician, financial consultant, lecturer, and bibliophile. In 1993, Gary and his wife Karen (Biedler) were tapped to run the annual gatherings of the Eris Society, which, in their press release, was described this way:

Eris is the Greek goddess of discord, whose golden apple was marked, "To the fairest" (Kalliste). The squabble over this apple created the jealousy that led to the Trojan War. We have adopted that name to apply to a group of highly intelligent free thinkers - sometimes mischief makers - who meet once a year to discuss the arts and sciences, philosophy to theology - the world of ideas beyond our workaday lives.

The Eris Society is a unique organization, if it can be called an organization at all, since it actually has no formal structure. It is not incorporated, is not a partnership, is owned by no one in particular. We pay no dues. We have no by-laws or voting. Rather, it belongs to those who are invited and who attend its annual gathering.

For 14 years, the annual Eris gathering in Aspen, Colorado has brought together some of the brightest and boldest thinkers in the United States: leading economists, college professors, authors, physicians, psychologists, performing artists, and scientists.

Along with his many business activities, Alexander still finds time to lecture and write. In October, he gave a talk before the Northern Virginia Unitarian Universalist Fellowship. His talk, titled "Welcome to the Initial Meeting of Apocaholics Anonymous," began this way:

Hi, I'm Gary and I'm a recovering Apocaholic. I'm currently Apocalypse-free for nearly four years. I left the church of the Religious Apocalypse nearly 19 years ago, and the church of the Secular Apocalypse five years ago. Yes, I still get the urge to proclaim the end of all things from time to time and I read the Crisis Press, but now I white-knuckle my way to a history book for a little perspective. If you wish to join Apocaholics Anonymous, our only requirement is a desire to give up Eschatology.

After the humorous introduction, Alexander went on to talk about his former careers as a Plain Truth writer and financial-world doomsdayer. Today, Alexander is much more of an optimist and his talk - now a paper - has given us much to think about. While we do not agree with all of his conclusions, many would undoubtedly find his 10-page paper edifying. For a copy, send $2 to Gary Alexander, c/o The Eris Society, P.O. Box 161, Vienna, Virginia 22183-0161. Be sure to also request a listing of his many other provocative writings. Finally, to their old friend John Kilburn, Gary and Karen ask, "Where are you now?"

Literature of Interest

The WCG's new position on the Trinity has already been the cause of thousands leaving the WCG and we continue to get letters from readers wanting more information on the subject. Earlier this year, former Ambassador instructor Anthony F. Buzzard, now a professor at Atlanta Bible College, and former WCG evangelist Charles F. Hunting completed a book titled The Doctrine of the Trinity: Christianity's Self-Inflicted Wound. The book presents Bible students with an alternative to the Binitarianism of the original WCG and its current brand of Trinitarianism which some see as really a form of Modalism. A number of current WCG ministers who have read the book have privately indicated they agree with the two authors' conclusions. Additionally, in the foreword to the book, religious scholar Sydney A. Hatch wrote:

This book is a devastating indictment of the central dogma of historic or mainstream Christianity - that version of the faith which, unknown to many, stems from the councils and the creeds. Christianity still prostrates itself before the low wrought-gold throne of Constantine. Its dogma has produced tragic and bloody episodes in history. Something is askew.

At the same time, however, the message and purpose of Christianity's Self-Inflicted Wound is positive. It does not condemn but attempts to tell the patient about the terrible wound to his body-ecclesiastic and then offers the healing balm of Jesus' own creed. Its very object is to propose ways of believing that more accurately conform to what Jesus believed and taught about God and about himself.

The new, 172-page book is a thorough and scholarly study that is extensively footnoted and contains a six-page select bibliography. Copies are available for $9.95 plus $1.50 postage by writing to either of the co-authors at 185 Summerville Dr., Brooks, GA 30205.

The Worldwide Church of God versus the Church of God (7th Day) is a seven-page paper written by John Kiesz, a sabbatarian oldtimer who knew Herbert Armstrong personally in the 1930s. Those studying HWA's early history may find the paper of interest. For a copy, send $2 to John Kiesz, 820 Woodlawn, Canon City, CO 81212.

While the WCG has toned down its anti-Christmas rhetoric in recent years, the WCG's official position still is that Christians should not keep that holiday. Most of the WCG's offshoots have taken a similar stance. Even Ernest Martin of ASK has reverted to that old HWA teaching (see the December, 1994 issue of his ASK newsletter). In the past, one Bible researcher who was often quoted by the anti-Christmas groups was evangelist Ralph Woodrow. Now Woodrow has published a new booklet on the subject, modifying what many felt was his former Armstrong-like position on the subject. Titled Christmas - Reconsidered, the concise 59-page booklet gives a very thorough analysis of the Christmas issue, covering many of the arguments used by the WCG and other groups over the years. Many who feel they understand the Christmas issue will still find Woodrow's latest study very thought provoking. (As an aside, readers of the booklet will notice two unnamed men mentioned on page 45. The author informs us that, yes, they were WCG officials who admitted to him that the WCG position on Christmas trees was in error.) The high quality booklet is available for $5 by writing to Ralph Woodrow Evangelistic Association, P.O. Box 124, Riverside, CA 92502-0124. Incidentally, sources within the WCG tell us that a change regarding how the WCG views Christmas may be in the offing and that the moderate position taken by Woodrow is close to where the WCG, itself, may be in one or two years.

Christmas: To Every Man an Answer by Julius A. Afolalu. The author of this 70-page booklet is a former Worldwider who tells us he would eventually like to marry a former Worldwider (but, alas, he has still not met the right one). His booklet is a spirited defense of Christmas observance that some will find interesting. A copy may be had for an international money order of $5 by writing to Mr. Afolalu at P.O. Box 135, Ilawe Ekiti, Ondo State, Nigeria. He suggests that all letters be sent registered because of the very high rate of mail theft by postal employees in that country.

What is "the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes" mentioned in Rev. 2:15? Many of us who were in Worldwide years ago can recall sermons in which some WCG ministers would claim that the Nicolaitanes were followers of a Saint Nicholas (actually a fourth-century bishop) who was supposedly later to be mythologized as Santa Claus. We recently came across an article which presents a much more plausible theory. According to C. J. Milosh, "Nicolaitanism" is really clergy elitism - that is, the idea that the clergy are "special" people who have an inherent right to lord it over their flocks. We think Milosh's article is one many would find very eye-opening. The article first appeared in the July-Aug., 1992 edition of The American Christian. Copies of that issue may be obtained for $2 by writing to American Christian Ministries, P.O. Box 2038, Ft. Davis, TX 79734.

Attempting to identify the "Lost Ten Tribes" seems to be an ongoing project with many current and former Worldwidiers. During the past year we came across three new works on that subject. They are: The Tribes by Yair Davidy, 480 pages, available from Russel-Davis Publishers, Hebron 1993, Israel ($25 including postage). Incidentally, this book has a "rabbinical approbation." The "Lost" Ten Tribes of Israel ... Found! by Steven M. Collins, 3901 Crescent Drive, Sioux Falls, SD 57106, 425 pages ($50 per copy, write to the author for details). And finally, from a more critical viewpoint, there is Shadows of a Better Covenant, an insightful 60-page booklet by Leona McNair. For a copy write to the author at 1875 Paloma Street, Pasadena, CA 91104-4816. (To help cover printing and postage, a contribution of $5 would be appreciated.)

Long-time WCG observers who have read Sabbath in Crisis by Ratzlaff have discovered an ironic fact. Apparently unbeknownst to Ratzlaff, much of his research and conclusions parallel those of Dr. Ernest L. Martin, the one-time head of Ambassador's theology department, who went on to head the Foundation for Biblical Research and now the Associates for Scriptural Knowledge. A number of WCG insiders are aware that during the seventies Joseph Tkach, while publicly loyal to the teachings of HWA, was privately indicating that he agreed with many of Martin's conclusions. Those who read Ratzlaff's book may wish to compare his work with some of Martin's booklets on the new covenant: The Law of Moses, the Passover and the Lord's Supper; What Is Progressive Revelation in the Bible? and others. In addition, many will be interested to learn that Martin has just published Restoring the Original Bible ($19.95), a 500-page book which so completely updates and amplifies his 1984 edition The Original Bible Restored that it is almost an entirely new book. To order any of these works, contact Associates for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97225, tel. 1-800-292-4352.

Dr. James Tabor and the Original Bible Project (OBP) have been mentioned in our pages before (see ARs 41 and 56). The Project's main goal is to produce a significant, new translation of the entire Bible by May 1997. The OBP board of directors is made up of Dr. Robert Kuhn, Dr. James Tabor, and Robert Ellsworth, with Dr. Tabor serving as chief editor. Dr. Ernest Martin, although not on the board, has been an inspiration and great supporter of the Project since its inception. Dr. Tabor has recently expanded his group of translating consultants and has announced that Dr. Michael Wise of the University of Chicago would be working with him in this capacity. In September the OBP announced that it had completed work on the book of Genesis. Mr. Ellsworth tells us that the OBP will send a free copy of its preliminary edition of The Book of Genesis: A New Translation with Notes to any of our readers who requests a copy. This is a very generous offer as the preliminary edition is, itself, a very fine reference work for all who study the Bible. We suspect that many who read it will want to support the efforts of the OBP and perhaps subscribe to their newsletter The Chronicle. For more information contact: The Original Bible Project, 408 S. Pasadena Ave., Suite 4, Pasadena, CA 91105; tel. 1-800-848-2731. Incidentally, to learn even more about the OBP, you may also request a video tape they have produced about the goals of the organization. It is available for a suggested donation of $10.

Comments on Waco

Even though almost two full years have passed since the beginning of the Branch Davidian tragedy in Waco, Texas, we continue to get letters from readers wanting more information about what transpired. As most readers are aware, the U.S. Treasury Department's report on the initial raid was highly critical of the performance of its Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms (BATF). But no government report or court ruling concluded that there was a lack of probable cause when BATF agents obtained their original warrant. (Whether the warrant was served in the legally prescribed manner is a completely different matter and is one that, for some reason, has not been addressed in any article we have seen. Nor have we seen a video of the initial moments of the serving of the warrant, a fact that is rather disturbing.) At the same time, the Justice Department's report on the FBI's handling of the 51-day siege that followed the raid absolved the FBI of misconduct, blaming cult leader David Koresh and his followers for the April 19 conflagration's suicides and/or murders. Nevertheless, in that report some of the government's outside experts did fault the FBI for not having heeded the warnings of the government's negotiators. Nancy T. Ammerman, a cult expert and visiting scholar at Princeton University, said, "There was an understandable desire among many agents in Waco to make Koresh and the Davidians pay for the harm they had caused [the deaths of four federal agents].... Arguments for patience or unconventional tactics fell on deaf ears." (Los Angeles Times, 10/9/93, p. A1). As a result of the botched raid and later cover-ups, a number of BATF officials were fired (Associated Press articles of 2/27/94).

In the trial of 11 of the Davidians that survived the ordeal, three were acquitted of all charges. Three of the 11 were convicted of weapons-related charges (possession of a grenade, conspiracy to possess machine guns, and using or carrying a firearm during the commission of a crime), and five were convicted of both using a firearm during the commission of a crime and of voluntary manslaughter (legally defined as the voluntary, unlawful killing of another human being under circumstances that, while not justifying the homicide, mitigate it - usually meaning that the homicide was committed under heat of passion induced by some provocation). The five each received a maximum sentence of 40 years in prison plus fines of up to $10,000 (Chicago Tribune, 6/18/94, p. A2). Another Davidian, Kathryn Schroeder, on a plea bargain was convicted of resisting arrest and was sentenced to three years in prison and a fine of $5,000.

In explaining the severity of the sentences, U.S. District Judge Walter Smith Sr. said, "those defendants engaged in conspiracy to cause the death of federal agents.... not one single defendant apologized or expressed any real sorrow for the dead or injured agents." In fact, according to the Los Angeles Times (6/18/94, p. A23), "while some Branch Davidians asked for leniency, others had stood before Smith... and hurled personal insults at him, blaming the government for the agents' deaths. Most said that they had nothing to apologize for."

While Ambassador Report is not the place for a lengthy analysis of all aspects of the story, we should pass on some information we received about the Koresh story this past year. A number of readers have made reference to a video distributed by attorney Linda D. Thompson and the American Justice Federation who claim that the government was entirely at fault in the Waco tragedy. Thompson's tape, which contains controversially edited footage of the April 19, 1993 holocaust, is called Waco - the Big Lie. Copies may be obtained for $20 by writing Real World Productions, 7092 Highland Road, Suite 174, Waterford, MI 48327. Those who view the tape may also wish to read the article "Anti-government video on Waco revealed to be a hoax," in the August 1994 edition of Cult Awareness Network News (2421 West Pratt Blvd., Suite 1173, Chicago, IL 60645). The article contained a number of startling claims including this one:

Thompson claims in her lawsuit that the fire that consumed the compound was deliberately set by government agents. Her videotape, "Waco: the Big Lie," includes a sequence that shows an armored vehicle under FBI command ramming the compound. A narrator describes the scene: "You can see that this tank has a gas jet on the front that shoots fire. You can also see the fire quite plainly."

But Mike McNulty, chairman of a privately funded think-tank called the California Organization for Public Safety (COPS), obtained an uncut version of the original private film from which Thompson drew her footage.

The footage had been shot by KWTW in Waco, and was edited by Thompson for her project without permission from the station.

McNulty forwarded the tape to Machine Gun News columnist Ken Carter, who, in a February 1994 issue of the gun enthusiast magazine, described what Thompson's video did not show: "In the COPS version, rather than stopping the video at the point where the illusion of flame is most apparent, as in the AJF tape, the camera continues to follow the vehicle as it backs clear of the building.... As (the) tank turns away from (the) camera, (the) reflection spreads to reveal what appears to be a large section of tan wallboard leaning against (the) turret."

One month before the release of that article, Carter was interviewed for a Jan. 21, 1994 Gun Week article entitled "'Waco: The Big Lie' Revealed as Hoax," "Linda Thompson suckered all of us with that one," Carter told Gun Week. "And she knew exactly what she was doing, since the videotape sequence was edited a split second before the vehicle pulls back and executes a hard turn which clearly shows the 'flame' image stabilize and turn out to be a piece of wallboard."

Soldier of Fortune magazine also has reviewed the tape and concluded that the "flame" really is "wallboard and other construction debris knocked loose" by the tank.

Another fact that comes out in the CAN article is that contrary to numerous press reports, the Chicago cult monitoring group had nothing to do with instigating the raid on the Davidians. In fact, says CAN, they did not even learn of the BATF investigation until the initial raid had already taken place.

One individual who has had much to say about the Waco tragedy is Dr. James Tabor who, along with Dr. Phillip Arnold, had been in limited communication with David Koresh during the siege. In his December 13, 1993 letter to Genesis 2000 readers, Tabor wrote:

Trying to get at the truth of what happened, coming to love and understand the survivors (the so-called "Branch Davidians" which is not a name they wear but was given them by the media), and doing what I can to combat the trend of government intervention in religious freedom (labeling certain groups as "cults," etc.) consumed much of my year. April 19 was a sad day in American history and 90% of what you heard about David Koresh through the media was distorted lies.

Tabor's views about the Waco disaster can be read in the October, 1993 issue of Bible Review magazine; in an insightful Haim Shapiro interview of Tabor that appeared 7/17/93 in the international edition of The Jerusalem Post Magazine (P.O. Box 81, Jerusalem 91000, Israel); in two of his taped lectures distributed by Emmanuel (P.O. Box 442, Athens, TN 37371); and in a book to be published by the University of California at Berkeley in the summer of 1995 (its tentative title is Why Waco? - the War Against Cults and Religious Freedom in America). Incidentally, the Bible Review article by Tabor (along with pointed commentary by John Pinkston) was reprinted in The Herald (Oct.-Dec., 1993) published by The Congregation of God Seventh Day. You can get a free copy by writing to them at P.O. Box 2345, Kennesaw, GA 30144.

Undoubtedly the Waco story is not at an end. Former U.S. Attorney General Ramsey Clark, now in private practice, has agreed to represent the convicted Davidians in a massive lawsuit against the federal government. In the course of that action many startling facts may still be revealed.

The Waco tragedy has been paralleled by many to the tragic Weaver fiasco that occurred in Idaho in 1992. That tragic drama began when U.S. Deputy Marshal William Degan was killed as authorities attempted to arrest Randall C. Weaver, an adherent of the Christian Identity movement, on a charge of selling an illegal sawed-off shotgun. During the strange arrest attempt and its aftermath, Weaver's 14-year-old son was also killed, as was Weaver's wife as she stood in the cabin's doorway holding her baby daughter. (She was shot by a government sniper who was 600 feet away, Los Angeles Times, 10/19/93, p. A4.) What followed was a ten-day siege of the Weaver home that only ended when Vietnam war hero Bo Gritz was able to talk Weaver into surrendering. In January FBI Director Louis J. Freeh criticized some of the methods used by 12 of the agents involved in the shootout and disciplined them with short suspensions. But critics of the government say the punishments meted out were so slight as to amount to mere slaps on their wrists (Los Angeles Times, 1/7/95, p. A4). Nevertheless, with Gerry Spence, considered by many to be America's greatest trial lawyer, representing the Weaver family in a civil suit, it is quite possible that many new and startling facts will yet emerge regarding federal policies toward religious minorities. (Incidentally, those interested in researching the Randy Weaver story in depth should contact Midnight Messenger, 9205 SE Clackamas Rd., #1776, Clackamas, OR 97015; tel. 503-824-2050.)

WCG Demons

Like most Bible fundamentalists, Worldwidars have traditionally been fascinated by the subject of demons. And over the years the Report has received numerous letters regarding the subject. Particularly within the WCG's leadership, there are many who take the subject of demons very seriously. One such individual is Dr. Herman Hoeh, the elder statesman of WCG evangelists. A few months ago, WCG historian Bruce Renehan sent us the following information:

For over a decade now, Herman Hoeh has frequently told church members about a 1970s encounter he had with a supposedly demon-possessed Irishman who came to visit him. As the story goes, a red-haired, glassy-eyed Irishman simply appeared at Hoeh's office one day and requested to talk to him. Hoeh allowed the man to sit across from him at his desk and they conversed for a while. Hoeh did not suspect anything unusual until the guest leaned forward and quietly asked if Hoeh could get God to see things from "his" perspective - a perspective he quietly called "the way of competition." Hoeh immediately concluded that the man was possessed by the Devil. So he answered the question by saying, "That's simple. Just repent."

But was Hoeh concerned about who was communicating with him? Not at all. As he tells it, he was as ecstatic as a prison psychiatrist who discovers that he has encountered a true multiple personality. So, he wondered, how could he capitalize on the opportunity? Realizing that openly consorting with a demon-possessed man might have given the appearance of evil to his colleagues at church headquarters, Hoeh decided to drive the man to a secluded location for further discussions. How much each revealed to the other is not clear. But the often-told story does raise some interesting questions:

(1) Jesus was able to discern demon-possessed persons immediately. Why was Hoeh able to perceive the problem only after a lengthy discussion? (2) Paul warned in his writings about the dangers of receiving any messages from demons. Why did Hoeh not heed Paul's warning once he was certain he was talking to a demon, if not the Devil himself, as he claims? (3) The Bible warns that demons are "lying spirits." If so, why did Hoeh want to have discourse with the visitor? Finally, (4) why didn't evangelist Hoeh follow the New Testament example and simply cast out the demon?

An even more amazing story is one that involves Hoeh's leading disciple, Pastor General Joseph Tkach, himself. One of our readers, a long-time Tkach acquaintance, tells the story of how, in the mid-1960s, while visiting with Tkach in Pasadena, Tkach confided to the church member that "a demon" had informed him that he would one day be Herbert Armstrong's successor. The incident is particularly amazing because when it occurred, Tkach, by his own admission, was so far down on the WCG totem pole that the mere suggestion he could ever succeed HWA would have brought guffaws from everyone in the WCG's hierarchy. Yet, somehow, in the mid-sixties Tkach's "demon" knew exactly what was to transpire in the WCG by 1986.

Some years ago in AR14 we reported on a book titled Demolishing the Hosts of Hell by Ken Worley, a Baptist preacher who claims to have successfully performed hundreds of exorcisms. The author claimed that in the course of his work many of the demons he cast out of suffering people had verbally identified themselves. Strangely, there were some who identified themselves by the name Herbert Armstrong.

In 1990, AR received a lengthy letter from a reader who told a remarkable story. During the reader's childhood, her father became interested in Armstrongism and what followed for the large family was years of involvement with the WCG, Ambassador College education, and years of family strife as some family members joined WCG spinoffs and other cults. The woman, herself, left the WCG in the 1970s and found a large measure of spiritual peace and well-being. Yet, in 1987 she was beset by strange physical illnesses that physicians were only partially able to diagnose and treat. The woman eventually concluded that the illnesses were caused by demonic forces and so she began to rebuke the demons in the name of Jesus. Doing so brought relief, but each time the relief was only temporary.

Then one day, during a pastoral counseling session, she had a breakthrough insight. She became convinced that her years in the WCG were somehow at the root of her spirit-induced ailments. During the next few days she began removing from her home almost all vestiges of her years in Worldwide: WCG literature, sermon notes, etc. She immediately noticed an improvement in her condition. But then, a few days later another bizarre incident occurred. She explained:

One day as I set out for my regular two-mile walk, I opened my mouth to sing one of the hymns I learned in the WCG, "O, sing a new song to the Lord, For wonders He has done..." but nothing would come out! I tried again, but my tongue, literally would not work. I noticed that even the melody seemed garbled in my mind. What in the world... ? I opened my mouth a third time and as the blockage remained I became convinced that the Lord had stopped my tongue.

When the woman returned home, she took out the WCG hymnal, which she had kept, and read the introduction by Herbert Armstrong. She continues:

I had my answer.... The principal thing is not that the WCG songs were scripturally correct. They were penned to promote the cause of the "land" of Captivity and Confusion. The Lord was telling me, "It's time to sing the songs of Jerusalem and Zion. You're out of captivity now." And then there was the very poignant verse: "If I do not remember thee, let my tongue cleave to the roof of my mouth." That day marked the end of WCG hymns for me. Out they went.

Amazingly, the woman's physical condition improved. On another occasion, during a period of stress, she accidentally discovered one of her old Ambassador textbooks complete with marginal notes from the lectures of evangelist Ron Kelly. Out went the book. And, again, she felt better.

Her many years of experience with the WCG and its aftermath have led this woman to conclude that the WCG is not only filled with "lying spirits," but that its demonic forces can have lingering effects even upon those who think they have escaped its clutches. The woman above has concluded, "Satan, not God, is the founder of the WCG, and the only way to set anyone free is with the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

Are such experiences actually the result of WCG demons? Obviously, for some people the answer is yes. But what are these demons really? To Worldwidiers and most Bible fundamentalists, demons are nonphysical, fallen angels that rove the earth causing all sorts of havoc. Others see demons as personifications of psychic entities or controlling, personality-splitting complexes. To find answers to such questions, some ex-Worldwidiers have looked to the writings of the Human Potential Foundation Press (P.O. Box 6, Falls Church, VA 22040), the Great Lakes Foundation for Biblical Research (P.O. Box 63, Jenison, MI 49429) and even to the books of Zechariah Sitchin (author of The Twelfth Planet and Genesis Revisited). Others have found plausible explanations in the writings of psychologists. Those with an understanding of Jungian psychology may wish to read the extremely interesting book Demons of the Inner World by Swiss psychiatrist Alfred Ribi, Shambhala Publications, 1990. Whatever one's view, the subject of demons and exorcism has increasingly been gaining the attention of millions of Americans. (For an outstanding report on this phenomenon, see the article "Deliverance or Denial?" by Roy Rivenburg which appeared in the Los Angeles Times, 6/25/91, p. E1).

Finally, one important point about the WCG's views on this subject. For many years most WCG ministers, with their anti-intellectual bent, routinely labeled as "demonic" virtually all psychological problems and illnesses they could not understand (most, in other words). The harm this caused to hundreds, if not thousands, was truly devastating. The following story from one of our Texas readers is not unusual:

I only lasted in Armstrongism about 18 months. At the Feast of Trumpets in 1976, the local elder put me out of the assembly for being "demon influenced." Then in 1982 when I made an effort to attend a holy day service the same local elder had me arrested for trespassing. It was only after being freed from the bondage of the Armstrongs that I started making progress in my life. I learned that my so-called signs of demon influence were, in fact, caused by a major mental illness. There is no complete cure for my illness. However, it can be treated with medication. And for the past seven years, I have been able to lead a fairly normal life.

Thankfully, in recent years the WCG ministry has begun to recognize that for many mental problems there is medical help available. Undoubtedly, much of the change has been due to the fact that Joseph Tkach's wife (and the mother of church administrator Joe Jr.) is, herself, schizophrenic and dependent upon medication to maintain her mental equilibrium.

Letters

I have been happily reading your reports for years but was disappointed by your last one. In AR56 you were too sweet on the WCG's leaders. Why congratulate them for accreditation or anything? I even get the impression sometimes that you think Herbert Armstrong had a good side to him.

-California

Editor: I do think HWA, for all his flaws, still had some good in him. While it is clear that the organization he started was, and still is, a destructive cult, that fact alone should not get in the way of recognizing that HWA had some good points. Personally, I can think of a number of things that he taught that were correct and even ahead of his time. Just a few: (1) He emphasized the importance of "cause and effect" in human conduct at a time when most of the media seemed to be ignoring that very elementary concept. (2) Contrary to the majority of intellectuals of his time, he did not assume that human history had an inevitable upward and ever-improving moral evolution built into it. (3) He recognized the pagan origins of much of what has come down to us as mainstream Christianity. (4) He taught about the significance of the breakdown of the traditional family. And (5), he recognized that the world was heading into increasingly precarious times and that technology alone could not be our savior. I could go on.

None of the above should imply that HWA was a truly righteous man or that he did not have some terrible sins in his past. But just as we should not ignore those faults, we should neither ignore his better side. The same applies to Tkach. He is most certainly a self-promoting politician. Nevertheless, we should not ignore his accomplishments. Accreditation will be a blessing to all Ambassador alumni. Just as Tkach's change in the WCG's old healing doctrine will save lives. Not all the changes made by Tkach are beyond criticism. But let us not be so critical as to lose all balance.

Now I've heard it all. Ex-Worldwidars joining neo-Nazi groups! But I guess I shouldn't be surprised. Haven't those knuckleheads heard that some of us fought a war to prevent the Nazis from taking over the world? Don't those idiots understand that Hitler and his bunch wanted to destroy Britain and the United States? I suppose they think that just because Hitler was a Christian of sorts that that made him OK.

-Illinois

Editor: Actually, even though Hitler had the war-time support of a number of Christian denominations, he was not a Christian. It has been well-documented that Hitler was a practicing occultist who intended to turn Germany toward the worship of ancient gods after the war. You can read the amazing details in The Occult and the Third Reich by Jean-Michel Angebert (Macmillan, 1974).

I am not in sympathy with the practices and beliefs of the Branch Davidians. But I see a sinister side to the attack by the U.S. government.... The U.S. appears to be going the way of Nazi Germany. While my friends insist that we are Israel, I have to suspect that the United States may really be the prophesied Beast Power.

-WCG member
California

Editor: We have had a number of letters from readers who say they now see the U.S. as the Beast of Revelation. One such reader pointed out that the U.S. got its legal and government administrative system from the British who got theirs from William the Conqueror, a Norman, and that the Norman system traces back to the ancient Romans. Another reader claims that the American idea that all men are created equal actually traces back to a decree of Roman Emperor Caracalla who, in 212 A.D., granted full Roman citizenship to all freeborn inhabitants of the empire. A third reader pointed out that during the Pax Romana of ancient times, Roman soldiers were the Western world's policemen, just as today, during what is often called the Pax Americana, the soldiers of the United States seem to have taken over that role. A fair number of readers have also made the rather interesting observation that while the U.S. considers itself a democracy, the actual fact is that, like Rome, we have a small but very powerful ruling class and a growing de facto slave class (even though no one dares call it that publicly) - that is, millions who live from paycheck to paycheck and dare not question or speak out about anything. Finally, some have dug out their history books and made the discovery that even though many of the signers of the U.S. Constitution were nominal Anglicans (quite willing to take up arms against the head of their church for economic and political motives) or nominal members of other Christian denominations, the majority seemed to have been Deists (the Enlightenment's equivalent to modern humanists) who were far better read in the Greek and Roman classics than they were in the Bible. These readers point out that the Founding Fathers' love of Greco-Roman ideas is evident in the Greek-columned architecture of many Washington buildings and in the fact that atop our very Capitol's dome is not a Christian symbol, but the statute of a Greek goddess. Apparently, such facts have convinced some that the United State is the heir to the dark powers of the Roman Empire and is therefore the final reincarnation of the Beast. If any reader has seen an article on this theory, we'd appreciate receiving a copy.

In WCG and ex-WCG circles at the present time there are at least six views regarding the identity of the end-time, ten-horned "Beast" of Revelation: (1) HWA's old view that the Beast will be a ten-nation United States of Europe; (2) Ernest Martin's view that the ten will be an alliance of mainly Arabic nations that surround the state of Israel today; (3) the anti-Jewish view that Rev. 11:8 identifies the great city of the Beast as Jerusalem and that, therefore, the Beast is the pro-law legalism of Rabbinical and/or Messianic Judaism, (4) the view, as stated in the letter above, that the United States and its allies constitute the Beast, (5) Joseph Tkach's view that no one can know anything about prophecy and that even if you could it wouldn't matter anyhow, and, finally, (6) the view that the Beast will be some type of economic-political arrangement that will encompass the whole world. Note the following letter:

On December 2, the headline in the Los Angeles Times read "Senate Approves Sweeping Pact to Revise Global Trade Rules." As I went through the article I became alarmed at how incredibly broad the world's new trade agreement is and at how little opposition there was to it from our nation's leaders. Many describe it as the most important economic treaty in the history of the world.

However, what startled me even more was the front page of that edition's business section. On its front page was a large chart showing the world's current trade blocs. There were eleven listed: The Asia-Pacific Economic Cooperation, the European Union, the North American Free Trade Agreement, the Andean Group, the Assoc. of Southeast Asian Nations, the Australia-New Zealand Closer Economic Relations pact, the Caribbean Community and Common Market, the Central American Common Market, the Southern African Development Community, the Southern Common Market, and Russia. Only Eastern Europe, India, and the Arabic and central African countries have yet to join trade blocs. But there is already talk that most of them will eventually attach themselves to neighboring blocs. Russia, for instance, wants to join the European Common Market and negotiations toward achieving that end begin in 1998.

Now, you may be wondering why I find all of this significant. The answer is simple, Russia is a single nation now. It is not a trading bloc, as even the article admitted. If you take them off the Times' comprehensive list, you see that the world today is divided up into exactly TEN groups of nations.

I read in one magazine how scientists have come up with a way of imbedding small computer chips in people's hands or foreheads as a way to identify people for purchasing on credit without the use of ID cards. Then in the Ventura County Star a few days ago there was a political cartoon showing the flags of a number of nations, but the biggest flag of all was that of the World Trade Organization. The symbol on the flag was the bar code we see on most goods now. I didn't think it was funny.

Now, with our Senate having assured the worldwide implementation of GATT, I can't help but wonder if the end-time Beast is not already here.

-California

Over the years your journal has provided suggested helpful titles to read. WCG members and ex-members alike have much to read. Many troubled people have doctrinal questions, but my observation is that rarely do they question the very philosophical foundation of the WCG and its colorful spinoffs. I'm speaking of questioning adventism, defined as believing in the imminent and visible second appearance of Jesus Christ. Many people would think it madness to question this as it has been so deeply ingrained in them. But that is the very reason to question it. So many teachings of the WCG were, and are, wrong. If this concept cannot stand, then it makes little sense to run after many of the groups you have recently listed. As far as I can see they are all adventists. Those of your readership who are in a true search for the truth would do well to consider other Christian views of eschatology (final things).

To this end I would suggest reading Robert Clouse's The Meaning of the Millennium: Four Views (Intervarsity Press, 1977). The four views are presented by able proponents and equally able opponents provide critical comments. Again, why should people take the WCG's meaning of the millennium as a given? It's a crucial question.

After I resigned from the WCG ministry in 1992 I did some research into the teachings of the preterists. Preterism is quite the opposite teaching of adventism. I was most impressed with the honest handling of the dozens of imminency statements in the New Testament. Most of these are ignored by adventists or all manner of interpretive gymnastics are practiced to avoid their real import. The interested reader can obtain a simple introductory booklet titled What Happened in 70 A.D.? from: Kingdom Counsel, 122 Seaward Avenue, Bradford, PA 16701. (Send $3.) These people are distributing a number of thoughtful materials dealing with the problems in adventist teachings. One of the best is a book by Gary DeMar entitled Last Days Madness: Obsession of the Modern Church. It's good for those "tired of prophetic pessimism and failure."

Along these lines, your readers might like to know of a significant date. This past October 22 marked the 150th anniversary of the collapse of the Millerite movement. The Millerites' final date [for the return of Christ] passed as "The Great Disappointment" but unfortunately the gullibility of the people remained. William Miller, a false prophet, started the modern-day second advent movement in this country. After "the passing of the time" the survivors organized as a new business the Seventh-Day Adventists and it was from this body that the various Church of God groups emerged. Out of one of these came Armstrong's Radio Church of God, later called the Worldwide Church of God. It has all been documented elsewhere.

I am enclosing a copy of a chapter from an old book on the Millerite movement. If you decide to write on the movement (and I hope you will) this article will help. I think people should know how Millerism wrecked the lives of a great many in the last century. It will help in understanding why lives are still being wrecked. Someone once said, "A bad tree cannot produce good fruit."

Editor: We are not currently planning any articles on the Millerite movement, but information about them can be found in many public libraries. Those interested in studying where Herbert Armstrong got many of his ideas should read Bruce Renahan's book Daughter of Babylon (it sells for $15). It briefly discusses the HWA-Millerite connection. Regarding preterism, Bruce recently wrote us the following:

I have done a considerable amount of study about early Christianity and have come to see things quite differently than while in the WCG when I was influenced to believe that we were living in the "last days."

First of all, if one were to take New Testament prophecies at face value then the Preterist interpretation would be the most plausible; that is, the first century followers of Jesus were predicting the "end of the world" in their time because the Romans were crushing every vestige of Jewish rebellion and it was only a matter of time before their Jewish world would cease to exist.

Second, for those who insist that there was a "primitive church," I would agree, but it did not resemble anything that we would recognize today as "Christianity." According to many scholars, the so-called "primitive church" probably resembled the community of Zealots who died at Masada more than anything else we might imagine (Francis Potter, The Lost Years of Jesus and John Dominic Crossan, The Historical Jesus). Later, various sects such as the Gnostics (perhaps the offspring of early Jewish mystical groups) began to call themselves "Christian" and so that term began to get muddled, just as it is today.

In the 4th Century, Christianity as we now know it, emerged from the early ecumenical councils (the one at Nicaea being the first), from the resulting creeds, and from one other important development - the canonization of what we now call the Holy Bible. Many have been led to believe that the Bible as we now have it was preserved intact by early Christians and that the Catholic Church was determined to destroy it. But the second-oldest complete Bible manuscript in existence (complete in the sense that along with the Old Testament it contains all of the New Testament) is the Codex Vaticanus, which, as the name implies, has long been preserved by the Vatican. And the very oldest complete Bible manuscript in existence is the Codex Sinaiticus, which was preserved for centuries in a Catholic monastery (Dr. Bruce M. Metzger, The New Testament: Its Transmission, Corruption, and Restoration, Oxford University Press, 1968). According to Professor Metzger (p. 47), "some scholars believe that the two manuscripts were originally among the fifty copies of Scriptures which the Emperor Constantine commissioned Eusebius to have written...." Scholars have demonstrated that both manuscripts were composed in the fourth century and both are considerably older than the Textus Receptus upon which the King James version was based. Instructive in this regard is a comment found at the very beginning of Professor Metzger's highly regarded book:

The necessity of applying textual criticism to the books of the New Testament arises from two circumstances: (a) none of the original documents is extant, and (b) the existing copies differ from one another.

After the Christian religion infiltrated Western culture, history proceeded through 700 years of the Dark Ages, 200 years of the Crusades, and 400 years of the Inquisition. Then, around the 15th Century, the Reformation and the Age of Reason began to destroy the traditional Christian paradigm. Intellectuals began to challenge every belief of the Church, often through scientific discoveries.

Then in the 17th Century an antithesis occurred. Recall that by this juncture there had already been the increased dissemination of Bibles throughout Europe made possible by the development of printing press technology. Along with that phenomenon came an increased scrutiny of biblical texts. In 1650 Bishop James Ussher published Annales Veteris et Novi Testamenti in which he calculated from the Bible that Adam was created in the year 4004 B.C. It was such factors that eventually led to the Great Awakening, revivalism, and Millerism. It was at about the same time that John Darby (founder of the Plymouth Brethren) developed the doctrine of dispensationalism and, undoubtedly, that idea combined with those of Ussher led many to see God as having a "7,000 year plan." All of these factors have led, in our own century, to a renewed widespread feeling that this is now the "end time." (For further study refer to Gary DeMar, Last Days Madness: Obsession of the Modern Church and Paul Boyer, When Time Shall Be No More: Prophecy Belief in Modern American Culture).

Having a very narrow view of history, avoiding logic and reasoning, and leaping onto the "end time" bandwagon is, in my opinion, essentially destructive to human progress. This fatalist philosophy frequently leads "end time" advocates to conclude that human efforts toward scientific and social progress are not in harmony with God's will. It further entices, or depresses, individuals into abandoning patterns of life-structuring that lead to personal advancement and well-being. Perhaps we should coin a name for such people: "cosmophobes."

Why do so many Bible fundamentalists insist that we are living in the "last days"? I believe it is because taking personal responsibility for conditions in the world is too frightening for many. So they prefer to believe that when chaos breaks out on the earth God will rescue them by rapturing them away or taking them to a place of safety. Frankly, having seen Ingmar Bergman's classic film The Seventh Seal, I have to wonder if there was ever a time when the trials and tragedies of human existence have not led many to conclude that they must be living in the "last days." Even in Plato's Symposium, written over 2300 years ago and filled with concepts that later turn up in the New Testament, one encounters the phrase "in these later times." When a person gets caught up in this kind of paranoia, every global occurrence, and even arbitrary dates, random numbers, and supposed meanings of names become speciously significant and alarmingly prophetic (Leon Festinger, When Prophecy Fails). While wars and rumors of wars, earthquakes, pestilence, false prophets, and injustice continue as they have for millennia, God continues to stay his intervention - to the amazement of the cosmophobes. Nevertheless, the cycle of "end time madness" tragically continues, just as it has for over 2,000 years.

The notion that many of the Bible's "end-time" prophecies would find a literal fulfillment in our time was given a giant boost in 1948 when the nation of Israel was formed. Herbert Armstrong was not the only one who saw the potential significance of that historical event. Since then, many Christian fundamentalists have been mesmerized by events in Israel and numerous famous preachers (Jerry Fallwell, Pat Robertson, and Garner Ted Armstrong among them) just can't wait until the Jews erect some sort of Jerusalem Temple complete with animal sacrifices and the full panoply of Mosaic law. Ironically, these same preachers, who claim to love the people of Israel, also teach that once a Temple is erected Israel will experience great military defeats, great loss of life, and near total annihilation. I sometimes get the feeling that what such individuals are really looking for is physical evidence to vindicate the weak faith they have in their own Christian fundamentalism.

Nevertheless, there are many first-rate Christian scholars who scoff at such simplistic approaches to the biblical literature. In fact, some say that it is the height of foolishness to be encouraging Jews to be Zionists and to rebuild a physical Temple in Jerusalem. One such scholar was the late Cecil J. Lowry, Ph.D., D.D., who once headed the Southwest Bible Institute and was editor of The Christian Vanguard. In his booklet Whither Israel?, which first appeared in 1955 and was reprinted in 1987, he showed how scripture should be interpreted, showed the true nature of Judaism, and in particular, debunked the myth that there is such a thing as a racially pure Israelite. I could quote dozens of passages that have relevance to the issues faced by those re-examining their Armstrongite beliefs. Here is but one (from page 67):

I can see no special miracle in the preservation of Judaism as a religion any more than I can see a miracle in the preservation of any other religion. In the light of the Bible and scientific facts, Twelve Tribed Israel can never be restored to Palestine, simply because they are racially Absorbed in the stream of humanity. Talmudic Zionism can at the most establish a nation in Palestine of men bound together by religion and by Jewish cultural traits. The tribes of Israel can never be numbered as Moses numbered them, for such tribes do not exist.

Dr. Lowry's booklet is still available (for only $2.50, incl. postage) from: Chapel Library, 2603 W. Wright, Pensacola, FL 32505. I think all who still cling to Herbert Armstrong's ideas on prophecy would do well to read it.

I can't believe you would suggest to your readers a book that says get rid of your TV. I just watched the baseball history series that ran on public television stations here. What a great experience. Surely you are not suggesting that we do not watch such programs.

-Florida

Editor: Of course not. I saw the series you referred to, and it was both educational and entertaining. But that Public Broadcasting System series is not typical TV fare. PBS does have a large number of outstanding concerts, plays, and documentaries such as the recent four-part, historical exposé on communism. But as a nation, we are continually watching more and more prurient soap operas, TV sex-talk shows (even Johnny Carson has lambasted the genre as essentially programs by, for, and about dysfunctional people), sitcoms that are frequently badly written and mindless, insipid variety shows, religion programs that are often mere entertainment shows, sensationalistic and superficial news programs which many rely on for their view of the world (as though everything TV reports is accurate), plus the endless materialistic propaganda of frequently dishonest commercials. While one can find some quality entertainment and education programs on television, for most people the addictive and hypnotic attraction of TV results in less time being available for real thinking, reading, exercising, conversing, meditating, etc. A recent op-ed article in the Los Angeles Times (9/23/94, p.B7) was titled "Culture, Behavior: We Are What We Watch." Here is the way the article by Professor Donella H. Meadows of Dartmouth College began:

New reports come out every month or so about the decline of the American mind. Every study shows a direct correlation between poor intellectual performance and frequent television watching. No surprise. There are roughly as many studies showing that television rots the mind as there are studies showing that junk food rots the body or that cigarette smoking rots the lungs - as if we needed studies.

The Gerry Mander book that I recommended in our last issue may at first appear a bit extremist. But his view that television is the greatest propaganda tool ever invented and one that seriously harms its viewers and our entire society is supported by a very large body of research.

I tuned in to Tkach's around-the-world Feast of Tabernacles satellite transmission on September 20. At one point Tkach held up a super market tabloid with the bizarre headline "Moon Turning to Blood." He said some of the WCG's past attempts at interpreting prophecy were as crazy as this. To me, his comment seemed insensitive and stupid. I also noticed that standing 15 feet behind him were two security thugs. Were they expecting trouble this year?

In a recent PT editorial Tkach seemed soft on the Feast of Tabernacles. But to the members he addressed by satellite he said it is "God's law." He keeps on saying that "we cannot earn salvation by keeping the feast." Of course, this is like saying every so often "the world is round, not flat." It's so obvious even HWA understood it. I see such comments as a red herring. Such talk just muddies the waters so that the glaring contradictions in their doctrines cannot be too obvious. For example, they have thrown in the towel on Colossians 2:16-17 but they still observe feasts to "see Christ's saving work." However, if it is still God's law, why don't they point out to other churches that they are sinners for not observing those days? Tkach said that with the changes some are thinking they need not tithe. I know one member who not only doesn't tithe, but skips the feast altogether to take an alternative vacation with his family and avoid flack from fellow members. Tithing and the feasts are Tkach's next big challenges.

By the way, during the Tkach satellite sermon a cheeky cameraman caught Gerald Waterhouse in the audience looking at the notes of the guy next to him as Tkach slammed prophecy.

My sister-in-law likes to listen to "The Wave" - our southern California "New Age music" radio station. She recently got their monthly program guide and in it there is a listing of recommended "clubs." At the top of the list, right above the Baked Potato and Birdland West was Ambassador at 300 West Green Street in Pasadena. Yes, just call the club at 1-800-CONCERT for tickets to New Age music events. Weird.

My husband and I were in the WCG for 28 years, but after this year's Day of Atonement we said, "This is the last time." We attended the Feast of Tabernacles with CGI. When we returned home our local WCG minister visited us and asked why we had attended the CGI Feast. So we told him. He then told us, "You can believe anything you want to and still be a member of the WCG. Your salvation doesn't depend on your agreeing with all the changes the church has made." He asked us to promise to attend WCG services on Oct. 1 and we did. That day the sermonette and sermon were directed at us - "obey and stay" was the message. On Oct. 8 we attended CGI services. A few days later we received a WCG letter informing us that we were now "former members of the WCG."

Late News: Tkach Says Sabbath, Holy Days, Tithing Not Mandatory!

In a videotaped announcement to virtually all WCG churches on January 7 (coincidentally Russian Christmas), Pastor General Tkach took the bold step of telling his followers that the WCG would no longer demand a legalistic observance of the Old Testament Sabbath, Holy Days, or tithing. Said Tkach, members are now free to use the Sabbath day to go to work if circumstances required. Edited out of the tape, but heard by hundreds in Tkach's live comments at Big Sandy, Texas (where the tape was produced) was the statement that it would even be OK to play golf on the Sabbath if one so desired. Additionally, Tkach "clarified" HWA's teaching on unclean meats. Apparently, HWA never thought it was a spiritual sin to eat "unclean" meats. While Tkach is not endorsing pork and shrimp as healthy foods, eating such foods will supposedly only make one physically unclean for a few hours; it will not interfere with one's membership in God's Kingdom. While the new doctrines have long been anticipated by the Report, the announcement put many oldtime WCG members into total shock. How many thousands of WCG members will now leave the denomination remains to be seen. But already dozens of leading ministers say they will soon be leaving the WCG. And a number have indicated they plan to start their own competing organizations. We will have further news on these major developments in our next issue.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

April 1995 (AR58)

WCG in Chaos as Revenues Plummet

The religious empire founded by the late Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA) has never been in greater disarray. On January 7, virtually all Worldwide Church of God (WCG) congregations were required to sit through a videotaped sermon given by Armstrong's successor, Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach. Preaching in a shrill and often haranguing tone, telling occasional jokes about Baptists and Methodists in heaven, and once even referring to himself as "this crazy Russian," the long-winded Tkach announced a startling number of doctrinal changes. Among the many statements that shocked Tkach's listeners was this one:

We have already seen in Hebrews eight that the Old Covenant is obsolete. It's history! As someone would say, it's kaput! It's over! Finis! The old package of laws has been taken apart. And some of the laws have been discarded. Some laws have been changed. And some have been continued. And others have been added. A new covenant is different. It not only adds faith and Holy Spirit, it also renews some of the old laws and the burdens and packages that we could not bear. Let's look at Hebrews seven.... Does it sound like I'm doing away with the law? I'm helping us to understand what God expects of us so we can run true to form as the children of God.

Emphasizing his new New Testament understandings over HWA's old Old Testament preferences, Tkach told the stunned members of his WCG that a legalistic keeping of the Old Testament sabbath, holy days, and dietary laws comes from "ignorance and stupidity" and such observances would no longer be required for WCG membership. Additionally, Tkach told his followers that his ministry would no longer teach that strict tithing is mandatory, either.

Tkach was well aware he was risking a drop in church income by making the announcement. During the sermon he even admitted how he knew that by speaking on the subject he was gambling. But apparently he hoped that after his announcement members would actually contribute even more generously than they had before. Speaking about members who in recent months had reportedly been withholding their tithes from him, Tkach said:

So how much more should we be willing to give freely and generously to the work of God to be done? Not holding back your tithes! Oh, Oheeeeh! [Editor: At this point Tkach's voice panicked into well above the high-C stratosphere and, for a brief moment, some thought he was having a heart attack. Barely catching his breath, Tkach continued:] They, they go on to say, "We know that in a sense it is a form of stealing, but when we do return it we're going to give another 10 percent or 20 percent to it" - based on the Old Testament requirements. Under the New Covenant the tithe is voluntary. And you're just as guilty of stealing if you don't give anything voluntarily as you were under the Old Covenant when you were commanded to give a tithe!!!

Some have speculated that Tkach's "Russian Christmas Present" (as the sermon is often referred to because it was broadcast on January 7, the traditional date of Russian Christmas) may have been intended to weaken the WCG. A careful review of the taped message reveals that such was not the case. What comes across very clearly is that Tkach, albeit in a very clumsy way, was trying to increase WCG revenues. For instance, he told members that the weekly sabbath was only an Old Covenant law. So members can now work on Saturdays if they want and supposedly they will tithe on the wages earned while doing so. But Tkach never intended that WCG members discontinue tithing. In fact, he made it plain that he was anticipating that members would henceforth be contributing even more to him. He shouted, "The New Covenant requires greater sacrifice!"

Many members apparently did not hear that part of the sermon. It is not surprising. Most were so chagrined by some of the things Tkach said they were left virtually speechless. Tkach did not simply lambast strict sabbath keeping. He left many with the impression that Jesus authorized all kinds of law-breaking when it was expedient. For instance, Tkach said that Jesus's apostles were technically guilty of law breaking when they gathered and ate wheat on the sabbath. But that was no big deal, said Tkach. Using the example of David in I Sam. 21, Tkach said, "Taking care of hunger is more important than keeping such strict taboos that were forced on us." Actually, in his 12/21/94 Pastor General's Report, which had prepared his ministers for the new teaching, Tkach had expounded upon the same incident by writing (pp. 16-17), "The letter of the law was broken, but that was OK because a more important principle of the law was being kept. There was an important human need.... Humanitarian needs are more important than sticking to a strict interpretation of rules." After all, said Tkach in his sermon, "Compared to the Pharisees, Jesus was an extreme liberal." Finally, in the conclusion of his sermon Tkach said:

We are a New Covenant church.... It's a New Covenant between God and his people.
We have finally been LIBERIZED!---or liberated I should say; I hate the word liberized [sic]. We've been liberated!

The effect of Tkach's Russian Christmas Present was immediate and profound. WCG income plummeted. As a number of newspapers observed, "The Worldwide Church of God told its members that tithing was voluntary, not God's command, as previously believed, and they listened. Now a month later, the church is facing its toughest financial crisis in its 61 years" (The Washington Post, 2/18/95; The Arizona Republic, 2/18/95; The Charleston Gazette, 2/18/95; The Rocky Mountain News, 2/19/95; The Houston Chronicle, 2/25/95). While in official announcements church leaders say that WCG income for 1995 is only 20 or 30 percent lower than for the same period in 1994, insiders have stated that the total drop for 1995 might eventually prove to be more than 50 percent. So convinced are some that the WCG is heading for bankruptcy, a number of field ministers have discouraged their flocks from sending any money to headquarters because, as one put it, "Most everything sent in to Pasadena will only wind up in the pockets of lawyers." As for the attitude of the WCG membership as a whole, one insider said, "There are only two kinds of people left in Worldwide: Those that love Tkach - they don't tithe. And those that still tithe - they hate Tkach." Obviously, Tkach's gamble has not paid off.

The Music Is Ending

The general public first became aware that a major crisis was brewing in the WCG in January when church leaders announced that they were discontinuing the Ambassador Auditorium Concert Series after the current season ends. Here were the headlines: "Ambassador Concert Hall to Close in May" (Los Angeles Times, 1/28/95, p. A1), "Auditorium Will Face Its Final Curtain: Loss of Church Funding Marks Ambassador's End" (Pasadena Star-News, 1/28/95, p. A1), "And Then There Was Silence in Pasadena" (Los Angeles Times, 1/30/95, p. F1), "Adieu, Ambassador" (Pasadena Weekly, 2/3/95, p. 2).

Ambassador Auditorium, with its exceptionally fine acoustics and beautiful surroundings, has been a Southern California landmark for twenty years. Not surprisingly, therefore, news that its concert series would be discontinued came as a shock to many civic leaders. Michael R. Hawkins, president of the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce, obviously made prayerful by the news, said, "God Almighty, that incredible auditorium, with those acoustics, it would be a crime to let that thing sit empty." David Hulme, Ambassador's director of performing arts, also seemed to be hoping for divine intervention when he said, "It would be wonderful if members of the community around us could come to our rescue in whatever way they feel they can" (Los Angeles Times, 1/28/95). Not every Pasadenan, however, was heartbroken by Ambassador's plight. Rick Cole, a Pasadena councilman and former mayor who lectures on civic responsibility at Pasadena's Fuller Seminary, told the Star-News (1/28/95) that he thought the Auditorium was "a gaudy and expensive effort to buy respectability" by the WCG. "It was an extraordinary cultural asset," he said, "but it had no connection to the city of Pasadena.... It was paid for by little old ladies from the Midwest, and they spent lavishly. A [city] bailout is inconceivable." Cole went on to say that last year the WCG had been offered an "attractive deal" for some of its east-of-the-freeway properties from a Los Angeles development company (probably Pacific Alliance Realty), but that before the deal was consummated, Worldwide had asked the city for certain unspecified "non-monetary concessions" which Pasadena officials were not willing to grant.

While the classical music concerts that HWA loved so much, and to which the WCG provided a $2.5 million yearly subsidy, are certain to end, David Hulme, a WCG evangelist and part-time jazz concert producer, told the press that the Auditorium may still be used for public events (an awards ceremony for Black History Month was held there in February), for jazz concerts ("a source of revenue, not a drain," says Hulme), and for rental to independent promoters (Los Angeles Times, 2/3/95, p. F14).

Cuts, Cuts, and More Cuts

The announcement about the demise of the Ambassador Concert Series was just the beginning of woes. For weeks Southern California newspapers continued to report on the incredible shrinking church of Joseph Tkach.

In "New Direction for Church Leads to Spending Cuts" (Pasadena Star-News, 2/7/95, p. A1), writers Keith Sharon and Mark Kendall reported how the WCG was taking drastic action to stay within its ever-dwindling budget. According to WCG spokesman J. Thomas Lapacka, the Plain Truth magazine, already down to a circulation of 1.5 million (it was once over 8 million) is to be cut back to 750,000. Plain Truth editions in Spanish, French, Italian, and Norwegian are being discontinued altogether. The WCG's Pasadena technology department will be cut back, as will the so-called athletic department. (What? No more personal trainers or free rubdowns?) The church's Imperial Schools for the children of church members and the WCG's private travel Agency will both become companies accepting patrons who are not WCG members in order to increase revenues.

The church's fleet of 250 vehicles will be sold, as will Tkach's two limousines and corporate jet (a decision that resulted in his becoming more upset than when his parents died, said Tkach). Right now it looks as though Tkach will not be able to write out another $100,000 WCG check as a gift to the Reagan Library or for dinner with the Clintons at the White House. Nevertheless, Tkach expects an upturn. He has stated, "Things are going to get better or God doesn't exist."

In AR56 we reported how for 1993 WCG income had dropped to $175.6 million. According to David Hulme, the WCG's income for 1994 was even lower, only $130 million, and that for 1995 it will go lower still. Obviously, the WCG is strapped for cash and selling off its Pasadena properties would help. But church treasurer Steve Andrews admitted that while the WCG has had six offers to purchase the church's Pasadena properties, none of the offers had been considered adequate for acceptance (Star-News, 2/7/95).

In "Church Cutbacks Continue" (Pasadena Star-News, 2/8/95, p. A1), Mark Kendall reported that Ambassador University's $8.8 million per year budget was being trimmed. As a result, 39 faculty and staff members were being fired and tuition will be raised 17 percent to $315 per class.

In "Financial Crisis Grips Worldwide Church of God" (Los Angeles Times, 2/9/95, p. B1), writers Larry B. Stammer and Denise Hamilton reported that the WCG was being "rocked by members' reaction to major reversals of its most fundamental doctrines.... a startling recanting by church leaders of long-held church teachings set down by its founder...." The article detailed how the WCG was firing 107 (15 percent) of its 708 Pasadena employees and that the Plain Truth edition currently being printed in England would be eliminated. When asked if the church now regretted having taught false doctrines in the past, WCG spokesman Tom Lapacka said, "Yes, we always regret. We express regret."

A day after the Times article appeared, the Pasadena Star News (2/10/95, p. A1) reported that the WCG was firing 41 of its editorial employees and 22 of its television employees. The church is closing its Caribbean office in Fort Lauderdale and its five-member staff there will be reduced to three who will work out of their homes. After March the WCG would not be producing any more television commercials. It was just a few months ago that the church's television program was cancelled in favor of the commercials-only approach. (Ironically, The Worldwide News of 2/21/95 had a front-page article with the headline, "TV Ads for Literature Hit the Spot," which claimed the commercials were proving to be a great success. Now even that campaign is dead.)

Two days after the above Star-News article appeared, the same Pasadena paper (2/12/95, p. A1) ran a large front page article and an accompanying piece providing an overview of the WCG situation. Those articles contained these interesting comments:

Reinterpreting the Bible has recently become a costly enterprise for the Worldwide Church of God.... Tkach, who a church spokesman said does not speak to the press, has been reinterpreting the Bible since he took over the church in 1986....

Peter Eddington, a church member from Pasadena, said the changes represent "growth" in the church. Elizabeth Mizner, a member from Glendora, said the move toward mainstream Christianity is "exciting."

Exciting indeed. Three days later, with a headline that read "175 Face Church Layoffs," the Star-News (2/15/95, p. A1) reported, "The church will fire between 175 and 180 of its 708 employees by May...."

Who's Left?

Trying to figure out exactly who is still on the WCG payroll and who isn't has become a tricky business. There was a time when determining such things was not all that difficult. The WCG's "grapevine" used to be an almost totally accurate source of information. That, however, was in the days when most members thought it was a sin to lie. Now things are different. Today, it is not uncommon for church leaders to intentionally spread false rumors. Sometimes this is done to see if the rumor, ostensibly given in confidence, is leaked - thereby revealing the tippee as a disloyal subject. Other times the false information is spread simply to hurt political opponents. When we attempt to verify outlandish rumors, we still find that many are true. But there is often no way of knowing quickly what is really happening in WCG inner circles and the situation there is constantly changing.

Today, the actual makeup of the WCG hierarchy is extremely unstable in nature. In the last few weeks, for example, it has been commonplace for some WCG executives to be fired, rehired, suspended, reinstated, retired, reevaluated, rehired, and refired again in almost endless cycles. This bizarre pattern has, to some extent, been due to competition in the evangelist market. Roderick Meredith's renegade Global Church of God, for instance, has been luring away some WCG executives by promising them a salary equal to what they earned in Worldwide if they should bring along a certain number of sheep into Global. Sometimes extensive negotiations between the sheep rustlers have resulted in Meredith upping the ante by 10 percent, with Tkach, just hours later, again upping the ante a few more points in order to hold on to a star evangelist and his sheep.

Other reasons for the confusion include the major miscalculations of Tkach himself. For example, during the week ending February 3, WCG employees in Pasadena were told that, because of the church's dire financial situation, those that resigned or were fired in the future could not be guaranteed severance pay (they currently receive one week's pay for each year they were employed by the church). Employees were then told, however, that should any resign immediately they would still receive their severance pay at the old rate. Within two days so many of the WCG's top employees had turned in their resignations it appeared that very soon there might not be enough qualified personnel left to continue operations. Tkach panicked. By Sunday, February 5, when Report associates paid an informal visit to WCG headquarters, we learned that Tkach had already retracted the previous week's statement. Those who are let go in the future will still get severance pay - supposedly.

So who is left? Some are saying that during the last few months about 80 WCG ministers have resigned and approximately 20 more have been fired (but these figures go up and down every day, it seems). Here are some of the personnel changes we have learned of:

Evangelist Leroy Neff, former WCG treasurer and the executor of Herbert Armstrong's estate, has left. Early in the year he sent Tkach a scathing six-page letter that Tkach claims left him heartbroken. As copies of the letter began circulating among members, many sent bouquets of flowers to Neff at his old headquarters address. They were intercepted by Tkach's "assistant" Ellen Escat. We have not been able to locate Neff for a statement.

Evangelist David Hulme, who for a number of years was the WCG's front man on TV, has resigned from the ministry. Apparently he will remain as the Auditorium's director of performing arts only until the current concert season ends.

Victor Kubik, a conservative (that is, a traditional Armstrongite) and top administrator who spearheaded the WCG's outreach into the Ukraine, has resigned. Rumors abound that he will start his own church in Minnesota where he has a small following.

Doug Horchak and his wife Tanya, one of Tkach's two daughters, have left. How and to where is unknown at this time.

Church theologian Kyriacos Stavrinides has been sent packing back to Greece. He accused Tkach of not understanding the WCG's new trinity doctrine. (Does anyone?)

Evangelist Dibar Apartian, head of the WCG's French language ministry, has resigned to join evangelist Roderick Meredith's Global Church of God.

Colin Adair, who recently headed the WCG's Caribbean efforts, has also resigned to join Global.

Pastor Harold Smith left Worldwide with his Washington state congregation to join Global.

Long-time WCG minister Carlton Smith has been "retired" but reportedly without retirement pay.

Long-time WCG minister Don Billingsley (who was driving the church vehicle in the 1958 car crash that took the life of Richard Armstrong) has been fired, most likely for being a conservative.

Minister and Spanish language broadcaster Pablo Gonzalez is reported to have left Worldwide and gone independent.

Alabama minister Ray Wooten has left and now has his own United Church of God (2543 Elizabeth Drive, Pelham, AL 35724; tel. 1-800-688-8266).

Earl Williams, charismatic minister and PT writer, has resigned from the WCG. While church leaders say he is not starting a competing group, he has completely left, taking with him a large number of members and some elders. He continues to produce materials for many WCG members who find his New Covenant views appealing. His address is Christ's Church of Grace, 2531 Burwick Walk SW, Snellville, GA 30278.

Houston pastor Jim Franks has left Worldwide. Tkach loyalists say Franks is now with "the party of the circumcision."

Others who have left the WCG ministry include Roy Holladay, Ken Giese, Ron Wallen, Rand Millich, Ron Weinland, Dave Mills, Jim Servidio, Gerald Weston, Lyle Welty, and Eugene Noel. The March 15 Pastor General's Report listed most of these men and others as leaving. The comment that they were simply resigning the ministry but had no intention of going elsewhere or starting their own organizations is not true in every case.

Among those ministers who have vacillated about resigning, but who are still technically in Worldwide, as of our press deadline, are Herman Hoeh, Dennis Luker, Robin Webber, Frank Brown, Leon Walker, Dean Wilson, and Les McCullough.

Gene Hogberg, for many years the WCG's expert on world news, is no longer with the PT. Insiders say Tkach doesn't believe world news is important.

Church attorney Ralph Helge is no longer head of Worldwide's legal division. While still employed somehow by the WCG, he has indicated to friends that he now suspects there may be something wrong with the church. Worldwide's legal department is now under the auspices of church treasurer Steven Andrews, said to have been a protégé of one-time

WCG powerhouse Stanley Rader.

Incidentally, speaking of Rader - some say that the famous attorney-CPA was recently spotted at Worldwide headquarters in Pasadena. The sighting has led to speculation that the former HWA advisor who assisted in the sale of Ambassador's old Bricket Wood, England campus may now be assisting in the sale of the WCG's Pasadena real estate.

Not all those leaving the WCG's employ do so profitably or painlessly. On Feb. 2, WCG minister Ron Howe committed suicide by jumping off the Golden Gate Bridge in San Francisco. He left behind a note, but its contents have not been publicly disclosed. He was given a nice obituary in the Pastor General's Report.

Party Time for Tkach

Now with all the doctrinal and financial chaos, defections, and intrigue swirling about what HWA used to refer to as his "Eden" in Pasadena, what is Joseph W. Tkach up to privately? Obviously a believer in the aphorism, "When the going gets tough, the tough go shopping," Tkach has gone on a personal shopping spree. Insiders say that Tkach has been buying wide-screen televisions, crystal, and other fine things for himself. And, some say, he is now having second thoughts about selling off his two limos and his jet. Tkach recently moved out of his home at the corner of South Orange Grove and Del Mar Boulevards. That residence, designed by the famous early Pasadena architectural firm of Greene and Greene, has gone to Tkach's daughter Jennifer and her husband Paul Butler. Tkach has now moved a half block up Pasadena's "Millionaire's Row" into what was previously Herbert Armstrong's mansion (the Ambassador "Social Center"). Existing garden walls there will soon be heightened to increase privacy and to keep Tkach's guard dogs at bay.

At the Greene and Greene residence, Tkach for some years now has kept a younger, single male housed in the Tkach guest room over the garage. Tkach and his male friend had often been seen together feeding Tkach's large flock of pet pigeons and, it is claimed, on at least one occasion the two had been seen holding hands. Whether Tkach will be taking his male friend to a new location is not yet known.

But on the west side of Orange Grove Boulevard is a WCG-owned condominium complex where Ellen Escat, one of Tkach's frequent companions, has been residing. That building will now be sold. To accommodate beloved Ellen and other friends, Tkach has had his private interior decorator refurbish the nearby Grove Terrace apartments which for many years served as college dormitories. Now transformed into luxurious condos - some at a cost of $500,000 each (necessary because of the fine draperies and carpeting, gold leaf trims, expensive furniture, rare paintings, stocks of fine wines, etc. that went into the refurbishing), beloved Ellen will be able to enjoy the comfort to which she has become accustomed since leaving her husband (see AR43). Tragically, however, decorators were not able to find a suitable location for beloved Ellen's Jacuzzi at her new condo. But not to worry! Tkach ordered some of the church's custodians (a number of whom had been given their termination notices a few days before) to have the Jacuzzi installed in Tkach's new backyard, just a hundred feet or so from beloved Ellen's new condo. So everything is working out just spiffy for Tkach and his friends.

Secret WCG Bylaws Leaked by Insider

Editor: In recent years the WCG's leadership has gone to considerable lengths to create the impression that the WCG is no longer a destructive cult. Nevertheless, the church's leaders continue to keep many crucial facts hidden regarding the inner workings of the Worldwide organization. For example, members (those baptized and paying tithes) who request copies of the WCG's Bylaws are routinely told that such documents are not meant for distribution to lay members. In fact, such documents are considered so top secret they are stored in a multilocked vault and without special clearance even top ministers are not permitted to see them. For that reason, we are very pleased that one WCG insider recently provided us with a copy of the following:

BYLAWS OF THE WORLDWIDE CHURCH OF GOD, A CALIFORNIA NONPROFIT RELIGIOUS CORPORATION

ARTICLE I - SUBORDINATION

1.1 This corporation is chartered by and subordinate to the Church of God, a/k/a Worldwide Church of God, an unincorporated association, of which Joseph W. Tkach is the Pastor General, which Church is hereinafter referred to as the "Association."

ARTICLE II - DEFINITIONS

2.1 "Corporation" shall mean this California Corporation.

2.2 "Corporate Governance" shall mean the Pastor General. In the event that either of the conditions occur set forth in Sections 5.4 or 5.5 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Articles of the Association, then the term, "Corporate Governance," shall mean and include the Board of Directors of the Corporation as it shall from time to time be constituted, until the designation of the successor to the office of Pastor General or upon his inability to govern being terminated, as provided in Sections 5.6 or 5.7 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or, article) of the Bylaws of the Association, at which time the term "Corporate Governance" shall again only mean the Pastor General.

2.3 "Ecclesiastical Decision" shall mean a decision that requires religious considerations. Such decision shall be within the sole and subjective discretion of the Corporate Governance, shall be conclusive and final, subject to review by the Association's Church Authority, as that term is defined in the Articles of Association and Bylaws of the Association, and shall not require oral or written evidence as to its basis.

ARTICLE III - OFFICES

3.1 The principal office and other offices of the Corporation, for the transaction of its ecclesiastical and temporal activities, shall be designated by the Corporate Governance as it deems advisable according to the circumstances.

ARTICLE IV - MEMBERS

4.1 There shall only be one class of corporate members. They will be referred to as the "Members of the Corporation." "Members of the Corporation" shall mean the Advisory Council of Elders of the Association as it shall from time to time be constituted.

4.2 Only the Pastor General shall be empowered to call meetings of the Members of the Corporation. Notice of any such meetings may be given in any manner permitted by law, including, but not limited to, the following: Certified or registered first class mail to the Member's last known address, postmarked forty-eight (48) hours before the meeting, or upon four (4) hours advance notice, either in writing personally delivered, or by oral communication, to the Member or an adult person residing in his household. All meetings of the Members of the Corporation may be held within or without the State in such locations as the Pastor General shall designate.

4.3 In the event that either of the conditions occur set forth in Sections 5.4 and 5.5 of the Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Articles of the Association, then the call and notice of meetings of the Members will be as follows:

4.3.1 Call of Meetings: Any three Members of the Corporation will be empowered to call a meeting of the Members of the Corporation.

4.3.2 Notice of Meetings: Notice of any such meetings may be given in any manner permitted by law, including, but not limited to, the following: Certified or registered first class mail to the Member's last known address, postmarked seventy-two (72) hours before the meeting, or upon forty-eight (48) hours advance notice, either in writing personally delivered, or by oral communication, to the Member or an adult person residing in his household.

4.3.3 A copy of such notice shall likewise be delivered to the then advisor to the Association's Advisory Council of Elders at his then current office address.

4.3.4 All meetings of the Members of the Corporation under Section 4.3 of these Bylaws may be held within or without the State as a majority of said Members shall designate.

4.4 Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit waiver of call and notice, meeting by telephone conference call or action without a meeting, which are otherwise provided by law.

ARTICLE V - CORPORATION RECORDS

5.1 The Corporation's books, documents and records shall be deemed absolutely confidential and secret and no person shall have any right of access to or utilization of said information unless authorized or subsequently approved by an Ecclesiastical Decision. The Members of the Corporation and the members of the Board of Directors of the Corporation are exempted from this restriction and shall have power and authority to review such books, documents and records at any reasonable time as limited by law.

ARTICLE VI - GOVERNANCE

6.1 The governance of the Corporation is, after the biblical example, hierarchical in form. Joseph W. Tkach shall hold the office of Pastor General of the Corporation and the office of Director and Chairman of the Board of Directors. The title and office of Pastor General shall be equivalent to that of President.

Appointment and Removal

6.2 The Pastor General shall have the sole power and authority to appoint and remove officers of the Corporation. He may exercise said power and authority at any time, with or without cause or notice.

6.3 The Pastor General shall have the sole power and authority to appoint and remove any singular member of the Board of Directors, or the entire Board of Directors of the Corporation. He may exercise said power and authority at any time, with or without cause or notice.

6.4 The Pastor General shall have the sole power and authority to form and dissolve committees and to appoint and remove any singular member of the committee or the entire committee. He may exercise said power and authority at any time with or without notice. No member of any committee need be an officer or a director of the Corporation.

6.5 In the event that either of the conditions occur set forth in Sections 5.4 and 5.5 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Articles of the Association, then the Members of the Corporation shall be vested with the power and authority set forth in 6.2 and 6.3 of these Bylaws.

6.5.1 The Members of the Corporation shall be vested with said, powers and authority until the designation of the successor to the office of Pastor General or upon his inability to govern being terminated, as provided in Sections 5.6 or 5.7 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Bylaws of the Association, at which time the power and authority so vested in the Members of the Corporation shall terminate and the same shall be reinvested in the Pastor General.

Numbers and Qualifications

6.6 The authorized number of directors shall be not less than one (1) and not more than fifteen (15). Each member of the Board of Directors, each committee member or each officer of the Corporation must be a Church member of the Association at the time of his appointment and must remain such during his term in office. If for any reason he does not remain a Church Member of the Association during his term in office, then he shall be disqualified from serving as a director, committee member or officer, which disqualification shall constitute his removal from his respective office without the necessity of further action. A quorum of the Board of Directors or of any committee for the purpose of conducting corporate business shall mean a majority of the directors or committee members holding the office of director or committee member at the time of the meeting.

Terms of Office

6.7 The person holding the office of Pastor General of the Association shall also hold the office of Pastor General of the Corporation. Joseph W. Tkach shall hold the office of Pastor General of the Corporation and Director and Chairman of the Board of Directors for life. Other members of the Board of Directors and other committee members shall serve until they resign or are removed.

Place of Meetings

6.8 All meetings of the Board of Directors may be held within or without the State and in such locations as the Corporate Governance shall designate.

Call and Notice of Meetings

6.9 Only the Pastor General shall be empowered to call meetings of the Board of Directors and of any committee. Notice of any such meetings may be given in any manner permitted by law, including, but not limited to, the following: Certified or registered first class mail to the director's or committee member's last known address, postmarked forty-eight (48) hours before the meeting, or upon four (4) hours advance notice, either in writing personally delivered, or by oral communication, to the director or committee member or an adult person residing in his household.

6.10 In the event that either of the conditions occur set forth in Sections 5.4 or 5.5 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Articles of the Association, then the call and notice of meetings of the Board of Directors will be as follows, until the designation of the successor to the office of Pastor General or upon his inability to govern being terminated, as provided in Sections 5.6 or 5.7 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Bylaws of the Association, at which time the power and authority to call and notice meetings shall be reinvested in the Pastor General:

6.10.1 Call of Meetings: Any three members of the Board of Directors will be empowered to call a meeting of the Board of Directors.

6.10.2 Notice of Meetings: Notice of any such meetings may be given in any manner permitted by law, including, but not limited to, the following: Certified or registered first class mail to the director's last known address, postmarked seventy-two (72) hours before the meeting, or upon forty-eight (48) hours advance notice, either in writing personally delivered, or by oral communication, to the director or an adult person residing in his household.

6.10.3 A copy of such notice shall likewise be delivered to the then advisor to the Association's Advisory Council of Elders at his then current office address.

6.11 Nothing herein shall be construed to prohibit waiver of call and notice, meeting by telephone conference call or action without a meeting, which are otherwise provided by law.

ARTICLE VII - INDEMNIFICATION

7.1 The Corporation shall have the power to indemnify or make advance payments to the full extent permitted by law.

7.2 The Corporation shall have power to purchase and maintain insurance on behalf of any director, officer, employee or agent of the Corporation, its affiliated or subordinate organizations, or their predecessors or successors against any liability asserted against or incurred by them in such capacity or arising out of their status as such whether or not the Corporation would have the power to indemnify them against such liability.

ARTICLE VIII - AMENDMENT TO BYLAWS

8.1 The Pastor General shall have the sole power and authority to amend or repeal these Bylaws. In the event that either of the conditions occur set forth in Sections 5.4 or 5.5 of Article V (or any corresponding renumbered section or article) of the Articles of the Association, then the Members of the Corporation shall be authorized and empowered to adopt, amend or repeal these Bylaws only upon two-thirds of the Members of the Corporation affirmatively concurring to do so at a duly called and noticed meeting, or by unanimous written consent of said Members without a meeting, provided the notice therefore or the consent sets forth the Bylaw to be amended or repealed and the Bylaw to be adopted.

Editor: The above Bylaws of the WCG Corporation (not to be confused with the Bylaws of the WCG Association) have been reproduced exactly as they were provided to us. There are no edits or deletions. Hopefully, in the future we may be able to publish the WCG Association's Bylaws with its "top secret" Article V which deals with procedures should the Pastor General be incapacitated physically or mentally (the latter being what many feel has already happened). A few important points should be noted carefully:

(1) Most people who classify themselves as WCG "members" are only members of the WCG "Association." The only members of the WCG Corporation are those who belong to the Association's Advisory Board of Elders. Thus to some extent the WCG Corporation parallels the organizational structure of the Orthodox Catholic Church where "the church" is in reality only a select group of bishops.

(2) Tkach has sole authority over the selection and removal of the corporation's Board of Directors. If some board member does not like Tkach's managerial decisions, Tkach simply replaces him with someone who will obey his dictates. Tkach can do so without cause and even without notice. He explicitly also has sole authority over the content of the Bylaws. The Corporation's board is therefore a true dummy board. Because the Association's Advisory Board of Elders is determined in the same way, it, too, is a dummy board. Thus, as regards governance, the only major religious organization that compares to Tkach's WCG is the Pope's Roman Catholic Church.

(3) In the final analysis, all WCG doctrines, policies, assets, and personnel are controlled legally by the whims, caprices, and fantasies of but one human being - Joseph W. Tkach. In a very real sense, therefore, the Worldwide Church of God is Joseph W. Tkach.

One final thought. Many of us can recall seeing copies of the WCG's Constitution and Bylaws in 1979 when the Attorney General of California brought the state's lawsuit against the WCG. An amendment to that document filed with the State of California on June 18, 1968 seems to indicate that any major change of the WCG's legal structure required a vote of a majority of the church's baptized members, not just its elders. It would seem, therefore, that for the current Bylaws to have legally superseded the old ones would have required such a vote. When was there such a vote?

More Chaos Coming

Many, many more WCG changes are right around the corner. Already, the WCG's Youth magazine has a price tag on it. (Who would want to pay for such pablum?) According to Tkach's "Dear Brethren" letter of 2/23/95, the church's summer camp in Minnesota may not open this summer. As for the unclean meats doctrine, Tkach wrote in the 1/24/95 Worldwide News (p. 8), "there is no scriptural requirement for Christians to abstain from unclean meats." Also on diet: "[Gen. 9:3] indicates that humans did not eat any meat before the flood" (WN, 2/21/95, p. 7). Now top evangelists are privately talking about doing away with the yearly Passover service and replacing it with a "Lord's Supper" to be celebrated four times per year. In time the foot washing ceremony will also be deleted. The Feast of Tabernacles is still scheduled for this fall. But eventually Tabernacles will probably have its name changed to "The Festival of Faith." As for the time of the year at which these Festivals will be held, well, that is no longer certain. Some ministers say they want that decision left up to local pastors. So if a local congregation would want to hold its festivals, say, December 25 to January 1 that would be okay with some. As to whether this fall's scheduled Feast will ever materialize, some have doubts. Already WCG members are being told that they do not have to take off from work to keep the holy days and that the Bible does not command them to save second tithe (WN, 1/24/95, pp. 5, 8).

Apostle Tkach has told associates that he wants the WCG ministry purged of all disloyal conservatives by the coming Passover season in late April. Tkach seems to have deluded himself into believing that by doing so he will put an end to his problems. That is unlikely. The situation with Big Sandy is a case in point.

Ambassador University at Big Sandy, Texas is headed by Dr. Donald Ward who led the drive for that institution's recent accreditation. A few months ago Ward, a conservative, fell out of favor with Tkach. Insiders say that with the WCG having financial problems and being unable to sell Pasadena for the kind of money he expects, Tkach finally came to regret going against HWA's wishes to have the Texas campus sold and the Pasadena campus maintained. Unable to take full responsibility for his decision, Tkach blamed

Ward for what he now sees as a fiasco. Ward was asked to resign. Ward refused, pointing out that he has a five-year employment contract. Miffed, Tkach decided to cut back the University's funding. Now it is rumored that some at Big Sandy, viewing Tkach as "an out-of-control moron," are talking about a complete break with Pasadena. There is even talk that eventually, should Worldwide go bankrupt, some sort of Big Sandy linkage with Garner Ted Armstrong's International or Rod Meredith's Global will materialize. Insiders say that with so much of "his money" invested in Big Sandy, such talk sends Tkach "right up the wall." But with his support among many old-time members slipping daily, there may not be much that Tkach can do to permanently save Big Sandy for himself.

With so much confusion in the Tkach camp, it is perhaps not surprising that someone would start a new Worldwide Church of God. Yes, that's right, another Worldwide. WCG minister George Crow, a Houston lawyer, has registered a new Worldwide Church of God with the state of Texas. This one is called The Worldwide Church of God Texas (Charter No. 1347064, filed with the Texas Secretary of State on 3/6/95). Crow has stated privately that the new corporation is "a shell" being readied should the Pasadena group go bankrupt. Who will be in this new church and exactly what its real purpose is remains unclear. The new group can be reached via Mr. Crow at 1519 Miller Ave., Katy, TX 77449; tel. 713-391-9564.

One possible WCG scenario is that Tkach and his associates will, themselves, intentionally split up the WCG. Some top honchos in Pasadena have already been toying with the idea of splitting the WCG into two separate organizations - one for the old diehard conservatives and one for the new liberals. While Tkach has told the field ministry that no new church name is in the offing (PGR, 3/1/95, p. 6.), some WCG leaders for a time contemplated "The New Covenant Church of Christ" as a name for the new liberal subsidiary. What legal ramifications such a church split would have is unclear. Would WCG assets be transferred to the liberal wing, with the conservatives getting stuck with all the retirement programs and other bills left over by Tkach? Would the old WCG just walk away from all its financial and contractual responsibilities? Would the new liberal group? And what would be the ethical justification for such a move? No one seems to know. Insiders say, however, that because of the unanticipated complexities of such a plan, it is being shelved - for now.

One cynical insider explained it this way: "Look, it's a little game we play with the members. We're going to liberate the church no matter what. But it can't be done all at once. We go two steps forward and wait for a response. If there's too much howling from the kiddies [the counterrevolutionaries?], we say it was all rumors. We deny anything major is being changed. So we take one step backwards. But as soon as things cool down, well, then it's time to take two more steps forward. It's not fast enough for me, but Joe [Tkach Jr.] and Mike [Fezell] know what they are doing."

HWA's Views on the Current Chaos

Contrary to the hopes and beliefs of a handful of Armstrongite fanatics, Herbert Armstrong remains in his grave and will continue to do so for some time. Nevertheless, years before his death HWA did make a few statements that have relevance to the current Tkach administration.

Ambassador alumni from the earliest years of the college recall how in the 1950s HWA would frequently say, "If this work is not of God, it will perish." Then, in later years HWA told some that he envisioned the WCG after his death splitting into numerous warring sects with perhaps one eventually predominating. At least regarding the future of his own organization, Armstrong seems to have had some understanding, maybe even a prophetic insight.

There is one other HWA statement, frequently made while he was alive, that many Ambassador alumni also recall: "God is not the author of confusion!"

Bible Knowledge Expanding

As we approach the year 2000, interest in the Bible seems to be expanding at an exponential rate. Go into almost any bookstore and you will find dozens of new books by reputable scholars writing about the Bible's origins, its contents, its significance, etc. Even on TV there are frequently programs now devoted to such topics. One of our readers recently commented:

Having studied the Bible all my life, I thought I had a good understanding of its contents. But in the last few weeks since getting cable television installed I have been watching a series called "Mysteries of the Bible." I have come to see that there is very much that I need to study. Here are just some of the few surprises I got from the one segment I saw.

I used to think that the Old Testament was canonized hundreds of years before Christ. I learned that it wasn't. It was after 70 A.D. that the Old Testament was finally canonized by the rabbis of that time. I used to think that everything that was done by the Roman Emperors was evil. But I discovered that Constantine played the key role in canonizing the New Testament at Nicaea. I used to think that everything the Gnostics taught was heresy. But, I wonder now, because I learned that they were persecuted by Constantine because they would not bow to what they thought were his own heresies. I used to think that we had the whole Bible today. But I found out that there are Lost Books of the Bible - books that are now lost, but that are actually mentioned in the Bible, itself, as being inspired.

So many of us who spent years in the WCG were led to believe that we really understood the Bible when we actually did not. That is why I think it is wonderful that so many who have left are finally getting around to confronting some of the really big religious issues.

In recent months, AR has been receiving so much Bible-related information of significance in the mail it is not possible to review more than a few items. But, because some are so noteworthy, we will very briefly mention a few for those who are interested in biblical studies:

"The Christmas Covenant" was an article by Jeffery L. Sheler that appeared in the Science & Society section of the 12/19/94 issue of U.S. News & World Report. The subtitle stated, "Was Jesus's birth part of a divine plan leading to a golden age? Scholars are re-examining the biblical prophecies." If you have not already seen it, try to locate a copy at your local library. Even many who have studied the subject for decades have told us they found the article very enlightening.

Not everyone likes the writings of William F. Dankenbring. But we recently found his article "The Battle Over the Bible" fascinating. Quoting extensively from the writings of Justin Martyr (A.D. 110-165), Dankenbring makes the startling claim that during the early years of the Christian era certain Jewish scholars tampered with the Hebrew Scriptures in order to obscure references that could point to Jesus as the Messiah. Dankenbring concludes that the Septuagint version of the Old Testament may be more accurate than the Masoretic text. The article was published in the January, 1995 issue of Prophecy Flash! (P.O. Box 292, Altadena, CA 91003).

Another researcher who has concluded that certain Jewish rabbis of the past have tampered with their own Hebrew scriptures is Carl D. Franklin. In his 30-page paper "The Two Jehovahs of the Psalms," Mr. Franklin made some assertions we found so astounding we asked him for further documentation. He kindly responded with an extensive bibliography that covered the following points: (1) source material which shows the corruption of the rabbinic text edited by Jacob ben Chayim of 1524-25; (2) source material which shows the corruption of the Levitical priesthood; (3) source material which shows deliberate tampering with the Old Testament text; (4) source material which shows rabbinical corruption with the worship of Isis and Osiris of Egypt, Mithras of Persia, Ba'al of the Canaanites, and Mystical Kabbalism; and (5) source material which analytically destroys rabbinic, German, and English textual criticism of the last one hundred years. Those interested in reading Mr. Franklin's papers should write to Carl Franklin, 58775 Klumbis Rd., Dowagiac, MI 49047.

A good number of our readers continue to express an ongoing interest in the Branch Davidian-Waco tragedy. Dr. Phillip Arnold informs us that "Reunion Institute offers a package of research materials on the Waco Crisis including articles, audio tapes, and video tapes for a $30.00 donation (shipping included)." As Dr. Arnold was personally involved in the negotiations that went on with David Koresh, he has a good deal of information about what really transpired in Waco. Some will also be interested to learn that Dr. Arnold heads the Religion-Crisis Task Force, an organization composed of 24 leading scholars and professionals concerned about the way government approaches religious groups perceived as dangerous and labeled as "cults." To order the Waco package or to contact the Task Force write: Reunion Institute, P.O. Box 981111, Houston, TX 77098; tel. 713-523-1861; fax 713-523-3585.

Letters

In AR56 you reported how WCG minister Robert Boraker stated, "The word 'trinity' is not in the Bible and we will refrain from using it for that reason." Well, the words "Millennium," "Eucharist," "Bible study," "pray and pay," "co-worker," etc. are not in the Bible either. What consistency.

-Washington

I was sorry to hear of Gene Justice's loss. I remember him from college as a man of warmth and wit. When I got your last AR I was also facing loss. My husband, Mike Murphy, died July 11, 1994 after a 15-month battle with cancer. He graduated from Big Sandy in 1969. I was then Lois Holman and attended 1968-9....

I've been out of the WCG for over 15 years and enjoy reading of the changes. Many seem too good to be true, but I think they are. I recently attended a WCG service while visiting my parents and was very pleased with the service.... I think there are changes coming in the Christmas doctrine and in calling pastors "reverend"....

I would appreciate letters from those we knew if you will print my address. Old friends are so special and it's so hard to keep in contact.

Your publication performs a valuable service in mentioning the many, many new ideas circulating in WCG circles. I have written to most of the groups you have referred to. Some have valuable truths but some have wild ideas. For instance, I wrote to a few Preterist groups. I was shocked to discover that some seem to think that Christ returned to earth way back in the first century! I laughingly mentioned this to my brother-in-law who is still in the WCG. To my amazement, he agreed with that view! He says his minister is teaching that God's Kingdom is already here!

I would like to see AR devote more space to the new doctrines and Bible theories.

-Illinois

Editor: We simply do not have the resources to thoroughly review all of the new ideas that are circulating among current and former WCG members. We have space to only briefly allude to them and give a few references for those doing their own research. However, you are very correct in saying that some of the new teachings and theories are a little wild.

In your last issue, you asked if anyone knew of a group that teaches the United States is the Beast of Revelation. I am surprised that you did not know already. Both the Jehovah's Witnesses and the Seventh Day Adventists teach something close to that. Here at [WCG] headquarters, a few of us are leaning in that direction, but because we are in a doctrinal overload situation, Mr. Fezell does not want any new teachings aired publicly right now.

-California

I was interested that other readers suspect that the United States is the Beast of Revelation. Waco started me thinking along those lines. The chief proponent of this kind of interpretation is Kenneth B. Klein. In his book The False Prophet, he makes a good case for the United States and the United Kingdom being the fulfillment of the Beast of Revelation 13 (similar to the SDAs) and the False Prophet. He sees the United Nations as the eighth beast of Revelation. He has an interesting idea for the image of the beast. The book is available from Ken Klein Ministries, 1574 Coburg Rd., #125, Eugene, OR 97401. He is currently making personal appearances in Southern California; I attended one of these. Another Oregonian, James Lloyd, expresses similar views in his Beyond Babylon. As may be expected, this interpretation is abhorrent to many who believe in Anglo-Israelism.

-WCG member
California

How could anyone think that the United States is the Beast? Mr. Dankenbring has proven conclusively that it is Saddam Hussein. Anyone who reads Prophecy Flash! magazine would understand this.

-Oregon

On page seven of AR57 you listed six hypothetical scenarios for the fulfillment of the Beast prophecies. Would you like to increase the total to a "perfect seven"? After all, the Beast has seven heads - tsk, tsk. So here is one more speculative construct to entertain your readers, if it fails to expand thinking into potentials.

Most prophecy buffs (HWA, the evangelicals, etc.), knowing that Rome fell in AD 476, seem to get locked into a resurrection scenario that plays out in Western Europe with a trail of heads and horns composed of characters like Justinian, Charlemagne, the Hapsburgs, Napoleon, Hitler, et al. This trail supposedly leads to the final formation of 10 nations/10 kings. That view has been quite popular. But other views, previously thought marginal, are growing in acceptance.

For example, as a number of historians recognize, there was a second trail of continued power leading away from Rome! First, Emperor Constantine transferred Rome's authority to Constantinople (often called "the Second Rome"). Then when that city fell to the Muslims in 1453, the trail of power called the "Eastern wing" (leg?-see Daniel 2) went first to Kiev and then to Moscow (which the Russians call "the Third Rome").

Notice that this hypothetical scarlet-colored Beast (Red Russia/Red Army) has had seven heads from Lenin to Gorbachev (hereinafter "MSG"): Lenin, Stalin, Khrushchev, Brezhnev, Andropov, Chernenko, and MSG. (Malenkov does not qualify as a head because he was only a temporary interregnum). MSG, the seventh, suffered a "deadly wound" when he was ousted from power and the USSR collapsed. Broadcaster Dan Rather used almost those very words when he first reported that "the mortally wounded Gorbachev" had been ousted. The deadly wound (two-fold: MSG and the USSR) will be healed upon his return to power when he fulfills his avowed purpose of restoring the USSR. Events will dictate this, but the restoration will not include all 15 of the former republics because five of them are Islamic and will never agree to the plan. Only ten of the republics will come together on a voluntary basis and together they will "give their power to the Beast" (Rev. 17:13). This includes their weapons, both land-based and submarine ("rise up out of the sea," Rev. 17:13). Under this scenario, I guess the only clear prophetic identity we could assign to Yeltsin is that he is "the eighth and is of the seven" (Rev. 17:11).

When Andrei Gromyko cast his vote for MSG he said, "He has a nice smile, but he has iron teeth." As for that famous birthmark on MSG's head - could it be the endtime fulfillment of the legend that began with the mark of Gen. 3:15?

I'm no prophet, I'm only presenting a possible scenario, but I'll consider any clue that unfolding history hasn't already scrapped. After all, Rev. 13:3 says, "All the world wondered after the beast." What eventually transpires will be different than what the majority will be expecting.

For those who would like to know more about MSG's possible future, let me suggest the Center for Action Monthly Newsletter published by Bo Gritz (c/o HC 11 Box 307, Kamiah, ID 83536). Col. Gritz has shown that MSG has 50 characteristics of the Antichrist. For those who only read the mainstream press let me suggest the eye-opening article about MSG entitled "Trying to Grab the Microphone" which appeared on page 32 of the 3/13/95 issue of Newsweek.

"Conspiracy" seems to be a hot topic of animated discussion among many AR readers. Being a long time student of the subject, I thought I'd offer a thought or two.

First of all, what constitutes a conspiracy? Mr. Webster defines conspiracy as (1) a planning and acting together secretly, especially for an unlawful or harmful purpose such as murder or treason; (2) the plan agreed upon, the plot; (3) the group taking part in such a plan; (4) a combining or working together.

Considering Webster's definition, I am surprised that any controversy should arise regarding the subject in WCG circles. From cover to cover, from the Garden of Eden to the endtime Beast, the Bible, which most of us have studied assiduously, chronicles the centuries-long tale of world conspiracy upon conspiracy stacked upon numberless conspiracies. Why should we, then, be surprised that major conspiracies continue in this day and age when they have existed for centuries?

Rather than mount my soap box, I simply suggest you consider a few books I have found useful in my studies: Secrets of the Federal Reserve and The Federal Reserve Conspiracy by Eustace Mullins are "must read" books revealing the who, what, where, when, why, and how with names, faces, places, and bountiful citations from government archives and Federal Reserve documents. None Dare Call It Conspiracy by Gary Allen - a great little pocket book with essential information. Hard to find these days. Tragedy and Hope: A History of the World in Our Time, a 1,348-page study by Dr. Carroll Quigley, a world-class historian who for several years was allowed "to study it all from the inside." The Naked Capitalist by Cleon Skousen, an excellent commentary on Quigley's Tragedy and Hope. The Anglo-American Establishment, another outstanding book by Quigley, only 354-pages but potent. America's Secret Establishment: An Introduction to the Order of the Skull and Bones, another outstanding book by Dr. Quigley sheds a bright light piercing the dark side of America's movers and shakers. The Federal Reserve and Our Manipulated Dollar by Martin A. Larson reveals why we're broke and they aren't. The Creature From Jekyll Island: A Second Look at the Federal Reserve by G. Edward Griffin exposes the method by which the Federal Reserve creates money out of nothing, the concept of usury as the payment of interest on pretended loans, the true cause of the hidden tax called inflation, the way in which the Fed creates boom-bust cycles, and why yesteryear's dollar has been devalued more than 98 percent! For those who are really stout of heart, there are Des Griffin's books: Fourth Reich of the Rich and Descent Into Slavery. Finally, there is Call It Conspiracy by Larry Abraham, giving most of the names with pictures!

Two bookstores I recommend are: Emissary Publications (owned and run by my good friends Des and Karen Griffin), 9205 SE Clackamas Rd. #1776, Clackamas, OR 97015, tel. 503-824-2050; and American Opinion Book Store (managed by my irrepressible daughter, Erin Cullen) 4306 Utah Street, San Diego, CA 92140, tel. 619-281-1338.

Those who are interested in digging deeper into "The Conspiracy" may write to me. I will respond as health permits.

I have no need of your reports any longer so please cancel my subscription. For more than 30 years I was sure that God was using Mr. Garner Ted to tell it like it is. But lately I saw that God is now using Rush Limbaugh, a great American. Rush speaks the truth. How anyone could be a Christian and not back him 100% I don't know. I wish Mr. Garner Ted would get off the air and give his time and support to Rush. I think you all should do the same.

-Texas

Editor: Former deejay Rush Limbaugh and his "dittoheads" are clearly a major political force in the U.S. today. So much so that there is even a magazine that critically monitors everything Limbaugh says and does. It's called Flush Rush Quarterly (P.O. Box 270525, San Diego, CA 92198).

Our mail shows that many people somehow view the so-called political right as identical to "true Christianity." It may sound funny, but an increasing number of Americans seem to believe that Jesus is a Republican. Such individuals might have their view of reality expanded somewhat if they could study the views of a remarkable individual I first met in the late 1980s.

I was at the Loyola Law School Library in Los Angeles where I was doing legal research. Walking through a corridor, I heard a dynamic voice coming from one of the public lecture halls. The speaker was a mid-fortyish but lean, square-jawed man of somewhat military bearing. I had never heard him, or of him, before. But because of the power and clarity of his presentation I took a seat in the sparse audience and listened. He was saying things that I thought at first were completely, outrageous: The Soviet Union, he said, was not really a serious military threat to the U.S. The strength of the Soviet military had been greatly exaggerated by the U.S. military-industrial complex to insure that excessive amounts of tax dollars would flow into their coffers. The "Star Wars" program would not succeed in guaranteeing peace, but if fully deployed would very likely bring about nuclear war because of the inherent limitations of computer technology. Then he said something that still rings in my ears: "Having sat in meetings with some of our nation's top leaders, I can tell you - the lunatic fringe is not in charge now, the lunatics are."

Normally, I would not have paid attention to such comments, but this was no fool. The speaker was Dr. Robert M. Bowman, a retired U.S. Air Force Lt. Colonel who flew 101 combat missions over Vietnam, earned his Ph.D. from Caltech where he specialized in aeronautics and nuclear engineering, and then went on to head the "Star Wars" program in the Ford and Carter administrations. He is a recipient of the Eisenhower Medal, the George F. Kennan Peace Prize, the Society of American Military Engineers Gold Medal (twice), and many other awards. After his government service, he was Manager of Advanced Space Programs General Dynamics and Vice President of SpaccCom.

In recent years he has headed the Institute for Space and Security Studies and publishes Space and Security News, a journal that provides unique insights about the world's military, political, and environmental condition. (Example: his 3/94 issue featured a shocking exposé about the big-government/big-business coverup of the health dangers posed to all of us by power lines and radar.) A study of Bowman's writings reveals that in spite of his extensive military background, he is probably the antithesis of a Limbaugh "dittohead." For example, he is not fearful of the U.N., does not panic at the mention of international law, is not anti-environmentalist, and most certainly is not anti-intellectual. Yet - and this is important - Bowman is a well-versed and devout Christian.

In January, I was very pleased to learn that Dr. Bowman now has his own radio program called "Solutions From the Left and From the Right." The Los Angeles Times has called Dr. Bowman "the best public speaker in America" and even if for only that reason, many will find his new program provocative. Additionally, Dr. Bowman now publishes a newsletter called Christianity in Action. Its premier edition took on the thorny, and usually sidestepped, issue of "Making War: A Christian Perspective." Those who would like a sample copy should write to: Christianity in Action, 5115 S. AlA Hwy., Melbourne Beach, FL 32951. (One suggestion though: I know for a fact that Dr. Bowman and his wife Maggie, in their patriotic and Christian zeal for sharing what they know, have gone even more into debt than I have in putting out AR. So please, if you want his newsletter, contribute to it as you are able.)

In AR56 you ran the obituary of Mr. John Wiedner, the WWII hero. I recently talked to a Pasadena man who knew him personally and he told me something amazing. In performing all his heroic exploits in WWII, Mr. Wiedner never killed anyone or even carried a gun. Surely, to have saved the lives of so many Jews and Allied airmen as he did, he must have had God's help. I would like to read the book about his war experiences. Where can I get a copy?

-California

Editor: The book is Flee the Captor by Herbert Ford. Copies of the updated edition may be obtained from the Adventist Book Center, 1501 E. Chevy Chase Dr., Glendale, CA 91206, tel. 800-765-6955. The price is $12.95 plus $4 shipping per copy.

The best thing about AR is that it shows decisions, changes, and internal dynamics of the WCG to be based upon expediency - the true raw material of humanistic psychological workings, not the Holy Spirit, not the mind of God, not the leadership of Jesus Christ. This then assists former and present members (and others negatively impacted upon) to see that this expediency is a worldwide phenomenon (pun intended). Human nature is everywhere. The WCG is not different and it is not special!

This is an education by degrees, a gradual lifting of a veil that blinds and chokes and disfigures perceptions. Finally one can stand and state clearly that one's membership in the WCG cult was an egocentric and selfish experience - an experience to be learnt from thoroughly!

Someone sent me your publication. Tell them to stop it. I've read enough. I saw the letter from Mr. Baldwin. It's too bad that he has left God's church. If he had stayed longer he could have heard explained why Jesus Christ let the early church believe He was returning in their time. Mr. Waterhouse explained two years ago that if Christ had told them He was returning many centuries later they would not have been motivated to preach the gospel during their lifetime as it was necessary to have done. So that explains it.

You people don't know it but you are helping Mr. Meredith's Satanic work. He claims to be loyal to God, but he has thrown out God's basic truth - loyalty to the GOVERNMENT of God! Nothing else matters. He once knew how God chose Mr. Armstrong. We all understood that was true because Mr. Armstrong was the only one to whom the true gospel was shown in 1900 years. We know that God later chose Mr. Tkach because Mr. Armstrong told us so! Therefore the new doctrinal understandings that Mr. Tkach has taught us are from GOD! Mr. Meredith does not understand that. Neither do you people.

Will all WCG property be sold and unaccounted for, like the Poconos? Events of the last few years seem to indicate that now, with the groundwork laid, all that remains is to alienate the membership (well underway!), sell the assets, and depart on an extended vacation.

It has been reported that a very good offer was made on part of the Pasadena property but was refused because payment was proposed to cover a five year span instead of for immediate cash.

Nevertheless, the members don't seem to be shaking loose that easily. Perhaps the old brain washing that Pasadena is infallible is a bit of a hindrance just now. My wife and daughter left the bunch six months ago for Rev. Rod and his rebellious reprobates, but now they do read the AR.

-Arkansas

Here in Texas the story has really gotten around that since he took over from Mr. Herbert Armstrong, Mr. Tkach has been able to stash away $2 million each year in a foreign bank account. We've repeatedly been told that Joe Jr. has been able to do the same with $1 million per year for some time. Have you also heard this?

-Texas

Editor: Yes, we have. But we have seen no evidence yet to confirm that the story is true. In these strange times when it seems there is a new, competing WCG offshoot springing up every other day, we suggest a bit of skepticism in dealing with all the stories - at least until they can be verified.

I'm mad! For 25 years we supported the Work with tithes and offerings to the point that we could not support our family properly, could not send our kids to college, could not get medical help for serious problems, and so on. Now we are told it was all a big mistake. We really did not have to send that money in and we would not have been under a curse if we did not. It seems to me we have been under a curse! For listening to Mr. Armstrong, Mr. Tkach, and the rest. We have been robbed! I feel lower than low. All washed up....

For your information, in a local paper the last week of January, I saw this letter to columnist Ann Landers:

Dear Ann: I'm afraid you recently gave someone some advice that was not up to your usual standard. You told the person who had been victimized by various televangelists that he could not sue. A Florida couple recently was awarded $1.5 million by a Dallas jury in a case against a prominent televangelist. I know of at least seven other lawsuits pending against televangelists.

You also said televangelists only promise to pray, not to heal. The sad truth is that many of the televangelists do promise miracles in exchange for donations. By so doing, they are taking advantage of people's faith, which is as cold-hearted and cynical as any kind of abuse.

Faith abuse is a huge problem in America today. I am director of the Trinity Foundation, a watchdog organization dedicated to ending this abuse. We sponsor a nationwide toll-free help line for people who believe they or a loved one has been victimized by a televangelist. The number is (800) 229-VICTIM.

By the way, Ann, I agree with your assessment that Billy Graham is about the only big-name preacher who seems to be trustworthy.

-Douglas Duncan, Director
Trinity Foundation, Dallas

If any of your other readers are as angry about what is going on in the church, then they may want to call Mr. Duncan's organization as I have done, or they can write to Evangelist Victims Advocates, P.O. Box 33, Dallas, TX 75221. They should mention the WCG and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope for a reply. I also think some of us need to start writing to the proper government officials to ask for an investigation. I suggest that everyone who has been victimized by the WCG write to their own state's attorney general. They can help. Also, because the WCG is based in California and Texas, everyone who has contributed to Tkach can write to the top lawmen of those two states: The Honorable Dan Lungren, Attorney General of California, Dept. of Justice, 1515 K Street, No. 511, Sacramento, CA 95814; and The Honorable Dan Morales, Attorney General of Texas, Supreme Court Building, P.O. Box 12548, Capitol Station, Austin, TX 78711.

-New Reader
Illinois

It should not come as a surprise that the WCG is now on the verge of total collapse. Mr. Tkach claims to have been chosen by Jesus Christ, but it is very easy to prove that Christ did not choose him. The Bible shows us very clearly how God wants a new leader of his church to be chosen. First the entire congregation, not just some secret board of elders, should put forward candidates whom the entire congregation recognizes as having proper spiritual experience and maturity. Then those chosen individuals should draw lots. In that way God reveals who He chooses to lead His people (Acts 1:15-26). Mr. Armstrong's autobiography and the church history book by Dugger and Dodd show that Mr. Armstrong was chosen to be an Apostle by this very method. Any other method of choosing a leader, such as the Roman Catholic system which the WCG has adopted, will produce the confusion we now see. It is sad that in his old age Mr. Herbert Armstrong forgot this and was swayed into choosing Mr. Tkach. But then again, we really don't know for sure that Mr. Armstrong really chose Mr. Tkach, do we.

-South Africa

In AR57 you made some positive comments about Mr. Tkach. I think it is commendable that you try to see good in someone even if you disagree with them overall. However, I hope you are not being deceived about Mr. Tkach's true nature.

After repeatedly listening to a cassette recording of his January 7 taped message (the one my relatives call the Russian Christmas Present), I came away with mixed thoughts about Mr. Tkach. In one way, I feel sorry for him. He is up in years, having spent most of his life duped by Mr. Armstrong. Now he has come around to seeing that what Mr. Armstrong taught was not really the true gospel of Jesus Christ. He's probably bitter. Having carefully studied and prayed about what he has said, I have come to see that Mr. Tkach is theologically correct in most of what he says. But that is not the end of the story.

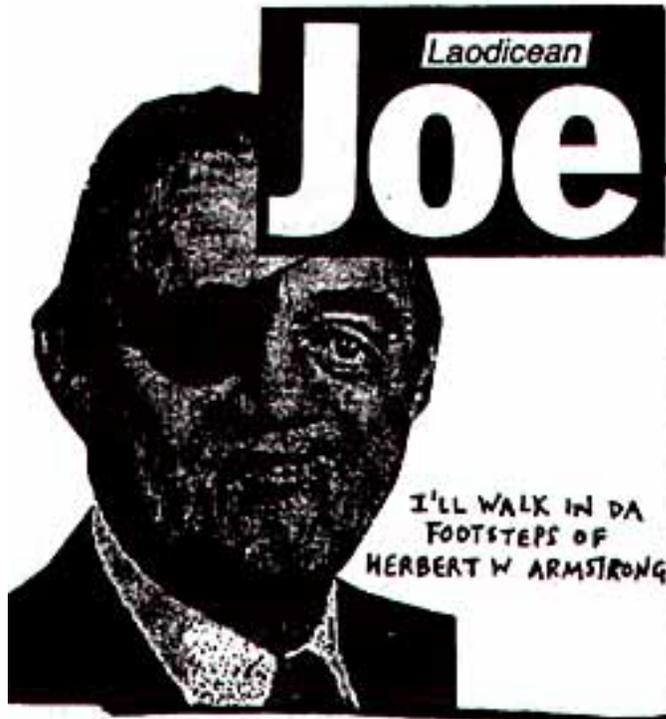

Thousands of us have given many years to the WCG. And we have given much time and much money. Now Mr. Tkach says, in effect, it was all for nothing. We were stupid in doing what we did. It doesn't take the brain of a genius to figure out that we have been defrauded! That being the case, why is Mr. Tkach, who is supposedly so full of the Holy Spirit's love and wisdom, not returning the money we gave him under false pretenses? He is not doing that. Instead, he puts out of the church anyone who openly disagrees with him about anything. I know of some ministers who have given their whole life to the church, thinking they were serving God, who Mr. Tkach has thrown out of the Church with barely the shirts on their backs. Many are now up in age. Somehow I think that is wrong. Especially when you consider that Mr. Tkach, himself, is doing very well financially.

And what about those who left years ago because they were teaching the very things that Mr. Tkach now says are the true gospel? I frankly don't see much difference between what Mr. Tkach is now teaching and what Dr. Martin has taught for years. Correct me if I'm wrong. So is Dr. Martin being given an apology and asked back? What about the other "liberals"? Is Wayne Cole going to be asked back? Or David Antion? Or the hundreds of other "liberals"?

Mr. Tkach is preaching love and tolerance all the time. Yet in his own management of the church there is precious little toleration, precious little justice, fairness, or kindness. He seems to want to be a New Testament Christian, but he also wants to be a rich, powerful corporation president who has the respect of the world. I don't think you can have it both ways (Matt. 19:24). Even if much of what he says is theologically correct, don't let him fool you! Mr. Tkach, like Rasputin, is still the center of a cult - one that demands only two things: obedience and money.

Editor: The above cartoon was not created by AR, but is from a flyer being distributed widely among WCG members. It shows some of the feeling generated by Tkach's "Russian Christmas Present. "

You may remember how I wrote to you folks back in the fall after I met an ex-member who gave me your address. I had spent many years in WCG and the new direction had left me in a daze. I thought to myself it was finally time to figure out what I had really been a part of. I ordered all your back issues and have since read every one. To say my eyes were opened is a huge understatement. I have now started reading some of the books you suggested in AR 56, and again my eyes are getting opened real wide. So, I thought, I'll try to encourage some of my family who are still in the Tkach church to read your materials. But no. They will just not listen to anyone. I am flabbergasted. You have so much to offer, but they will not pay heed. They are like people who are walking in their sleep and do not want anyone or anything to wake them up! How terrible.

Editor's Note

It is absolutely true that simply giving a WCG member one of our publications will not automatically result in the Worldwider discovering that he or she is being manipulated by very devious charlatans. Nevertheless, every week Ambassador Report plays a major role in assisting people to come out of what is obviously a very destructive cult experience.

I wish we had the means to do more. Nevertheless, each issue is helping hundreds who have been victimized by the "Worldwide experience." Lack of funds have made it necessary to cut a huge amount of information out of this issue. However, with a bit of luck we will be including all of that, and more, in AR59.

My thanks to all of you who are helping Ambassador Report.

---

Thousands Flee From Tkach

The people of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) have for decades talked about "fleeing." But few ever thought they would be fleeing from the Pastor General of their own church. Nevertheless, for thousands of irate WCG members, that is exactly what has occurred. In the last few weeks thousands of WCG members have rejected the leadership of Apostle Joseph W. Tkach and have renounced their WCG membership.

As we detailed in past issues, since taking over the leadership of the WCG upon the death of church founder Herbert W. Armstrong, Tkach instituted a never-ending stream of doctrinal changes. So sweeping have the changes become, even the most loyal of Tkach "true believers" have had to admit the WCG is very, very different than it was a decade ago. In fact, on numerous religious issues the WCG today is 180 degrees off of its old course. For example, in recent months WCG members have been told that those who privately keep Christmas and Easter will not be disfellowshipped. We have been told that the Dave Pack list of WCG doctrinal changes (see AR53) has now grown to over 210 changes. The earliest modifications made by Tkach caused some to bolt the WCG. But in recent months, the whispered criticisms of Tkach, particularly among his own ministers, crescendoed to a roar and the numbers of those exiting have increased dramatically.

From the beginning of the year, computer buffs who peruse E-mail and "surf the Internet" began noticing that messages about Worldwide, posted by Worldwidiers, were becoming increasingly strident. All too often coming from anonymous sources using such pseudonyms as "Law Keeper," "Pro-obedience," or "True Believer" (obviously oblivious to Eric Hoffer's classic by that title), the messages, while often containing huge quantities of unverifiable data and misinformation, nevertheless revealed that among WCG members and ministers there was a massive amount of distrust, even hatred, of Tkach and company. Some posting E-mail seemed to be on the verge of mental breakdown over the changes in their church's belief system. Others have referred to Tkach as the Antichrist and his organization as "The New Coven Church" or "The Synagogue of Satan." And quite a few voiced outright hostility about "the Gang of Four" - the ones really running the WCG: Tkach Sr., Tkach Jr., Michael Feazell, and Greg Albrecht (or perhaps Ellen Escat).

With dozens of ministers resigning (see AR58), Tkach knew he had a problem months ago. But he did not realize how well organized his opposition really was. Tkach found that out in early April. He finally discovered that well over 100 disgruntled WCG ministers, representing many thousands of members, had been in constant contact with each other and that they did not want to continue participation in what they viewed as Tkach's "slide down the slippery slope."

The Rebels' Demands

"The rebels," as headquarters "New Covenant Christians" refer to them, wanted to make their position clear to the Tkach administration. To represent them, approximately 170 WCG elders chose three men: Dennis Luker, Bob Dick, and Jim Franks who soon became Judas, Brutus, and Cassius to the Tkach loyalists. On April 5, the rebel trio met for three hours with Church Administration director Joe Tkach Jr., assistant director Richard Rice, and Plain Truth editor Greg Albrecht. Tkach Sr. never made it to the meeting. He was rumored to be soaking in his Jacuzzi after a rough day of feeding his pet pigeons.

At the meeting, the three rebels presented individual letters, signed by 10 of the 14 original regional pastors. The letters requested that church members and ministers who could not in good conscience accept the church's dramatic changes in doctrine be allowed to worship separately without recrimination. The representatives of his highness, The Apostle, rejected the "outlandish demands." On April 11, Tkach Sr. (for some odd reason, writing in the sarcastic style of Joe Jr.) sent evangelist Luker a fax:

Dear Denny,

Regardless of how you wish to sugar-coat your efforts to divide the Church, division is still the name of the game you are playing. What you call so ironically a "peaceful separation without recrimination or disfellowshipping for those who desire to maintain our previous beliefs" is in fact a request for the Church to support your anti-Christian belief that anyone who does not keep the seventh-day Sabbath and the annual holydays is, in fact, not a true Christian. That belief is contrary to Scripture....

I respond to your "request" as did Jesus to Judas the traitor: "What you are about to do, do quickly."

Luker and his friends took Tkach's advice. With irreconcilable differences ending their relationship to Apostle Tkach, the ten regional pastors immediately announced they would meet April 23-26 to begin setting up a new church organization and that a week later all interested elders would have a general meeting in Indianapolis, Indiana.

Tkach: Send Money Quick!

Calling his critics "rebels like Korah," Apostle Tkach responded to the crisis just as his predecessor used to do, by lashing out (with love, of course) in a "Dear Brethren" letter. On April 17, he wrote to his subjects:

I am saddened to have to write you this important emergency letter to let you know that certain disfellowshipped former ministers are now forming their own church organization and have pulled out all stops in trying to disillusion and overthrow the faith of our brethren. I have to warn you that a few of these ministers want to disaffect as many members as they can in order to finance their efforts to divide the Body of Christ....

Paul wrote.... Christ is the end of the law.... We have now been informed that some of these men have been at work for months, secretly laying the ground work for their rebellion. We have also received information that certain ones would like to take control of Ambassador University from faithful University Board members.

Some of them have tried to convince members that headquarters is "doing away with God's law." Nothing could be further from the truth....

Those who want to make merchandise of you tell you that certain teachings of Mr. Armstrong are what you should cling to - specifically the teaching that the Sabbath and Holy Days are required for Christians.... the ministers who are trying to gain your affection want you to believe that the identifying sign of true Christians is Sabbath and Holy Day keeping. They want you to believe that people aren't true Christians unless they are keeping the Sabbath and the Holy Days. But that is not what Jesus and the apostles taught. They taught that the identifying sign of true Christians is faith in Christ (Galatians 2:16)....

How ironic that the letter of Jude condemns those who are dividing the Church, yet some use him as their authority for doing it. Some use every means of discrediting Church headquarters, resorting even to rumor, innuendo and lie to win you over to their side....

In congregations where the pastors have taught faithfully the focus on Jesus Christ that the Holy Spirit has led the Church to emphasize over the past nine years, there is little discontent and turmoil. But in congregations where pastors have avoided following headquarters' lead in preaching about the centrality of Jesus Christ to the gospel, the Church and our lives, there is turmoil. In certain cases, they have allowed, if not caused, the problem, and then blame headquarters and me for what amounts to their own failure to follow where Christ leads. We have now been told that a few of these men have been in quiet rebellion for years, and some have been planning to form their own churches for some time.... And now, some have planned a major meeting over the weekend of the last Holy Day of Unleavened Bread and the following weekend for all ministers who disagree with the Church to "make their plans."...

This should be the most exciting and positive time in the history of this Church, and I am saddened that it has to be marred by this rebellion. I know that Satan hates the truth....

Brethren, I must ask you to be especially generous with your offering on the last Holy Day of the Unleavened Bread festival.... I must tell you that we do really need these offerings, and especially at this time, when this rebellion has so negatively affected the Church's income. Please give prayerfully and generously....

The members did not give generously. Insiders say offerings for Unleavened Bread were disastrously low. The WCG's bleak financial status was made quite evident when the Los Angeles Times (5/12/95, p. B8) reported that the WCG had quietly auctioned off a trove of sterling silver purchased by the WCG's late founder. The Times article stated:

The high-quality silver, used by Armstrong during formal dinner parties for heads of state and other luminaries, was sold for an undisclosed price last month by Christie's auction house in New York, the Pasadena-based church confirmed.... Silver candelabra, wine buckets, platters, creamers, silverware and silver decorative items such as a miniature ship and horse were among the goods sold at the auction, said church spokesman Tom Lapacka.... He added that the church no longer entertains in Armstrong's lavish fashion.

Further sales of church assets are on the way. And insiders tell us that the church now has at least two possible buyers for the WCG's Pasadena real estate.

David Hulme Shocked by Changes

While the Tkach team was doing what it could to slow down the WCG's financial hemorrhaging, the over 100 ministers that sent the rebel trio to Pasadena were hard at work. Photocopiers, fax machines, and the Internet all came into high-volume use as the rebels spread the word that they were leaving. Photocopies of ministers' resignation letters started flying about the country like snowflakes in a blizzard.

Evangelist David Hulme's six-page resignation letter of mid-April was especially popular. Hulme, for a time the WCG's chief broadcaster and of late Ambassador Auditorium's entertainment director, rejected Tkach's "New Covenant position," calling the Apostle's "new truths" nothing but "old errors." Hulme now sees Tkach's writings and public statements as filled with overwhelming contradictions and inconsistencies. Hulme quoted from some Tkach sermons in which he distinctly stated that the law must be kept and other sermons in which Tkach stated the law does not need to be kept. Hulme also quoted from Tkach sermons in which the Pastor General attacked and ridiculed "rumormongers" who claimed the WCG was going to water down Armstrongite doctrines eventually - all accusations that have since proven completely true. Wrote Hulme:

This perhaps did not surprise those who know you well, because you have said that many of the recent changes have been in your mind since the 1970s. In fact you used these words to me in your office on February 8, 1995 and again more fully on April 13. On both occasions you said that Joe Tkach Jr. and Mike Fezell have simply picked up on your own longstanding ideas....

Then there is the issue of Sir Anthony Buzzard's publication The Law, the Sabbath and New Testament Christianity which has surfaced among us recently. According to Ron Kelly, its conclusions are fully supported by Mike Feazell and Greg Albrecht. Some of those conclusions include Sunday as the appropriate day of worship, and the observance of the Lord's Supper as frequently as desired. I understand that at the January '95 Regional Directors' Conference the participants were told that soon the Church would observe the New Testament Passover/Lord's Supper more than once a year. Then suddenly the announcement of the change was postponed until next year.

It can therefore be said that most of the rumors mentioned in your sermon of April 30, 1994 did have substance and have been confirmed by your own or your administration's statements. Time will tell whether the remaining rumors will find similar substantiation....

These concerned members and ministers are anxious to preserve the truth and way of life they have learned and to which they are committed. They cannot be categorized fairly as legalists or Judaizers. Furthermore they certainly are not willing to fall under the influence of Azusa Pacific University theologians, one of whom is reported to be writing "a new constitution" for the Worldwide Church of God, while others are said to be helping the church into the "Christian mainstream" by advising on doctrinal matters....

The most disturbing aspect of our recent conversation on the eve of Passover is that with some pride you stated that you had agreed with Richard Plache and Al Carozzo in the 1970s with regard to the place of the law in the Christian life. You said you agreed with them (and therefore disagreed with Herbert W. Armstrong) but felt that they were ahead of their time, and that nothing could be done. I remind you that Richard Plache was one of the prime movers in a 1975 attempt to overturn Sabbath observance in Britain. As a result he was put out of the church, along with Charles Hunting and David Ord, by Mr. Armstrong. If you agreed with these men as you claim, did you inform Mr. Armstrong of your radically different stance any time before his death? In a conversation with him in September 1985 he told me that he was considering you for the position of Deputy Pastor General. He specifically asked me if you would keep the church intact. I told him I believed you would continue his doctrinal emphasis. His concern was to select a potential successor who would MAINTAIN the church, keep it united, and continue its preparation for Christ's return. He thought "the work" was essentially done. The fact that he chose you on the basis of continuity of doctrine and practice when in fact you believed very differently, in my mind casts serious doubt whether he would have appointed you if he had known your beliefs. That you differed so much from your predecessor explains why almost every doctrinal and administrative change caused me to inform you that something was very wrong. It is only in the light of your comments about Richard Plache and Al Carozzo, however, that I have put it all together. Apparently you and I were not agreed in the first place. I thought you were upholding Mr. Armstrong, but it now appears you were not. By your own admission you were simply biding your time....

Effective Wednesday, April 19, 1995 I am resigning....

So that there will be no misunderstanding I am sending this document to twelve people known to me for their integrity and honesty. They will serve as witnesses to the content and intent of this memo....

In bidding Tkach adieu, Hulme was in effect acknowledging that he was a little slow in picking up on the fact that Tkach is a duplicitous self-server whose long-time agenda has been to transform the WCG into an ostensibly mainstream Protestant denomination. Had he been reading Ambassador Report he could have figured that out years ago.

Some within the Tkach camp, however, do not view Hulme as so innocent. One told AR, "On, come on! David isn't that dumb. He knew where we were heading all along. It was only after he saw that he would no longer be producing concerts at the Auditorium that he became so principled." Hulme attempts to project the nobility of the Victor Lazlo character in Casablanca. In reality, he is more like Claude Rains' police chief who, when forced to close down Rick's night club, exclaims, "I'm shocked! Shocked to find that gambling is going on in here!" - just as the croupier runs up with the chief's roulette winnings. Hulme's last production at Ambassador Auditorium, once known as "the House for God," took place on May 17. It was a concert by saxophonist Larry Elgart and his Manhattan Swing Orchestra.

Tkach: The Holy Ghost Made Me Do It!

On April 26, after talking to his lawyers, and only after discovering that Hulme's letter was being widely disseminated, Tkach finally responded to Hulme. But instead of simply walking two doors down to talk privately to Hulme, his old friend and neighbor, Tkach sent Hulme a formal letter:

It is with regret that I accept your resignation, and with sorrow that I read your false accusations and misrepresentations. It is further disappointing that you chose to share your letter of resignation with a dozen people who are, as you put it, known to you "for their integrity and honesty," but at least one of whom (if it was not you), allowed your misleading, if not distorted, perspective to be distributed around the world....

The more the Holy Spirit led us into truth, the more we could see needed to be changed. The Holy Spirit set the agenda, not me. In April of 1994, I had no idea that the Holy Spirit would lead me to see that we had been wrong in our understanding of the old and new covenants and the implications of that fact on our understanding of Sabbath and Holy Day observance, clean and unclean meat and triple tithing....

You have twisted and misrepresented my comment that the recent changes have "been in my mind" since the 1970s to mean that I understood, believed and embraced these things at that time and have kept that fact a secret ever since. That is not what I was conveying to you, and it surprises me that you took it that way....

Your assertion that ministers have been terminated under "questionable circumstances" is another false conclusion, as is your assertion that the Church's doctrinal position is publicly "in tatters." ... And your statements about Azusa Pacific University, including the falsehood that an Azusa Pacific University theologian is "writing a new constitution" for the Church, amount to little more than an irresponsible slam against that University and against our ministers and members who have attended there....

Tkach's letter ended with the usual claim of love for its target, even as Hulme's letter and subsequent comments were all supposedly done in the same gentle spirit. It's somehow reassuring to know that no matter how much WCG ministers appear to be beating the hell out of each other - it's all being done "out of love."

"The Uniteds"

Back to the rebels. The so-called ringleaders having met after Unleavened Bread, it was time for the big get-together in Indianapolis. According to the group's press releases which spewed forth via a state-of-the-art "faxback" system, there were approximately 312 individuals in attendance, of which 155 were church elders. The conference of elders went from April 30 through May 2 and produced a large number of important decisions:

It was decided that the new organization would be called The United Church of God-an International Association. A transition plan was adopted by the delegates. It was decided that a more permanent arrangement would be decided upon at another general conference scheduled for early December. The transition plan was approved by 98 percent of the delegates.

Apparently all elders ordained by the WCG were considered valid delegates and each in attendance had a vote. The delegates decided that once the transition period is completed, there would be an annual conference to elect board members, review an annual financial audit, ratify bylaws, and ratify doctrinal changes.

The new church has an interim board composed of nine members. Those elected to the board were Bob Dick, Jim Franks, Roy Holladay, Doug Horchak (Tkach's son-in-law), Denny Luker, Burk McNair, Ray Wooten, Victor Kubik, who will also serve as operational manager for ministerial services, and David Hulme who was also voted interim chairman of the board.

Among those nominated for the board, but not elected, were Wayne Dunlap, Roger Foster, David Havir, Bill Jacobs, Clyde Kilough, Dave Myers, Richard Pinelli, Jim Servidio, Randall Sliver, Guy Swenson, Richard Thompson, Lyle Welty, Dean Wilson, Ellis LaRavia, and Gerald Waterhouse. The vote was certified by Jim McMillion, CPA.

The conference agreed on a brief (actually, very brief) statement of beliefs which include a non-trinitarian view of God, the maintenance of the traditional Bible canon, and the retention of Sabbath and Holy Day keeping. While not mentioned in press releases, one UCG minister has privately informed us that tithing will, of course, be a key doctrine. Proposed festival sites for UCG's Feast of Tabernacles this fall include Asheville, North Carolina; Corpus Christi, Texas; Jekyll Island, Georgia; Redding, California; Tucson, Arizona; and unspecified foreign locations. In their press releases to date there was no mention of Israel Identity ideas, the role of prophecy, the calculations for Passover or Pentecost, divine healing, or divorce and remarriage. So while the new UCG may appear to be following in Herbert Armstrong's footsteps, many suspect there will eventually be digressions from what HWA taught. Certainly, church governance by vote of the church's elders is totally contrary to one of HWA's central tenets. Look for major doctrinal squabbles in the near future.

The new organization's temporary mailing address is: United Church of God, P.O. Box 661780, Arcadia, CA 91006-1780. Publications that reported on the new church included The Los Angeles Times (5/4/95, p. B1), the Pasadena Star-News (5/5/95, p. A3), and Christianity Today.

The Worldwide Church of Texas

According to an April 24 statement issued by former WCG minister and lawyer George Crow, the new, oxymoronic Worldwide Church of God of Texas (WCGT) held a conference in Houston on April 17-18. The conference was attended by 40 pastors, elders, and lay persons. The WCGT, whose board members are George Crow, son Bill Crow, and Hubert Caudill, has been in contact with the United group, but what the relationship of the two organizations is, or will become, is not yet clear. The original WCG, obviously not too happy over the new group, has brought a legal action in a Los Angeles court, seeking an injunction against the Texas group's use of the church name. The Texas group, which we understand already has congregations in a number of states, may be contacted by writing Worldwide Church of God of Texas, P.O. Box 30, Katy, TX 77492-0030. Its phone number is (713) 260- 9648.

Lucifer's Revolt

More than five years ago, when we first learned and reported that Tkach was planning to radically transform the WCG, one of his closest associates confided that "Joe means business. Even if it means losing half the members and ministers he is going to straighten out the church's doctrines." The estimate that the changes could cost him half the membership was a rather astute one. Right now, Tkach is saying that about one third of the ministry has left him in just the last few months.

Not surprisingly, Tkach compares the new revolt to the one led by Lucifer in which one third of Heaven's angels turned against God. But the so-called rebels see things quite differently. For instance, in his resignation letter, minister Mario Seiglie wrote:

I have honestly tried to show the brethren both sides of these doctrinal changes, the pros and the cons. They have had access to this material at our office as well as what has been sent to them. I have been going over this material with them so they can see it even-mindedly.

According to the Ministerial Manual and the Lecture for Deacons and Elders Outline #2 on God's Government which you presented us, in p. 7 it says, "God wants to see if we will submit to men (within His law) even though none are perfect." Under your direction that condition "within His law" was placed so that not under any circumstance are we to obey you, just as long as your instructions are "within God's laws." Under your guidance it said in p. 10, section C, "Going above the chain of Command" part 2: "An assistant or elder may go over his pastor's head - a. When the pastor intentionally teaches doctrinal error or heresy. For example, he says the Holy Days are nice but not commanded." So you see, these biblical principles have been clearly violated and its breach consists of heresy. I must be consistent. I cannot teach this heresy against God's laws....

Seiglie then went on to explain how he took a vote of his congregation and found that 98 percent wanted to continue keeping the law (holy days, etc.) as they had been taught and that his people wanted nothing to do with those who taught otherwise. In concluding, Seiglie wrote:

Already many "little ones" have left, never to follow any church. I don't want to be in any of your shoes when all these things come to a head. We love you and have nothing against you despite all the turmoil which has been caused, the sleepless nights, the wives' and children's anguish because of all of this. So now you know my position and can act accordingly.

Of course, Seiglie was disfellowshipped.

In many areas of the country, things have gotten a bit raucous in WCG circles. A few weeks ago, down in Big Sandy pro-Tkach minister Russell Duke was locked out of services on orders from a minister of another faction who had Tkach Jr. cut off a phone hookup and then monopolized the lectern with assistance from deacons who took over the control booth and sound system. From the church upheavals of 1979 many have learned, like guerrilla fighters in third world countries, that in a revolution gaining immediate control of the electronic media is essential for success. (Today, with the proliferation of photocopy, fax, and computer technology, the balance of power over men's minds seems to have shifted away from centralized power. This was something the leaders of Eastern Europe learned a few years ago, and something the Tkach group is in the process of learning now.)

In just the last few days we have heard of some congregations splitting in two with legal threats hurled back and forth by opposing ministers. There have been many instances of whole congregations leaving the Tkach fold en masse.

Executive Exodus Update

Right now it is very difficult to get a completely accurate list of just who has left the WCG, where they have gone, or where they are going. There are still a good number who, although planning to leave shortly, have not yet made the leap. Believe it or not, we have even heard of some ex-WCG ministers, long gone, who are now so keen on the WCG's new teachings, they are seriously considering rejoining the WCG.

Ministers who have left the Tkach WCG within the last six months include: Colin Adair, Dibar Apartian, John Bald, Daniel Barnes, Wilbur Berg, Maurice Benson, Karl Beyersdorfer, Alton Billingsley, Tony Bosserman, Charles Bryce, Steve Buchanan, David Burson, John Cafourek, Todd Carey, Jim Chapman, Herbert Cisneros, Tom Clark, Raymond Clore, Richard Crow, Randy D'Alessandro, Tom Damour, Howard Davis, George Delap, Roy Demarest, Bob Dick, Roy Dove, Richard Duncan, Richard Dunlap, Wayne Dunlap, John Elliot, Rob Elliot, Roger Foster, Jim Franks, Ken Geise, Bruce Gore, Lambert Greer, Larry Greider, Mark Gully, Arnold Hampton, Mike Hanisko, Vernon Hargrove, Dave Havir, Gene Hogberg, Roy Holladay, Doug Horchack, Don Hooser, Noel Hornor, David Hulme, Bill Jacobs, Bill Jahns, Greg Johnson, Bob Jones, Clyde Kilough, Mitch Knapp, Randy Kobernat, Saul Langarica, Steve LeBlanc, Floyd Lochner, Otto Lochner, Paul Luecke, Ken Martin, Burk McNair, Darris McNeely, Mark

Splinters Growing

With the WCG fragmenting, it is not surprising that many WCG offshoots are gaining members fleeing from Tkach.

Roderick Meredith's Global Church of God has picked up a number of WCG luminaries. In a March 24 letter to his co-workers, Meredith announced that new additions to his ministerial roster include Lambert Greer, Rand Millich, Raymond E. Clore, James Taylor, Daniel Barnes, Don Turk, Maurice Benson, and Dr. Floyd Lochner. Meredith also announced that his program The World Ahead will soon be on television. Mark Kellner reported in the April 24 issue of Christianity Today that Global now has 7,000 attending weekly services and took in $3.5 million in 1994. But while Meredith's group is holding its own, we have heard reports that some, unhappy with Meredith's autocratic management style, have recently defected to the new United group. Meredith also seems to have a growing credibility problem. One Wisconsin reader wrote us, "Meredith said that he does not want John Bald or Burk McNair in his group as they stayed in with Tkach which proves that they are preaching for filthy lucre. But what about Meredith and Ray McNair? They stayed in with Tkach until the Leona McNair lawsuit was settled."

Garner Ted Armstrong's Church of God, International continues to experience modest growth. Not long ago, GTA was in Australia where he had an evangelistic campaign. One of our Australian readers wrote:

GTA spoke in Brisbane last Saturday to about 375 people in the City Hall. As a former long-time WCG member it is hard to say what impression a member of the general public would have gained from the lecture. I went purely for the social occasion of seeing many people I had not seen for years, and I was not disappointed in the number of ex-members I saw there. I suspect GTA's purpose was to attract disaffected and confused WCG members to CGI. The time and place of CGI services were announced and everyone invited.

GTA ranged over the ten commandments, the Berlin Wall, the United States of Europe, his 42 years of broadcasting (repeatedly), his family, and only at the end took a slight swipe at church organizations that don't hold fast to the sabbath and unclean meats doctrines. One hour of him was quite enough for me.

Besides the major WCG offshoots (the ones headed by David Hulme, Garner Ted Armstrong, Roderick Meredith, Gerald Flurry, and William Dankenbring), we continue to hear of many congregations fleeing the Tkach church who are remaining independent of any national organization.

Packing For Petra

With the WCG and its spinoffs in extreme disarray, it is not surprising that some believe they are well into "the last days." What is surprising is how many still believe that when "the end" comes, they should be in "the place of safety" - Petra, in the desert of Jordan. In the March issue of his Countdown magazine, former Worldwider Alex Cain of England wrote:

Now is the time to start saving cash for Petra. We suggest that people make sure they have sufficient money to at least take a one way journey there. From the human viewpoint we suggest at least both ways so that if you decide you don't like it for any strange reason then you can at least opt out. Remember though it will be a different world that you come back to. We still believe it is Petra as this is the only spot that we know at present that would accommodate the last bit of hell on earth. By this we meant that in the last few minutes before Christ actually returns Satan will pelt the earth with the stars of heaven, rocks, etc. so that if it were possible no flesh would be saved. If people are in the deep holes of Petra they would clearly be safe.

Yeah, right.

MacGregor Dissects Worldwide

MacGregor Ministries is a Canada-based organization that monitors religious cults. Their April 1995 News & Views magazine contained an interview-format article about the WCG's latest changes. Although perhaps a bit naively pro-WCG, the article was generally fair and, at times, revealing. Notice these official statements from WCG spokesmen Joe Tkach Jr., Michael Feazell, and Greg Albrecht:

We have more than 741 ordained ministers who are in the full time ministry, [and] 1,035 other lay elders.... The church has no objections to our members fellowshiping with other Christians.... the Worldwide Church of God views tithing as a principle for Christians. It is not a law.... We believe that Jesus Christ rose from the grave in the same physical body in which he died [although glorified].... Because we have recognized past errors from the pulpit and in print, we fail to understand requests to "expose" Herbert W. Armstrong. We see no biblical mandate for Christians to "expose"... When Herbert W. Armstrong left the Church of God (Seventh Day) he established a ministry independent of his past associations. He did not actively evangelize members from the parent organization, but instead began to preach Christ to the world at large. While he made mistakes, he did not attempt to establish his ministry at the expense of the ministry that had trained and nurtured him.... It is not the tradition of the Worldwide Church of God to keep Christmas, but members may make up their own minds whether to participate or not....

MacGregor expressed some disappointment that Worldwide is not yet willing to label HWA a false prophet and may never do so. Most revealing, however, was the following exchange:

MM Question 17: Will the WCG offer medical and psychological help for members who were damaged by the doctrine/beliefs and regime in the past? Will there be counselling for broken families due to practices from the past?

WCG Reply: While the Worldwide Church of God sincerely regrets any and all erroneous teaching or administrative practice of the past, it cannot accept allegations that church teachings and practices are inherently responsible for personal dysfunctions. It is our belief that Christians should come to Christ for healing, rather than blaming other human beings as being the source and cause of their sin.

Translation: "We told you we were God's ministers. You believed and trusted us. We led you by the nose and you got burned for it. You gave us your money, you threw away years of your life, you may have lost friends, a career, a mate, or even a child as a result. But that was your sin. Don't come to us asking for anything. We defrauded you fair and square. Now, just believe in Jesus."

Is it any wonder that Tkach now wants everyone to believe in merciful grace, not vengeful law? And is it any wonder why so many ex-WCG members say they have lost confidence in all churches?

A copy of the April issue of MacGregor's News & Views may be had for $2.50 by writing to MacGregor Ministries, Box 294, Nelson, B.C. V1L 5P9, Canada; or in the U.S. at Box 591, Point Roberts, WA 98281.

Support Groups and Literature

We continue to get letters from WCG exiters requesting addresses of sabbatarian groups around the world. While many addresses can be found in back issues of AR, we do not maintain a comprehensive list of all sabbatarian churches. After all, there are hundreds of them. The best source of information on that subject is the new, updated edition of the Directory of Sabbath-Observing Groups published by the Bible Sabbath Association, Fairview, OK 73737; tel. (405) 227-3200.

John Robinson, the first editor of the WCG's Worldwide News, a former journalism instructor, and now a successful magazine publisher, has started a newspaper called In Transition. Robinson, who now worships with a United congregation, indicates that his newspaper is intended for those "who believe the Sabbath is different from other days of the week and who believe that the Holy Days are to be observed." In addition to articles about the new UCG, Robinson's first edition contained articles about Global, CGI, and the new WCGT. Interviewed by the Pasadena Star-News (5/19/95, p. 3), Robinson stated that in future issues he hopes to even include news about the Tkach WCG, which Robinson now designates as Worldwide Church of God of California. Tom Lapacka, a spokesman for that group, however, says there are no WCG plans to cooperate with the new venture. (So much for Tkach's ecumenical spirit.) As for other non-UCG church leaders, already some are saying their followers should not be reading the new publication. (Sounds familiar.) For subscription information, write to: In Transition, P.O. Box 450, Monroe, Indiana 46772.

I Think International, P.O. Box 1953, Bournemouth, BH8 OYQ, United Kingdom. Headed by Kerin P. Webb, this is a cult awareness organization with considerable knowledge of the WCG. Their "Issue No. 4" came out in April and is available in the U.K. for two British pounds (checks made payable to Kerin Webb) or "four U.S. dollar bills."

On a related matter: We regularly get asked whether any former WCG members are in the process of taking legal action against Worldwide. We are often hesitant to encourage trust in the legal system, at least as regards getting justice for abuse by the WCG. Nevertheless, even with all its lawyers and money, the WCG is not an impregnable fortress. Two who believe they can make a difference against the WCG legally are Peter and Annie Hovey of Lymington, Hampshire in England. They have had extensive exchanges of pointed correspondence with the Charities Commission of that country, Members of Parliament, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the media, lawyers, and stonewalling executives of the WCG. Any attempt to publish all their animated correspondence would, unfortunately, require a large book. Nevertheless, anyone who is contemplating a similar campaign might do well to write them for their advice. The Hoveys may be contacted by writing c/o I Think International.

Another support group for former members of the WCG and its spinoffs is run by Trevor Smith, P.O. Box 7357, Kilmarnock, Ayrshire, Scotland KA32 LF.

In Australia, former WCG member Thelma Smith is now part of a Sabbath Association that publishes a fortnightly newsletter on the Bible and world events. Her address is 35 Didsbury St., East Brisbane, Qld., Australia.

A small group of former cult members have started a new organization called Spiritual Progressions Advancement Network (SPAN). In their December 1994 "Monograph # A1" they published an article titled "How I Recuperated From 21 Years in the WCG." The article by former WCG member P. E. Nelson is unique in that the author discusses esoteric psychological techniques such as hypnosis and dowsing which played a part in her recuperation. The six-page article is available for $3. A longer, 28-page paper by Ms. Nelson titled "Religion versus Spirituality: Playing the God-Game" is available for $8 from SPAN, Box 137, Ceres, New York 14721-0137.

The April issue of The New Millennium had two articles relevant to the current WCG situation. One asked, "Where is the true church?" and the other asked, "Is it law or is it grace?" Write to Association for Christian Development, 4449 S. Star Lake Rd., Auburn, WA 98001.

With the "law versus grace" topic so heated in WCG circles, and with so much confusion over the subject, let us recommend two articles many, including AR's editor, found helpful in the past: "The Address on the Envelope" and "When Did the Church Begin?" by the late A. E. Knoch. The two articles are contained in a booklet available for only $2 from: Concordant Publishing Co., 15570 Knochaven Rd., Santa Clarita, CA 91350; (805) 252-2112.

AR has mentioned the writings of Dr. Ernest Martin many times over the years and we continue to receive letters from WCG exiters saying they are being greatly helped by his writings. Martin recently published a 185-page textbook titled: The Biblical Manual "for members and ex-members of the Worldwide Church of God, Seventh-day Adventist Church, Church of God International, Philadelphia Church of God, Global Church of God, and all other 'true' or 'remnant' Churches of God." Some of Martin's ideas are controversial, but he does offer many valuable theological insights. Furthermore, as a former Chairman of the Department of Theology at Ambassador College, he has extensive knowledge of Armstrongism and Tkachism. We understand his new manual is available for $19.95 (plus shipping: $3 U.S., $6 foreign). The manual is available from: Associates for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. Box 24000, Portland, OR 97225; tel. (503) 292-4352.

Finally, one of our Australian readers asked that we mention two addresses for the Christian Biblical Church of God in that part of the world: P.O. Box 30, Glenhuntly 3163, Australia; and P.O. Box 305, Albany 1331, New Zealand. We wish we had permission to identify the reader because he has created something we found rather amazing: a year by year history of the Worldwide Church of God, in considerable fine-print detail precisely listing, as in a horizontal flow chart, all important events, all predecessor groups, and all major and many minor WCG offshoots from 1900 to the present. It's all there on one long piece of drafting paper-over eight feet long! Hopefully, one day it will be available commercially. It would make a great conversation piece for a prayer closet or some other small room.

"Mr. Pasadena" Passes Away

Lathrop (Lay) Leishman passed away on April 27. Affectionately referred to by Pasadena-area residents as "Mr. Pasadena" and "Mr. Rose Bowl," Leishman was for decades one of Pasadena's most influential businessmen and civic boosters. Leishman was a past president of the Tournament of Roses and was credited with persuading the Wrigley chewing gum family to donate their Orange Grove mansion to the Tournament organization half a century ago.

In an obituary that appeared April 29, the Los Angeles Times stated:

Born on Terminal Island, he moved with his family to Pasadena as an infant. He was educated at Oregon State University. Leishman operated the Crown City Lumber and Mill Co., founded by his father, until it was sold to Ambassador College in the 1960s. Afterward, he and his sons created the Leishman Management Co., dealing in real estate. Leishman served as president of the Pasadena Junior Chamber of Commerce, the Pasadena Rotary Club and the Southern California Retail Lumber Dealers Assn. He was a director of the Pasadena Chamber of Commerce, a trustee of the Pasadena Presbyterian Church and on the board of the local Salvation Army. He was also a member of Al Malaikah Shrine Temple and was a 32nd-degree Mason who held York and Scottish Rite degrees.

The Leishman Management Co. has its main office across the street from the WCG's Imperial School. And the old "Leishman Building," where Joseph Tkach had his office in the early seventies, is directly across from the WCG Hall of Administration on Green Street. Not surprisingly, many Worldwide executives recall Lay Leishman with a certain fondness. As one Ambassador alumnus said, "Mr. Leishman was always a great friend of Worldwide. He will be missed by the church."

Letters

Editor: Let me remind everyone that letters excerpted in this section do not necessarily reflect my own views. In fact, a very large number do not. In deciding which letters to include, I usually select better-written or more colorful letters that reflect a cross section of readers' viewpoints. And today, most certainly, there are many viewpoints about virtually every subject. As for attribution, I prefer to run comments with the writer's byline. However, that is not always possible because writers often explicitly or implicitly (as when the writer is a current WCG member) indicate they want anonymity.

I have been reading my father's Ambassador Report and find that I must have been in the wrong church. I am a member of what used to be called the Worldwide Church of God. I just think Joseph W. Tkach has gone too far this time.

-Tennessee

I left the WCG cult in 1992 after four years of tithing and observance to the old covenant as commanded by the ministry. Mr. Tkach now proposes that such observances were the result of "ignorance and stupidity." OK, I fully accept the charge. But what must also be taken into consideration is the fact that if I had not been a victim of my own "ignorance and stupidity," I would not have been influenced by the Plain Truth magazine into joining the WCG in the first place.

Furthermore, had not my "ignorance and stupidity" been sustained and prolonged by the teachings of his ministers, I would have departed the church much sooner than I did. Also, had not my fellow brethren been suffering from "ignorance and stupidity," they too would have thrown in the towel.

So where would that leave Joseph W. Tkach? The only reason that there was a sizable congregation when he took over is that the members held fast to the doctrines which he now believes to be the result of "ignorance and stupidity." Doctrines, I might add, which he himself was paid very handsomely to teach.

It is also worth asking, how many members would Tkach have been prepared to disfellowship during his earlier ministry had they not been fully conforming to the doctrines to which he now ascribes two strongly pronounced and deeply insulting words?

-Richard Heath
West Yorkshire, England

On his video Tkach said he had argued many times with HWA over the church's "new truths." I find that very hard to believe. Years ago, when Ernest Martin merely mentioned some of the same ideas to HWA, HWA disfellowshipped him immediately. And HWA would summarily disfellowship anyone who entertained such thoughts, much less argued with him.

- "No State"

My husband who was in the WCG for over twenty years has left and gone to Global. As far as I'm concerned he left because he wants to be under the law and have Mr. Meredith tell him what to do. In other words, work for his salvation.

The changes are great. At least Jesus Christ is mentioned. Instead of legalism we have freedom and a lot of love.... Under HWA the New Covenant was never mentioned. All that has changed. It's in the Bible. Read Galatians. I hear Global already has an offshoot. It's all for Power and brainwashing the people. Mr. Tkach is not the only one to be criticized. Let's show some love for our fellow humans.

-Canada

The states will now be flooded with churches and all believing what they want to. God, help them all. Members that have left in Vancouver have been attending the Four Square Church in their area.

-Oregon

Some up here have left to join a group called "The Children of Yahu." Do you know anything about them?

-Wisconsin

Editor: All we know is that "The Children of Yahu" is a sacred name group based in Albany, Minnesota.

Here in Puerto Rico the church split when minister Pablo Gonzalez was put out. The majority went with him. Of 150 people, only 36 stayed with Tkach.

-Puerto Rico

My WCG husband just heard about the United Church men revolting against Mr. Tkach. It didn't phase him one bit. He said "the great falling away was prophesied in the Bible." I don't think it ever occurred to him that it might be Mr. Tkach who has fallen away.

-Illinois

Editor: Not all the mail we receive is negative regarding Tkach and the new direction taken by the WCG. A fair number of people believe that Tkach has improved the WCG and we know that some who left years ago have recently returned to the WCG.

We understand how some cannot understand what the Holy Spirit is doing in the church, but He is there! Once the spirit-filled learn of Mr. Tkach's spirit-filled ministry to the oppressed, many shall return and rejoice. We left in the 70s to join the Assemblies of God. Now with all the positive changes made by Mr. Tkach, we have decided to again fellowship with our old WCG friends. Praise the Lord!

-Louisiana

Stop sending my parents your reports. Us teenagers like the way the church is now. Did you know that the new Miss Bahamas and the new Arizona Miss TEEN are both in the church?!! It was in the Worldwide News. I think it's way cool. But you are not.

-Wisconsin

In saying that world news is unimportant, Tkach is denying that prophesied end-time events are in process of occurring now! Why would he do this? I suspect he doesn't want his sheep to realize that we are in what HWA called the "gun lap" to the concluding World Scenario of Geopolitical Events. Why does he want to hide this information? I think he wants to get out with the Church's money while he can before the collapse of America and the world financial system.... I suspect he is creating for himself the funding for his own personal Place of Safety....

For your information, John, there are a number of people channeling messages from extraterrestrials from the Pleiades and from Sirius who are providing information on what the near future will bring us in the remainder of 1995 and 1996. The picture does not look bright for the continuance of America as a nation. The earth changes that are predicted to occur in America as a result of Earth's moving into the Photon Belt will take down the insurance industry and our communications systems and then the federal government. Europe will not escape unscathed either.

A local psychic with whom I have been in contact says that the volcanic eruptions will be so bad that so much ash will fall, beginning in late 1995 and 1996, that vehicular transportation will be next to impossible. The ash will clog all air filter systems in cars, trains, and planes, etc. Gordon-Michael Scallion is predicting from his visions that states will secede from the Union because they will refuse to send their funds to pay for the earthquake, storm, and volcanic damage in other areas of the country; they will seek to preserve their own territories and financial base. State governments will also ultimately collapse and people will be left in survival communities. This is the scenario for the remainder of the decade.

A lot of people will be seriously shaken when the WCG closes down and Tkach & Co. mysteriously disappear.

-New York

In Mr. Tkach's January 7 video sermon he said, "If someone can eat lobster, God bless 'em." Some of my friends in the church are now eating all the shrimp and pork they can get their hands on. I thought the laws about unclean meats were really health laws. What is your advice?

-Maine

Editor: Please don't ask us to turn AR into a dietary journal. We have seen articles by respected scholars who have stated that the biblical kosher laws were not originally thought of as health related. Apparently, the argument that those laws were based on health considerations was first made by Rabbi Maimonides (1135-1204). Nevertheless, whatever the actual basis for the laws, there are many who, while not feeling constrained by Old Covenant considerations, still believe they are better off avoiding pork and shell fish.

You are very right that the WCG has been disintegrating severely. But I think you have not noticed how the people themselves, including a large number who have left, are disintegrating mentally. We left about two years ago and we have stayed in contact with many who we knew in the church. However, my wife and I are disturbed about something we have noticed about those who are leaving the WCG now. Too many are getting caught up in movements that are even crazier than the WCG.

We know some who have gotten involved in the occult. Others, it seems, are rabid racists. Some have become anti-government fanatics. We know a few who are almost anarchists. They get funny ideas about the Constitution, like only their own interpretation counts or that it doesn't apply to them. Some have started quoting neo-Nazi literature as though it was the gospel truth. One told us he has gotten rid of his driver's license because it is a symbol of "the beast." One who believes in the seed teaching [the serpent seed doctrine - ed.] keeps a fifty caliber machine gun in his attic. A few are so paranoid they have joined paramilitary groups, the kind of thing you'd expect in Northern Ireland. One of our friends used to go on militia "maneuvers" every other weekend - until his wife said once more and she'd leave. Another hands out booklets urging readers not to pay taxes, all the while being a member of "The Patriots." I didn't think too much about it until the recent bombing in Oklahoma City. Some newspapers reported that the suspects they arrested were connected to private militia groups and one article I saw even mentioned "The Patriots" by name. Do you know if any of the suspects arrested in connection with the Oklahoma bombing were ever members of the WCG?

Editor: No.

Thank you for turning me on to "the Flush" - Prophecy Flash!, that is. You seem to go for it. I do too, but only because it is the most radical of all the wacky ex-WCG stuff around. I love reading the letters people send in to Dankenbring.

In the March issue someone from Malaysia gave the proof we were all waiting for as to why Dank is Elijah. You see, Dank's zip code and his post office box number each add up to 13. And 13, according to Dank, is a good number. Mr. Armstrong, of course, taught that 13 was the number of rebellion and associated it with the rebellious 13 colonies of Manasseh. But not Dank. He thinks it's "Ephraim's lucky number" and he is Ephraim's lucky prophet. Wild stuff!

One letter, however, scared me when I went back and read it. I first read it about a week before the terrible tragedy in Oklahoma. Then when that awful event took place I remembered it and it made me concerned. Here is what one of his readers from Oklahoma wrote:

Well, things are being seen here in this area that should wake us up some. The TV news here have shown and talked about the Oklahoma Militia getting started here (already has formed). Also on Sunday, Feb. 5 I was near Muskogee, Oklahoma, and for the first time, I have seen some of the black, unmarked helicopters I have read about and heard of for the past few months. I saw two. But people just scoff and say they are only National Guard copiers.

Considering what happened in that writer's state only a few weeks after his letter was published, I found this comment somehow disquieting. Can you give me some idea what all of this is about? I must have missed some new truth about militiamen or helicopters or something.

-Ohio

Editor: According to the Los Angeles Times (4/22/95, in a very interesting front-page article titled "Facing the Fear of an Enemy Within"), there are a significant number of Americans who are convinced that the U.S. government has black, unmarked helicopters monitoring Bible-believing Christians in preparation for their roundup and internment in concentration camps. Apparently this fear has spurred many to arm themselves with assault weapons and to join paramilitary groups.

Undoubtedly, the Waco and Ruby Ridge tragedies have played a part in making this fear rather widespread. But with the year 2000 approaching and the return of Christ being anticipated by millions, there are also widespread fears that "the beast" of Revelation is right around the corner. As we have reported in past issues, there are some former and current Worldwidars who believe that the United States is "the beast power." When Ronald Wilson Reagan was president, we knew some who were convinced that he was "the beast" because each of his three names has six letters. Later, some thought that George Bush was "the beast" because one of his speech writers came up with the catchy phrase "New World Order." Now, some - including a fair number of current and former Worldwidars - are convinced that President Clinton is "the beast" and that black helicopters are coming to take them away.

In AR57 and AR58 you published seven options for the fulfillment of the endtime "Beast" of Revelation. I would like to suggest an additional scenario for the fulfillment of this prophecy. Rev. 13:1-7 states this final beast will have "seven heads and ten horns," one of its seven heads will recover from a "deadly wound" which will attract worldwide "wonder," and it will have authority "over all kindreds, tongues and nations."

The United Nations is a worldwide organization which is on the verge of satisfying all the above criteria. In an article in the Los Angeles Times (reprinted 11/10/94 in the Minneapolis Star-Tribune) Stanley Meisler reported that the U.N. Security Council will soon have seven "permanent members" and ten "temporary members." When Germany and Japan are added as permanent members," there will be "seven heads" who possess the most power in the United Nations. Only the "seven heads" (USA, UK, France, China, Russia, Germany, and Japan) will possess veto power on the Security Council. The "ten horns" will be the ten seats which rotate among various nations within the U.N. These "ten horns" do have a vote on all important U.N. matters, but no veto power. The seven heads and ten horns of Revelation's prophecy constitute a total of seventeen entities working together in a global power structure. The seven permanent and ten temporary nations on the U.N. Security Council constitute a group of seventeen nations heading a global power structure in our modern world.

Together, these seventeen nations can implement the war-making power of the U.N., and Rev. 13:4 prophesies the "seven heads and ten horns" will control a war-making entity. Both the Korean and the Persian Gulf Wars were technically U.N.-authorized wars, although the USA provided the majority of the armed forces in both wars. The increased subordination of the NATO command structure to the U.N. in Bosnia, and the willingness of the Bush and Clinton administrations to subordinate U.S. troops to U.N. commanders in Haiti, Somalia, etc. also fulfills this prophecy.

What about the "head with the deadly wound which was healed"? If Germany joins the Security Council, it would fulfill this part of the prophecy. Germany was truly "severed in two" at the end of WWII, and being "cut in half" is generally fatal for any kind of entity. When Germany was suddenly and unexpectedly reunited as a nation in 1991, the "world wondered" as TV cameras riveted their attention on East and West Germans celebrating atop the Berlin Wall and the German reunification dominated world news for months. Germany is reasserting itself economically and politically in the world as it has now almost completely recovered from its "deadly wound."

The membership of the U.N. is indeed from "all kindreds, tongues and nations," and its host of global agencies (UNESCO, WHO, World Court, etc.) are asserting more and more political control over the nations. The GATT treaty will complement the U.N.'s globalist mission as it has created a new and powerful "World Trade Organization" which will accelerate the economic integration of the world's nations.

Current efforts also exist to give the U.N. its own standing army, spy satellites, and the authority to levy a tax on all nations. If such efforts are successful, and Germany and Japan join the Security Council, I believe the identity of "the Beast" of Revelation will be clear for all to see.

Editor: Mr. Collins recently resigned as a board member of the Association for Christian Development. He is the author of a book on Israel Identity theory.

For your consideration: Look at the GATT Shield.... It looks like 10 toes up - the 10 regions, the 10 NATIONS of Revelation that will turn on the "Whore Religion" and destroy her.

-Don Samples, Louisiana
WCG minister (resigned 1977)

Be "the beast" whom he will. What about "the image of the beast"? May I suggest that television is an excellent candidate? Television meets every qualification listed in Rev. 13:15. Television has electronic life image, it projects an image, it speaks, and it commands worship (addiction) from its viewers.

I am really worried about my [relative]. All the years he was in Worldwide he was a fanatic about law and order. Once Tkach started changing doctrines he started reading Gerald Flurry's literature and then told me he thought Tkach was the Antichrist. Now he is into something else. He has become a follower of some fat lady who has called for an armed march on Washington to arrest all the members of Congress. I wonder if that nut Flurry is behind it.

-Ohio

Editor: No, I don't think Flurry is involved in that. I believe your relative is a devotee of attorney Linda Thompson, an outspoken critic of the federal government. She was mentioned in Newsweek (5/1/95), in "Beyond the Fringe," a sidebar to the article "The View From the Far Right." That magazine claims that Ms. Thompson is one of those worried about government helicopters.

By the way, does anybody really believe Tkach is smart enough to be the Antichrist?

A Michigan friend told me about the Philadelphia Church of God's internal problems. He said he learned about ministers disfellowshipping ministers and Mr. Flurry getting rid of rebels. Can you fill me in on this?

-New York

Editor: We've heard the same thing. But Flurry's Oklahoma organization is secretive to the point of paranoia and getting the details from them is virtually impossible. However, a couple of interesting bits of data about the former WCG minister: Flurry apparently likes some of the ideas of Dr. Ernest Martin. In the April issue of his Trumpet, he ran an article which plagiarizes many of the discoveries made by Martin regarding the Bible. And, for reasons we cannot fathom, Flurry seems to be trying to recruit U.S. military people. He has been running ads in Stars and Stripes, the armed services newspaper.

I've come across a few in my travels who feel the USA is the end-time Babylon. One former Worldwider... of Washington feels we are to go out to meet the Bridegroom at a certain location: along the Zambezi River in South Africa!

- "No State"

Editor: Huh?

In your last "Letters" section you gave the address for the anti-Limbaugh newsletter Flush Rush Quarterly. In the interest of fairness, how about printing the address of The Limbaugh Letter (P.O. Box 420093, Palm Coast, FL 32144-0093)? On the subject of politics, I disagree with your [sic] definition of "conservative" in AR56. If conservatives only cared about people with "privilege and power," why would anyone in the middle class be a conservative? I feel the conservative movement is about freedom because economic freedom is just as important as social or political freedom. Anyone who has read Adam Smith's Wealth of Nations understands that the most fair economic system mankind can devise is capitalism, not the watered down socialism that most modern liberals advocate....

On a different subject, why do you give so much space to conspiracy theories? I've found most of those conspiracy theories to be borderline racist (i.e., anti-Jewish). I believe these racist theories to be a slippery slope to Nazism.

Finally, way back in AR51, one of your readers mentioned Afro-Israelism. First, let me state that I am a white male. Yet, after reading The Black Biblical Heritage by John Johnson and a similar article in Ebony magazine, I find this viewpoint to be quite logical. Perhaps my marriage to a black woman influences my opinion. But The Black Biblical Heritage has an extensive bibliography and seems to be well documented. Do you know of any books opposed to this viewpoint?

-Kentucky

Editor: Yes, virtually every other book we have ever seen on the subject.

On April 19, 1993, I happened to be in a barbershop in Potomac, Maryland when the Waco compound was burning on live TV in front of us. I said out loud, "This is a sad day for America." The barber said, "They're a bunch of kooks who asked for it!" The rest of the barbershop patrons agreed with him, not me.

Knowing the man's razor was near my throat at the time, all I managed to mutter in response was, "What about the children? Did they deserve it too?" He said, "They're probably all Koresh bastards. He shouldn't have whored around with so many women." Another said, "They just had the bad luck to be born into the wrong families. It happens all the time." So I seethed in silence.

Can you imagine being in a barbershop on April 19, 1995, and hearing folks say, "They're just a bunch of federal employees. They deserve it." Or, "The kids were just born into the wrong family"? In the case of Waco, the few survivors of that holocaust were put on trial and sentenced to 10-40 years....

Every story of a family broken up in Oklahoma City reminds me: Where were the stories of families broken up in Waco? Who interviewed the grieving parents there? Were religious "cultists" somehow less than human, deserving of nerve gas, asphyxiation in underground bunkers, or long prison sentences afterward?

My point is that tyranny is possible because we the people (the barbershop patrons) let it pass, and then we the people want to avenge the avengers later on.

The first horseman of the Book of Revelation does not have to mean international warfare. To me it now seems to describe statism, or "localized tyranny." He "conquers and goes forth to conquer" can be localized aggression by a domestic police state.

Having written the Four Horsemen doctrinal book for the WCG (in late 1972), I have entertained several theories on the identity of the riders. Based on history and reality in this century, I have come to the tentative conclusion that the allegory links natural cause-and-effect factors, leading naturally from one to the other. The second horseman is the nexus, "taking peace from the earth." That, obviously, is war. But then what is "going forth to conquer" (the first Horse)? In this century alone, several despotic governments have taken the lives of more than 100 million of their own citizens, not in war, but in Stalin's purges, Mao's Cultural Revolution, Hitler's Third Reich, Pol Pot's Killing Fields, etc. Former Christians love to mock the Dark Ages or the Inquisition, but they were picnics (10,000 dead here and there) compared to the true Darker Ages under this century's atheist killers.

National police states (Horse #1) often lead to foreign wars (#2), leading very often to famines (#3), causing malnutrition, hence disease (#4). There is a natural link from one to the next. This doesn't involve biblical exegesis as much as common sense.

I was a WCG member for many years. Looking back, I think what bothers me the most about that experience is a set of basic attitudes it instilled that are still a part of me. Somewhat frightening is the fact that until recently I hardly realized those attitudes came from the WCG. Those attitudes include an unconscious disrespect for authority and for law - what boils down to an almost criminal attitude toward the government. I realize now that the WCG subtly planted these beliefs into all of us because they wanted no competition for loyalty. Somehow patriotism was viewed as a threat to the WCG, maybe because it threatened the minister's complete power over their people. After all, it was us, "The Church," against them, "The World." At any rate, I still see this attitude in many WCG members and ex-members and I am sure they don't even realize where the attitude originated. I also think it's the reason so many are attracted to fringe groups.

The Oklahoma bombing has shown what a hideous turn this type of thinking can take. As a result of this incident, I hope Worldwidars and ex-Worldwidars will look more closely at why they are so often anti-government and what being anti-government means to them. After all, we Americans all live in this country. This is our home. Do we want it to be more of an armed camp than it already is? Another Beirut? Another Bosnia? Or do we want to try to make changes in ways that make sense - through free speech, through petitioning our elected representatives, and through voting? Perhaps it is time that ex-Worldwidiers become a part of this country and realize that the roads we drive on, the bridges we cross, the many health and safety services we have, the parks where our children play, the libraries where we study, and the relative peace we enjoy in this country come about because of our government and because of our laws.

-Washington

Editor: I'm not sure we should tie HWA to everything that is going on in America today. After all, there were the Whiskey Insurrection rebels, John Brown's militiamen, militant secessionists, vigilantes, and anarchist bombers long before HWA began preaching. But you may be right that many former Worldwidiers have a distrust of government so intense that they get labeled as societal fringeers. Could it be that some are overreacting to the old "government from the top down" WCG? I'm not sure. It has been pointed out that those leaving Worldwide more often than not either join no group or join churches and political movements that are outside of the "mainstream." Some are by nature independent and refuse to be slavish followers of the herd. For others it may be that the more fringe the group, the more its members can claim that they are not part of this world," but are part of a special "elect." In fact, this phenomenon may have been a major reason why the number of members leaving the WCG has continued to increase the more Tkach has brought the WCG into "orthodox Christianity."

I gave your last AR to my wife to read while she had a $95 check already made out to WCG for tithes. I said, "You should read this before you mail that letter." She didn't say anything, but read the entire report. She still didn't say anything. Her tithes check will be mailed today. Nothing seems to phase a person who is brain-washed.

-"No State"

From my viewpoint, the changes in the WCG are God-ordained and He is ruling mercifully and sovereignly over all. In time to come, I believe there will be many testimonials from grateful members about this time and the overflow of God's grace to them.

-California

There is one minister who told us that he was on retirement and getting his retirement pay from WCG. He said he knew that if he would make the decision to stay with the [old] truths he could not live with the new teachings, but to leave [the WCG] would cost him his retirement pay. He did leave and his retirement pay stopped. Being honest with the word of God and seeking to continue in the faith once delivered to the saints, he is now getting pay from Global at less than what his retirement was. But he is content now because he has the liberty to preach the doctrines he was taught and came to believe.

I ask you, how much bargaining power, as you suggest, does Worldwide have to keep its ministers when people are not tithing anymore as they did before? After all, isn't Mr.

Tkach trying to sell off church property just to stay afloat, while all the while telling his constituents that they don't have to tithe? Mr. Tkach had to be very naive to think that his new teaching wouldn't adversely affect his income.

-Minnesota

Editor: You are very correct that because WCG income has plummeted in the last few months, much of the bargaining power Tkach once possessed has evaporated. As for whether or not he was as naive as it seems, time will tell.

I had been a member of the WCG for about ten years but quit in 1975 for personal reasons. I had always had an emptiness and decided to go back. But after reading their publication God Is... I realized what they are teaching is not what I had learned from the Bible. Now I hear all sorts of strange doctrines are being followed. Actually they aren't so strange. I heard them before in the Lutheran Church.

-Minnesota

Regarding religious organizations. Beware. There may be one or two around that will help rather than do you harm. A few things to look for: 1. Do the "leaders" have real jobs where they earn their own income as Paul did? (Read carefully Acts 20:17-38, especially verses 30-35.) 2. Never allow yourself to fall into a position in which you do not have full authority to. place your "leaders" on trial for things like arrogance and corruption. The church at Ephesus was praised for doing just that (Rev. 2:2). 3. Be like the Bereans who searched the scriptures daily (Acts 17:10,11). 4. Take Paul's admonition to "prove all things, hold fast to that which is good" (I Thes. 5:21). There is much more, but the above should give an idea how to remain stable and how to endure to the end. Above all, do not place your salvation in the hands of ANYONE ELSE beside yourself. It is your responsibility to work out your own salvation with fear and trembling (Phil. 2:12).

Becoming involved with the WCG was the worst mistake I ever made. I sent a letter to Joe Tkach Jr. in October, 1993 asking that my name be removed from membership and that my tithes be returned. After not hearing from them for two months, I contacted the Louisiana Department of Justice. Ralph Helge quickly responded to them. Mr. Helge said that it was not true that the church ignored my letter to Joe Jr. He sent them a copy of the letter which. he had supposedly sent me a month after my letter to Joe Jr. The Louisiana Department of Justice then provided me with a copy of that letter which, by the way, was addressed to the apartment I lived in nine years ago while a college student. If Mr. Helge really had sent that letter, the Post Office would have informed him that the letter was undeliverable: first, because I had moved, and second, because my old apartment building was closed and vacant!

It recently occurred to me that I've given the WCG thousands of dollars and only about thirty to AR in the last two years. Yet you folks have done more with the little you've been given than the WCG did with the billions they've spent over the past five or six decades....

I owe you and the other AR contributors a large debt of gratitude. By late 1992 I'd developed several doctrinal disagreements with the WCG but still wanted to remain a member. About that time a friend lent me copies of every issue of AR which I finally had the courage to read. I was left shocked, enraged, and liberated from my blindness. Especially infuriating was the information on HWA's sexual abuse of his daughter Dorothy between 1933 and 1943 (AR27). Initially I doubted it, but an inquiry of Mr. Gary Antion confirmed the awful truth and it prompted me to send a letter to 35-40 members who I knew personally. They received them on April 19, 1993 as the Branch Davidian compound burned on TV. But few of them were ever opened because the local ministry (Ray Meyer and Warren Heaton) ordered an emergency hotline message to all members saying I was disfellowshipped and commanding them not to open any mail from me. Most of the letters were returned unopened.

The following Saturday I was "marked" from the pulpit and called a liar (even though Meyer, days before, had admitted he knew about Armstrong and his daughter). My old church friends and acquaintances were gone. The few who read the letter reacted with a "so what?" response and couldn't believe I would consider this significant in any way. A decade of incest and hypocrisy had no impact on HWA's credibility or his "apostleship." One of those people was Victor Kubik who said he was amazed that I would be concerned about this "blip of history," as he put it.

Like you, I endured accusations of slander and malicious gossip. The truth isn't for everyone. But for those of us who appreciate it, it is a gift from God. Thank you for helping me end my idolatry and grow closer than ever to God and His truth.

Do you remember how not many years ago Worldwidiers were warned not to study the book of Galatians without a Worldwide minister present? Now, my wife tells me, in Worldwide the book of Galatians is the most often quoted and most studied book of the Bible. However, members here are now being told not to read the book of Revelation!

-Georgia

You folks do a pretty good job reporting, but you missed a few stories that appeared in the Worldwide News: It's now okay to call ministers "reverend" (12/27/94, p. 5). In Australia, some WCG ministers are teaching the Tkach religion in public schools; their government allows this (5/31/94, p. 4). Finally, way back in 1993 the WN stated, "We cannot adopt the extreme neo-Creationist position - that everything came into existence 6,000 years ago" (5/11/93, p. 7). Less than one year later they wrote that on the evolution theory the church was taking the "middle path" (2/1/94, p. 4). Now the church does not publish articles attacking evolutionists at all.

-Pennsylvania

I heard that the WCG was getting a new name so I went to the library and read all the Los Angeles business newspapers looking for an announcement. All I could find was a legal notice in the March 1 Daily Commerce. A new California corporation was formed called "Gangsters for Christ." Is that the new name?

-California

Editor: No, that is a separate organization.

A friend of mine who works at HQ Pasadena recently told me of some very strange goings on. He and a co-worker were walking on campus when they were overwhelmed by a very strong incense-like odor that seemed to pervade the whole WCG property. Because of certain pre-conversion experiences, my friend at first thought the smell was from giant quantities of marijuana being burned. Out of curiosity the two men sniffed the air and followed their noses. They finally came to a garage located near the old Grove Terrace gardeners' offices, not far from Tkach's new residence. There they noticed some people removing a large quantity of ashes from the area.

They wondered what was going on. Was someone sacrificing pigeons perhaps? No. It was just Dr. Ha. (That's how it's pronounced, but I think it's spelled "Hog," and he is not Dr. Hoeh, by the way.) It seems the latest health guru Tkach has brought on board is an Oriental, non-member "healer" who, although not a licensed M.D., is at HQ performing what he calls "Aromatherapy."

-California

Editor: What a relief. For a moment I thought something weird might be going on there.

Incidentally, speaking of health gurus around Tkach. The last one we heard about was Dr. Phil Fowler, a chiropractor reputed to be an expert in "Chinese medicine" and other "alternative medicine" therapies which the Pastor General finds indispensable. For some time Fowler, who often travelled with Tkach and had an office near Tkach's Hall of Administration penthouse, was so influential in Tkach's life some WCG executives feared he was practicing some type of "mind control" over the Apostle. Well, the latest is that Dr. Fowler, unhappy with the doctrinal changes in the church, is no longer seen at headquarters but has gone back to the Modesto area. That may explain the presence of the new health guru.

I don't like to sound critical, but I wish AR would concern itself with more important topics about the WCG. I mean, who cares if some of the ministers are queer? It's still God's church isn't it? And so what if 1975 in Prophecy wasn't worth the paper it was printed on? And so what if Armstrong proclaimed himself an Apostle. So a few prophecies didn't pan out. So what? And if headquarters wants to skim a little off third tithe, what of it? And maybe some evangelists are playing around on their wives. Who are we to judge? Remember Korah!

All I really want to know is: What ever happened to "Lukewarm Luke"? Or was it "Laodicean Luke"? Remember him? He was a cartoon character that appeared in The Good News magazine back in the '60s. I hope he wasn't disfellowshipped. He'd fit into the WCG real well these days.

-Jerry Fry
Kansas

Editor: Sorry it's taken so long to respond. But we think we may have found him in one of our old Ambassador Review files. While it's pretty difficult to tell from this angle, we're pretty sure he's the same character. Frankly, we don't think the shot we found should be published because it's not a pretty picture. It appears that his having been frozen in a contorted posture for so many years resulted in a diminished oxygen supply, and now he is no longer "Laodicean Luke," but "Sardis Sam." And yes, you were right, he is still a loyal WCG member.

Editor's Note

I'd better end this issue right here before I get daffy. A short comment, however.

Some, suspecting that the WCG's end is in sight, have asked me if I intend to continue putting out the Report. The short answer is yes. First of all, for all that has happened, the WCG is still far from extinct. Second, there will be many major developments in the story of the WCG and its offshoots in the coming months. I think they will be worth reporting.

My thanks to all of you for your continued support of our publication.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

October 1995 (AR60)

Tkach Sr. Dies of Cancer Little Joe Now Rules WCG

The church founded by Herbert W. Armstrong never seems to want for woes. As many will have heard by now, Joseph W. Tkach, the Pastor General of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) and the Chairman of the Board of Ambassador University, passed away at 2:20 p.m. on Saturday, September 23. On May 12 Tkach had surgery to remove his gall bladder; on May 28 he was readmitted to the hospital because of severe intestine and back pain. Surgeons then removed a grapefruit-size tumor from his intestines and discovered he had cancer. The 68-year-old cleric later underwent chemotherapy but, according to insiders, the cancer spread to his bones and elsewhere. While public pronouncements by church spokesmen continued to offer hope for Tkach, sources at the church's Pasadena, California headquarters said privately for weeks that his outlook was not good.

In spite of his physical affliction, Tkach continued to offer encouragement to his followers. According to the Worldwide News (WN, 8/29/95, p. 1), on August 18 Tkach spoke for 25 minutes at a student forum at Ambassador University in Big Sandy, Texas. His speech, delivered while seated, received a wildly-enthusiastic standing ovation. Meanwhile back at church headquarters in Pasadena, Little Joe, as Joe Tkach Jr. is affectionately referred to by headquarters personnel, was officially placed in full charge of all WCG operations. On September 5, Tkach Jr. was named Deputy Pastor General in a private laying-on-of-hands ceremony presided over by the elder Tkach and with the assistance of prominent Council of Elders members.

On September 16, Tkach Sr. briefly addressed the WCG's headquarters congregation in Pasadena. Listeners say that Tkach did not indicate any apprehension that he would soon die. A few days later Tkach experienced persistent nausea and was again admitted to Huntington Memorial Hospital. Physicians soon realized that the Pastor General's condition was rapidly worsening. Pasadena sources say that the actual cause of death was probably a brain hemorrhage caused by the spreading cancer. When Tkach died, his wife Elaine, not his secretary Ellen Escat, was at his side. Obituaries for Tkach appeared in the Los Angeles Times (9/25/95, p. A16), the Pasadena Star-News (9/26/95, p. A1), The New York Times (9/27/95), and The Washington Times (9/30/95, p. C4). Tkach was buried on September 26 at Mountain View Cemetery in Altadena where his grave is not far from that of his predecessor, Herbert W. Armstrong.

Tkach will be remembered for leading Ambassador University to accreditation and for leading the WCG closer to the Christian mainstream. Since taking over from Armstrong in 1986, Tkach was responsible for dismantling many of his predecessor's doctrines (HWA's anti-medical teachings, "Israel Identity," etc.). In the last few years Tkach confounded critics by continuing to alter church teachings even when it meant a major decline in WCG income and prestige. Even more amazing, toward the end of his life Tkach, unlike his egocentric predecessor, disavowed that his "apostleship" equated with the authority of the original Twelve. Some who knew him say that over time he had come to understand that not only are there true Christians in many denominations, but that neither he nor his church are the center of the universe. In that regard, Tkach may be acknowledged by religious historians as almost unique among leaders of religious cults. Even Christianity Today (Oct. 12), in an article written before Tkach's passing, stated that Tkach's WCG has been on a "commendable journey of faith" and encouraged the entire Christian community to extend to them "the right hand of fellowship."

Joseph Tkach Jr. now becomes the third Pastor General of the Worldwide Church of God. Most WCG observers expect him to continue along the doctrinal path blazed by his father. And, say associates, his management style will probably not deviate much from the "my way or the highway" approach of his father. Assisting Little Joe in his new endeavor are his advisors: evangelist-theologian J. Michael Feazell ("Fez"), media manager Greg Albrecht, business manager-lawyer Bernard Schnippert, church administrator Randy Dick, public relations spokesperson Tom Lapacka, and Greek theologian Kyriacos Stavrinides. After Little Joe, those six advisors are now virtually the only men in the WCG with any significant say about church doctrine and administrative policy. With the possible exceptions of ministers Herman Hoeh and Ronald Kelly, none of the "old timers" from the Herbert Armstrong era are left with even minor influence in the new Tkach organization.

Tithing Not Done Away!

With WCG income continuing to sink to new depths, it should perhaps not come as a surprise that the Tkach organization has again modified its position on tithing. It was less than a year ago that Tkach Sr. made headlines nationally when, in a taped sermon later shown around the world on January 7, he said that tithing was not required (see AR57). Now all that has changed. In an official WCG statement printed in the July issue of MacGregor Ministries, News & Views the revised standard Tkach message has become:

The Worldwide Church of God views tithing as voluntary under the new covenant, though it remains the appropriate minimum standard for Christian giving.... Since the Christian's heart will be concerned with the spreading of the gospel of Jesus Christ, giving to support that effort is a natural response.... Only through the generous financial support of its members and friends is the Church able to fulfill these responsibilities.

So there you have it. The WCG leadership now says that getting out the gospel is important again and so the minimum standard of giving is the tithe.

Changing Ways of Worship

By the time this AR edition is in circulation, the WCG's Feast of Tabernacles, now called the Festival of Faith, will be held around the world. Church leaders are expecting an attendance of only about 54,000 (including unbaptized mates and children). Whether the Festival will be held next year is open to question as church leaders increasingly are saying privately that it is a pointless Old Testament holdover from Armstrong days. According to internal WCG documents we have obtained, this year's Festival is geared toward one thing: "Bringing people (WCG) to Christ - coming entirely into the new covenant."

According to one WCG Festival Administration memo we have seen, this year's Festival should prove totally unlike any WCG feast of the past. The memo, dated February 1, 1995, indicates that Worldwidars attending the fall Festival will most likely witness a major overhaul in the format of their services. The memo lists the "New Testament elements of worship" as being (and this list is an unedited quote):

1. Music
2. Scripture reading
3. Prayer
4. "Amen" response
5. Sermons
6. Exhortation
7. Giving gifts
8. Doxology
9. Confession
10. Lord's supper, baptism (sacraments)

According to the memo, there will be two or three pieces of music "as people flow into the hall." Services will include "intercessory prayer," "a word from our youth," and "testimonies." Sermons are not to be over 35 minutes in length and services will close with a "benediction." The festival pastor "coordinates [the] overall effect."

With amen responses, confessions, and testimonials being planned, will we soon see "holy roller" manifestations at WCG services? Already WCG literature talks positively about "speaking in tongues" and a number of church pastors have indicated that in-service "sacred dancing" is on the way. But headquarters cautions that it's best for pastors not to rush things. As the Feb. 1 memo warns: "How far to go on this at every site? - best to do the revised format at every site but not totally radical yet." Yes, don't get totally radical yet!

Wondering About Hell

Just how far the WCG has come in the past year can be seen in an official March 1995 statement of required WCG ministerial teachings. (Ironically, the one who actually prepared the statement, WCG Pastor Greg Sargent, has since left Worldwide for United.) Here are just a few excerpts:

The Worldwide Church of God is not the only true Christian church. Virtually all churches are true Christian churches, e.g. Baptists, Lutherans, Methodists, Presbyterians, etc.... We should leave the fellowship of a church only for legitimate reasons.... we must still admit that Mr. Armstrong (an apostle but not in the same sense as the original apostles) was a minister of God who brought many people to Christ. He was converted and was a Christian.... The observance of the Seventh-day Sabbath or any day is not required of New Covenant Christians.... YOU [Youth Opportunities United] no longer requires members to abstain from organized sports participation on the Sabbath. What teens do in regard to the Sabbath is between them and their parents.... Christmas, Easter and Sunday can be legitimate forms of Christian worship, acceptable to God.... The Worldwide Church of God teaches that the Bible consecrates all meats. Romans 14:20 says all meats are clean.... All food is clean.... It is not necessary to delevain your properties for the Days of Unleavened Bread nor fast on the Day of Atonement.... Obligations for New Covenant Christians are those listed only in the New Testament. Everything in the Old Testament is abolished in Christ. In order for an Old Covenant command, statute, judgment or ordinance to be valid under the Now Covenant, it must be specifically commanded in the New Testament.

Considering how radical all of this sounds to old-time Worldwidars, are there any more changes that we can expect to see in the near future? One clue was dropped by Joseph W. Tkach when he spoke in Big Sandy on Aug. 18. There, in describing his personal trials of the last year and his love for Ambassador students, he casually commented:

I know what hell is like. I've been there and back several times in the last few months, but I would do it again for your sakes.... Ask, and if it is in your best interest educationally - we're not talking about giving you Porsches here, people in hell want ice water, too - we will try to provide it.

The use of such analogies stunned some in the audience because until now no WCG minister has challenged the idea that the dead sleep and those in hell do not possess consciousness. Certainly, until now WCG members assumed that only Catholics believed that a soul could go to, and return from, hell. We asked one of our Pasadena sources if Tkach's Big Sandy comment was a tipoff that the WCG leadership was about to start teaching the immortal soul doctrine and along with it the idea that souls in hell are capable of thought and conversation. His reply: "What's so odd about that? Haven't you ever read Lk. 16:23-24? Don't ridicule something you don't understand!"

Executive Exodus Update

Since our last issue so many ministers and executives have left the WCG it is impossible for us to provide a complete listing. Some names which need to be added to our previous Executive Exodus listings include: John Anderson, Gary Antion, Rick Beam, Bill Bradford, Ted Budge, Bill Butler, Stephen Elliot, Dave Evans, Dan Hall, Don Henson Jr., Fred Kellers, Douglas Johnson, Mark D. Kaplan, Ron Laughlin, Bob League, Graemme Marshall, Marc Masterson, Frank McCrady III, Larry Neff, Steve Nutzman, James O'Brien, Richard Petty, Greg Sargent, Dale Schurter, Gerald Seelig, Steve Sidars, Britton Taylor, Ken Treybig, Mark Welch, and William Winner. Little Joe and his advisors are apparently now in the process of trying to find out just who has stayed and who has left or will soon be leaving. Hopefully, within a few months the smoke will clear enough for the WCG's leaders to provide us with an update on who remains on their team. Special mention, however, should be given to a few WCG luminaries who recently announced their departure.

Church treasurer Steven Andrews has resigned from the WCG. He is now with the United group. His old position as church treasurer has been filled by Bernard Schnippert.

Long-time WCG evangelist Les McCullough, director of the WCG's United Kingdom operations, has resigned over doctrinal differences. The WCG has told its members that this was a "retirement" (WN, 8/29/95, p. 3). Other WCG ministers in Britain who have either resigned or asked for retirement include Ron Bolzem, Jonathan Bowles, George Delap, David House, John Jewel, David Magowan, Peter Shenton, and Alan Tattersall. Now heading what remains of the WCG's British operations is John Halford.

We previously reported that Leon Walker, director of the WCG's Spanish language work left the WCG in April. Since then 11 other WCG ministers representing about 1,500 members in eight Spanish speaking countries have followed him out. Although he has warm feelings toward a number of sabbatarian groups and has met recently with Roderick Meredith, Walker says that for now he and his followers intend to align with United.

In Germany the WCG lost its regional director, Paul Kieffer, a few other ministers, and a fair number of lay members who have all now defected to United.

More WCG defections are sure to be on the way. WCG minister and AU professor David Albert, for instance, has made overtures to join the Global group. He was rejected, however, as not being spiritually qualified.

Ambassador University Limp On

Ambassador University President Donald Ward has left the WCG and, as a result, is no longer with Ambassador. WCG headquarters claimed he left for health and personal reasons. Dr. Russell Duke is now the Interim President at Ambassador and Dr. Michael Germano remains as Academic Dean with Dr. William Stenger still Associate Academic Dean. While five of the University's nine board members have been replaced and while the number of faculty and student enrollment are both down this year, AU somehow continues to function.

Dr. Merritt: Fighting for Truth and Justice

One prominent WCG member to exit in the last few months is John Merritt, M.D., of Laguna Hills, California who had served on Ambassador University's Board of Regents. After going over to the United camp and being removed from AU's board, Merritt brought a lawsuit against AU in a Texas state court, hoping that the court would intervene in AU's internal squabbling and reinstate board members who had been removed after being disfellowshipped. (AU, a private, denomination-sponsored institution, not surprisingly requires its board members to be current WCG members.) The Texas court refused to get involved in what it viewed as essentially a church matter. According to Ralph Helge, again director of the WCG's Legal Services Department, Merritt failed both to understand fundamental legal principles and to pursue his legal cause with diligence; he therefore got what was coming to him (WN, 8/15/95, p. 2). Maybe so, but in the meantime, one of Merritt's lawyers, George Crow of Houston, has refiled the suit in a Federal District Court in Texas and his investigations continue to turn up data on the Tkachs that gets curiously and curiously. For instance, Crow has discovered the existence of a Colorado corporation named "Joseph W. Tkach, Pastor General of the Church of God and His Successors, a corporation Sole." Crow says that for some reason this Colorado corporation has shown a lot of activity since the beginning of 1995. Crow also has discovered that the WCG has other "shell" corporations set up including one in California called, "Church of God, an International Association" and another in Utah. (Actually, we have discovered that the one in Utah is not simply a shell, but is one that has had monies flowing through it for the benefit of certain WCG executives.)

Another activity that Merritt has been involved in is the establishment of the Friends of the Sabbath fellowship. This informal network consists of representatives of various sabbatarian and almost-sabbatarian religious groups. In June, the Friends of the Sabbath sponsored Jubilee '95, a symposium on Sabbath keeping held at Dana Point, California. Among the speakers were SDA author Dr. Samuel Bacchiocchi and ASK president Dr. Ernest Martin. Also attending were representatives from the WCG and many WCG spinoff groups including Triumph Publishing's William Dankenbring whose printed materials were particularly interesting to the group.

Those who would like to know more about Friends of the Sabbath or who would like to obtain tapes or transcripts of Jubilee '95 should write to: Friends of the Sabbath, 27068 La Paz No. 500, Laguna Hills, CA 92656 (tel. 714-362- 4444).

Sabbath Summit Coming

Surprisingly, among those who were not invited to the Jubilee '95 symposium were leaders of The Bible Sabbath Association, the nation's foremost pro-Sabbath organization. Former WCG minister Richard Wiedenheft has been active with that group for many years and former WCG member Richard Nickels of Giving and Sharing (P.O. Box 100, Great Neck, MO 64849) is quite likely to be the Association's next president. Perhaps it was just an oversight. Mr. Nickels informs us that the Association plans to hold a "Sabbath Summit Meeting" of leaders of all the major Sabbath-keeping groups in 1996. For information contact the Bible Sabbath Association, Rt. 1 Box 222, Fairview, OK 73737.

Church Chart Now Available

In our last issue we mentioned how one of our Australian readers had produced a remarkable eight-foot-long flow chart which in great detail shows the history of the WCG and its offshoots. A number of readers have expressed a desire to obtain a copy of the chart and we are happy to announce that its creator, John Morgan, is now making copies available. In addition, he informs us that all those requesting a copy will also receive both a cassette tape explaining in his own words how the chart came into being and a most interesting article about Sabbath keepers in Scotland who, decades before HWA began his ministry, were holding to many of the same doctrines HWA later taught. To obtain the chart, tape, and article, send $7 (U.S.) to: Mr. John Morgan, P.O. Box 30, Glenhuntly 3163, Australia.

GTA at It Again!

Ever since 1977 when we first reported on the secret life of evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong, we have received letters from readers who have wondered if the famous televangelist has ever cleaned up his act. While we have heard many rumors that he has not, we have had little interest in following up on those stories. Now, however, it appears that we should.

This past summer while visiting Oklahoma, GTA paid a visit to a local masseuse. He said he wanted a massage but, according to sources with firsthand knowledge, the 65-year-old televangelist obviously expected more. The masseuse, a married woman, soon found herself the victim of unwanted sexual advances. She made it clear that she did not offer illegal services. But on a subsequent visit GTA's long-time problem again reared its ugly head and the woman found herself being groped and fondled. Luckily, with much effort she was able to extricate herself from his clutches, but not before a hidden security camera captured the incident on video tape. The rolling tape then captured the sound of GTA somehow being able to relieve the tension of the moment followed by his greatly relaxed voice singing along as the radio played "Don't Sit Under the Apple Tree."

A few weeks later, while visiting Phoenix, Arizona to speak to some of his followers there, "Dr. Armstrong," as he now prefers to be called, was approached by a legal representative of the masseuse. GTA did not deny that the Oklahoma incident had occurred but, he said, it was all the woman's fault. Nevertheless, he generously offered to pay her $10,000 to keep quiet. When that offer proved inadequate, GTA brought his attorney into the act. An offer of $20,000 in hush money was refused. The masseuse then contacted some in the media offering her story - and a copy of the tape. She also began talking about bringing criminal charges against GTA for sexual assault. That was at the end of August. Since then all has been quiet. Apparently the warring parties have somehow been able to quietly resolve their differences.

With GTA and his associates now making a vigorous effort to lure exiting Worldwidiers into their International group, perhaps it is time that we again look into the activities of this nefarious Elmer Gantry. We would appreciate hearing from any readers who may have more information about the secret life of "America's Playboy Preacher."

Flurry Gets Flakier

Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Church of God continues to grow on the outer fringes of Armstrongism. Most appealing to the Flurryites is the prospect of "fleeing" - not from Flurry, unfortunately, but to Petra in the Jordanian desert. The July issue of Flurry's Philadelphia Trumpet featured a cover article about this locale, Flurry's idea of a sun-filled vacation. Another article, "Elijah Has Come Already - and They Knew Him Not," centered on the life of Flurry's idol, Herbert W. Armstrong. The issue contained four pictures of the deified Apostle. Flurry, who claims to be Elisha and a number of other biblical personalities, continues to gain new followers, but it appears that he is doing so only by becoming ever more fanatical. One of our readers, in close contact with members of Flurry's group, sent us the following information:

Prospective members of Gerald Flurry's church must recite: "I believe that Herbert W. Armstrong is the endtime Elijah." Flurry has now mixed diet and religion: white rice and white bread are a sin. The Philadelphians have also adopted a policy of racial discrimination. It is now a sin for persons of different racial backgrounds to fraternize on all but the most superficial levels. According to Flurry, the wearing of jewelry is sinful. Heart pendants are demonic and will send the wearer to the lake of fire.

Another informant wrote us:

Philadelphian minister Colin Sutcliffe, once a WCG minister in New Zealand, has fallen out of favor with Flurry. Along came the newly formed United Church and a great opportunity for family reunification. But United, now headed by Sutcliffe's son-in-law, Chairman Hulme, declined to accept him as a minister.

So much for brotherly love and unity.

Hulme's UCG Grows

Of the dozens of Armstrongite groups that have come out of the WCG in the last 25 years, the largest is now the United Church of God currently headed by Chairman David Hulme, not to be confused with David Hume, the great Scottish philosopher and historian. Hulme's United Church of God should also not be confused with the United Church of God started in 1974 by ex-WCG minister Richard Wiedenheft or with the United Church of God started by Ray Wooten who has now disassociated his United Church of God from Hulme's United Church of God (UCG).

Hulme's UCG has only been in existence a few months, but already it has almost 15,000 enthusiastic members. While there had been some indication when this group coalesced that it would usher in some level of democracy, some who have already left the group say that under Hulme ("a one-man-show") and church administrator Victor Kubik ("thinks the Czars really knew how to rule") the UCG is rapidly becoming another religious autocracy.

At present the UCG has no television ministry to compete with those of "Elisha" Flurry, Dr. Garner Ted Armstrong, or General Roderick Meredith whose bear-like Karate chops can now be seen on the boob tube. But with already more than $1,000,000 in surplus revenues, a TV show built around Chairman Hulme is probably not too far away. Already the UCG with new offices in Arcadia, California not only has a church periodical called New Beginnings (NB), but it is inaugurating a full-color magazine called The Good News (not to be confused with the old WCG publication of the same name).

Doctrinally, the UCG has openly stated that it intends to follow the teachings of Herbert W. Armstrong as stated in the famous "18 Points" (delineated by Joseph W. Tkach in the WN, 8/25/86, p. 5). David Hulme has indicated, however, that some Armstrong doctrines will need to be modified (NB, 6/16/95, p. 2). You can bet that Hulme and company will accept Tkach's modification of HWA's old healing doctrine and a few other Tkach organization discoveries. One doctrinal item that Hulme and company are struggling with, however, is a definition for God. Apparently, after decades of serving in the ministry, this is something the UCG ministers were never able to clarify in their own minds. Hulme assures his followers, however, that no matter what definition they come up with, it will not involve a Trinity (Hulme's letter of 5/17/95, p. 2). With that one prejudgment acknowledged, Hulme does indicate that he and his colleagues are otherwise open to suggestions. Hopefully, within a few months, the UCG will issue a statement as to who or what it is exactly that they are worshipping.

Those desiring to be kept up-to-the-minute about changes in this latest of Armstrongism reincarnations can do so by utilizing UCG's sophisticated "Faxback and Information Service" by calling 317-526-2036 (after Oct. 18 the number changes to 317-839-5002). UCG's mailing address is: P.O. Box 661780, Arcadia, CA 91066.

Organizing Your Church

Former WCG minister Ray Wooten, who has his own United Church of God, apparently feels that it is best for local congregations to maintain a certain level of autonomy even when they affiliate with a national or international organization. Ostensibly, one advantage of doing this is that the local organization is better able to buffer itself from liability in case a government agency wants to investigate the international movement or a disgruntled member decides to sue the umbrella group for abuse, fraud, etc. For those interested in starting their own local church corporation, Wooten has put together an informational church start-up kit. His address is United Church of God, P.O. Box 361334, Birmingham, AL 35236-1334.

Those fascinated with the ways in which the new WCG offshoots are being set up might do well to locate a copy of the book How to Organize and Manage Your Own Religious Cult by Duke McCoy and once distributed by Loompanics Unlimited (P.O. Box 1197, Port Townsend, WA 98368, tel. 360-3852230). When we read it years ago, we were amazed how the WCG and its offshoots were applying its principles very, very precisely. We have been told that the book is now out of print and it is very difficult to locate a copy. If any reader knows how we may obtain copies, please drop us a line.

Another writer presenting similar dark-side information is Anthony Pratkanis in the article "How to Sell a Pseudoscience" which appeared in the July/August issue of Skeptical Inquirer magazine ($4.95, published by the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal, 3965 Rensch R., Amherst, NY 14228-27443). In explaining how one can dupe the unwary into believing just about anything, psychology professor Pratkanis explains "nine effective persuasion tactics for selling all sorts of flimflam." Those who are persuaded that mind control techniques do not exist would do well to study Dr. Pratkanis' article. All nine techniques have been used by the WCG and are now being used (perhaps unconsciously and perhaps not) by all the major WCG spinoffs.

Exiting to the Esoteric

We have reported in past issues how those exiting the WCG very rarely join mainline churches. Over the years we have known of a few who have joined mainstream churches such as the Lutherans or the Baptists. For example Louise Doescher, the former WCG member who ran Help Net in Wisconsin (see AR55, p. 10) and who is currently working on a book about the WCG, is now a Baptist and tells us she has found spiritual peace in that denomination. And here in the Pasadena area a few prominent ex-Worldwidiers (and even a few current WCG ministers) frequently attend Sunday services at the popular Lake Avenue Congregational Church. Nevertheless, over the years the vast majority of those who left the WCG either joined one of the WCG offshoots or no church at all. Within the last two years, however, we have begun to notice something new. While they are still in the minority, a growing number of WCG exiters are being attracted to what we might call, for want of a better term, esoteric movements.

Some of these esoteric movements are derided by critics as "New Age." Unfortunately, what "New Age" means exactly is not always clear. To such authors as Russell Chandler in his book Understanding the New Age (Word Publishing, 1988) anything "New Age" is unbiblical and unchristian. But many leaving the WCG do not agree. One former member wrote us:

Frankly, I am just sick of people condemning every spiritual teaching as New Age or occult simply because it does not match the childish nonsense they have been taught in Sunday school or in some seminary. First of all, when they call New Age a movement they don't have any idea what they are talking about. That label is applied to many different ideas. Just as the word Christian can apply to many different groups with many differing ideas, so New Age is an umbrella term that is very imprecise.

People do the same thing with the term "occult" which simply means "hidden or secret knowledge." Paul used the word Mystery which means the same thing. Those who study the occult are simply studying knowledge that the average carnal person is not readily attuned to. I think most people who use that term in a nasty way are getting the occult mixed up with black magic. Not all magic is black magic! Moses and Jesus were adept at magic (the white type), that doesn't mean they were evil! Anyone who reads Jesus the Magician by Morton Smith will quickly see the difference.

As for New Age ideas being unbiblical, well, people who say such things do not really know their Bible. Here are some New Age ideas you find in the Bible: symbology (found from Genesis to Revelation) and dream analysis (Gen. 40, Matt. 2:12), numerology (found throughout the Bible), dowsing (Num. 20:8), reincarnation (Mal. 4:5, Matt. 16:13-14), out-of-body experience (II Cor. 12:2 and possibly Eccl. 7:6), astrology (Gen. 1:14). I wish the Sunday school teachers would start reading their Bibles more thoroughly!

We do not have either the space or the inclination to cover all the "New Age" ideas being discussed in WCG and ex-WCG circles. However, as regards the above topics, the books and other sources most often being referred to by WCG exites are: Carl Jung, et al, Man and his Symbols (Doubleday, 1964); The Companion Bible (theologian Bullinger paid careful attention to numbers in margin comments); Gary Arvidson's 1994 series on the Tetragrammaton in ACD's The New Millennium (4449 S. Star Lake Road, Auburn, WA 98001); publications of the American Society of Dowsers (Danville, Vermont 05828-0024); Joseph Head and S. L. Cranston, Reincarnation: An East-West Anthology (1961, now published by Quest Books, The Theological Publishing House, Wheaton, IL); Kenneth C. Fleming, God's Voice in the Stars: Zodiac Signs and Bible Truths (Loizeaux Brothers, 1981); and Jon Anthony West and Jan Gerhard Toonder, The Case For Astrology (Penguin Books, 1970). For the orthodox Christian view on such practices contact Watchman Fellowship (P.O. Box 13340, Arlington, TX 76094).

While so-called "New Age" ideas are playing a part in the shifting spirituality of some ex-Worldwidiers, much of the change in thinking that is occurring seems to be due to the "tohu and bohu" we now see in both the WCG and most of its offshoots. For example, because of the never-ending doctrinal debates going on in these groups, some have begun to question the very premises upon which their faith has been based. Among the basic questions now being asked are: Do some non-Western religions possibly have insights lacking in Christianity? Does our Christian Bible represent the complete canon of inspired literature? Are some of the books of the Bible less inspired than others? Are there books other than those in the Bible that are inspired?

One organization that is confronting such questions headon is the I Think International group in England which recently changed the name of their publication to Potentia International (Box 1953, Bournemouth, Dorset, BH8 OYQ England). Writing in his August issue, editor Kerin Webb, formerly a WCG member, stated (pp. 1-2):

I, personally, hold the opinion in the light of my own research that the Bible is one of a line of religious philosophies based upon a set of evolving concepts, which date back to antiquity and beyond. And therefore, personally, I believe that the evidence which seems to clearly demonstrate a basis for the proposition that postulates that there's taken place a cross pollenisation of ideology, an ideology which has been borrowed and then molded by Hebrew/Christian writers, is a sound one [sic].

While some ex-Worldwidiers, like Mr. Webb, are studying comparative religion, others feel the Bible simply needs updating from other supposedly sacred, writings. In the latter category are some ex-Worldwidiers who have joined the Urantia movement. Urantians (not to be confused with Unitarians or with the Unarians of El Cajon, California) trace their beginnings back to The Urantia Book, a work supposedly revealed solely by celestial beings in order to correct the alleged flaws in the Bible. This celestial message was first published in 1955 by Dr. William Sadler, the founder of the Urantia cult. The Urantia Book is said to be the largest book ever to have been channeled by supernatural beings working through human beings. While there have been other "channeled" books over the centuries, The Urantia Book is unique in that it contains a good deal of modern science and a very-detailed purported biography of Jesus with claimed "facts" not found in the gospels. So dedicated are Urantian followers, many study The Urantia Book assisted by the official Urantia Book Concordance, a reference almost as large as most Bible concordances. The Urantia Foundation (533 Diversey Parkway, Chicago, IL 60614, tel. 312-525-3319) has attracted scientists and intellectuals into its fold and some claim the group has gotten a number of its teachings from the Seventh Day Adventists. This latter fact may be the reason some ex-WCG members find themselves attracted to this movement. Now, however, cult expert Martin Gardener, author of Urantia: The Great Cult Mystery, says the Urantia movement may be splintering. Readers who have family or friends involved in the Urantia movement may want to read his book for an understanding of what they are up against.

One of our readers who feels there are important truths to be found in non-biblical religions is former WCG member Patti Laessig of Merrill, Wisconsin. Ms. Laessig continues to study the Bible, but in addition has found meaning in the natural religions of the American Indians. In particular, she has found Mary Summer Rain's first four books in "The No-Eyes Series" (Spirit Song, Phoenix Rising, Dreamwalker, and Phantoms Afoot) to be spiritually enlightening. In a recent letter to the Report, Ms. Laessig wrote us:

I believe that the Native American spirituality is the truest and purest form of worship I've found. It doesn't require a middleman. It gives access to God/the Great Spirit Creator individually - the same message that Jesus Christ gave us, if only we would pay attention to what the Bible says... I believe we are each responsible for the deeds we do. I believe each of us is a perfect spiritual being, a "chip off the old Great Spirit" (i.e. made in the image of God) therefore we innately have the Holy Spirit within and the "unpardonable sin" is the sin of blasphemy of the Holy Spirit, which would therefore mean to be untrue to the Self - to go against the natural spirit within, to weave a false mask or identity, to take on false doctrines, dogma, and society's superficial ego-identities. If we are true to the Self, doing what comes naturally brings joy, peace, and kindness. We begin living with the LOVE - of God and each other - that Jesus taught.

While some ex-Worldwidiers are augmenting the traditional Christian Bible with spiritual teachings derived from other sources, some have lost confidence in parts of the traditional Christian canon. For example, some have confronted the centuries-old debate regarding law versus grace by simply deleting the Pauline parts of the Bible from the canon. One, former WCG member wrote us:

After many years of careful Bible study we have come to see that the New Testament as originally delineated by the Catholic Church at Nicea is really two separate religions - the essentially Jewish religion of Yeshua the Nazarene and the Gentile religion of Paul. Mr. Herbert Armstrong was on the right track when he taught that the law was not done away. But sadly, he didn't realize that the religion of Yeshua [Jesus] and his brother [James] is not compatible with the religion of Paul. Many scholars are coming to see this now.

The writer then went on to quote from The Jesus Conspiracy by Holger Kersten and Elmar R. Gruber (Element Books, 1994, p. 341):

What we today refer to as Christianity is a misinterpretation and twisting by Paul of the true teaching of Jesus. Knowledge about this misinterpretation, and the doctrine of Salvation by the vicarious sacrifice of Jesus which is given a central place in it, has long belonged to the truisms of modern theological and church historical research. Unfortunately until now these truths have been suppressed by all possible means, and therefore have not penetrated to the foundations. Even at the start of the eighteenth century the English philosopher Lord Bolingbroke (1678-1751) noticed two completely different religions in the New Testament, that of Jesus and that of Paul. Kant, Lessing, Fichte and Schelling also clearly distinguished between the teaching of Jesus and what the "apostles" made of it. A large number of reputed modern theologians have come to acknowledge this fact.

Somewhat similar views can be found in some of Hyam Maccoby's writings, first brought to our attention by former WCG minister Bill Moore. In the last few months we have noticed some of Maccoby's books offered for sale at the bookstore of Fuller Seminary where a number of WCG executives have gone for graduate level studies. Not only are Maccoby's books being read by ex-WCG members, some such as The Myth Maker: Paul and the Invention of Christianity (Harper, San Francisco, 1987) are being studied by some ministers in the WCG offshoots.

While some ex-WCG members have cast off the writings of Paul, a few have gone much further. Students of the writings of Dr. James Tabor, for instance, tell us that Tabor has come to believe that only the Old Testament is truly inspired and that the whole New Testament is merely commentary on the Old. Tabor, who is currently working on a new Bible translation scheduled for completion in late 1998, is active in the B'nai Noah movement and other pro-Jewish activities (see AR56). One of Tabor's disciples wrote us:

What the B'Nai Noah movement is attempting to achieve is a return to the roots established in the first century A.D. by Yeshua the Nazarene and even earlier Judaism. Those in the movement are using this as a starting point to become closer to the LORD God and His (for sure) Holy Word, the O.T. or Tanach. To us now the N.T. is more likely a collection of writings inspired by the "early church fathers" than it is a collection by the LORD God.

While many ex-WCG members continue to look for answers in the Bible, or at least in part of it, it is probably not surprising that some have begun looking outside of religion altogether for answers to the question of how to live. One small movement that is drawing ex-Worldwidiers deserves mention because of its odd combination of offbeat wisdom and anti-societal insight. The small movement centers on the writings and ideas of Ernest Mann, never a Worldwider, but once a financially successful businessman who at the age of 42 dropped out of society and began living a very simple and creatively frugal life aimed at minimizing expenses (of both money and time) and maximizing personal freedom.

Mann, now almost 70, is severely critical of modern capitalism, the ruling elite, and modern lifestyles. To replace their influence, he advocates something he calls The Priceless Economic System ("PES") by which mankind would supposedly be able to live without setting fixed prices on goods or services and by which society would eventually not be focused on making profits. Mann advocates a very simple ethic based on a few simple principles such as the golden rule and the maxim that "it is more blessed to give than to receive." Among those who have found value in Mann's ideas are survivalists who believe that modern civilization is heading toward a complete breakdown, economic conservatives who believe he offers the ultimate in economic self-reliance, senior citizens on very limited fixed incomes, anti-government activists who see in Mann's philosophy a means of escaping the intrusions of the modern state, libertarians who see his ideas as offering a means to achieve a maximum level of personal freedom, and even some fundamentalist Christians who feel Mann is emphasizing the heart of the Gospel while jettisoning valueless doctrinal debate. For many years Mann has promoted his ideals by putting out his "Little Free Press" newsletter, which, in spite of what might be viewed as excessive idealism, is still quite enlightening and entertaining. Also quite popular among some ex-WCG folks are Mann's book I Was Robot - Utopia Now Possible and a collection of his newsletters published in book form as Free I Got.

Because he eschews business dealings, Mann no longer distributes his two books himself. However, they are available for $7.95 and $8.95 respectively from Jim Wortham, Marathon International Book Co., Box 32, Madison, IN 47250-0032. As for Mann's newsletter, it is still being published occasionally. A recent edition, #116, provides an excellent overview of Mann's unique philosophy. For a copy write to: Ernest Mann, Little Free Press, 301 SE 11th Street, Lot 218, Little Falls, MN 56345. In accordance with his own philosophy the newsletter is free, but Mann does ask that with your request you include some stamps or a little something to cover mailing expenses.

David Whitaker's Mystical Insights

Before leaving the subject of the esoteric, special mention should be made of one former WCG member whose writings are having an impact on a fair number of former WCG members and others who are serious students of the Bible. For some years now David Whitaker of Enid, Oklahoma has corresponded with a number of individuals around the world and many of his letters have proven so interesting a fair number have been photocopied and distributed quite widely. Some of the less controversial ones have even been published by William Dankenbring in Prophecy Flash!

Unlike many ex-Worldwidiers who put down their religious ideas on paper, Whitaker does not claim to be a minister, prophet, or to have a special mandate from God. Nor does he claim to have all the answers on every theological issue. Nevertheless, he does possess a vast knowledge of religion, psychology, philosophy, ancient history, astronomy, classical music, and many other subjects. He also takes a special interest in the Hebrew language, the Kabbalah, and Jewish mysticism. It is from his study of the latter that Whitaker has developed a number of theories which, although they may at first seem a bit radical, nonetheless, are very plausible in light of the scriptural and historical data he has amassed. In particular, Whitaker is convinced that to understand the New Testament in its fullness, one has to not only understand the Mediterranean culture of the first century and the Hebrew language, but one has to take into account the widespread awareness of the Jewish mysticism of the time. Whitaker views the earliest Christians as embracing what he calls "Apostolic mysticism." To demonstrate this, Whitaker refers to dozens of N.T. verses that to most of us have the feel of well-worn simple truths. Yet, as he so ably demonstrates, when one views those same verses with the eyes of one adept in Jewish mysticism they frequently have an added depth and dimension of meaning quite beyond the simplicity we often assume. In a 1992 letter to AR, Whitaker wrote:

The majority of contemporary clergymen and theological historians believe the New Testament writings present no concrete formulae for mystical practice, and it is for this reason most Christian practitioners reject any attempt to comprehend the Faith of Jesus and the original Apostles within a mystical context.... The entire historical and cultural mysticism underlying the New Testament writings and thought-forms is conveniently neglected by Western European and American scholars and theologians who find it awkward to mentally identify with the intellectual and mystical modalities of ancient Mediterranean peoples and civilizations.... Understanding the paramount influence and involvement of the Jewish Mystic Tradition underlying the New Testament writings is absolutely essential to clearly and correctly comprehending the allusions and nomenclature used by the authors of the New Testament writings! Only when this missing background inherent within the ancient Galilean culture is restored can the modern reader begin to properly and profoundly understand the true Message contained within the colloquial wording of both the Old and New Testament Scriptures!

Readers should not assume that AR endorses each and every one of Whitaker's views. Nevertheless, his writings (in the form of one to four page letters that are really well reasoned essays) are very thought provoking. During the past few years we have been tempted to publish some of them, but have not because: (1) taken out of context they would offend and confuse many readers and (2) we lack the funds to publish them in toto. Nevertheless, because we think some would be interested in reading his letter-essays, we have asked Mr. Whitaker if he would make available photocopies of a set we thought were particularly thought-provoking. Subjects include: Christianity and Judaism, The Types of Judaism, On the Importance of Understanding the Hebrew Language, On the Ten Commandments, Jeremiah in Babylon, What/Where is Babylon Today?, The "Lost Books," On Jewish Mysticism and Early Christianity, The Term "Kabbalah," Is Jesus Metatron?, Jesus and Hanukkah, Will Jesus Return in the Year 2000?, The Real Meaning of "the Thousand Years," Is the Universe an Apparition?, On Evolution, Is God Androgynous?, Does God Have Feminine Aspects? The Feminine Side of Men and God, On Homosexuality, Did David Love Jonathan Sexually?, Are All Abortions Sin?, Philosophy - Greek and Jewish, Was Pythagoras a Student of Kabbalah?, Is Reincarnation in the Bible? Jewish-American Indian Parallels, Jews and Anti-Semitism, Bible Study Levels, Predestination and Fate, and Recommended Books.

Mr. Whitaker informs us that he would be willing to make the above set of letter-essays available to all who would like them. However, he cannot do so without asking for financial assistance because he is on a very limited fixed income (he is living on only government disability assistance due to a number of serious ailments). We therefore would suggest to any who would like to obtain the above set of writings, that along with your written request you include a money order for $10. Write to: David Whitaker, 710 E. Chestnut Ave., Enid, OK 73701.

Back to Waco

Readers continue to express a fascination with the 1993 Branch Davidian tragedy at Waco. Many have already read See No Evil: Blind Devotion and Bloodshed in David Koresh's Holy War (Summit Group, 1993) by Tim Madigan who had extensive first-hand contact with the tragic events as a reporter with the Fort Worth Star-Telegram. Now James D. Tabor and Eugene V. Gallagher have produced Why Waco? - Cults and the Battle for Religious Freedom in America (University of California Press, Berkeley, 1995).

Decidedly more sympathetic toward Koresh and his followers than previous books on the subject, Tabor and Gallagher present a number of facts that have not received wide attention in the major media. But they also take a number of positions that are sure to raise eyebrows: The authors view the Waco tragedy as having been to a great extent precipitated by the "pervasive influence of those who see 'cults' as dangerous and troubling movements in America today" (p. 146). Desiring to promote religious tolerance (p. xi), the authors condemn the use of the word "cult" because it is used to "demonize" certain groups and, instead, advocate the use of "new religious movements" as the more politically correct term (p. 7; p. 213, n. 2). Cult experts supposedly do not possess the academic qualifications necessary to evaluate such groups and are only "cult bashers" who engage in "uninformed slander" of these new movements (p. 217, n. 40). Similarly, the views of former cult members cannot be trusted as those leaving "new religious groups" are now "defectors" (p. 95). Robert J. Lifton's famous work on brainwashing is glossed over with two sentences (p. 147) and "mind control" is deemed a fallacy (p. 177). In concluding, the authors state that "cults make a signal contribution to American life by raising questions of ultimate value, by offering paradigms of commitment, and by making principled challenges to the status quo" (p. 186). (Question: Could not the same be said about the Communist party, neo-Nazi groups, and many terrorist organizations?)

One cult expert singled out for condemnation by Tabor and Gallagher is exit counsellor Rick Ross of Phoenix. According to the authors, in deprogramming a Davidian named Bill in 1992, "Ross effectively used his broad familiarity with 'cults' and a careful reading of the Bible outside of the compelling setting of Koresh's teaching sessions to raise doubts in Bill's mind" (p. 95). When contacted by the Report, Ross said:

Yes, I do advocate reading the Bible carefully, but much of what Tabor and Gallagher wrote about me is inaccurate and I have written to UC Berkeley complaining about those inaccuracies. Had the authors made an attempt to interview me I could have helped them get their facts straight. But they did not. I suspect that much of what they wrote is similarly flawed by being based too much on secondary sources. I have been reading Tabor's writings for a few years now. And quite honestly, I think his views are getting stranger and stranger.

Even if that is so, in a number of ways Why Waco? does make an important contribution toward our understanding of what took place at Waco and toward reducing the risk of such tragedies occurring in the future. Perhaps the most important lesson that can be learned, especially by law enforcement, is that when dealing with destructive cults - sorry, "new religious movements" - it should not be assumed that the usual negotiation tactics employed in terrorist or hostage situations will suffice. As Tabor and Gallagher advocate, to protect the members of such groups from themselves it may indeed be necessary to bring in a team of religion scholars to make some sense of their inner world. It may even be necessary to talk only in "Bible babble" because, as was apparently the case with Koresh, that may be the only language discernable to the group and its leaders.

While the Tabor-Gallagher book will prove of great interest to many fascinated by the Davidians, one other information resource should not be overlooked. In July the House of Representatives' Judiciary Committee and Oversight Committee jointly held hearings on the Waco tragedy. Many who watched those hearings on C-Span were amazed at the amount of information (and frequently contradictory views) aired in those hearings. A spokesman for the Judiciary Committee has informed us that transcripts of those hearings will soon be published. For information, contact the United States Government Printing Office. As for Why Waco?, if copies cannot be had from your local bookstore, you may order copies by calling the publisher's toll-free number: 800-822-6657.

Religion in the News

The official and public "repentance" that the WCG has undergone during the past year strikes some as a unique event in modern religion. That a denomination should acknowledge its cultish ways and go almost "mainstream" in the course of only a few months is not common, yet the phenomenon of a sect or denomination openly admitting to past wrongs is apparently not that rare.

Religion writer John Dart of the Los Angeles Times (6/19/95, p. A1) has reported that, "A wave of confession and repentance for past sins, some of them the racist evils of decades or centuries ago, is sweeping Christianity worldwide." According to Dart, Christians openly repenting and publicly admitting their denominations' past sins include the Pope apologizing for Catholic complicity in the African slave trade of centuries past, for the Church's role in the exploitation of Latin American Indians during that continent's colonial period, for Catholic brutality toward Protestants during the 15th to 17th centuries, and for the Church's condemnation of Galileo for saying the earth revolved around the sun. In mass ceremonies German Christians have repented for German atrocities during the Nazi era and for the German invasion of Holland in WW II. French Christians have openly lamented atrocities committed against Muslims during the Crusades. The Lutheran Church in America has confessed to the anti-Jewish diatribes of Martin Luther during the 16th century. New Zealand Christians have gathered by the thousands to confess their forebears' sins against the native Maoris. Japanese Christians have publicly repented for the bombing of Pearl Harbor. Hawaiian Christians have publicly repented for their forebears' treatment of native Hawaiians. And, in what has been billed as the largest mass apology in American history, the Southern Baptists recently acknowledged and lamented the fact that their denomination was formed 150 years ago as a pro-slavery denomination. Dart suggests a number of possible reasons for the mass repentance phenomenon including the approach of the new millennium. But one interesting factor is Healing America's Wounds, a book by John Dawson, a mission director for Youth With a Mission of Colorado Springs. For an interesting discussion of the merits and criticisms of the new mass repentance phenomenon, see Dart's excellent article.

The WCG is not the only Pasadena-based religious organization trying to polish up a tarnished image. According to the Pasadena Star-News (8/11/95, p. A1): "The state Attorney General's Office is investigating the Fuller Evangelistic Association after a former executive filed a complaint questioning how the money was handled by the association." In recent years the association has gained a national reputation for its programs directed at showing churches how to grow. A separate Pasadena entity, Fuller Theological Seminary, gained notoriety in 1992 when it was reported that John Geoffrey Finch, a famous practitioner of "Christian psychology" and for whom Fuller's Graduate School of Psychology had named a building, had his license to practice revoked after a Washington state board found him guilty of sexually abusing three patients (Pasadena Star-News, 8/13/92, p. A1).

According to a recent article that appeared in the Vancouver Sun, the Canadian communications company Spar Aerospace has completed installation of a transmitter and satellite dish at the Vatican as part of a plan to provide the Pope with a highly sophisticated satellite communications system. The manufacturer, a world leader in satellite communications, says that by using the new system the Pope will be able to broadcast his daily messages live to over 800,000 churches in all parts of the world and by doing so maintain constant communication with the world's one billion Roman Catholics.

According to Episcopal Life (July/Aug. 1995):

The Diocese of Pittsburgh is leading the Roman Catholic Church and the Internet community into new territory with an "electronic confessional" that allows people to admit their sins and receive penance online. The ground-breaking service has been approved for a 180-day trial period by the Vatican as a bona fide alternative to in-person administration of the sacrament of reconciliation. The 24-hour interactive service, hosted at Carnegie-Mellon University, is reachable at the home page <http://mea.culpa.cmu.edu> on the World Wide Web.

As we reported in AR51, Assyrians and Caldeans are still distinct ethnic groups in the Middle East and the United States is now home to many from both groups who have emigrated here. For over 1,500 years the Assyrians have been thought of as Orthodox Catholic because of doctrinal schisms with Rome. Now, however, those differences have been resolved. In a ceremony at the Vatican on Nov. 9, 1994 Pope John Paul and Mar Dinka IV, patriarch of the Assyrian Church of the East signed a "Common Christological Declaration" which sets the stage for a reconciliation of the two groups. For his church headquarters, patriarch Mar Dinka IV has chosen Chicago and so now that American city is the center of Assyrian worship and the headquarters of one of the world's oldest Christian denominations (Chicago Tribune, 9/8/95).

In August, residents of the eastern United States fearfully listened to weather reports as Hurricane Felix in the Atlantic moved toward the nation's eastern coastline. As the hurricane stalled off of Virginia and finally petered out, one individual claimed credit for "the miracle" - televangelist and sometime presidential candidate Pat Robertson. Robertson told his 700 Club followers that it was his prayers that were responsible for the storm's diversion. Robertson made a similar claim in the 1980s regarding Hurricane Gloria.

On September 7 the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut bestowed an honorary doctorate upon the Rev. Sun Myung Moon, founder of the Unification Church and a religious empire which finances the conservative Washington Times. Moon, who takes personal credit for the fall of communism, and whose followers claim he is the end-time Messiah, said in his acceptance speech that he is working to bring about a united world (New York Times, 9/8/95). Since 1991 Moon has given the financially ailing University of Bridgeport over $98 million. Some in the WCG have suggested he would be an ideal candidate to purchase the WCG's properties in Pasadena.

Former U.S. President George Bush recently completed a tour of Vietnam, China, and Japan where he gave speeches. For speeches in Vietnam he received a six figure fee from Citibank. Bush also spent nearly a week speaking at meetings sponsored by the Women's Federation for World Peace, an organization connected with the Unification Church of Rev. Moon who not long ago was serving time in a federal prison for tax evasion. On Sept. 14 Bush spoke at the "Global Family Festival" in Tokyo where he and Mrs. Bush were the warm-up speakers for Unification Church followers who had come mainly to hear the wife of Rev. Moon speak about and praise the virtues of her husband and his religion. Moonies revere Mrs. Moon as "The True Mother." Neither Mr. Bush nor his aides would disclose how much the former President was paid for the appearance (New York Times, 9/4/95 and 9/15/95). Only days before, Bush ridiculed the U.N.-sponsored Fourth World Conference on Women in China with remarks that made some editorial writers question his understanding of China's anti-democratic policies (New York Times, editorial of 9/13/95).

George Bush is not the only one critical of the international women's meeting that was held in Beijing. Among American evangelical groups Charles Dobson's Focus on the Family has been most strident in attacking the conference it saw as "the most radical, atheistic and anti-family crusade in the history of the world." Seeing the conference as part of a giant conspiracy to do away with all distinctions between the sexes, Dobson wrote "events about to unfold on the world scene are almost beyond comprehension" (Dobson's Dear Friends letter of August 1995). At its conclusion the Women's Conference issued an official statement of its adopted positions which included an affirmation that the family is the basic unit of society and should be strengthened. Other provisions included: the condemnation of forced sterilizations and forced abortions (as is common in China), the condemnation of systematic rape in wartime (as in Bosnia), the condemnation of female genital mutilation (common in African and Muslim countries), the condemnation of domestic violence and sexual harassment, the advocacy of rights of inheritance for females (although not necessarily to the same extent as for males), and the advocacy of banking services for low-income women (New York Times, 9/15/95). Apparently, to some such proposals are really scary.

The Dobson group, once based in Pasadena, is now based in Colorado Springs, Colorado, a city some have mentioned as a possible relocation sight for WCG headquarters. (Recall Tkach's Colorado corporation, discussed above.) In the early '90s Colorado liberalized its tax code to accommodate religious groups (just as California and some other states were tightening their tax laws) and the Economic Development Council of Colorado Springs began to actively recruit evangelical nonprofits to relocate in that area. Colorado Springs has since lured so many Christian fundamentalist organizations to its environs it has become the nation's "capital of the Christian right." The evangelical influx even includes two thousand members of private militias who regularly go on maneuvers in the Colorado Springs area (see "God and Man in Colorado Springs" by Marc Cooper, Utne Reader, May-June 1995, reprinted from The Nation, Jan. 2, 1995).

Speaking of private armies -

For a sense of the continuity of the terrorist tradition in America, consider this actual sequence of events: The FBI smashes a dead-serious plot to overthrow the federal government and reveals that for more than a year the rightwing militias involved were undergoing army-style training, fired up by inflammatory talk radio. They planned to use their bombs, rifles, and machine guns to wage guerrilla warfare on American cities, and they claimed friends and allies in government and the military. They aimed, in one reporter's words, to "bomb selected buildings, seize public utilities, blast bridges, terrorize Jews, appropriate Federal Reserve gold, assassinate fourteen Congressmen, and set up a dictatorship." The goal: to remove all liberal and anti-Christian forces from government, not least the liberal President and his active wife.

This happened in January 1940.

So begins one of the year's most eye-opening articles. An outstanding historical study showing how some things never change, "Home-Grown Terrorism" by Philip Jenkins appears in the Sept. 1995 issue of American Heritage. Those interested in the so-called milita movement will find it a revealing study of the American psyche.

Letters

[A WCG member I know] was so proud of his three grown children when he explained the "new understanding" to them. (The WCG is never wrong, you know. They just have "new understanding.") All three just accepted it without question and immediately put the changes into practice in their lives. I find it scary to see how someone could reverse their thinking just like that. "Oh, this is what we are to believe now. Okay." A bunch of robots with their power of thinking, the free will that God gave them, destroyed....

I am writing to a very depressed ex-member in Colorado. She is having a very hard time coping with what she views as totally wasted years. Because of tithing and the constant pressure to help "the Work" members often did not, and could not, save for retirement or to buy a home. Often they were so limited in career choices. And for what? Now they are told all the sacrifices were not necessary.

Many are baffled by the changes, wondering what to do. I've seen some jump from the frying pan into the fire. One believes Jesus is really the Antichrist. Others are so wrapped up in prophecy they can't cope with life today. I feel sorry for those who will never taste the freedom of having the right to choose, the freedom to make friends with people of all creeds, the freedom to serve God as best as they can without some minister having to give his blessing, or interfering, or making decisions about their life-decisions the minister is often totally unqualified to make.

-Oklahoma

Followers of Chairman Hulme allege that we will soon be keeping Sunday in Worldwide. As proof of this they mention a certain booklet that is being widely studied by the ministry. I was told this was not yet official teaching, but may soon be. I'm getting tired of learning of official doctrines a year or two after they have already been decided upon. How can I get a copy of the booklet?

-California

Editor: The booklet is The Law, the Sabbath and New Testament Christianity by Sir Anthony Buzzard, an Ambassador alumnus and former Ambassador lecturer. It is available for $3 from Restoration Fellowship, 185 Summerville Dr., Brooks, GA 30205.

What ever became of Mr. Michael Snyder, the head of WCG's Public Relations Department and the oft-quoted spokesman for Mr. Tkach? I wrote to headquarters asking about him and they sent a very suspicious answer saying, in effect, they could not answer me. Has he joined one of the Armstrongite offshoots?

-Iowa

Editor: Sources close to Snyder tell us that some time ago he fell in love with a fellow employee's wife who then divorced her husband as Snyder divorced his own mate. The two lovers then married and took off for parts unknown. We have written to Snyder at his old address and sent messages to him via mutual acquaintances, but he has not responded. WCG insiders say he is no longer a member of the WCG and considers them a cult. We do not know if he has joined one of the WCG offshoots.

AR59 was very informative. I have been seeing some of the same things here in my area. My WCG-member ex-wife and others are running around eating shrimp every chance they get now and are probably hoping to get increased support payments from me to pay for it! Now she and her new husband are trying to ADOPT my youngest daughter. Seems the new hubby is shooting blanks and they cannot have any of their own so now they want one of mine! Amazing! More legal fees, like always. I had hoped that eventually this would all end, but there is no end in sight for these divorce problems.

-"No State"

Like you, I noticed in their releases that the United group makes no mention of the divorce and remarriage doctrine, a doctrine that once caused considerable turmoil in WCG circles. Can you tell me if any of the new groups have information on that subject?

-Illinois

Editor: I am not sure which groups are still writing on "D & R, " as it used to be called. While the issue seems to have faded from the spotlight in recent years, one of our readers has done considerable study on it and would be able to tell you who is still writing on that subject. Contact: Glen W. Myers, 1047 Iroquois St., Clearwater, FL 34615.

I thought your little comment linking the WCG to Sardis was meant in jest. But after giving Rev. 3 some thought, I wonder if you are not on to something.

-Texas

Editor: Actually, my allusion to Sardis was only half in jest. While I don't promote the church eras teaching, I think it's obvious that Rev. 1-3 is at least referring to the fact that different churches, whether individual congregations or whole denominations, have different group characteristics. While the WCG has long considered itself Philadelphian (partly because of its "open door" via the electronic media), I find that label preposterous because I don't know of any church group that has been more lacking in genuine love. For years, the Laodicean label seemed to fit - as long as the WCG was wealthy and arrogantly convinced it had all "the truth." But now, with the WCG no longer that wealthy, with so much repudiation of its founding doctrines, and with its members so lacking in confidence in who they are and what they are about, it seems to be a dead church. David Whitaker recently sent us a portion of the book Letters to the Seven Churches by William Barclay (Abingdon Press, 1957). Two of the book's chapters - "Sardis: The Peace of Death." and "Sardis: The Church of the Living Dead" - seem to describe many of the characteristics of today's WCG.

The letter in [AR59] about the U.N. being "the Beast" left me in stitches. I'm sure the writer is a fine fellow, but the idea that the U.N. is "the Beast" is absurd. Yes, I know, many ex-Worldwidiers believe such nonsense. But the U.N. is so ineffectual it can't even stop the fighting in Bosnia. Let me quote from an article by right-wing commentator Tom Bethell: "Consider the imagined U.N. plot to take over the United States. In reality the United Nations is a waning institution, and in the years ahead will probably have to struggle to survive at all.... Militia types would be closer to the truth if they saw the United Nations as a tool of the United States, increasingly used to disguise essentially unilateral U.S. actions (in the Gulf War and Haiti, for example)."

-Washington

Editor: Mr. Bethell's comment that the U.N. may one day have to struggle to survive was more prophetic than he may have realized. According to The New York Times (9/12/95), U.N. General Secretary Boutros Boutros-Ghali says the U.N. is already so broke that "its development funds are drying up, and its field personnel are at risk. " In regard to the latter point, recall that to date about 200 U.N. peacekeepers have been killed in what used to be Yugoslavia. According to the same article, the reason the U.N. is nearing financial ruin is that many member nations are in arrears in their membership payments. "The United States is the worst delinquent, according to U.N. figures, with arrears of nearly $1.8 billion."

The Armstrongism "church wars" have left me turned off with religion, but I still read Mr. Dankenbring's writings because he publishes articles found nowhere else. In his April-May Prophecy Flash! he published an article that shows: "the post-War Nazi Underground had an additional objective: to infiltrate the American Federal Government and use the GOP (Republican Party) as a 'Trojan Horse' to obtain political dominance over the United States of America, and achieve through political channels the conquests envisioned by the Third Reich."

Another article shows how the WCG leadership uses hypnosis to control the minds of its members. The author's very scientific evidence is overwhelming. I think, however, that the Bible itself hypnotizes people with the same methods. That is why I am no longer a Bible thumper.

-Ohio

Editor: I agree with you that the psychology article was very informative. However, let me make two comments. First, while I am sure you are correct that many are misreading and misapplying the Bible to their own detriment, I don't feel, and I am sure the article's author was not suggesting, that one has to be hypnotized by the Bible to learn from it. Second, although I think the author of the article made some astute observations, I think both he (and you) should distinguish hypnosis from mind control. The two are not synonymous and not all hypnosis is used for evil purposes. For pointing this out to me, my thanks to P.E. Nelson of SPAN, P.O. Box 137, Ceres, NY 14721-0137.

By the way, I agree that Dankenbring publishes articles that can be found nowhere else. In the same April-May issue of "The Flash" there was a piece titled "A Letter From the Future" in which Dankenbring vividly describes the utter horror he expects will be experienced by unrepentant Worldwide members when, in the near future, the government will supposedly start rounding up Sabbath keepers and executing their ministers. The address for "The Flash" is: P.O. Box 292, Altadena, CA 91003.

I have been reading materials put out by many of the WCG spinoff groups. I have noticed that in the last year many of the writers have gotten weird beyond anything I could have imagined. All this talk of black helicopters coming to take away Christians is a bit much for me.

There is a pattern to all these nutty new groups - a pattern, I might add, that was the key to Herbert Armstrong's success. First, they interpret the news in the most extreme way. This leads to their readers becoming very fearful, even paranoid. Second, they offer their readers a simple solution to their fears - pray and, naturally, pay. Third, they emphasize the uniqueness of their own ministry so they can have a monopoly over their followers' minds and tithes. Finally, by barraging their followers with tons of "literature" and through the use of mind control techniques they encourage their followers to be dependent on them. What we are witnessing in many of these groups is purposely created dependency or co-dependency. Didn't someone once liken this world's religions to a drug?

-Pennsylvania

Editor: I believe you are referring to the famous statement of Karl Marx that "religion is the opiate of the people." However, that analogy was not his creation. See, for example, Rev. 17:2.

No [WCG] minister is saying we can't ever read the book of Revelation. But we are not to make that the center of our life anymore. The Gospel is not centered on "heads and horns." Some who have left us could not understand that. The church is much better off now than when Mr. Armstrong was emphasizing the wrong things. Please give Mr. Tkach and his loyal ministers some credit.

As for those who are calling Mr. Tkach the Antichrist, I think they are coming very close to blaspheming the Holy Spirit.

-Georgia

As the late Herbert W. Armstrong did, I appreciate great music. For that reason, I was appalled to read what Mr. Hulme programmed for the last Ambassador concert. Jazz is fine for many occasions, but that was certainly not the kind of music befitting such auspicious and calamitous times in God's very own church. More appropriate for the final concert would have perhaps been Andre Watts performing Olivier Messiaen's entire Vingt regards sur l'enfant-Jesus. At the end of the Third Reich, as the Allied armies encircled Berlin and cannon fire could be heard in the distance, the great German maestro Wilhelm Furtwangler led the Berlin Philharmonic in its last Nazi-era concert. The final piece? Wagner's Prelude to Die Gotterdammerung ("The Twilight of the Gods"). That choice revealed a profound awareness of historical moment and a courageous theatrical flair on the part of Furtwangler. Producer Hulme, on the other hand, revealed a personality that is truly dull, dull, dull.

-New York

Editor: I've heard that story about Furtwangler before, but I believe it's apocryphal. Nevertheless, you are probably right that a more imaginative program could have been concocted for Ambassador's swan song. For instance, the last concert at Ambassador could have included Prometheus, the Poem of Fire by the Russian composer Alexander Scriabin (d. 1915) who, while preoccupied with the purifying aspects of fire, promoted an artistic philosophy he called "the Mystery" and waited for what he called "The New World Order." The concert could have included Jubilee Games, the last major composition by Leonard Bernstein, the late, brilliant, bi-sexual, conductor-composer. In that piece Bernstein took as his literary theme the Jubilee Year of the Old Testament. Building on Gematria concepts centered on the number seven, Bernstein created a piece where, Jazz-like, the members of the orchestra are given spaces of time in which each can play whatever comes into his/her mind. The results of this Jubilee "freedom" are, of course, quite cacophonous. While already dated in these "postmodern" times, the piece is, nonetheless, quite entertaining - just like the new WCG.

Here's another idea. As its going-away gala, Ambassador could have sponsored a performance of Meyerbeer's opera Les Huguenots. Set in 16th Century France when Catholics and Protestants were busy slaughtering each other in the name of God, the action centers on the "ethnic cleansing" of the infamous St. Bartholomew Day Massacre of 1572. On that day in Paris the conservative (or were they liberal?) Catholics slaughtered 2,000 liberal (or were they conservative?) Huguenots. Composer Meyerbeer captured the essence of that family-splitting, nation-rending era in an opera of grand spectacle and excess. Had Ambassador staged it, the final production would have been reflective of both the excesses of Herbert W. Armstrong and the religious schisms that have destroyed the Ambassador concerts themselves.

By the way, after the Ambassador concert series came to an end, the WCG produced and distributed a lavish, full-color brochure about how great their twenty-year concert series had been. Many leading Pasadena-area residents could not understand why, if the series had run out of finances, its managers would waste so much money in praising themselves to a public all too familiar with their past glories. Strange.

Come to think of it, maybe the last concert should have just been a few songs by the new rock group Elijah's Mantle.

I've been a WCG member since 1960.... At the present time we are down from 250 to 150 in our congregation. But I do like the fuller understanding we are receiving of the new covenant.

-Florida

I recently visited the Concord, New Hampshire WCG congregation after having left two and a half years ago. I just wanted to see some old friends and find out what they thought about all of the recent doctrinal changes. To my surprise, nobody there seemed to realize that the doctrines had changed to any great extent. I quoted several recent Worldwide News articles about various changes but all they did was smile. A deacon told me he doesn't always read the Worldwide News. He and everyone I spoke to seemed as brainwashed as they were the day I left. The sermon was a taped message from Greg Albrecht who clearly indicated that sabbath observance was not required for Christians today. Nobody I spoke with afterwards seemed to have heard or understood this. All they wanted to talk about was how wonderful the church and its leaders in Pasadena are. When I commented that there seemed to be many fewer people in attendance (weekly attendance was about 275 when I left; now it's about 100) I was told that many people were traveling due to the Memorial Day holiday. I guess the old saying is true-ignorance is bliss!

Years ago, Mr. Armstrong put out a booklet on tithing. The basic idea was that if one tithed God would "open up the windows of Heaven" and shower down prosperity and well being. Well, when I became a WCG member I soon saw that many of the members were very poor. Now I look back on those times and realize that the entire WCG and most of its members, instead of being blessed by God, were actually cursed.

We should ask ourselves why that is so. Here are four possibilities. (1) Mr. Tkach has admitted that under Mr. Armstrong the WCG was "Judaizing." In Galatians 1:8 it clearly states that those who do so are under a curse. So that is one possibility. (2) In Jer. 48:10 it says, "Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully...." Can you think of a group that has been involved in more spiritual deceit than the WCG? (3) It is now well known that many top WCG ministers, including Mr. Armstrong, were guilty of terrible sex sins. Yet, the people [of the church] continued to give them tithes and thus ignored Jesus' warning of Matt. 7:6 (and recall that in the Bible "dogs" often refers to homosexuals). The people [of the WCG] gave "God's tithes" to those they should have seen were not exhibiting the fruits of the Spirit. The people were actually supporting an anti-Christ church and anti-Christ ministers. How could God bless them? Finally, (4) even though there have been so many terrible sins within the ministry, there continue to be coverups of the problems. The Tkachs, Flurry, GTA, Meredith, and Hulme have all been guilty of this type of lying to the people which is completely contrary to scripture. On this last point, you may be interested in an article that appeared in the Jan.-Feb. 1989 issue of YNCA Light: "What to Do When a Minister Is No Longer Blameless." The address is Yahweh's New Covenant Assembly, P.O. Box 50, Kingdom City, MO 65262. Incidentally, that article showed right out of the Bible that, contrary to what Tkach Jr. and others say, you folks at the Report were biblically correct all along in exposing the sins of the WCG ministry. Keep up the good - and scripturally commanded - work!

What Next?

We go to press only days after the burial of Joseph W. Tkach. Yet, already there is an escalating craziness in the WCG. Insiders say that at headquarters there is now a flood of suspicion and rumor. Questions being whispered in the hallways include: Will Little Joe and Fez soon be writing a comprehensive exposé of the life of Herbert W. Armstrong? With most of the WCG offshoots claiming they are heirs to HWA's legacy, that seems quite possible. Will Dorothy Mattson finally reveal publicly the details of her sexual abuse by her father Herbert W. Armstrong? If Worldwide decides to discontinue what benefits she receives from her father's old organization, she may find there is no longer any reason to keep still about the past. Will Ellen Escat be writing her own exposé about the Tkachs, both Senior and Junior? Neither Senior's widow nor Little Joe are all that keen about sweet Ellen. Insiders say it's likely they will cut off her special benefits. If that happens, who knows? Ellen may embark on a writing career.

The next few months should prove interesting. We will do our best to keep you informed - as our finances allow. Our thanks to all of you who are supporting our efforts. Without that support Ambassador Report would not be possible.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

March 1996 (AR61)

Tkach Jr. Downsizes WCG

With the death of Worldwide Church of God (WCG) Pastor General Joseph Tkach Sr., his son and successor Joseph Tkach Jr. has taken over an organization in doctrinal disarray, with low morale, and with financial problems so severe many wonder if it will make it through the current year. Founded by former advertising man Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA), who died in 1986, the WCG was once thought of as "the Armstrong empire." While spiritual and moral problems abounded, the organization HWA left to his successors nevertheless had doctrinal cohesiveness, financial strength, and a strong media outreach. Now, all of that is gone. The most recent developments in Worldwide suggest that Tkach Jr. (Junior) may not be able to save what looks like a rapidly disintegrating operation. Here are just a few of the most recent WCG developments:

With the passing of Tkach Sr., Junior has started making important personnel changes at headquarters. Apparently the first to go was Mrs. Ellen Escat, once the elder Tkach's "executive assistant." Headquarters sources tell us she was quietly "let go." Where she has gone and how much severance and/or pension she received is not known at this time.

Then in early March the WCG reduced the number of its full-time employees by 287. That major cuts were coming had been publicly announced weeks before (Pasadena Star-News, 2/21/96, p. A1). But until they came no one knew for sure how extensive the cutbacks would be. At headquarters some departments were cut by more than half. Other departments, such as Shipping & Receiving and the Transportation Department, were completely eliminated. Even the corporate jet was finally sold off a few weeks ago. The Legal Department lost 12 of its staff and is now composed of only Ralph Helge and two subordinates. Imperial School will close at the end of the current school year. And the YOU program for the church's young people is being dropped ostensibly because church kids can now go to sporting events on the Sabbath. How many of the church's remaining 239 full-time ministers around the nation were let go in the latest round of cuts is not yet known. As for headquarters, just last year the WCG cut 358 of its 700 headquarters employees. At the beginning of this year there were only 342 full-time headquarters employees left (Los Angeles Times, 2/21/96, p. B4). Some WCG observers say that the WCG administration team may now be down to as few as 125 full-time employees. And still many are saying that there are more cuts on the way. Not surprisingly, WCG income is very, very low. One source told us that the WCG is receiving only about $100,000 in tithes per day. Virtually everyone we talked to with any inside knowledge of the situation has said that WCG income is under $40 million per year now. There are many sabbatarian ministries that operate on considerably less than that, but it remains to be seen if the WCG's leaders, so used to giant financial cash flows, will be able to lead the WCG on such relatively low revenues.

The much lowered church income has resulted in major changes in the way the WCG gets out its gospel. The Plain Truth magazine's editorial content is more Protestant with each issue. Its circulation continues to shrink. The magazine comes out only every other month. Many foreign countries do not even get the PT anymore. Already the WCG says it is willing to accept paid advertising in the PT and some insiders predict that within the year it is quite likely that the PT itself will have a subscription price. The WCG is already charging for some of its materials. One recent advertisement for a video and booklet on evolution asked for $25 "or more." And a new music video by Pat Boone called "Israel, O Blessed Israel" goes for "a gift of $30 or more." As the ad said, "When you order products offered in the Plain Truth magazine, you help us to continue to announce Jesus Christ's gospel of salvation...." We don't condemn the practice of asking a minimum amount for certain items, but it does represent another major deviation from the marketing methods of HWA.

Then there is the Pasadena real estate problem. Just this past fall Junior was telling members two serious offers for the sale of the church's Pasadena, California properties were being considered and that it was likely the WCG would accept one of them. But in December Junior announced that all offers to purchase the properties had fallen through. Few details were made public. But insiders have admitted that sale of the properties that have long been the church's headquarters and were formerly the main campus of Ambassador College and the home of the famous Ambassador Auditorium, was necessary if the WCG was to be able to keep functioning in a normal business manner.

Who is actually selling the Pasadena properties remains unclear. According to the Los Angeles Business Journal (1/15/96) four major commercial brokerage teams have been vying for the account: CB Commercial Real Estate Group Inc. and Beitler Commercial Realty Services, both of Los Angeles, New York-based Cushman & Wakefield Inc., and San Francisco's Grubb & Ellis Co. As we go to press we have been told that Junior is still undecided about who should be representing them and has not even decided how the properties should be listed.

Tkach Jr. is determined to dump the Pasadena properties, but where WCG headquarters will eventually wind up remains to be seen. Virtually every month there is a new location considered as the likely choice. For a time Albuquerque, New Mexico was at the top of Junior's list. Then Colorado was a top consideration with the cities of Boulder and Colorado Springs being specifically mentioned. Then just a few months ago it seemed like Big Sandy, Texas would be the place. Lately, Junior is said to have been talking about Palm Springs. Some are beginning to question his business sense, or lack thereof, and others are suspicious that Palm Springs may be where Junior winds up in comfortable retirement. By then, however, there may be no WCG left. One embittered former headquarters employee said, "Mr. Herbert Armstrong thought big; Little Joe thinks small - very small."

HWA's Billion Dollar Mistake

Editor: One of our Ambassador alumni readers in Pasadena recently made a very astute observation about the decline of the WCG:

Evangelist Les McCullough, who a few months ago left the WCG and is now with United, has told friends a very revealing story about Joe Tkach Sr. Apparently when Tkach first decided to sell off the church's Pasadena headquarters properties he hoped to get $250 million for the entire package. The California properties were put on the market in 1990 and very quickly an unnamed businessman offered to buy the properties for $240 million. So amazed was Tkach that he would get an offer that large so soon, he began thinking that the properties were probably worth much more. The offer was rejected and the properties were then listed at $300 million.

Tkach's timing could not have been worse. The California economy, in decline since mid-1989, was seeing real estate prices decline and they have continued to do so until today. Additionally, many California institutions such as colleges have been having difficulty just staying afloat; none seem interested in engaging in expansion schemes. No one nibbled at Tkach's $300 million asking price. While a few organizations showed mild curiosity with the properties, no one indicated they would ever be willing to pay anywhere near the kind of money the Tkach administration was expecting.

A few months ago, desperate for cash, the Tkach team recontacted the businessman who years ago had offered the $240 million. If he were now to make an offer on the properties, they wanted to know, how much did he think they would be worth? His answer? "If I were buying now I would pay no more than $95 million. But I am no longer interested in buying."

Tkach's decision to turn down the original $240 million offer cost the church about $150 million. But his incredible financial miscalculations didn't end there. Consider that at the height of its financial power in 1990 the WCG's annual income was over $211 million. Now, we are told, it is going to be under $40 million per year. That's a decline of well over $160 million per year. Multiply that out for just the next six or seven years and you quickly realize that when Herbert Armstrong appointed Joe Tkach as his successor, it was clearly a billion dollar mistake.

Christmas and Easter Take Root In the New WCG

With Tkach Junior and associates telling WCG members it's okay to keep Christmas, it is not surprising that this past December quite a few WCG members went "whole hog" and got themselves Christmas trees and were out singing Christmas carols. To prod the WCG field ministry into accepting the new view of the holiday once condemned as "totally pagan," Tkach suggested to his field ministers that they read the concise 59-page book Christmas - Reconsidered by Ralph Woodrow, an independent evangelist based in Riverside, California.

Now with Easter off the WCG condemnation list some at WCG headquarters are recommending Woodrow's 64-page book Easter - Is It Pagan? Writes Woodrow in one of his flyers:

There is no Biblical command to observe Easter. This does not make it wrong. In the Old Testament, in addition to the days that were kept by command, a number are mentioned that were kept by custom.

Ralph Woodrow's writings are fairly well known in WCG circles because for many years he held numerous positions that were similar to those of HWA. In recent years, however, not unlike the Tkachs, Woodrow has come to believe that he had been in error on a number of doctrines and he has changed a number of his previous positions. His recent writings on Christmas and Easter show a high level of biblical understanding and many - even those who do not agree with his conclusions - will find much of value in those two books. Those interested can order them for a contribution of $4 for the Christmas subject and $5 for the one on Easter by writing to: Ralph Woodrow, P.O. Box 124, Riverside, CA 92502-0124. For an alternative view on the subject of Christmas, an article worth reading is "The Great Christmas Exchange" by Kenneth Westby. It's available from The Association for Christian Development, 4449 S. Star Rd., Auburn, WA 98001; tel. 206-859-1917.

Incidentally, it should not be assumed that just because Tkach and Co. will not prohibit their followers from observing certain holidays that they condone all pagan practices once observed on those days. For instance, the WCG position now is that although it is okay to use a pagan holiday calendar date to worship Jesus, it would be wrong to engage in child sacrifice on those days (WN, 11/14/95, p. 12). Having come to suspect that the WCG really has made some basic changes in its teachings, a few members have begun to ask if other "pagan" holidays will later be accepted by the WCG's leadership. One clue is found in an e-mail memo Junior sent to certain WCG field ministers back in early 1995. It contained this interesting comment:

Halloween, on the other hand, we do not endorse, and we teach our members that it is best avoided. However, we are not ignorant of the fact that Halloween has become for most people, a merely secular holiday. We don't police what our members choose to do in regard to trick-or-treat with their children.

Tkach, Jr. has yet to address the question of April Fool's Day.

Services Reveal Worldwide's New Spirit

Many who have been out of the WCG a few years would be dumbfounded by a trip back to the WCG for a church service. In February a long-time friend, still on the WCG books as a member, was visiting Pasadena and decided to attend sabbath services at WCG headquarters. This was the "Auditorium P.M." service, the WCG's only remaining headquarters congregation (declining membership has obliterated the Auditorium A.M., Imperial A.M., and Imperial P.M. congregations). Upon entering the Auditorium our friend was given an Order of Service handout - the type that is virtually standard in all Protestant churches:

Today in Pasadena

Along with the above Order of Service program were some printed announcements: The extreme changes in the WCG have caused so many members to have emotional problems that the headquarters congregation now has a couple of professional psychologists heading "process group" sessions that will discuss "aspects of adjustment: Loss - Betrayal - Grief - Fear." "The cost will be $10 per person with 8-10 people per group." The "International Festival" applications are now available. The Imperial School Drama Club is doing a production of The Nerd, a comedy by Larry Schure. (Back in December the Ambassador Drama Club at Ambassador University performed Shakespeare's Much Ado About Nothing.) The Imperial Junior High boys' basketball team was set to be playing Benton Middle School at the Los Angeles Sports Arena. "Discipleship classes" (whatever those are) have begun. For "spiritual recharging" WCG employees now attend a Wednesday morning "Chapel Service" at headquarters. There are now WCG "Women's Prayer Groups" and a "Women Helping Women In Crisis" group (members could sign up at "the Women's Ministry table in the Lobby"). The Women's Ministry is also hosting a "Self-Defense course for females 12 years old and up." Finally, The Serendipity New Testament For Groups is being sold by the WCG for only $10 - at the Women's Ministry table.

One final anecdote on this topic. A former WCG member who had been out a few years heard about the changes and was curious as to what was going on. He decided to see for himself and made a trip to Pasadena to attend headquarters services. Afterward, in a state of near disbelief at the magnitude of the changes, he told one of our long-time friends, "Everyone was very happy-happy. It was like being at one of the old Tammy Faye-Jim Bakker TV parties."

Tkach & Co. Align With Cult Fighters

One of the most amazing recent developments in the WCG has been its acceptance among many mainline and evangelical organizations, churches, and theologians. Among those who have sung the WCG's praises in recent months are David Neff, Executive Editor of Christianity Today; Bob Ricker, President of the Baptist General Conference; Richard J. Mouw, President of Fuller Seminary; Rev. George Mather, Pastor of the Sherman Oaks (Calif.) Lutheran Church (Worldwide News, 12/5/95, p. 10); Dr. James Kennedy of Coral Ridge Ministries (co-worker letter of 1/29/69), and H. B. London Jr., Vice President of Ministry Outreach for James C. Dobson's Focus on the Family. Mr. London spoke at WCG headquarters on Oct. 27 and his taped message has been distributed to the WCG's field ministry (WN, 11/14/95, p. 11). Then there is well-known Christian theologian and author Ruth Tucker who has gotten so enamored of the WCG, this past Nov. 9 she spoke at Ambassador University.

Even more remarkable is the close relationship that has blossomed between the WCG's top leaders and the Christian Research Institute (CRI), for decades one of the country's leading cult fighting organizations. CRI was founded by the late cult fighter Walter Martin who in his famous book Kingdom of the Cults devoted no small amount of space to attacking HWA and his church. But CRI's current president, Hendrik (Hank) Hanegraaff, over the last few years developed a close and warm working relationship with the Tkachs and with PT editor Greg Albrecht. So close is the relationship that in his office Tkach Jr. has a photo of Hanegraaff and himself hugging each other. And in his October 6 "Dear Co-laborer" letter Hanegraaff makes the claim that CRI played a major role in the WCG's transition into an "orthodox" Christian church. The claim may not be an exaggeration. Hanegraaff has had both Junior and Albrecht on at least three broadcasts of his radio program The Bible Answer Man. The broadcasts were genuine mutual-back-scratching lovefests. Then in the winter 1996 issue of CRI's magazine Christian Research Journal, there appeared an article by Tkach Jr. entitled "A Church Reborn" and, you guessed it, it's all about the born again WCG. Said a member of one of the WCG's breakaway groups, "Who could have ever imagined that one day the head of the WCG would be supporting an organization that is actively persecuting sabbath keepers loyal to the teachings of Mr. Herbert Armstrong? It's mind boggling!" The Hanegraaff letter, the Tkach article, and most especially the three cassette tapes of the radio broadcasts with Tkach Jr. and Albrecht being interviewed and taking calls from both fans and critics are all most enlightening. Although transcripts of the broadcast are circulating in WCG circles, nothing can compare with listening to the melting tones on the tapes. We recommend them for anyone wanting to really understand the new spirit in the WCG. The written materials and the cassette tapes (the three tapes are $18) may be ordered by writing The Christian Research Institute, P.O. ## Ron Dart and Texas Whores Reject GTA - But True Fans Stand by Their Man

In our last issue we reported on evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong's latest sex scandal and our suspicion that GTA was probably going to get away scot-free. In early October all the information we had been given suggested that GTA and his lawyers had been able to do a fairly good job of damage control. Soon after AR60 appeared, we learned from some within Church of God International (CGI) that GTA was telling people that our report was "all lies" and that although something did happen at a massage parlor (!), it was in Tyler, Texas, not Oklahoma. While we had been led to believe that the incident took place in Oklahoma (apparently at the time we were contacted, the woman's representatives were trying to shield her from reporters' inquiries), GTA's explanation struck us as akin to a murder suspect defending himself by arguing, "Lies, all lies! I'm 100% not guilty. It was a nine-inch knife not a seven-inch knife! You can't trust the press."

On October 29, soon after AR60 was mailed, Evangelist Ronald Dart, for many years GTA's right hand man, sent a letter to all his "friends and brethren in the CGI." The letter began:

After much prayer and soul searching, I have come to see that it is God's will for me to make a change in the direction of my ministry. I will try to explain.

A couple of weeks ago, I had another episode of cardiac arrhythmia. I saw my doctor, had an EKG, and discussed a change in medication with him. His conclusion was that the episode had been brought on by stress. This episode made me think very seriously about my future effectiveness to God and the Church. I know that He will sustain me, but He also expects me to use common sense.

At the same time, the church at large (we in the CGI do not believe we are all there is to the church) has suffered shattering blows. I have called this the age of confusion, and the church has lamentably not been immune....

[Dart, giving no details, hinted that he intended to serve in some type of independent ministry, then concluded:] I sincerely hope to maintain a warm and friendly relationship with the CGI in the years to come, but (and I do not use this expression lightly) God has shown me it is time to move on.

In a Nov. 2 letter to his "Fellow Ministers and Hosts" GTA put his own spin on the situation. Giving considerable emphasis to the severity of Dart's heart problems, GTA wrote how Dart still hoped to continue teaching, but that his medical problems required that he be "out from under stress as much as possible."

News of Dart's resignation stunned and angered many in CGI. Some accused him of only wanting a following and increased income. Some saw his wife's thriving business, Academy Books, which distributes books to a number of churches, as part of a less-than-kosher conspiracy. For example, CGI member and insider Darren M. Cary wrote Dart a lengthy letter which contained these statements:

First of all, the incident GTA was involved in is a terrible blow to the church. He knows it, we know it, everybody knows it. But I believe it is not a fatal blow. In fact, I am confident that the situation will blow over without consequences too great to bear.

Nevertheless, it did hurt. But then came the phantom punch: Ronald Dart Resigns From CGI. You of all people know that this is big news. It cannot be played down....

I don't buy the idea that people are less receptive to you because of your involvement with us. You know very well that you are famous among those of the "Armstrong tradition." Your sermon tapes have absolutely flooded the "market" around the world. Global, United, Christian Biblical, etc. members and refugees feed on your preaching. And that's not to omit Christian computer buffs being shaken by your Internet ministry. This was all done while being in the CGI - free of charge.

These people may question your motives if they find that you are charging a price for the same information....

You said you obtained the rights to your tapes and written material, but that we could use them, too. Who's going to ask, "Hmmm, should I pay five bucks - plus shipping and handling - or should I get them from CGI?" I realize that Academy Books has a considerable customer list. That's great....

But there are plenty of support/therapy/outreach ministries trying to help ex-WCGers. We don't need any more....

Such arguments did not prompt Dart to return to the Armstrong fold. With only his wife Allie, former CGI minister Larry S. Watkins, and a few others assisting him, by early December Dart had started his new organization, Christian Educational Ministries (CEM), P.O. Box 560, Whitehouse, Texas 75791; tel. 903-509-2999. Using the already well-established mailing list of Academy Books, by mid-December Dart had out a co-worker style letter that explained his goals. One interesting comment was:

Rather than creating a new centralized church with government and power, we have concluded it is time to leave off the debate about "church government" and turn instead to service and work. What we visualize is a network of small, self governed churches assisted and supported by a service ministry which can provide the things a small church cannot do for itself - things that will enable the church to be more effective in its own community.

Dart is a skilled writer and effective preacher. Author David Robinson used to frequently say, for instance, that of all the ministers WCG produced, Dart may have been the best at educating his listeners. Since that introductory mailing, Dart has produced other writings and tapes and has begun a periodical called CEM Network Newsletter. The first issue which appeared in early January was devoted to the subject of how to set up your own church. One CGI insider says GTA is furious about what Dart is doing. No wonder. CEM's mailing list is already past the 2000 mark, CEM has merged with Academy Books, a number of former WCG, CGI, and UCG ministers have expressed support for Dart's ministry, and Dart has even begun doing a weekly radio program called Born To Win. We hope his weak heart holds up.

At about the same time that Dart was setting up CEM, GTA was fully engaged in setting up a defense against the sex scandal's growing notoriety. He concocted a very colorful scenario about how he had a back problem from sports injuries and innocently responded to an ad for therapeutic massage. On the Internet, GTA loyalist Charles Martin of Fort Worth spread this version of what happened:

GTA's mistake was not stopping the woman. No sexual intercourse occurred, as is bared out by the videotape [huh? - ed.]. The massage parlor then attempted to blackmail GTA with the tape and GTA turned over the incident to the FBI. It turns out that the parlor was the cover for an extortion ring that specialized in blackmailing ministers. GTA presented all of this, including the videotape, to the Board of Trustees along with his resignation. The only Board member to accept the resignation was Ron Dart. GTA then turned around and offered to only do the broadcast and leave the administrative duties to someone else, namely Ron Dart. This was refused (uncertain as to who refused, board or Ron Dart or both). Once the article in the Ambassador Report came out, Ron Dart resigned.

We have good reason to believe that the claim that GTA showed the video tape of himself in action to the CGI board is not true. In fact, we do not believe he even had access to the tape back then. And knowledgeable sources have indicated that GTA has refused to even look at the tape since. Nevertheless, many of his followers accepted his version as gospel truth.

On November 23, however, the doo-doo really hit the fan. Beginning on that date many newspapers and television stations around the country ran an AP story that verified that

GTA was now being sued in a sex scandal. The best report of the AP data that we saw had the headline, "Sex Suit Names TV Evangelist - Garner Ted Armstrong Denies Nurse's Accusations." The Jim Schultz article appeared in the Houston Chronicle:

DALLAS-A woman filed a lawsuit in Tyler on Wednesday accusing television evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong of sexual assault and demanding money damages from both him and his religious organization, the Church of God, International.

Armstrong denied the allegations in a written statement from his office in Flint, near Tyler. Soon after Armstrong's statement was released Wednesday afternoon, a spokesman for the Church of God, International told Associated Press that Armstrong had severed his official relationship with the church. Church executive Charles Groce gave the date of Armstrong's resignation as Nov. 11.

Suerae Robertson, described in the state district court suit as a licensed vocational nurse in Tyler, accused Armstrong, 64, of making lewd demands and trying to force her to fulfill them during two massage sessions in July. Her attorney, John C. Osborne of Houston, had emphasized in statements to reporters Tuesday, before the suit was formally filed, that Armstrong's religious organization would be a prime target of the suit and the demand for damages. "His church knew or should have known that he was a loose cannon," Osborne said.

Groce told the AP late Wednesday that Armstrong stepped aside Nov. 11 as head of the Church of God, International and his weekly television program, which is carried nationally by cable and about 30 stations. "He has voluntarily removed himself from the ministerial and ecclesiastical activities of this ministry," Groce said, adding that Armstrong could return in the future. No successor was immediately appointed, he said.

Robertson, 48, alleges that Armstrong began to visit her home in March for massage therapy after she ran a newspaper advertisement for her services. According to the suit, Armstrong "insisted that he receive his therapy in complete nudity" and that Robertson "concentrate her therapy on the area of his groin, lower back, inner thighs and buttocks because of stiffness he purportedly felt from his driving."

During a July 4 session, Armstrong's behavior became "increasingly bizarre," the suit says. The lawsuit alleges that Armstrong said he needed some "relief," grabbed Robertson's breasts and genitals and tried to bite her breasts. Then, according to the lawsuit, he put her in a head lock and tried to force her head toward his genitals, but she broke free and fled the room. Armstrong allegedly told Robertson that "his execution of the Lord's work was so vital that any transgression on his part would be overlooked by God." She then secretly videotaped Armstrong's behavior during the next session, on July 15, which led to the lawsuit.

Robertson seeks unspecified damages from Armstrong and his church, claiming she has suffered severe emotional distress and mental anguish because of the evangelist's alleged actions. "She is unable to work," said Osborne. "She is under psychiatric care as a result of his actions."

A statement faxed to the Chronicle and signed by Armstrong said: "The allegations of sexual assault are totally false. The proper forum for proving that these accusations are false is in the courts."

Armstrong's two-paragraph statement also said, "The people making these accusations against me are under investigation by federal, state and local authorities." A spokesman for the U.S. attorney in Beaumont said Wednesday he was unaware of any charges pending against Robertson. A spokesman for the Tyler Police Department said he had no information at all about Robertson and was unfamiliar with her name.

Groce, speaking for Armstrong, declined to elaborate on the charges that Robertson is under investigation. He said Armstrong was traveling Wednesday and was not available for any comment beyond the statement itself.

As horrible as the above description may seem, it is quite mild when compared to the actual complaint. Here is one excerpt:

During these therapy sessions, Plaintiff discovered that Armstrong was actually a minister and a televangelist. At that point, Plaintiff and Armstrong began conversations regarding religion. Further, Armstrong stated that he was the head of Church of God, International, and that Plaintiff should come and join his church. Still further, Armstrong, acting individually and on behalf of Church of God, International, began to minister to the Plaintiff regarding religion and the teachings of his church. Among other things, Armstrong, individually and on behalf of Church of God, International, stated that his church observed the sabbath, Old Testament kosher and dietary laws and that he himself was sent by God to do his work in a similar fashion to that of King David....

During Armstrong's therapy sessions, his behavior would become increasingly bizarre. During the massage therapy/ministering sessions, Armstrong would begin to fondle his genitals and try to place Plaintiff's hands on his genitals while he would minister to Plaintiff. [This is one method of spreading the Gospel we have never heard of before - ed.] Plaintiff would resist and felt extremely apprehensive as Armstrong's masturbatory actions and religious conversation combined with his tattoos, including that of a naked woman on his body would greatly frighten her...

On or about July 4, 1995, Armstrong came in for a scheduled therapy session. Upon his arrival, Armstrong stripped naked and placed himself upon the therapy table. Plaintiff entered the massage room, the parties engaged in general conversation and Plaintiff commenced the therapy session. Immediately, Armstrong's actions were more aggressive than any of his previous therapy sessions. Armstrong began to fondle his own genitals and wanted the Plaintiff to rub massage oil on his penis. Plaintiff declined and became extremely frightened when she discovered the smell of alcohol on defendant Armstrong's breath....

[Editor: I am omitting a section that follows because of its very graphic detailing of GTA's violent behavior. The essence was discreetly covered in the Houston Chronicle article quoted earlier.]

Within a short time of the assault of Plaintiff by Armstrong on July, 4, 1995, Armstrong began to call the Plaintiff and apologize to the Plaintiff profusely. Armstrong stated that the entire incident was a complete misunderstanding and that he hoped that he could continue receiving massage therapy from her and that he could continue ministering to her. Thereafter, Plaintiff set up another appointment between the two for service on July 15, 1995. Armstrong showed up for his scheduled appointment on July 15, 1995 and again apologized for the earlier assault...

Amazingly, right after apologizing GTA stripped naked and within minutes there was an almost identical rerun of the sexual assault of the previous visit! Again, the masseuse was violently and sexually abused, but again through much effort was able to break free:

Plaintiff resisted, left the therapy room and did not return. Thereafter, Armstrong masturbated until ejaculation, dressed and left the premises. Plaintiff has never spoken to Armstrong since and will not schedule Armstrong for any appointment ever again.

The horrible incident of July 15 was the one captured on video tape. We have spoken to some who have seen it and they assure us it most graphically reveals GTA as a genuine "sexual predator." It has recently been rumored that dupes of the tape are now circulating in church circles and are even being sold. We will provide further details in our next issue.

In spite of the seriousness of the charges against GTA, a good number of GTA loyalists are standing by their man. For a very short time GTA ostensibly "stepped down" from his title as President of CGI, but clearly he still remained head of the main Armstrong family business, The Garner Ted Armstrong Evangelistic Association. In a Dec. 1 letter from GTA to his "friends and subscribers," written under the Association's name and logo, the televangelist made no mention of the scandal that has made headlines nationwide. Instead, he wrote of the past glories of his and his beloved father's old World Tomorrow and offered his fans a tape of some of that program's decades-old highlights. Then in a co-worker letter sent out Dec. 5 on CGI letterhead GTA reassured his followers that "everything continues as before." He said CGI's work had not been hampered by the recent crisis, that his television program was still going out and that he would soon tape a program on "The Mark of the Beast." But then in the very same letter he stated, "After lengthy consultations with members of the board of directors, and after much thought and prayer, I felt I should resign from all corporate responsibilities during this time of crisis, until this situation has been resolved." A few days later CGI ministers were claiming that GTA resigned on Dec. 7 (was he reinstated after his Nov. 11 resignation?), but that he remained a CGI minister in good standing. CGI spokesmen claimed that its operations were then being directed by an executive committee composed of Charles Groce, Guy Carnes, Ian Hufton, Benny Sharp, and Vance Stinson. All five were viewed as dyed-in-the-wool GTA loyalists.

Then on Monday, Dec. 11, more doo-doo. The nationally syndicated television news program Inside Edition broadcast a segment on the GTA sex scandal. The program had clips of GTA's television program with the televangelist arguing for the death penalty and quoting Jesus who said, "Why call ye me Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say?" What followed was an interview with Mrs. Robertson at the scene of the incident. Frequently drying tears from her eyes, and once having to ask for a break to regain her composure, the obviously distraught nurse told how on the morning of the fourth of July, she unexpectedly got a call from GTA who then showed up at her home at nine o'clock "obviously intoxicated." The nurse explained how during his therapy Armstrong unexpectedly sat up on the table and then pushed her up against the wall and began to sexually assault her. After a brief struggle, she ran and hid. In the days that followed she was petrified with fear, she said, because of GTA's local influence and power: She called a lawyer and private investigator who advised her to secretly video tape Armstrong should he show up at her home again. She did so when he showed up a few days later for a repeat performance.

But even more allegations followed, this time from Mary Irby, a local salon owner who said that she once employed two masseuses who had received similar abuse from Armstrong. Said Irby, "It's common knowledge in my industry about this situation."

Apparently, with the sex scandal growing more well known every day, by mid December GTA was facing increased questioning by his own ministry. On Dec. 19, Mr. Tom Justus, a longtime minister, resigned from CGI's ministerial council, saying the CGI's leadership was failing to face the truth of its predicament and that although some thought things would some day quiet down, things would never again be business as usual for the CGI. Mr. Justus continues to pastor his congregation in Springdale, Arkansas but what his future relationship with CGI will be is unclear. His departure from the council followed that of Ron Dart a few weeks previous and that of Desmond Burke earlier.

At about the same time as Justus was resigning, Thalia Hufton, the wife of CGI minister and mail department manager Ian Hufton, was doing her own investigation. She talked to a number of Tyler area masseuses who told her that, yes, indeed, Garner Ted Armstrong had been one of their regulars and that he had a reputation for violent behavior. Mr. Hufton tried to confront GTA with the allegations "brother to brother" but was rebuffed. When Hufton and his wife began circulating a letter to the CGI ministry in an effort to get CGI to repent of its coverup of the GTA scandal, he was fired on Jan. 17. (Note: Hufton's mailing address is Rt. 2, Box 114, Hawkins, TX 75765; tel. 903-769- 3520.) Justus and Hufton then organized a meeting of concerned CGI ministers in Dallas, Texas on Feb. 9-10. By then they had obtained a copy of the video tape showing GTA's performance at the massage parlor. About half of CGI's ministry attended the conference, but only a handful were willing to view the tape. Those that did came away shocked and saddened.

GTA, himself, refused to attend the Dallas meeting. Instead, he sent his son Mark along with myrmidon Vance Stinson. Mark, whose arrogance seems to exceed that of even his father, is not a CGI minister or Sabbath group host. Many claim he is not even baptized, and some of us recall his days in Pasadena when his homosexual tendencies were all too obvious (not too many ministers' sons in those days carried purses and made sexual overtures to male Ambassador students; Mark was a flaming exception). Nevertheless, the overly kind CGI group allowed Mark to speak. He defended his father and since then his attacks on those questioning GTA's character have gotten more strident. Of course, he says Satan is behind this rebellion and, as theologian Mark sees it, Hufton and Justus had no right to question his old man's behavior. What will be the outcome of the Dallas meeting is unclear. CGI spokesman Bronson James has stated that GTA and his loyalists will not listen to their critics.

We have been aware for two decades that many of GTA's closest associates have known of, and condoned, GTA's promiscuous sex life. Former WCG-CGI member John Tuit (980 Dehart Comm. Ctr. Rd., Hays, NC 28635), who in the early 1980s wrote the WCG expose The Truth Shall Make You Free, submitted an affidavit in the current lawsuit on behalf of the plaintiff. His affidavit contains this statement:

I am aware that the Church knew of his [GTA's] reputation of sexual indiscretions but chose to have him as their minister and Chairman regardless. In fact, the Church of God, International condoned his sexual indiscretions by consciously ignoring Armstrong's repeated indiscretions. In fact, I had a conversation with agent for Church of God, International, Benny L. Sharp. Mr. Sharp stated directly to me that "so what if Ted (Garner Ted Armstrong) screwed some girls."

Sharp is GTA's long-time business manager. He admitted to David Robinson years ago that in reality he was an agnostic and that his position with GTA was "just a job." And a profitable job it has been too. Many say that his years with GTA have made him a very wealthy man. Now he has been appointed Chairman of CGI's Ministerial Council! As we are about to go to press, one of our mid-West investigators has just sent us the following report:

Garner Ted Armstrong continues to openly associate himself with the Church of God, International. I have obtained a new booklet authored by GTA. It is titled, "You Can Take It With You!" On the back cover it clearly states "Copyright 1996 The Church of God International, Tyler, Texas." As we were already informed, no functional break ever occurred between Garner Ted and the CGI in re morals charges against him. Mr. Les Pope, a former CGI minister and board member see [AR53, p. 9], told me that some of the CGI ministers did their own field investigations and discovered that many other masseuse establishments in Texas and surrounding states have maintained Garner Ted's name on a list of unwanted clients for a significant number of years.

A confidential source in the Chicago area, a former WCG member who is gay, recently explained to me what is believed to be the origin of Garner Ted's sexual escapades with women and girls. As reported to me, when Garner Ted was a young man, he apparently was living with another young man in a gay relationship. When his father, Herbert, found out about it he yanked GTA out of this gay relationship and commanded him never to participate in such a life-style ever again. So long as Garner Ted remained away from gay involvements, Herbert Armstrong looked the other way in regard to GTA's many heterosexual involvements. This long-established, family-based behavioral programming may account for the constant denial of sexual misconduct by GTA in spite of the extensive documentation of his lifelong problem.

We have also just learned that the CGI has been dropped as a co-defendant by the presiding judge in the Armstrong case. That decision, however, is being appealed. Of course, GTA himself still remains a defendant even though some CGI ministers have led their followers to believe that the entire suit has been dismissed.

A March 1, 1996 "Dear Brethren" letter from GTA indicates that GTA is having increased problems with some in his organization who are starting to distrust him. Some of his ministers, for instance, thought he needed a ten week "Sabbatical Rest" - something GTA adamantly opposed. Nevertheless, that GTA is still running the CGI is obvious from the fact that his letter containing his signature was on CGI letterhead and was mailed out from CGI headquarters. To buttress his position as indispensable to God no matter what his sins, GTA included a letter from Bronson James. Unfortunately, James, the CGI's leading black cleric and now the secretary of CGI's Ministerial Council, has had his own share of scandal in years past. One former CGI member, C.F. Foland (see AR45), has alleged that James for a time kept a white mistress "on the side" while a married CGI minister and that GTA not only knew about it, but took no disciplinary action. Perhaps James is now repaying the favor? Whatever the case, James wrote a note to GTA's readers regarding how the CGI was handling the GTA scandal. One interesting comment:

Mr. Armstrong had previously written you about the most severe trial he has ever had, beginning last summer. Many have since viewed the video-taped message Mr. Armstrong delivered on January 27th, and have seen and felt his deep repentance, and how he asked for forgiveness.

We have not seen this repentance performance and we do not know if GTA was able to duplicate the crying demonstration of televangelist Jimmy Swaggart, whose techniques have been carefully studied by GTA in the last few years. Bronson James went on to describe how a group of selected CGI ministers recently engaged in a session of hand-holding and prayer and how they then laid hands on GTA (but not in the way we would recommend) as a way to cleanse him of his sins and restore him to grace and a re-purified TV ministry. James then quoted extensively from GTA's own notes regarding what GTA said about himself at a board meeting: "FACT: My new television programs are better than ever." One full page of GTA's nauseatingly manipulative self-aggrandizing notes followed. Just as GTA has apparently come up with a new and unique way to preach the gospel, this too is also new and unique. We have never read a fund-raising letter from anyone in which the author quoted a friend who then in turn quoted the author praising himself at such length. But apparently the self-adulation works. Sources in Texas tell us that a recent headquarters sermon by GTA got him a standing ovation from his adoring, and apparently near brain dead, congregation.

The lawsuit against GTA is filed with the 114th District Court of Texas located in Smith County. Those interested in obtaining copies of court documents in the case should contact the court clerk at the Smith County court building. (Copies cost $1.00 per page.) The mailing address is County Clerk's Office, P.O. Box 1018, Tyler, Texas 75710; tel. 903-535-0636. The official name of the suit is Suerae Robertson v. Garner Ted Armstrong and Church of God, International, case number 95-2850-B. We will continue to monitor this case as there are new developments and, undoubtedly, more sordid revelations.

FBI Arrests "Prophet" Lampley in Alleged Bomb Plot

On Saturday, November 11, the FBI raided the Vernon, Oklahoma home of Ray Willie Lampley and arrested Lampley, 65; his wife Cecilia, 47; and John Dare Baird, 53, on charges of conspiracy to manufacture and possess a bomb. Lampley is a former WCG member and self-proclaimed "Prophet of the Most High" who in recent years toured the U.S. issuing prophecies and not-too-veiled threats against government officials (see AR54, p. 12).

According to reports from AP, Reuters (11/14/95), the Los Angeles Times (11/14/95), and the Enid [OK] News & Eagle (11/13/95) and based on statements made by FBI spokesmen and McIntosh County Sheriff Bobby Gray, Lampley allegedly obtained a bomb manufacturing handbook from a Larry Wayne Crow of New Mexico in October and then proceeded to obtain the materials necessary to construct ammonium nitrate bombs. We have been told that the trio's plans were probably made known to the FBI by leaks from within the burgeoning militia movement. Sheriff Gray told the Enid News that it was his belief that the bomb about to be assembled was intended for a "test run" near the white separatist community of Elohim City. Said Gray, "From what I'm thinking they probably would do some bombing there and try to lay it on the federal government." Although the FBI has stressed that they do not believe Lampley had anything to do with last June's Oklahoma City bombing, the Elohim City group had been discussed in news reports about that tragedy because phone records revealed Oklahoma City bombing suspect Timothy McVeigh had been in contact with that group.

According to the complaint, after the "test run," the Lampleys would likely have gone on to other targets. The complaint alleges that among the targets they had discussed were government welfare offices, abortion clinics, gay bars, civil rights groups, the Anti-Defamation League of B'Nai B'rith in Houston, and the Southern Poverty Law Center in Montgomery, Alabama. Lampley had allegedly started assembling the first bomb the day before the Saturday, November 11 arrests. Assistant U.S. Attorney Doug Horn informs us that the arrests may have averted a major act of violence.

Grapevine No Longer Foolproof

There was a time in WCG history when WCG members frequently talked about a church "grapevine" with a certain amount of pride. Back when AR first started, and for a number of years thereafter, we would receive information informally over the phone or by mail and almost invariably if it came from a member of the WCG or its offshoots, it would be proven later to be true. Sadly, in the last few years all that has changed. The once vaunted WCG grapevine all too frequently produces not just unfounded rumors, but frequently misinformation and purposely created disinformation. In turn, all of this makes putting out a publication like AR very expensive. Because it has become necessary to carefully check out even the most innocuous pieces of information, our investigative expenses have skyrocketed. Perhaps the WCG and its offshoots have just gone through too much stress, or maybe it's that the world as a whole is undergoing so much change at such a fast pace that some are getting a bit jumpy, even hysterical. But in the last five to ten years we have really noticed a marked increase in provably false stories being accepted as truth and being heatedly circulated in church circles particularly via the Internet. Some of these stories are so colorful that perhaps we should devote some space to them in future issues and give them the debunking they deserve. But for now let us just give a few examples.

The recent death of Pastor General Tkach produced a flood of wild and hateful stories. First there was the one about how Tkach really died of AIDS. We read this on the Internet and we received numerous letters claiming this story was factual. No one making the claim produced any evidence whatsoever. We looked into the matter as best we could through sources in Pasadena and we talked to some medical experts about it. Folks, the story is just not true. Tkach did not exhibit any of the telltale signs of AIDS, nor is there any medical record indicating that to be the case. Every piece of evidence that we have seen indicates that Tkach died just as reported in the press - from cancer and its complications.

The Tkach funeral also generated some wild ideas. Those who attended, and those reading the WN, noticed that the Tkach funeral had certain military trappings including a U.S. Navy honor guard. Now this apparently perplexed some who thought that the Tkach family was trying to revive the old fabricated stories about how Tkach had been a WW II hero. Others insisted this indicated that Tkach had been, in reality, a military spy within the WCG. Nonsense! If we could verify something like that, that is exactly the kind of story we would love to print. But folks, again, using all the resources and sources at our disposal, we could find not one shred of evidence for either theory. One former WCG executive told us, "Once AR exposed Mr. Tkach's background around 1989 he knew the jig was up. He knew that a lot of people were reading AR and I don't think he later tried to revive those false stories spread by [evangelist Gerald] Waterhouse."

As for the spy stuff, we have seen no evidence of that and the story seems extremist on its face. According to a Veterans Administration spokesperson we talked to, anyone who has served in the U.S. military is entitled to an honor guard at their interment. The services of a U.S. Navy honor guard are free of charge and can be arranged for through the officiating funeral home. When we talked to one long-time friend of the Tkach family he told us what we believe to be true: "Joe served in the U.S. Navy from 1945 to 1946. And he was both proud of that service and proud to be an American. What is so unusual about that?"

Finally, some noticed in the WN (10/3/95) that at Tkach's death and later at his funeral those present included his daughter Tanya, now a member of the competing UCG, and Douglas Horchak, one of the founding ministers and executives of United. This caused some to conclude that United and WCG were planning a merger or that the two churches are secretly in league somehow. Again, we found no evidence of these strange theories. According to sources in the UCG and WCG, the Horchaks' presence was one of purely familial love. As one individual pointed out, "Remember how even as HWA neared death he was so filled with pride and hatred for his son GTA he refused even to talk to him before he died. But when HWA died, Mr. Tkach did not do anything to prevent GTA being at his father's funeral. The Tkachs, for all their problems, have been able to rise above some of the pettiness we have seen so much of over the years."

Tkach Sr. did indeed have his character flaws. You can read about them in many past issues of AR. None of what we revealed in those articles was ever challenged by the Tkach administration. There was never ever a demand for a retraction, let alone any kind of legal threat. The fact is, even though Tkach Sr. had a lot of skeletons in his closet, he also had some strengths, good qualities, and some devoted friends and family. Let's not make him out to be worse than he was. Creating demonizing falsehoods does not serve journalism, let alone Christianity.

On Paranoia and Its Influence on Prophecy

by Ernest Zimmermann

In the letter section of AR59, Steven Collins of Sioux Falls depicts a neat and numerically charming prophetic picture of the United Nations, with Germany and Japan as major players in it. While emotionally appealing, such prophetic mathematics usually are devoid of concrete and relevant contextual and historical details. I am taking a moment to add some thoughts and facts that may balance these prophetic calculations, projections, and speculations.

Mr. Collins mentions the reunification of Germany in 1991 and misses the point that Germany was split in three parts after WW II. The eastern-most third including Prussia was not reunited with the western and middle parts of Germany in 1991. Poland absorbed the third German part as spoils of World War II in 1945 while Russia took over part of eastern Poland. The Germans in 1991 had to formally relinquish their claim to that territory which went to Poland. For years after the war, out of that eastern-most region Germans were herded into the largest forced displacement of human population since the westward migration of the Germanic tribes after the dissolution of the Roman Empire in the 4th century A.D.

Germany also did not "unite suddenly and unexpectedly" as Mr. Collins states. Secretary Gorbachev in 1985 realized, along with others in the West, that the Soviet Empire was unable to sustain its satellites in eastern Europe, Africa, and Cuba. In an attempt to shore up his empire, he actually managed to destroy the Communist Party in the Soviet Union. In turn, this weakened the Communist regimes in Eastern Europe to the point of their having to seek an arrangement with the resurgent U.S. and NATO. To compound the problems for the Soviets in the 1980s, the West embarked on a technological revolution by way of the mass distribution of the microcomputer and the military development of SDI. The double threat of a world-wide distribution of electronic information spilling into a society where photocopy machines were under lock and key and a space-based military threat developed by the U.S. further eroded Soviet power, confidence, and influence. Financially bankrupt and militarily rapidly falling behind, the Empire could not survive the 1980s without an accommodation with the West.

By the time Gorbachev agreed to the merger of East and West Germany under NATO, every Communist government in the Eastern European satellite orbit had been overthrown and the Warsaw Pact had collapsed. Gorbachev made no attempt at stopping the East Germans' drive toward self-determination. He voiced no conditions. In contrast, Stalin in 1952 had offered the Germans reunification of all three parts provided the Germans would not join NATO. West German Chancellor Adenauer rejected that offer and in 1991 the Germans surrendered one third of the territory Germany had within its borders in 1937 in exchange for a peace treaty with its WW II enemies. To students closely monitoring political developments in east central Europe, there were indeed real-political reasons for the events of 1991 in Germany; they were hardly "unexpected or sudden."

Militarily, Germany cannot realistically be viewed now or in the near future as a major world power. In the 1991 treaty with their WW II enemies, the Germans renounced all aspects of developing and possessing nuclear weapons. Germany as a "world power" always implies economic strength, not military might. (Similarly, Japan functions as an economic giant and a political and military midget on the world scene.) As a case in point of Germany's military dwarfism, the Germans have been most hesitant to become involved in the Balkans, and only under heavy pressure from its European allies did the Germans contribute a non-combat military unit to the current conflict. The Germans were there 50 years ago and have firm intentions not to entangle themselves in that theater again even as part of NATO.

In economic terms, Germany since the joining of the two parts in 1991 has acquired a much greater public debt in percentage of GNP. The German financial markets now absorb a larger amount of domestic savings that used to be available for borrowing by the U.S. government and others. The rapid growth of public debt is also a result of the Germans' underestimating the cost of the joining of the two parts, now projected to reach a trillion Deutsche marks. The long-term consequences of that large debt have not yet been fully felt in the international monetary market.

Mr. Collins also paints with the "internationalist" brush with ease but again scant consideration is given to political reality. It seems that interdependence is confused with internationalism. In 1991, the bi-polar system of the Cold War was replaced with a multi-polar, interdependent one. Mr. Collins shares in the common mistake of overestimating the internationalization of given societies and nation-states. Marx in the last century and Lenin at the beginning of the current century failed to recognize that nationalism is far more resilient than internationalism. Hitler, Mao, and Stalin in correcting that mistake were successful in molding nationalist movements that climaxed in dictatorial powers and war. In a more recent example, the U.S. made a similar mistake in Vietnam by underestimating North Vietnamese national resolve as a driving force. A nebulous concept of "international anti-Communism" could not compete as a key motivating idea for the South Vietnamese to fight their nationals to the North. The North Vietnamese operated from a nationalistic premise and perceived the U.S. as the latest iteration of a thousand year history of invaders. Robert McNamara with his statistical projections devoid of historical and political reality as much as Lyndon Johnson with his perception of "yellow dwarfs with pocket knives" had no concept of the strength of nationalism as a politically motivating, and essentially spiritual, force.

Internationalism as applied by Mr. Collins is refuted by the political reality in Germany. Germany today faces a considerable problem in terms of xenophobia as that country last year witnessed a number of xenophobic riots. Multiculturalism may be in vogue with the intelligentsia and ruling elite. The populace at large, on the other hand, perceives these trends differently. The German xenophobia of today is perhaps the outward manifestation of the frustration over the unadjudicated and uncompensated wrongs endured by millions of displaced and expelled Germans in the far eastern part of Germany after WW II. For many of today's Germans it does not make political, social, and economic sense to accept migratory nationals from the very countries that not long ago expelled Germans forcefully from areas that had belonged to Germany for hundreds of years.

The U.N.-led internationalism projected by Mr. Collins does not bear out in the political context of the real U.N. and its current operations. The U.N. has turned 50 this year and now has a major mid-life crisis. For one thing, the organization is near bankruptcy since the U.S. and other members are delinquent in paying their dues. About three dozen U.N. members have even defaulted on their payments to their landlords in New York. The U.N.'s peace-keeping missions worldwide continue to drain its coffers and the IMF controlled by the U.S. is in no mood to act as the U.N.'s bank. It should be difficult for the U.N. to attract venture capital considering that entrepreneurs invest in institutions and companies in the firm expectation of making profits, and not for humanitarian reasons or philanthropic dreams.

Concerning the addition of permanent members to the U.N. Security Council, a U.N. proposal for a possible expansion includes not only Japan and Germany, but also Brazil, India, possibly Argentina, and others. This would bring the number to more than seven, voiding the implied significance of "seven heads" in Mr. Collins' prophetic number scheme. Adding Germany and Japan to the Security Council would further complicate an already vexing U.N. problem. Articles 51 and 107 grant the Charter members certain bellicose rights against "enemy" states - Germany and Japan of WW II. With the peace treaty of 1991 between Germany and its WW II enemies, this knotty problem may not have been alleviated. Changing these charter articles adopted in 1945 requires a vote by the U.N. General Assembly. However, the Assembly is controlled by Third World countries and their allies and such a vote could yield an unpredictable outcome possibly contrary to the interests of the Charter members. Most telling, Japan is quite reluctant, if not unwilling, to become a member of the Security Council. This position would require that Japan greatly increase its military expenditures, currently held artificially low because of the U.S., by treaty, shouldering much of the burden of Japan's defense. An increase of Japan's military might would at once create nervousness among Japan's neighbors who have not yet forgotten Japan's role in WW II.

GATT probably will not complement "the UN's globalist mission" as Mr. Collins states. The GATT treaty is composed of very concrete, ironclad, and hard-nosed national trade interests haggled over by all participants. More than any other treaty, GATT currently reflects the commercial interdependence of nations in the 1990s. Again, this interdependence seems to be mistaken for "internationalism." In addition, economic "internationalism" does not represent the implied economic danger to the U.S. so often accepted as fact within "prophetic" analyses. The myth of the U.S. becoming an economic "also-ran" is born out in alarmist headlines, not in economic reality. The U.S. is not being taken over by the "internationalist" economy and may not face an economic meltdown and fade into the international economic field for these reasons. While foreign investment in the U.S. has risen dramatically, foreigners owned only about 6% of U.S. stock and about 14% of U.S. corporate bonds in 1993. In 1994 and 1995 the Japanese began a sell-off and liquidation of real estate and other holdings in the U.S. The U.S. trade gap between 1980 and 1994 was virtually the same, with our trade equaling about 20% of our production, while in Germany, for example, their trade was about 40% of their production. While Americans invest overseas, 95% of all stocks and 97% of all bonds owned by Americans are domestic stocks and bonds as of the end of 1993. Actually, the size of the U.S. economy has a much greater effect on the "internationalist" economy than the other way around.

The key to the American economy is an increase in the efficiency of economic production, which has increased exceptionally over the last five years, and it currently means that nearly 90% of what Americans consume is produced domestically. Foreign trade and investment have helped U.S. companies to do better: In 1993 the U.S. exported 77% of its commercial aircraft and 37% of its electronic gears while the U.S. imported 55% of its tableware and 77% of its cameras. Trade does not set U.S. wage rates because trade is not large enough as measured against the entire economy. Trade primarily affects manufacturing which is about one sixth of the U.S. economy.

Moreover, domestic competition plays a greater role in the U.S. economy than does foreign competition. There seems a greater significance attached to Toyota running in competition with Ford than if Sears were to absorb J.C. Penney or the other way around, although the latter scenario would have a much greater impact on the economy in terms of layoffs. In related fashion, only about 7% of production by American companies is outsourced to overseas producers. The implied "danger" in international economic agreements such as GATT may be their success. A Lehman Brothers economist states that currently 46 of 49 major economies are growing. The expansion of so many countries is without precedent in economic history. Within this context, a perceived threat to the U.S., as a result of "internationalist" economic activities such as GATT, seems to exist only in some people's heads.

Another key feature of prophetic and conspiracy theories is the failure to recognize national interest as the governing principle of international politics and economics. Specifically, Mr. Collins alleges that "current efforts also exist to give the U.N. its own standing army, spy satellites, and the authority to levy a tax on all nations." This is said without a shred of supporting evidence. Which nation is handing over spy satellites? The French have made available non-military reconnaissance photos to news agencies, for hard cash. U.S. low-end reconnaissance photographs may soon be commercially available to news agencies as well. However, it is inconceivable that the U.S. military establishment would yield top-level information-gathering capabilities via spy satellite and other means to the U.N. when the same establishment goes to extraordinary lengths to protect and conceal its methods and results from its own citizens. Would Mr. Collins cite a single example of a nation, anywhere on this planet, voting to fork over tax money or relinquish national sovereignty over its armed forces to the U.N.? Is it not because of the nations' refusal to yield sovereignty, the dwindling national contributions, and the U.N.'s inability to raise funds through national money markets that the agency is broke? Where is this monolithic U.N. attempting to control nations? The U.N. cannot exist without financial and political support from national governments. At this time it still is in the national interest of the members of the U.N. to keep the organization alive. It is quite doubtful that nation-states would voluntarily relinquish sovereignty and assign it to a body that was created by the victors of WW II. After all, Stalin and Roosevelt traded: dominance over Eastern Europe for the establishment of the U.N. on American shores.

Mr. Collins' ideas, like those of televangelist Pat Robertson and many other fundamentalists, share in the common shortcomings of broad prophetic pronouncements, futuristic "visions," and conspiracy theories of religion, politics, philosophy, and history. Therein lies a peculiar feature that paranoid and fear-driven groups and individuals have in common. Researchers have shown that such individuals and groups motivated by fear and paranoia often duplicate and mimic the very characteristics they fear. For example, the John Birch Society, which perceived a Communist behind every bush, organized itself into cells, a structure attributed to Lenin who developed the concept for Communist movements in the 20th century. The hatred of the KKK encompassed not only blacks and Jews, but also Catholics. Yet the Klan dressed in vestments resembling priestly Catholic robes, followed a popish Grand Dragon, persecuted others in the name of Christ, and shunned those outside the group. In similar fashion, current militias perceive their main enemy in federal authority. However, the same militias take their pronounced organizational form from that hated symbol of federal authority - the army.

Conspiratorial depictions of internationalism, globalism, and presumed U.N.-directed takeover of nations, with nations abolishing sovereignty, travel along the same path. These speculations are usually derived from a profound fear of national and international economic and political anarchy. Fear of political anarchy on such a grand scale leads those groups and individuals to take refuge in a parallel form of personal and collective intellectual anarchy. Paranoid and intellectually adrift, they spawn sweeping and bombastic conjectures and projections, wild speculations, and sinister conspiracies. Such concoctions are attractively packaged sales items displayed in the pseudo-religious market. Such "godly prophecies" of "certain" coming events are appealing, comforting, and soothing to the consumer, and often quite profitable to the manufacturer.

In summary, the primary motivating force behind such prophetic schemes and events seems to be fear. Such "prophecy" falls under the category of pious deception. It is not knowledge that inspires these godly schemes because they consistently fail over one critical factor - the devil sits in the details.

Letters

Your latest on GTA in [AR60] is a lot of bull!

As I write this letter, I have become very disturbed about the way the ministry conducts itself and ministers to the church. My respect for the ministry has become so low that not even an ant could crawl under it.

Editor: We are sorry we do not have space to run all of Mr. Daniels' long letter which documents an incredible amount of abuse heaped upon him during his previous associations with WCG, CGE, and CGI.

First, let me thank you for the service you provide. I've been a member of the Church since 1975, CGI since 1982. Some of the members are the most wonderful Christians you could ever meet. But I'm coming to see Ted Armstrong and his father before him as truly evil men. If there was ever a man who needed to be brought to his knees - in fact to grovel on his face in the dirt - it is Garner Ted Armstrong. The hurt he has caused to a lot of fine, sincere people is unforgivable!

-Mrs. Okemah Epperson
Arkansas

Editor: I completely agree with you that the WCG, CGI, and other groups have within them some very fine people who are very sincere and loving. But I personally think we all need to have more than just sincerity and love. We also need to grow in wisdom. While I do not doubt that an all-loving God is capable of forgiving any sin, no matter how horrible, Paul made it abundantly clear that some men, because of their personal habits, emotional makeup, and personal history, should simply not be serving in the ministry (I Tim. 3). That is a lesson many in CGI and other groups have apparently not yet learned. We wish them well in their ongoing learning experience.

My brother-in-law, who is an elder in the WCG, went with us to our Evangelical Free Church last week and is now asking for copies of our pastor's sermons. Praise God!

Thank God this local elder escaped the Worldwide Church over 20 years ago.

For 33 years I have been searching for the Philadelphian Church and have not found it as yet. I did not give up and will continue to search....

-John Adams
Poughkeepsie, NY

Editor: Please drop us a note if you have any luck.

After more than two decades with the WCG, the changes of the last few years left me so depressed and disoriented I started seeing a psychologist for therapy. In one session I showed him a copy of your publication given to me by a concerned friend. My therapist said that maybe I should start to really confront the things that were bothering me. My sessions were costing me $100 per hour already so I didn't think it was too much to send in $200 for a complete set of ARs. It took me three months to read through all of them from AR1 and the Gerringer letter to AR60. At the end of the three months it turned out that I really didn't need much therapy anymore. I now only see my therapist once a month or so. But confronting the issues head on and doing my own studies proved to be the biggest help. I think I am beginning to understand what Paul meant in Phil. 2:12 where he wrote, "Work out your own salvation...." Thank you for all the help you have provided.

Obituaries

Editor: Our limited space usually prevents us from doing the kind of obituaries we wish we could. Often, we find out about someone's passing long after they are gone. For instance, a few months ago we learned that former WCG minister Roger Malone died March 20, 1995 of cancer. He was pastor of a Community Church in Vera, Oklahoma at the time of his death and is survived by his wife who now lives in Ramona, Oklahoma. He had many friends in both the WCG and his last congregation.

The following obituaries are most difficult for me to write for obvious reasons, and the personal comments are entirely my own.

David R. Robinson 1922-1995

It is with much sadness that I must report that our good friend David R. Robinson passed away on November 29. As many long-time readers know, David was a former WCG minister who went on to become an author whose writings and informal ministry had a considerable impact on many people who had been associated with the WCG and Armstrongism. Before making a few personal comments, let me quote a succinct obituary that appeared in the Dec. 1 edition of the Tulsa World:

David Robinson, Tulsa Author Dies

Author, businessman and former minister David Rex Robinson died Wednesday. He was 73. Services are scheduled for 11 a.m. Saturday at Moore Funeral Home Southlawn Chapel [Ronald Dart officiated and interment was at Rose Hill Cemetery in Tyler, Texas - ed.].

Born in Frederick, Robinson became a pilot in the Army Air Corps at the beginning of World War II and flew DC-3 transport planes in Europe. He and his wife, whom he met in Scotland, came to Tulsa after the war ended.

He was the author of two books. The first, Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web, is a book that is critical of the Worldwide Church of God for which he was a minister. The book was a landmark case of First Amendment rights in Tulsa in 1980, and the lawsuit against its publication was dropped one year later.

The second book is titled A Little Corner of Texas and is a chronicle of life in Live Oak County and surrounding areas of south Texas [where David lived during the prewar years - ed.].

He is survived by his wife, Margaret Gray Robinson; two daughters, Felicity Reedy of Tyler, Texas, and Mary Ann Perrin of Tulsa; three sons, John Stephen Robinson of Berne, Ind., Mark Edward Robinson of Plano, Texas, and Robert Gray Robinson of Bullard, Texas; a brother, Douglas Robinson of Springfield, Va.; a sister, Mabel Hurley of Payson, Ariz.; nine grandchildren; and 2 great grandchildren.

In the 1969-70 school year David Robinson, then respected church elder, spent a sabbatical year taking course at Ambassador College in Pasadena. During that school year I was at the same AC campus in my senior year. (My three previous AC years were spent at the old British campus. Oddly I cannot recall ever having met him during that year in Pasadena.) After their sojourn in Pasadena, the Robinsons were sent to Florida where David was a field minister. About a year later the Robinsons were transferred to Big Sandy where among his many church duties David taught classes in history and other subjects. Undoubtedly because of his knowledge of both the Bible and history and because of his flying skills he was also a frequent guest speaker at many WCG churches throughout Texas and much of the south central United States.

In mid-1979 I received from one of our readers a photocopy of a typed manuscript by a David Robinson. (I must confess that even then I did not know who he was.) It was an early draft of a few chapters from the book that was to become The Tangled Web. When I finally got around to reading those few chapters, I was utterly shocked. Of course, by 1979 all of us with AR already knew that HWA was a very flawed human being. However, at that juncture we had no idea of the extent of his hypocrisy and personal sins. Robinson, who had known HWA for decades, in the late 1970s became privy to much of HWA's secret life. Those sad revelations left him indignant at what he correctly saw as a totally intolerable level of corruption at the highest level of the WCG. Robinson was obviously a man that had the guts to tell it like it really was and he was prepared to let the chips fall where they may.

In those days, having been so often ignored, rebuffed, and insulted by both current and former WCG ministers, I did not often try to contact them for information or interviews. Nevertheless, after much deliberation, I finally obtained Mr. Robinson's phone number and on October 23 of that year I called him. Much to my surprise, he was very much the cordial gentleman. He said he had read AR and found it both enlightening and helpful. He was frank about his beliefs about the Law, the sabbath, about race, British Israelism, and everything else. He essentially believed most of the things that HWA had taught for years. But he was also quite blunt about the fact that he could not in good conscience support in any way a church whose leaders were condoning the most horrendous of sins among themselves and yet were so brutal to the little ones who were faithfully sending in their tithes and sacrificing for "The Work." It was during that phone conversation that David first told me about HWA's history of incest with his younger daughter and how he had come to learn of it.

Over the next few months many other phone conversations followed and a genuine friendship developed. By early 1980 Robinson, having been prodded by friends to write it, had finished most of his book. But in mid-March he called me and said he really felt he needed an editor or two to help polish up his writing. I was extremely flattered when he asked if one of my AR associates and I would be willing to read through his entire manuscript and offer suggestions as to how it might be improved. It was a pleasure to work with David. He was a natural writer who was also uncompromising on matters of truth and accuracy. Yet he was always willing to listen to criticism and was remarkably open minded regarding matters of wording, style, grammar, etc.

Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web was printed and ready for shipment in June, 1980 when Robinson was hit by a lawsuit from two WCG employees who were surrogates for HWA, Rader, and company. Before long, however, the judge dropped the temporary restraining order preventing distribution and the book was finally released at the end of July. Many of the details of that legal battle were reported in ARs 12 and 13 so I won't retell that story here. However, a few points should be made.

First, I have always found it more than a little irritating when people have asked me, "Is the incest story really true, or did Robinson just make that up?" The question is most irritating because a little bit of thinking would provide the answer. When WCG through its surrogates sued Robinson, they never sued under a libel theory. That is, they never said that the book was a lie. They sued under an invasion of privacy theory! In other words, they were claiming that Robinson had revealed church hierarchy secrets! Then in AR27 I showed how HWA had admitted privately that the incest allegations were true. I learned this directly from HWA's wife Ramona with whom I was in regular contact during the time she and HWA were divorcing. The fact is Robinson was one of the most honest human beings I have ever known. Nonetheless, even though he had no doubts as to the accuracy of the incest data, he thought the truth of the matter was so unseemly he actually vacillated a bit about publishing it. I have often wondered if my arguments to him that he had a duty to tell the whole of it may have been what tipped the scales in favor of publication. Whatever the case, the appearance of The Tangled Web was an important event in WCG history.

One other point should be made about the book. Few people realize what tremendous sacrifices Robinson and his devoted wife made in coming out with that book. They not only found that many long-time friends were no longer friends, the legal bills they incurred were very, very large - about $86,000, in fact. Those bills literally ate up almost every penny that David made from the sale of his book. Many also do not realize the price the Robinsons paid for standing up to HWA in the late seventies. When David confronted HWA, he was not just disfellowshipped, he left his WCG position with only two weeks of accrued vacation pay. At age 57, David found himself with few savings, no pension, no accrued social security, no severance pay, nothing. HWA even tried to take Robinson's only car from him. To survive, Mrs. Robinson took odd jobs and David eventually got a position managing commercial real estate. To make ends meet he even painted houses. And yet, in all the years I knew him, I never heard David complain about that or say that he regretted writing the book.

David had so many fine qualities and we had so many memorable conversations over the years it would take a book to recount all of them. I recall how on one visit to Pasadena in the early 80s he asked me along on an afternoon tour of Huntington Museum. He had a great love of American and British paintings, and particularly portraits of our founding fathers and the many great men of American and British history. As we walked through the galleries, David, who would often humbly and humorously refer to himself as "just an old country boy," regaled me with colorful stories from a lifetime of reading biographies and histories. It was a very educational and entertaining experience.

David also had a remarkable capacity for observing and understanding human traits. He could talk for hours about the psychological makeup of hundreds of people he had known in Worldwide, and the insights he provided me over the last 16 years were not just enlightening, they were of tremendous value in putting out the Report.

But David had one trait that deserves special mention. Ever since our first conversation in 1979, both David and I knew that although there were many things we held in common (our dislike of hypocritical religious tyrants and our mutual love of history, for instance) we were from very different generations, very different backgrounds, we were both independent types who held independent views, and we did not agree on many doctrinal and philosophical points. And yet, somehow we could always have civilized, warm, and stimulating talks. I think that was mainly due to one quality David had which so many today have lost. He never feared people who were different than himself and he could disagree without being disagreeable. He really was a gentleman.

This past summer David learned that he had cancer of the esophagus and that he did not have many months to live. On the evening of October 17, he phoned me. He sounded extremely weak and somewhat emotional, but he wanted to talk at some length. He told me how he had been preparing for the inevitable and had signed over the copyright to The Tangled Web to his son John, the publisher of In Transition. With much effort he had also written a paper about the history of the book and the lawsuit that followed. He hoped that after he was gone his son would reprint the book and distribute it along with the paper. He told me he had just finished the paper that very day and that now he did not plan to get any more hospital treatments, but just planned on dying at home. As he became too tired to continue talking and as we said goodbye I was very saddened by the fact that I would soon be losing a very dear friend. A few days later I unexpectedly had one more call from David. It was very short. He had read AR60 and wanted a few details about the latest GTA scandal. Very weak then and obviously saddened by what he had read and by what I told him, he could only say he was very sorry for GTA, very sorry that Ted could not overcome his problems. But, he said, he was not surprised it had come to this. "No," he said, "it's not surprising when you consider the kind of father he had."

That was the last time I was ever able to talk to David. But it was not his last message. On the evening of November 29, I got a call from David's loving wife. She sounded subdued, but said she was okay, "Just all cried out." David, she explained, had died quietly that morning without too much pain. She then said that before he died he had asked her to relay a message to me after he passed on. He wanted me to know that he felt it had been a great privilege to have been associated with the Report all these years. As I hung up the phone and with a few tears in my eyes, I thought, "No, we at AR, all our readers, and all those in Worldwide, whether they knew it or not, were the ones who were privileged to have had such a great friend."

Andrew Trechak Sr. 1922-1995

As AR editor, I don't often use these pages to discuss personal matters. Nevertheless, as difficult as it is for me to write about, I want to mention the recent passing of my father, Andrew Trechak Sr. He was 73. In mid-November, as David Robinson battled cancer and just two weeks before he passed away, my mother called me from New Jersey and told me that my own dad had had a stroke, paralyzing the right side of his body. At that time we held out hope that he could recover and with therapy return to an almost normal life. Tragically, during the month that followed in the hospital he developed single pneumonia, then double pneumonia, and had a second stroke. After much agony he died on December 14.

My father did not have an easy life. He was the son of immigrants and an immigrant himself who came to the U.S. at the age of seven in 1929 at the start of the Great Depression. For many years his father was a coal miner in West Virginia and Pennsylvania. During those hard times the family was constantly on the move and my dad was never settled in one place long enough to get the education he needed. He also had health problems most of his life. As a WW II veteran who left the service quite weakened, a few years after the war he lost a kidney to TB resulting from a service-related injury. He then suffered a lifetime with tinnitus due to improper treatment he received in a VA hospital where he battled for his life for six months in 1948. Yet in spite of all his problems, Dad carried on. He was always a hard worker, quite often in less than desirable jobs, was a faithful husband, raised two sons, never smoked or drank, and was one of the most religious individuals I have ever known. His great love, however, was always music and I think the "In Memoriam" published on the first page of the December issue of Quarter Note, an American Musicians Union publication would have pleased him:

We are very sorry to report the death of Andrew Trechak Sr. from Garfield, New Jersey. Andy was an accordion player and orchestra leader. Some of our members will remember him as a member who participated in AMU membership meetings, often expressing worthwhile comments to the discussion. Others will remember him as the orchestra leader for our last AMU Christmas Party, about ten years ago. Andy played dance music with a Guy Lombardo style, and was proficient in Polish, German, and Hungarian music.

Andy was an honorary member of AMU, and had joined us in 1981. We feel deep sympathy for his family and friends. He was a fine musician and gentleman. Andy was also an accordion teacher, and a member of the American Accordion Association.

My father was never a member of the WCG. Until his death he remained a loyal member of the Russian Orthodox Catholic Church. But throughout his life he was fascinated by various evangelists. Around 1962 the radio evangelists that he admired the most were HWA and even more so GTA, whom he came to view as the world's greatest preacher. So often did he praise the Armstrongs that I decided to subscribe to the Plain Truth and to order all available Armstrong publications just to prove to my dad that he was mistaken as to their prophetic claims. Well, my dad never studied the Armstrong literature, but I did and I got hooked on the Armstrong message. By 1966 I was a music student at the Juilliard School in New York City, but by then I had also become so indoctrinated with the Armstrongs' ideas I foolishly decided I just had to go to Ambassador. It was a decision that shocked and angered my father who had always hoped that I would have a career in music.

In the decades that followed I sensed that my father came to regret even more that he had played a part in my having gotten on a life course so heavily influenced by the Armstrongs. Perhaps that is the reason why, although he was never a WCG member or co-worker himself, he was still a great supporter of AR. In fact, it was only after he died that I realized that for quite a number of years he was actually our biggest financial contributor. Even in retirement and while on a fixed income, there was never an AR issue that went out that did not result in a very generous contribution from my dad. That financial help played a major part in our publication's survival and no doubt was responsible for many hundreds, if not thousands, of people getting the help they needed to escape from Armstrongism. I can't help but feel sad that I never took the time to thank my dad on behalf of all our readers for the help he provided all of us, and, I'm sure, without ever realizing how much good he was doing.

Besides myself, my dad is survived by my mother Helen; my brother Andrew Jr., a concert pianist who teaches at Wichita State University; my brother's wife Anne and their three children; my dad's sister Mary and her husband George, who along with their grown children Eileen and George Jr. and their families were all very dear to my father; and many other relatives and admirers both in the U.S. and in Europe. My thanks to all my AR friends, who having learned of my grief in this family matter, were so kind as to send cards and notes of encouragement. Those notes and your prayers were very much appreciated.

* * * * *

My apologies to all of you for the long delay between issues. But a host of family, financial, and health problems simply made it impossible for me to work on AR for a few months. The amount of information that has accumulated in that time has been very large and, unfortunately, much of what needs to be reported will not fit into our limited space. What I have done in this issue is to report on the stories I felt were the most timely and urgent. Hopefully, if I can raise the necessary funds in the next few weeks, I may be able to put the rest of the accumulated data in the next issue and get it into the press fairly soon. Again, my thanks to all of you for your patience and support.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

July 1996 (AR62)

Plain Truth Gets a Price Tag

The Worldwide Church of God (WCG), the religious business created by the late Herbert W. Armstrong and now controlled by Joseph W. Tkach Jr., is slowly sinking in the mire of its financial, organizational, and spiritual mismanagement. The latest sign of the worsening slide was a May announcement by Tkach, now taking the title of "President of Plain Truth Ministries," that he has been forced to put a price tag on the Plain Truth magazine.

The magazine which once went out free of charge to almost 10,000,000 subscribers every month, and of late was still going out free of charge to 600,000, will now cost $12.95 for a yearly subscription. And that yearly subscription will give you only six issues, not the twelve of yore. Ah, but those issues will have 48 pages, not 32, Tkach tells us. And the new PT "offers the latest in inspirational, Christ-centered entertainment and educational materials - videos, CDs, books and other study aids, all carefully selected to help you revitalize your personal relationship with your Lord and Savior." But that's not all! The new PT will have interviews with the likes of "Bible Answer Man" Hank Hanegraaff, theologian Ruth Tucker, and singer Pat Boone! (Incidentally, you can see Mr. Milquetoast grotesquely pigging out on a box of chocolates in the new Weird Al Yankovich rock video which parodies a scene from the movie Forrest Gump.)

Putting a price on the PT is not the only sales gimmick Tkach has come up with to raise money. Here's another one from the would-be Jerry Della Femina: The WCG's new view on evolution is found in an 80-page booklet and an hour-long video now being made available to the public. We weren't sent a review copy so we can't tell you what the new view is precisely. But insiders say that Tkach has been able to cleverly graft evolution theories into creationism so as to offer everyone a little of each. We are also told that Worldwide is no longer teaching a universal flood because Tkach Jr. has for some time been convinced that Noah's flood was "just a local affair." The evo-creato booklet and tape are not sold in stores. But they can be yours for "a gift" of only $25 (or more - that's okay too). You can even charge it "on your VISA, MasterCard or Discover" credit card. Of course, you have to act now, etc., etc.

Not surprisingly, with worn-out sales gimmicks such as these, the Tkach Co. desperately needs to sell off more Armstrong-era assets if it is to stay afloat. Naturally, the main asset is its Pasadena properties which currently hold the WCG headquarters offices and which, in the eyes of the church's members, are a symbol of the church's future. Some say Tkach is getting so hard up for hard cash he will probably have to sell that real estate for a lot less than it is really worth. He may have no choice. In 1986, Japanese investors purchased the famous Biltmore Hotel in downtown Los Angeles for an estimated $219 million. It was recently sold for $60 million (Los Angeles Times, 6/11/96, p. D1). With Southern California real estate still selling frequently at drastically lowered prices, many experts suspect that the WCG - if it can even find a buyer - may not be able to get more than $60 million for its Pasadena properties. In fact, while Tkach later denied the accuracy of the report, last year one newspaper stated the properties had been appraised at only $59 million. If Tkach can actually fetch no more than that for his Pasadena real estate, don't be surprised if the properties wind up in the hands of another cult group or with the United Church of God (UCG). Presently headquartered in temporary offices in nearby Arcadia, the UCG has been quietly picking up most of the WCG's exiting members and could conceivably come up with a down payment if the price drops low enough. No wonder that when the representatives of the Tkach Co. and Grubb & Ellis, the internationally known real estate firm chosen to hawk the properties, came together in March to sign a contract, the Grubb rep meekly suggested to Bernard Schnippert, Worldwide's rep, that they pray over the document (Worldwide News, 4/16/96, p. 1). Incidentally, any AR reader interested in buying the properties should call Grubb VP Gregg Herbert at 714-833-2900.

In the meantime, the "new Plain Truth," as Tkach calls it, may already be in trouble. On June 20, the President of Plain Truth Ministries admitted at a WCG employees meeting that the campaign for cash-paying subscribers has not gone well. To break even financially, the PT needs a paying circulation of at least 100,000. But as of June 20, only about 19,000 had subscribed. Perhaps one of our Pasadena sources was right when he said, "It doesn't look good. We may have made a mistake to put the subscription at $12.95. That's very close to thirteen, and everyone knows that thirteen is God's number of rebellion."

Three Evangelists Shelved

In April, the WCG announced the retirement of three of its most senior evangelists: Herman L. Hoeh, Dean Blackwell, and Norman Smith. In the Worldwide News (WN, 4/16/96, p. 1) the three were praised for their long service to the WCG. What, if anything, the three will be doing for the church in the future is not clear. One Pasadena insider tells us that Hoeh has been quietly making overtures to a number of spinoff groups in which he would probably feel more at home. The WN article indicated, however, that Hoeh, now a PT "editor emeritus," will still have membership on some of the Tkach Co.'s dummy boards.

Depending on their views of Tkach theology, various insiders viewed the announcement differently. For example, one Tkach loyalist said, "I think it's about time Mr. Tkach removed them. He's cleaning house, getting rid of those who can't get up to speed, those who can't understand the Trinity, those who can't or won't see Christ in what we are doing. We still love them, but it's time for us to put away legalism and those who long for it." But one of those who still has warm feelings for "the old days" (and who apparently confuses retirement with some of Paul's statements about death) said, "I think God has spared those three loyal servants and has taken them away from the evil to come."

What's In, What's Out

With today's WCG it is sometimes difficult to know exactly what the church stands for, or what it is against. For example, faith healing - used to be in, now it's out. Eating pork and shrimp - used to be out, now it's in. Avoiding those of worldly religions - used to be in, now it's out. Makeup on women - used to be out, now it's in.

A few of the latest: Christians becoming policemen - used to be out, now it's in (WN, 1/2/96, p. 3). Christians becoming members of the military - used to be out, now it's in, basically (ibid.). Long, emotional public prayers - used to be out, now it's in (WN, 1/30/96, p. 1). Illustrating biblical scenes - used to be out, now it's in (WN, 1/30/96, p. 8). Making images of Jesus in the flesh - used to be out, now it's in (ibid.). Making images of the true God - used to be out, still is (ibid.).

Previously in, and still in, are tithing and attending church services (even if the days have changed). In fact, on a tape of a 1/21/95 sermon still being distributed to explain the New Covenant, Tkach Jr. claims at even though virtually all Old Testament laws are no longer binding on Christians, by attending church services and tithing faithfully one demonstrates one's conversion.

Easter - used to be out, now it's in. Tkach very subtly eased Easter into the WCG when he had Ralph Orr in the 3/12/96 WN (pp. 9-10) slyly conclude a pair of articles on "the Passover-Easter controversy" this way:

This was not done every year in every church area, unfortunately, but this year it will be. The sermon topic for the first day of the festival will be "He Is Risen!" [the traditional Orthodox Catholic Easter greeting - ed.] and we will rejoice in the resurrection of our Lord and Savior. From this year forward we will commemorate not only the death, but also the resurrection of Jesus Christ. We will celebrate the resurrection every year.

Because the resurrected Christ appeared first on a Sunday morning, some members may want to commemorate the resurrection on April 7, the Sunday morning during the festival. Some may do this privately or in a small group; others may choose to visit a service sponsored by another denomination. They are certainly free to do so.

On your home calendar you will notice that April 7 this year just happened to be Easter Sunday. So the WCG really has gone from Passover lamb to Easter ham.

Finally, one new teaching should be pointed out because even among some stalwart Worldwidiers it has caused a little ripple. In the Q&A section of the 1/2/96 WN, there appeared this question: "Is there any example of God taking a pagan custom and making it part of true worship?" Answer: "Yes, Let's consider some." The examples given included: (1) human sacrifice, originally pagan, but "God turned a pagan practice into a foreshadow of his Son", (2) divorce, (3) having a king, (4) temple building, and (5) the word "God" which was originally used in pagan worship. The author's conclusion? "God forbids idolatry, but he does not forbid everything that idolaters did. He does not forbid the harmless. What he forbids is the abominable."

Hopes of WCG Gays Dashed

For at least a year before he passed away, Joseph Tkach Senior was telling some that he was going to make major changes in the WCG's traditional teachings about homosexuality. Why he felt the need to do so is not clear. Perhaps Tkach was taking a cue from what has been going on in other Christian denominations. For example, All Saints Episcopal Church in Pasadena, one of the largest, wealthiest, and most active Episcopal congregations in the nation, has been a leader in advocating acceptance of gays into the congregation, into the ministry, and even into same-sex "marriages" (San Gabriel Valley Weekly, 6/14/96). Some gays in the WCG apparently thought that Tkach Senior was going to take the WCG down a similar path. At the very least, it was assumed that the WCG would discontinue its condemnation of homosexuality in church literature and in church sermons. That hope was actually fueled by a number of official church writings that toned down the church's past vehement denunciations of both homosexuality and homosexuals. One such writing, the WCG's PT Supplement Homosexuality: Understanding the Struggle, which is still being distributed, begins with:

Trapped between a life-style they have rejected, and Christians who reject them. "If God has called me, why hasn't he healed these terrible desires? Why isn't God answering my prayers?"

Later on page one there is this plea for tolerance and understanding:

Many heterosexuals consider homosexuality to be the alcoholism, gambling and adultery, as - well, at least - normal. There, but for the grace of God, go we.

But to be attracted erotically to someone of the same sex seems so strange and unnatural to many heterosexual Christians.

The article goes on to discuss "homophobia" and the possibility that sexual identity may be inherited (the article said we still can't know for sure). Thus homosexual Christians in the WCG had reason to hope that the future might bring more tolerance for their urges. They were wrong. Not a little unlike President Clinton, who once seemed to favor gays in the military but now says he does not favor them in marriages, the WCG's leaders seem to be retreating from their let's-be-friendly-to-gays position.

The new drift was first indicated shortly after Tkach Senior passed away. In a Pasadena sermon last October 28 evangelist J. Michael Feazell, the WCG's new director of Church Administration and the number two man in the Tkach Co., told a surprised audience in no uncertain terms that the WCG still condemned homosexuality and would not be liberalizing its position in the future. The sermon has proven to be a policy statement. Gays in the WCG say that since last fall they have noticed a definite cooling toward them at headquarters. Oh dear.

New Women's Ministry Growing

WCG gays may not be making much progress in getting the kind of recognition they want, but Worldwide's women are faring better. During the last year, the Tkach team began promoting an officially sanctioned "women's ministry." Prominent in the new ministry are Tammy Tkach, the wife of the new Pastor General, and Sheila Graham, a long-time Plain Truth writer and editor who is now the church's national coordinator of women's ministry.

Writing in the Worldwide News (4/16/96, p. 2), Ms. Graham reported how she and Tammy had appeared at a WCG women's conference in Dallas on March 29. The luncheon meeting drew a whopping 270 women. Certainly no bras were burned, but there was still plenty of excitement on the part of those attending. Quoting her own speech to the group, Ms. Graham wrote:

Ministry is not a choice. Jesus Christ commissioned all Christians, men and women, to take up their crosses... As women in the church, we haven't had much opportunity to develop our leadership abilities. Women's ministry allows us those opportunities through service to each other and the church.

Showing once again how the new WCG is not a reclusive organization, about 200 of the women who attended the luncheon stayed in Dallas to attend the 1996 Keys for Abundant Living Conference sponsored by Renaissance Ministries which is led by Texas TV personality Deborah Tyler.

Since the conference Ms. Graham, who recently lost her PT position and as a result lost her home, has announced that she is expanding her ministerial services with a newsletter that will be an independent ministry. A promotional flyer for the new publication said, "If you feel out of touch with other women believers, you'll want to read Christian Women in Touch." The flyer also promised that each issue will contain a letter from Tammy Tkach (who, like Mrs. Feazell, now gets a generous salary from the WCG, separate from her husband's). A yearly subscription is $10; the address for the new publication is P.O. Box 2028, Arcadia, CA 91077.

Dells Feast Site Now "Miracles Center"

In AR55 we reported on the strange circumstances surrounding the sale of the WCG's Mt. Pocono, Pennsylvania festival site. Now, some WCG members are asking questions about the sale of yet another major WCG property, the Wisconsin Dells festival site. One of our alert readers, Mr. Frank Miller of Wisconsin, brought to our attention a number of local news reports that have us wondering what kind of policy is at work in selling off the WCG's remaining real estate. Notice the following article that appeared last September 13 in a small Wisconsin newspaper, the Adams County Times-Reporter:

Ted Poppe, administrator of Endeavor Academy in Lake Dolton, announced recently the acquisition of the Worldwide Church of God Convention Center near Wisconsin Dells. According to Poppe, the Center will become International Miracles Healing Convention Center using the spiritual transformation methods of A Course in Miracles.

The entire facility, located on a 250-acre site on Highway 23 just east of the Dells, consists of a 110,000 square foot coliseum with seating for 16,000 persons, a large administration building with a 300-seat auditorium, in addition to three residential homes and several out buildings.

The purpose of A Course In Miracles, a Christian religious training program, is to foster continuing revelatory experience of the individual students human self-identity. This, progressing to an integrating union with the Universal Mind of God.

According to the Course teachers, this enlightening spiritual transformation and healing of the mind and body is brought about solely through the unqualified application and acceptance of unconditional love and forgiveness.

The Foundation for Inner Peace of Mill Valley, Calif, publisher and translator of the material, reports that more than one million sets of the Course Text, Workbook, and Teacher's Manual are in public hands. According to sources at the Foundation, there are more than 1,000 formal Miracles congregations meeting in churches, public places, and private homes, as well as many thousands of individual students in personal study and practice.

The institution Endeavor Academy, located at 501 East Adams Street in Lake Dolton, is under the auspices of The New Christian Church of Full Endeavor of Baraboo. The primary tenet of the Academy is that the conceptual mind of a human being is a transitional point in space/time in an inevitable evolutionary conversion of noncreative thought to the singular wholeness of eternal life.

The school employs a broad diversity of philosophy, psychology, science and art in the transformative learning process with A Course In Miracles being its major vehicle of enlightenment.

Dr. Stephen D. Howard, a Harvard-trained psychiatrist and student-teacher at the Academy, describes the Course as "an unearthly science of quantum communication experienced through the art of enlightening self-recognition."

According to Administrator Poppe, "it is expected that the new Miracles Healing Center, the first of its kind, will be open to everyone in joyous service every day the year round."

The Worldwide Church of God will continue to use the convention hall for its annual fall festival of the "Feast of Tabernacles." Said Dr. Poppe, "We join wholeheartedly with Worldwide Church members in their willingness to be continually transformed by the Holy Spirit and in the steadfast mission to proclaim the Gospel of Jesus Christ."

Transfer of ownership of the property is expected to be completed by Nov. 1 of this year [1995]. Broker in the transaction is Jack Krause of Montello Realty. The sale price was not disclosed. The property has been marketed at $1.7 million.

Since the above article appeared, reporter Eric Sandve writing in The Wisconsin Dells Events (2/17/96, p. 1) reported that the WCG has now decided not to use the Dells facility for the 1996 Feast of Tabernacles. Most likely the WCG was not able to guarantee that a sufficient number of members would show up for the Feast this coming fall. The United Church of God, however, has indicated that it will be in the Dells area for the 1996 Feast, although not necessarily at the old WCG site.

It is interesting that no WCG publication has really explained to its members exactly what kind of group has purchased the Dells site. The members were not told, for instance, that the so-called Course in Miracles is based on the words of the "Ascended Jesus" and that those words, supposedly "direct from God," were given through a woman who supposedly acted as a scribe (ibid., 9/6/95, p. 1). A spokesperson for the Academy says that the words were "put in a drawer for seven years" and then published by the Foundation for Inner Peace which also operates the Cheese Factory restaurant in the Dells area.

Yes, it certainly is good to know where our tithes have gone.

Ambassador Puts On a New Face

With the WCG rapidly losing income, some at the new Joseph W. Tkach Hall of Administration building at Ambassador University (AU) are concerned. They wonder how long the university will be able to continue operating. But one source close to Dr. Russell K. Duke, the new President of AU, indicated in May that there were still no definite plans to close the Big Sandy, Texas campus.

It does appear, however, that in attempting to survive, AU is being forced to change a few of its more isolationist and cultish policies. For example, speaking at AU's graduation ceremonies on May 20 was Lester C. Bank Jr., the founding dean of the Haggard School of Theology at Azusa Pacific University in Azusa, California. Introduced by Tkach Jr. as a "beloved brother in Christ," Dean Bank is not a member of the WCG, a status that in the past would have kept him off the graduation ceremony speakers list.

Another change indicative of the increased openness is the new policy that allows anyone, regardless of church affiliation, to subscribe to the university's newspaper The Portfolio. Subscriptions are $20 per year ($10 for alumni); write to The Portfolio, Ambassador University, P.O. Box I 11, Big Sandy, TX 75755.

The AU Alumni Association also reflects the new, more reasonable, attitude. In the last few months many Ambassador alumni, and even some who are no longer members of the WCG, received invitations to join the Ambassador University Alumni Association. The invitation announced two new policies:

1. There are no longer dues for alumni association membership. It is now free to all former students who completed at least 24 credit hours at Ambassador.
2. There are no longer membership restrictions based on an alum being in harmony with the philosophical underpinnings of the university or our principal sponsor, the Worldwide Church of God.

In addition to the new policies, the association announced that it plans to publish two magazines annually for "active alumni" and the association will be hosting regional alumni activities in the future. One such activity was an alumni weekend scheduled in June at the Holiday Inn at Mt. Kisco, New York for alumni in the New York region. The association has a number of get-togethers and other programs in the works. Some openly wonder if the new programs will fizzle out like so many other WCG and Ambassador programs of the past. Nevertheless, those who want to get on the association's mailing list may write to the Ambassador University Alumni Association, P.O. Box 111, Big Sandy, Texas 75755.

Most accredited universities have alumni associations which have as one of their purposes the raising of contributions for their alma mater. We have to suspect that AU's new interest in its alumni association may be due to difficulties it is having in the raising of funds by other means. One of our Louisiana readers sent us a letter that may shed some light on the subject:

Recently, WCG officials came back to the AT&T Foundation seeking eligibility for Ambassador University in the company's educational matching gift program. Unfortunately, the company did not approve AU's application for eligibility. If they had been approved, AU would have been eligible to receive up to $5,000 per donor in matching funds per year.

On April 18, 1996, Mr ...[company executive] left a message on my voice mail stating that AU had been disqualified from participation in AT&T's educational matching gift program. I was shocked and appalled to learn that "God's University" would be disqualified from participation in the gift matching program - and this after all that money was spent on accreditation.

By the way, one of the young ladies I used to visit at the Big Sandy campus constantly complained of the shoddy construction and materials used in the quickly constructed student residence halls. I wonder if they ever fixed that problem. On one of my Sunday afternoon visits I personally inspected the peeling wall paper and leaking ceilings of one women's residence hall and I must say it was not "Ambassador Quality."

Maybe not, but some things are getting more modern, even post modern, at Ambassador. The student rule book tells us that at AU it is now A-OK for male students to wear earrings. Of course, the earrings may not be of too outlandish a style. That would be wrong.

Tkach Basks in Praise

Early this year Dr. James Kennedy of Coral Ridge Ministries extended an invitation to Tkach Jr. to appear on his half-hour radio program Truths That Transform. The program taped in mid-February was aired on more than 250 stations in the United States.

Azusa Pacific University asked Tkach Jr. to address a convention of denominational leaders hosted by the university on February 28. Tkach's talk "From Jerusalem to Antioch" was reportedly well received by the more than 1,000 denominational leaders who attended.

Independent evangelist Ralph Woodrow (P.O. Box 124, Riverside, CA 92502), whose writings have for years been circulating in WCG circles and whose book on Christmas has become popular now with the WCG's field ministry, was invited in April to lunch with WCG leaders Joseph Tkach Jr., Greg Albrecht, Tom Lapacka, and Mike Morrison. Woodrow tells us the meeting was warm and that he believes the WCG has acquired an openness it did not have previously.

One WCG publication that is getting praised in "orthodox Christian" circles is the new PT Supplement What Do the Scriptures Say About the Sabbath? which leads Christians away from sabbath keeping. A year ago, Tkach Sr. wrote in the Pastor General's Report (3/15/95, p. 3): "In Christ, we are free to hold worship services whenever we choose. Our choice now rests primarily on our own tradition, not on any requirement of the law." (What was it that Herbert Armstrong used to harp on about "tradition"?) Proving that he and his father meant exactly what they said, Tkach Jr. cancelled headquarters sabbath services for June 20 in order that Ambassador Auditorium could be used for a weekend set of money-making seminars on race relations, an event insiders tell us did not turn out to be the profit-maker they had hoped.

David Covington Exits Hints Tkachs Faked WCG Repentance

The WCG's executive exodus continues. Among the latest to exit was pastor David Covington. In a May 11 note to us he wrote:

I am a pastor of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) and contributing writer for its publication The Plain Truth. This past year I travelled to all six of our United States ministerial regional conferences as a workshop presenter on healing from spiritual abuse. The WCG has long been identified as a cult by such authors as Walter Martin, Kingdom of the Cults, and it has a long history of inflicting spiritual wounds.

However, in the past couple of years, our group has been able to convince many outsiders, such as Hank Hanegraaff (Bible Answer Man), Ruth Tucker (Trinity University), and Christianity Today, of our repentance and move toward orthodoxy. I implore you to take a closer look at the underlying dynamics of the WCG. I feel this group is still very toxic and has fundamental changes it must make in order to be accepted into the Christian community as not being spiritually dangerous. My resignation letter is enclosed.

His attached 12-page open letter to Joseph Tkach Jr. was most enlightening. Covington, who has been with the WCG for 25 years and also has a masters degree in counseling, wrote how "many ministers have conveyed to me that they feel trapped by the current system, but are afraid to speak up." Citing "hierarchy and legalistic rules" as the heart of the WCG's problems, Covington wrote Tkach (and the emphasis is his):

Your administration shows no willingness to address the core, most damaging cultic aspects of the WCG system. As a result, I must resign from the full-time ministry. I am encouraging WCG congregations to hold open forums to prayerfully consider local incorporation, local governance, and local maintenance of funds. Where that is not possible, I am encouraging members to leave and join healthy Christian churches where they can find help and healing.

Covington obviously was striving mightily to do the right thing when he stated:

This is not against you. I love Mr. Albrecht, appreciate Mr. Feazell's efforts and validate what you have tried to accomplish. Yet, you have implemented these changes through our historically abusive dynamics. In your present position, I am convinced you aren't even capable of seeing, much less addressing, the genuine problems. I compare the 1996 WCG to a husband who used to beat his wife seven days a week and now has cut back to four. And, the wife is supposed to be satisfied with his progress! Worse still, he's holding seminars on domestic violence! Your administration continues to be abusive, but you hold spiritual healing conferences. I can no longer accept this!

While the WCG changes of the last few years give the appearance of having made the WCG a better place, Covington's detailed analysis of the WCG's motives and methods has left many convinced that most of the changes have only been cosmetic and that the WCG remains an abusive cult. As for those observers who have been led to believe that the WCG has changed significantly, Covington writes, "These observers [religionists such as Hank Hanegraaff and Ruth Tucker] cannot possibly understand what it is like to be a member of this church. They miss the dynamics of this system which remain abusive." Covington details nine specific problems that he says have still not been rectified within the Tkach organization:

1. Authoritarian hierarchy: Totalistic nature; "Pastor General" all-powerful.
2. Lack of accountability: "Pastor General" legally accountable to none.
3. Closed communication: Open and honest discussion still thwarted by structure.
4. Manipulative tithing: Current heavy emphasis seems characteristic of past exploitation.
5. Financial control: Congregations still send 100% of their donations to headquarters.
6. Local congregations not a true priority, e.g. $250 Million campus sale. [That is, if such an amount was ever paid for the Pasadena campus it would not directly benefit local congregations - ed.]
7. Chaos and confusion: Jesus lost among ever-changing policies, programs and crises.
8. Lack of respect for members/ministry: Current administrative approach condescending.
9. WCG organization most important, more than Jesus or people: Corporation 1st, church 2nd.

While acknowledging that the WCG has made progress in some areas, Covington makes this startling comment (p. 3):

Almost all the doctrinal issues now being discussed were reviewed during the 1970's by WCG administration and suppressed when Herbert Armstrong put the church "back on track." This is likely to occur again. Note the following curious excerpts from a recent WCG ministerial journal: "We ought to view all human knowledge, including our own doctrinal positions, as always subject to correction...." It would appear you are already heading down this road, with continued double-speak regarding tithing and festivals.

In other words, Covington is saying we should not be surprised if the WCG at some point reverts back to all the old Armstrong teachings. (Question: If that were to happen, what would become of all the WCG spinoffs?)

According to Covington, while most of HWA's so-called "18 truths" have been shown to be heresy by the Tkach administration, that same administration has failed to address the "government of God" issue with the same zeal. Covington asserts (p. 4) that the WCG is still a dictatorship with Tkach making "numerous, significant and controversial decisions, doctrinal, administrative and financial, without meaningful discussion or consensus of any kind." Covington claims (p. 5) that Tkach has a "closed communication style" in which "dissent is not tolerated, but is labeled as division and used to disfellowship those who disagree."

Even some of the small points that Covington makes in passing are quite interesting. Some examples: While Tkach has never seriously considered moving church headquarters out of the western United States, nearly 80 percent of the WCG's membership resides east of the Mississippi, a fact which Covington feels shows a lack of real interest in the membership. What really happens to most of the moneys that members in local congregations send into headquarters is not clearly explained to the membership. The WCG administration rarely gives a detailed explanation of how much is being spent on specific programs until those programs are about to be discontinued. The revenue that will be made on the sale of the Pasadena properties will not be given back to local congregations where the money to build the Pasadena campus originally came from. Instead, it will be used to give Tkach more personal power. Major cuts continue to be made in the WCG's budget, yet Tkach, himself, recently received a large pay raise, a fact not widely publicized to the membership (pp. 6-7).

Covington very properly paints the WCG as being a de facto Tkach sole proprietorship in which 100 percent of the local moneys get sent to Pasadena with probably less than 20% flowing back. This is in stark contrast to most Christian churches where most local contributions are used locally and only a small percentage are sent to a central administration or elsewhere.

One idea being bandied about by the Tkach elite clique is to put the entire field ministry on a part-time basis. Such talk has undoubtedly contributed to what Covington describes as a large number of ministers being "on the verge of emotional breakdown." Yet while all of this is going on, Junior's power is actually increasing! Covington very bluntly points his finger at Tkach, saying (p. 10):

I know you say that you have lost members and income by the changes you have made. However, your power and prestige have not been abated. In fact, you have now had opportunity to speak before hundreds of denominational leaders, be interviewed on radio with James Kennedy and Hank Hanegraaff, obtain several book contracts, and that in addition to your planned radio program (and aforementioned pay increase). You did not possess anywhere near this kind of prominence before. And frankly, you achieved it by force!.... What I do know by overwhelming evidence is that the WCG [read the Tkach elite clique] places its own continuance above Jesus' will or the members' welfare.

If we think about this a bit we see that what Tkach has done is pare down the WCG machine and in the process destroy the careers of hundreds of WCG loyalists while increasing his own personal power, fame, prestige, and income. In essence he has been utilizing a strategy similar to that used by Garner Ted Armstrong when he set up the CGI. It is the kind of "downsizing" strategy Tkach undoubtedly read about while studying for his MBA and the same kind of strategy that has been used of late in American business where millions have been downsized out of a job while CEO's have made giant personal fortunes on their stock options overvalued by the downsizing.

Covington's assessment of the WCG's spiritual condition is so dismal, he is not sure whether turning the WCG into a healthy Christian church is even possible. Nevertheless, he does give very concrete suggestions as to what should be done. Many of his proposals are in sync with those we have made over the years ourselves. Unfortunately, we have every reason to believe his suggestions will get no more attention from the WCG's leaders than ours did in the past. In a phone interview with the Report, Covington said he not only suspects the WCG, when its finances get bad enough, will be bringing back much of the legalism of the past, but that he saw it beginning months ago when WCG employees were told that tithing was mandatory. He did admit, however, that in recent weeks he has been a bit surprised at how far the Tkach crew will go in spreading lies.

Since the Covington open letter appeared, WCG luminaries have attacked it privately, in meetings, from the pulpit, and on the Internet. Mrs. Greg Albrecht has even referred to Covington as a Judas Iscariot. (C'mon, Karen, get a thesaurus!) Still, Covington's open letter is a gem of thorough analysis and sound advice. We are sorry we do not have the means to run it in its entirety. Those wanting a complete copy, however, can write to David Covington at P.O. Box 70012, Nashville, TN 37207; tel. 615-670-0178; covingld@aol.com for e-mail.

Offshoots Scramble for WCG Exiters

With the liberalized WCG being perceived by Armstrong loyalists as completely adrift from the teachings of its founder, and with thousands of Armstrongites having left the WCG in recent months, clerics of the WCG offshoots have been in a feeding frenzy to bite off what they can of the remaining financial resources of exiting WCG members. It is difficult to gauge exactly who the biggest players are in the game because of the varying ways the spinoffs measure their size. Head counts are sometimes based on numbers of baptized members, sometimes on sabbath day attendance by baptized members, sometimes on attendance figures that include all family members, sometimes on numbers of financial contributors, sometimes on publication subscribers, etc. Nevertheless, the most important WCG spinoffs currently seem to be the United Church of God (Bob Dick chairman, David Hulme president) with a claimed membership of approximately 20,000; Rod Meredith's Global Church of God with a reported 7,000 members; Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Church of God with an estimated 7,000; Garner Ted Armstrong's shrinking Church of God International with now probably less than 1,500 members (down from almost 5,000 a year ago); the new CGI breakaway "Churches of God" alliance with probably over 2,000 members; Fred Coulter's Christian Biblical Church of God with perhaps 500 supporters; and William Dankenbring's Triumph Prophetic Ministries (Church of God) with its many publications and a round-the-world broadcast but no official acknowledgement of membership size.

The above seven groups seem to be the major branches of modern "Armstrongism." Nevertheless, they are not the only players in the game. Joseph Tkach Jr. himself has stated that there are now over 100 active WCG splinter groups in existence. Keeping track of all of them is beyond the capabilities of Ambassador Report. But one individual who is trying to keep tabs on at least their whereabouts is former WCG member Alan Ruth of Barnabas Ministries. Mr. Ruth keeps an updated list of nearly all the branches of the Armstrongite family of churches, along with their addresses and the names of their key personnel. Those interested in obtaining a copy of his updated list (it's free, but donations are appreciated) should contact Alan Ruth at Barnabas Ministries, P.O. Box 310208, Detroit, MI 48231; aruth88521@aol.com for e-mail (World Wide Web site at: <http://www.gatecom.com/~barnabas>).

Can Humpty Dumpty Be Put Back Together?

Don't count on it. We keep getting letters from readers who suggest that because there are so many Armstrongite groups around the world now it is only a matter of time before they all unite in love to form one great end-time ministry. The reason such a thing will not happen is this: The very spirit of Armstrongism - with its deeply entrenched fallacy of "ministerial rank," its still pervasive anti-intellectualism brought over from American fundamentalism, and its rampant semi-paranoid tendency toward "us versus the rest of the world" - runs contrary to the kind of compromise that would be necessary to create a significant movement united in anything more than just name. Look carefully at the splitoffs and what you see is not a coming together, but factions and division everywhere.

All of the major WCG splitoffs now have their own splitoffs. And, it seems, virtually every one of the major splitoffs now has someone dogging their tail. (Has any religious movement ever had so many revolutionaries and then counterrevolutionaries?) For example, Dankenbring's popular Triumph Prophetic Ministries has been getting a lot of heat lately from Myron Martin's Patriots of the Kingdom (P.O. Box 20004 CDO, Concord, Ont. L4K 4T1, Canada). And a while back Rod Meredith's Global Church lost Norman S. Edwards (the author of the infamous "Friends of Pasadena" underground letter) who helped Meredith found the Global Church. Now Edwards puts out a theological and interchurch news publication called Servant's News (formerly Friends of the Brethren, P.O. Box 6516, Springdale, AR 72766-6516; tel. 501-872-1003; e-mail: 75260.1603@compuserve.com). Past articles have included: "Will You Be Counted Worthy to Escape?" and "Learning From the Writings of Herbert W. Armstrong." One publication that Edwards has distributed is his 34-page paper "How Does the Eternal Govern Through Humans?" which has reportedly influenced many to leave the Meredith camp. Another religious curmudgeon who has been taking on Meredith and others is Bernard H. Kelly, President of Royal Embassy College and Managing Director of Trans-World Publishing which operate out of a motel room across from Santa Anita Race Track in Arcadia, California (130 W. Huntington Dr., Room 122 to be exact).

We have every reason to believe that the pattern of WCG splitoff groups fracturing, with the new breakaways attacking the old and each attacking all the others, will continue. In fact, with so many Armstrongites reading interchurch publications such as In Transition (see AR59) and sharing news on the Internet, the trend toward division will undoubtedly increase. That is not to suggest, however, that there are not Christian counselors and counseling organizations who are ready, willing, and able to help in bringing about some semblance of Christian peace and order to the chaotic situation in which the Armstrongites find themselves. Some organizations who have indicated a willingness to serve in this way are Church Counsel (John J. Purvins, Coordinator), 130 W. Main St., Little Chute, WI 54140; tel. 414-733-5271 and Bible Education Services (Donald L. Hudgel, Exec. Dir.), P.O. Box 736, Troy, OH 45373. But as of now it seems that none of the breakaway groups is willing to listen to advice from "outsiders." And each one seems intent on reinventing the wheel.

Meredith Attacks Conspiracy Buffs

One indomitable personality that we doubt could ever fit into any type of sabbatarian federation is former WCG evangelist Roderick Meredith who now heads the Global Church of God (GCG). Independent-minded, some say hardheaded, Meredith recently shocked his followers by vehemently attacking some notions that are gaining widespread acceptance in ex-WCG circles - namely the so-called international conspiracy theories revolving around Jesuits, Jews, and Freemasons.

The Meredith attack coincided with an admitted financial crisis within the GCG that has forced Global to cut back in a number of areas including the purchase of air time for its telecast (Meredith co-worker letter of 5/24/96). GCG insiders tell us that within Global there has been a surge of interest in the so-called conspiracy theories, with many GCG members becoming suspicious that some of their own leaders have become conspiratorially compromised. In a powerful - and remarkably logical - response that reveals a considerable amount of research on the subject, Meredith devoted a good portion of his May-June Global Church News to discussing the conspiracy theories ravaging his church. Here are some excerpts (and throughout the emphasis is his):

Brethren, I now want to address one aspect of this problem that has become far more widespread than I had realized - even though I previously wrote about it in the January-February GCN. This problem is the preoccupation that a number of our members seem to have with "international conspiracies," black helicopters and a supposed Jesuit infiltration of the Church. Before I address these ideas, let me say up front that I am not lambasting any of you who've been caught up in them - nor am I questioning your sincerity, your conversion or your zeal for the Truth. I am simply asking you to carefully consider what I'm saying.

There have always been conspiracies. But just who is conspiring and the motives involved are usually obscure. For a long time, a great number of people have attempted to tie together all kinds of events to paint a picture of a massive international conspiracy involving nearly everybody - yet one that almost nobody seems to know about directly. Whether the Trilateral Commission, the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR), the Illuminati ("enlightened ones") or fictitious "Inver Brass" of several Robert Ludlum novels, there seems to be no shortage of secret societies that covertly rule the world. Many think such groups are all branches of the same conspiracy - all controlled by either the Zionist "Jews" (who supposedly aren't really Jews), or the Roman Catholic Church or, mysteriously, both! Is this so?

The simple answer, brethren, is that we don't really know and we can't really know! But common sense ought to tell us that many of the scenarios that some conspiracy buffs concoct are really absurd. For instance, many of them claim that America's Founding Fathers - as freemasons - were trying to formulate a New World Order according to the design of die Illuminati (or "illumined freemasonry"). Yet they quote Presidents Washington and Jefferson as being against the machinations of the Illuminati! This is totally contradictory. Conspiracy buffs also claim that the highest levels of freemasonry are the Knights Templar and the Knights of Malta - both Catholic orders. Therefore, they think the Catholics control freemasonry - and, thus, the Illuminati. But when you consider that most of the Founding Fathers were extremely anti-Catholic, this is all non sequitur - it doesn't follow! It is true that they wanted a "New Order of the Ages" - but only one in which America would be the shining "city upon a hill," an example of a God-fearing society for other nations to emulate. They wanted nothing to do with "Romanism."

Other things are also non sequitur. Conspiracy buffs argue that the Democratic and Republican parties in the U.S. are actually working together for the same goals. Their debates are supposedly contrived to take the public's focus away from the plotting going on between them. If that's so, then why are clearly internationalist agendas so often thwarted in this process? Also, if the media and publishing industries are all controlled by the conspirators, how is it that so many books and magazines denouncing the conspiracies line the shelves of bookstores? Why did Time magazine print a huge expose on the collaboration between President Reagan and Pope John Paul II to overthrow Communism if that magazine is totally controlled by the Catholic Church, which denies the report? Moreover, why would the Catholics try to overthrow international Communism if it was their own invention - through the Bolshevik Revolution being instigated by the freemasons? And why did they promote a bipolar world (U.S. vs. USSR) that threatened humanity's very existence if their goal has always been a one-world system?....

Advocates of conspiracy theories could probably answer these questions. But sadly, that is because the typical conspiracy addict often has "an answer for everything" - that he rashly formulates to protect his pet conspiracy ideas. Many times, such a person has become so entrenched in this type of thinking that it is extremely difficult to face the possibility that his whole premise - upon which assumption after assumption has been heaped - is false. One favorite response is that the international conspirators have repeatedly acted against their own interests to foster the illusion that they don't have the power that they actually do. What an incredible answer! It can apply to anything that doesn't fit the scenario! With such reasoning, you can make any circumstance mean anything you want it to mean. Brethren, can we not see this? "For God has not given us a spirit of fear, but of power and of love and of a SOUND MIND" (2 Tim. 1:7). We must use the "sound mind" that God gives us to evaluate the information that comes into our heads....

In recent months one of the oddest ideas that has been circulating in Armstrongite circles is that "Jesuit secret agents" have somehow infiltrated the WCG and now even Meredith's Global Church. Meredith, himself, seems to have unwittingly contributed to the confusion when on April 19 he sent his followers a "special emergency letter" in which he attacked Dr. Samuel Bacchiocchi, the Seventh-Day Adventist minister who has authored a number of popular books advocating sabbath and holy day observance. ("Dr. Sam" as the leaders of United and other groups affectionately refer to him, can be contacted at Biblical Perspectives, 4990 Appian Way, Berrien Springs, MI 49103). Some Global members, apparently aware that Dr. Sam studied in Rome years ago, leaped to the conclusion that he was a "secret Jesuit agent" bent on the destruction of the sabbatarian movement. Meredith has since realized that he made a mistake in attacking Dr. Sam and has stated he should have been more careful in what he wrote. Nevertheless, Meredith's earlier comments caused much confusion and he was forced to address the problem. We are certain that Mr. Meredith really did not mean to imply that Dr. Sam or even certain unnamed Jesuits are really "satanic." In the GCN article he briefly touched on the Jesuits (p. 11):

Because of the prominence of the Great Whore in prophecy, some of our brethren have gotten excited about some videos put out by John Osborne's Prophecy Countdown on "The Jesuit Agenda" - supposedly explaining what has happened to the Seventh-Day Adventist Church. By extension, they think this is also what happened in our former association. And now they think it is even happening here....

Some people think that we want to join up with the United Church of God and other groups - as part of the Jesuit agenda. In fact, Messrs. Carl McNair and Larry Salyer [two of Meredith's subordinates] have been accused of this. That's ridiculous.

Then on page 12 Meredith went on to ridicule another increasingly widespread notion - that sinister internationalist forces using black helicopters are coming to take away all "the true Christians":

If I am God's servant and this is the human headquarters of a true Work of God, why aren't black helicopters hovering around my home? Why aren't they hovering around our headquarters in San Diego? Yet they AREN'T! And I have yet to find any of our ministers who have ever noted black helicopters supposedly watching their homes!

The Meredith article makes for interesting reading. Copies may be obtained by writing to Global Church of God, P.O. Box 501111, San Diego, CA 92150-1111.

GTA Porno Movie a Hit

In our last issue we reported how Garner Ted Armstrong (GTA), son of WCG founder Herbert W. Armstrong and head of the breakaway Church of God International, was being sued by a Texas masseuse for sexual assault. Not surprisingly, the story has made for some colorful writing in Texas newspapers. The most colorful of the articles we came across was by Holly Mullen writing in the Dallas Observer (5/9-15/96). In an article appropriately titled, "How Low Can You Go?", Ms. Mullen began:

The man at the pulpit with the mass of neatly coifed silver hair is speaking of sin and redemption, pleading with his flock to forgive him his very human frailties. "No one is free from sin," he says. His eyes have filled with tears.

The camera lens zooms in, and the man, his voice quavering, continues in a near-whisper: "I let down my wife of 42 years." [He could have added, "And I've done that pretty regularly for those 42 years" - ed.] Then, after a dramatic two-second pause, he thunders [uh oh, here come the thunders], "But I tell you - and with sodium pentothal in my veins - I have never sexually assaulted a woman in my life."

The man is Garner Ted Armstrong.... In his first public admission of a colossal moral lapse six months earlier, the 66-year old Armstrong does not offer his followers the tawdry details - the local TV stations and Inside Edition had already done that quite well. Instead, he tiptoes around the specifics, saying, "By now, you've probably heard or read the stories."

It's gut wrenching, this routine of coming clean in public - pioneered by follow televangelists Jimmy Swaggart and Jim Bakker. Confronted with these bare emotions and seeming remorse, the members of Armstrong's flock can do little but extend their forgiveness. There are those, of course, who remain unwilling to pardon the fallen leader. And they have been busy ever since that January 26 evening, floating copies of the videotaped sermon around the world.

Just 10 minutes northeast of Flint, in a tiny frame home in Tyler, Royce Robertson is gearing up for another day of what he calls his "investigation" of Garner Ted Armstrong, the Church of God International, and its business dealings. Robertson, 38 years old and pudgy, his thinning brown hair pulled back into a flimsy ponytail, keeps a copy of the minister's weepy confessional in a bulging nylon briefcase along with an entire arsenal against Armstrong and CGI - several thick folders of legal documents, tax and real estate records, and magazine articles, including a particularly salacious Hustler profile that detailed the sexual escapades and financial questions leading to Armstrong's 1978 ouster from Worldwide Church of God....

Also stuffed inside the briefcase is the most lethal weapon of all - or so Robertson thinks. It is a grainy, 43-minute videotape of his ex-wife, Suerae Robertson, massaging a naked Garner Ted Armstrong at her Tyler salon on July 15, 1995 [a Saturday]. With recordings of big-band tunes playing softly in the background, a tattooed Armstrong is seen masturbating on a massage table as Suerae, dressed in baggy surgical scrubs, lightly flicks her oiled fingers along his arms, back, buttocks, and between his thighs. About 15 minutes into the tape, Armstrong makes one of many clumsy grabs at Suerae's breasts and gropes at her crotch. She makes several weak attempts to pull away and politely protests his behavior, but not once tells him to leave. Suerae never actually touches Armstrong's genitals, but at one point she pumps massage oil from a nearby dispenser into his hands, allowing him to do the work himself. He moans and begs her to "give me some relief."...

[Armstrong lawyer Tom Buchanan of Tyler, Texas] says his client does not deny going to Suerae Robertson for a massage service for which he expected sexual contact, and for which he expected to pay. "Garner Ted Armstrong is an imperfect man," he says. "Unfortunately, he's done some stupid things, and this is one of them. He's never denied showing bad judgement in going there."

But as unseemly as Armstrong's video-taped behavior may appear, the Robertsons themselves are no Citizens of the Year. Smith County court documents show that their 4 1/2-year marriage, which Royce says ended in divorce after he began an affair with a topless dancer from Dallas who "had a drug problem," was annulled on May 2, 1995. The reason? Suerae had never divorced her previous husband, whom she married in Dallas County. Nor was Suerae, a 49-year old vocational nurse and grandmother of six, ever licensed by the state as a massage therapist - so her sessions with Armstrong were illegal. There's also the matter of a few bounced checks - totaling about $1,000 - which Suerae wrote against her checking account shortly after the alleged assault last summer. She pleaded no contest in Smith County to a misdemeanor theft-by-check charge and received deferred adjudication on the condition that she repay the money.

Meanwhile, Royce Robertson has been trying to rustle up some business of his own from

Armstrong's misfortune. For two consecutive weeks in March, he bought a classified advertisement in the Dallas Observer hawking $29.95 copies of the uncut video-tape. The ad read, "TV EVANGELIST CAUGHT IN THE ACT!" And so the alleged assault that Royce claims has so traumatized his ex-wife has now become a marketing tool. "It wasn't a good idea," Royce concedes when confronted about his money-making scheme. "But it was out of total concern for Suerae. It was absolutely out of desperation."

The Robertsons have found little sympathy in Tyler. A local criminal-defense attorney quaffing a cold Heineken after work at Rick's on the Square, a favorite downtown yuppie bar, offered his own sneering assessment: "It didn't sound like there was anything therapeutic about the massage." To him and many others in this East Texas town of 75,000, the case of the randy preacher and the desperate masseuse shows just how low human beings can go....

On July 15, the day Armstrong returned for an appointment, Royce hid a video camera inside a wall clock in Suerae's massage room. From an upstairs bedroom, Royce watched the situation on a video monitor. "I was close enough to get there quick if anything turned the least bit violent" he says.

The 43-minute, black and white tape - of which 300 copies are now floating around worldwide, thanks to Royce's entrepreneurship - begins with Suerae walking into the massage room, dragging on a cigarette as she throws a sheet over the massage table. A nude Armstrong then walks in. The two embrace - "though very lightly," Royce says. Then Suerae snuffs out her cigarette in an ashtray on the corner of a nearby hot tub, and Armstrong lies face down on the table.

The rectangular table is not like the ones most registered massage therapists use in their work. It splits apart in the middle, where, Suerae explains, "men can, you know, sort of hang," and can also split into an upside-down V, on which the clients legs are extended. On the tape Suerae stands inside the V, between Armstrong's spread legs. During the next 43 minutes, she performs a feather-light massage on the minister as he masturbates, grabs her breasts, and tries to pull her on top of him.

The sound of their voices is largely drowned out by the incessant ticking of the wall clock and a tape of bigband music. "Autumn Leaves" is playing about 15 minutes into the tape, as Armstrong tries to pull Suerae's hands to his genitals. When she says, "That's not part of the massage," he lets go. At 42 minutes, Suerae leaves the room and Armstrong then walks out of camera range. A low moan is heard off-camera. The final scene is of Armstrong walking back into view, dressed in double-knit pants and a sweater. There's a little lift in his step and he is singing along with the Andrews Sisters: "Don't sit under the apple tree/With anyone also but me/Anyone else but me... /Till I come marching home."....

When Royce isn't propping up Suerae, he can often be found digging through the huge, leather-bound indexes at the Smith County Courthouse, trying to turn up financial information on Armstrong and his business cronies. He calls this work "investigation." Royce knows where all of the Church of God International officers live and what cars they drive.

"That's (CGI business manager) Benny Sharp's white Continental," he points out during a drive through the church's grounds in Flint. "There's Garner Ted's Bronco," he says, cruising past Armstrong's home. "These guys really have some money. Most of 'em have boats, too."....

In Tyler, the gossip about Garner Ted and the masseuse was blazing last fall, but has now burned down to an ember. "Good old Garner Ted, he's just a good ol' boy and I don't know what to think about her," says a well-known Tyler real-estate broker. "Nobody in this deal smells very good."....

The article discusses much more: Texas laws regulating the massage industry, the ethical standards in therapeutic massage, Suerae's personal financial problems, her house, her childhood history of sexual abuse and lifetime of emotional problems, etc. - much more than most will want to know about this hillbilly soap opera. However, those who just have to know all the facts can obtain a copy of the entire article for $2 by writing to the Dallas Observer, 2130 Commerce St., Dallas, TX 75201.

Since the above story appeared, the infamous GTA sex video has become something of a sensation in Texas and elsewhere, with thousands of copies now in circulation. One group which has not been too keen on the video, however, are the members of CGI. In fact, so upset are most that more than half of CGI's ministers have resigned from CGI taking with them more than half of CGI's membership. Most, if not all, who have left seem to be incorporating their congregations separately while trying to maintain ties to each other through an alliance called simply "The Churches of God." The 27 ministers of the group had a conference in Tulsa April 12-14 and agreed to be independent churches working in cooperation to serve their people. The new alliance has an information center that is quite open about their organizational structure, personnel, beliefs, finances, and programs. Their oversight committee is made up of ministers Les Pope, Tom Whitson, and Tom Justus. The group's Information Center address is RR 2 Box 114, Hawkins, Texas 75765, with another organization address at P.O. Box 54621, Tulsa, OK 74155. The group's toll free number is 800-611-8080.

As for evangelist Ron Dart, formerly top assistant to Garner Ted Armstrong, we understand that his new organization, Christian Educational Ministries (CEM), is thriving. Dart's new radio program Born to Win is already on about thirty stations, including one in Australia (and you can even hear the program on your computer at <http://www.cajunland.com/cem/>). He has a popular Internet ministry and a growing network of sabbatarian community churches. One interesting doctrinal or policy announcement from Dart is that his group will now take up only three annual holy day offerings per year, not the seven that the WCG and others do contrary to Deut. 16:16. CEM seems fairly straightforward about its programs and policies, so those who would like more information should contact them at CEM, P.O. Box 560, Whitehouse, TX 75791; tel. 903-509-2999; cem@gower.net for e-mail.

Meanwhile, back at the courthouse in Tyler, Judge Cynthia Kent has recused herself because, it turns out, her husband is a member of the law firm that is representing Garner Ted Armstrong. The new judge is Louis B. Gohmert. The jury trial is scheduled to begin November 18. Of course, it is quite possible that before then the case will be quietly settled out of court.

Rick Ross and CAN Bankrupted Scientology Backed Attack

Within the microculture of the anti-cult movement, no organization has been more influential than the Chicago-based Cult Awareness Network (CAN). And while not as famous as Ted Patrick or Gallen Kelly who have gotten more media attention (and jail time) for their activities, in the shadowy world of exit counselors and deprogrammers few have been more successful than Rick Ross of Phoenix. Now both CAN and Ross have been badly stung by the pro-cult forces.

CAN and Ross were among the losers last September when a jury in Seattle's U.S. District Court awarded $4.8 million to Jason Scott, a Seattle-area man who claimed he had been held against his will by three men when Ross was called in to deprogram him away from Life Tabernacle, a United Pentecostal church. The jury agreed with Scott that his constitutionally guaranteed right to practice religion had been violated and for that awarded him almost $1 million per day for each of the five days he was kept at the deprogramming site, a luxury beach condo. CAN was included among the defendants because Scott claimed it was a Seattle CAN volunteer who recommended Ross's services when his distraught mother sought a professional deprogrammer to break the psychological hold a Life Tabernacle minister had over her son.

At the deprogramming session Scott, then 18, recanted his association with the Life Tabernacle. But afterward Scott recanted his first recantation and obtained the assistance of lawyers with close ties to Scientology. In recent years, hordes of Scientologist lawyers, energized by massive infusions of cash from the "new religion" started by science fiction writer L. Ron Hubbard, have been in league with cult followers of every bent in waging near-all-out war against the counter-cult movement. As documented in Richard Behar's famous Time magazine cover story of 5/6/91 and in Bent Corydon's book L. Ron Hubbard: Messiah or Madman (Barricade Books, 1992), Scientology is probably the largest and most aggressive of the modern destructive cults. No other cult, for example, has ever attempted to intimidate the press to such a degree or infiltrate anti-cult organizations, anti-cult law firms, and even law enforcement branches of the U.S. government as Scientology has done since the 1980s. Nor has any other cult, as far as we know, maintained such a large and aggressive team of lawyers, or so actively used the courts to harass its critics. For example, just one of the many anti-cult organizations currently under attack by the Scientologists is Watchman Fellowship which seems to have done nothing more than accurately report on Scientology's well-known methods and non-Christian teachings.

The use of frivolous lawsuits by wealthy and unscrupulous plaintiffs bent on harassing poorer defendants is a growing problem in the United States (New York Times, 6/11/96). As long as a plaintiff can show some possible reason for a glimmer of hope that some jury somewhere could possibly find for him, a sufficiently wealthy aggressor can bring any number of suits against a poor defendant and thereby exhaust the defendant through endless depositions, interrogatories, and costly paperwork. In the end the plaintiff may not win in court, but no matter. By using the courts for such strategic lawsuits against public participation, or "slapps" as the legal profession refers to them, the First Amendment freedoms of the defendant and others are severely chilled.

Before Jason Scott brought his civil case, Scientology had engaged in a massive campaign of disinformation against CAN, much of it done through mailings from anonymous or unreachable individuals with phantom organizations at mail drops or bogus addresses. (AR has for years been flooded with this kind of garbage mail.) Getting nowhere with such childish pranks, Scientology-assisted plaintiffs then brought some 50 suits against the dedicated cult fighting organization. One long-time CAN activist, Priscilla Coates of Glendale, California, alone was hit by 22 lawsuits. Until Jason Scott came along, none of the suits against CAN had been successful. While Scott's attempt at getting a criminal conviction against Ross failed in 1994, the lucky judgment for him in the civil case resulted in both Ross and CAN filing for bankruptcy.

Now we have learned that CAN, which had been in Chapter 11 bankruptcy, or reorganization, while appealing the dubious judgment against it, has just been thrown into Chapter 7, complete liquidation. All of CAN's employees have already been discharged, but what will become of its corporate assets is unclear. Some fear that Scientology or its proxies may now be able to gain legal ownership of CAN's extensive archives, its mailing list, the very name "Cult Awareness Network," and even the group's phone number, thereby gaining further means for harassing cult fighters around the world. With virtually all of its headquarters resources gone and its backers in disarray, it might appear that CAN, as we have known it, is no more. But some supporters point out that CAN's local affiliates, always fiercely independent, will continue on as will the group's informal system of personal networking.

As for Rick Ross, it is doubtful that Scientology and its pro-cult allies will ever be able to truly silence him. In fact, in a mid-June phone interview Ross told us he will soon be launching a new counter-cult offensive via the Internet. We will provide details about that in a future issue. For now, those interested in learning more about the Jason Scott case or about Rick Ross and his amazing career will find two articles helpful: "Cults in the Courtroom!" by John Colwell (in the 10/25/95 issue of The Stranger, 1202 East Pike # 1225, Seattle, WA 98122) and "Hush, Hush Sweet Charlatans" by Tony Ortega (in the 11/30-12/6/95 Phoenix New Times, 1201 East Jefferson, Phoenix, AZ 85034).

Ernest Mann Murdered

We are sorry to have to announce that author Ernest Mann has died, and under very tragic circumstances. On the evening of March 12, the 69-year-old Mann was bludgeoned to death by his 17-year-old grandson Eli B. Johnson. The troubled youth had dropped out of school in 1994. Unable or unwilling to live with either of his parents, Eli had been living with his grandfather on and off, sharing a trailer house in southeast Little Falls, Minnesota where the murder occurred. After the crime, Eli fled to a wooded area near town and took his own life with a .22 caliber handgun that had been stolen, probably by Eli, in a burglary months before. The tragedy was reported in the Morrison County Record, 3/17/96 and 3/24/96.

Mann, whose legal name was Larry F. Johnson (not the Larry Gilbert Johnson of Laodicean Church fame) was the author of the book I Was Robot and the publisher of the Little Free Press newsletter. His writings were increasingly popular in ex-WCG circles and especially among those who valued a simple existence coupled with maximum freedom from governmental and societal intrusion. It is likely Mann's writings will continue to be distributed. For information contact Sandy Nelson, 730 3rd St. N.E., Little Falls, MN 56345. Ernest Mann's son Rod is planning a memorial newsletter to be sent to his father's many admirers. For information on that or to send regrets write Rod Johnson, 309 Cedar Ave. So., Minneapolis, MN 55454.

Charles V. Dorothy, 1934-1996

We are very sorry to report the death of our old friend Charles V. Dorothy from cancer on Father's Day, June 16. Dorothy, who earned Ph.D.s from Ambassador College and later from prestigious Claremont College, was one of the brightest and most likeable individuals to have ever taught at Ambassador. In recent years he lectured and wrote for the Association for Christian Development in Washington state. Ironically, a week before his death, Dr. Dorothy was informed that his work The Books of Esther, the culmination of a lifetime of research, had finally been accepted for publication by a major publisher. A tribute to his life and work has been published by ACD and many of his outstanding lectures are still available on cassette tape from that organization. Dr. Dorothy is survived by his wife Camilla, his five children, and by many friends and former students. Most who knew him personally will not soon forget that through a life of adversity and disappointment, his was still one of steadfast faith and encouraging optimism. Those wishing to express condolences to his family may write c/o the Association for Christian Development, 4449 S. Star Lake Road, Auburn, WA 98001.

Calendar Confusion

Of all the religious topics that interest the Armstrongites these days, the most popular and most perplexing seems to be the ancient Hebrew calendar. In the last three months we have been sent more than twenty different articles and papers on the subject. Apart from questions regarding the proper days for keeping Passover and Pentecost (issues upon which much has also been written), the main calendar concern these days seems to be the issue of whether or not it is even possible to properly calculate the ancient calendar so as to know what any given day really is. The problem has worked up some into paroxysms of manic mysticism.

In a 3/25/96 letter to a Bible student, Ronald B. Nelson, one of Dr. Meredith's GCG representatives, wrote the following:

There is a lot of discussion about the sacred calendar among God's people today. Most recognize that "Judaism" is not the original religion of ancient Israel and Moses. Therefore, some people assume that they should not use the Jewish Calendar. As an alternative, some have set about to devise their own independent calendar based on their own understanding of what is involved.

There is no indication in the Scripture that each individual was ever responsible to determine the dates of the Holy Days. It should be obvious that however the Holy Day calendar is determined, it was an official decision lest people convene on whatever days each one felt was correct. That would have produced confusion, not order and unity (I Cor. 14:33). It would have been like it was in the days of the judges when people were left to their own devices. Notice: "In those days there was no king in Israel; everyone did what was right in his own eyes" (Judges 17:6; 21:25).

When the technical issues are rightly understood, it is easy to see why there is some confusion about God's calendar today. If five people sit down and attempt to draw up a solar/lunar calendar to serve the biblical purpose, virtually everyone will arrive at different conclusions (methods and dates). This is because the Bible doesn't tell us precisely how to construct a "sacred calendar." [Emphasis mine - ed.] Evidently, God gave the knowledge to the leadership (the priests, Aaron and his descendants). They, in turn, were to coordinate the Holy Day dates so that all the people come together at the same time.

Here are just a couple [sic] of matters that the Bible is not plain and clear with regard to calendar construction: 1) Precisely when to begin the first day of the year, 2) How many months were to be in a year, 3) When and how to add an intercalary month (i.e. a 13th month to keep the calendar in sync with the seasons), 4) How many days were to be in each month, etc.

So, the issues are not as simple as they may seem when one begins to study all the factors that have to be considered. Global is researching further into the most common questions concerning God's calendar. Once we have something which God's faithful ministers of many years feel is ready for publication, we will present it in an article or booklet. Meanwhile, it would not be possible for me to comment....

Nelson's admissions should raise some questions in the minds of alert people. For example, if the Bible really does not show how to calculate the Sacred Calendar, would that not indicate either (1) God does not consider it important to keep the biblical holy days in a mathematically precise time frame, or (2) keeping the biblical holy days is no longer something required by God? Furthermore, even if we assume that God still intends all believers to keep the OT holy days in a physically precise manner, if the believer must go outside of the Bible to find the means of calculating the sacred calendar's dates, would that not indicate either (1) that the oracles of God encompass more than the just the Bible, or (2) that some other group of clerics other than the Armstrongite ministers (Jewish rabbis or prophets perhaps?) may have been designated as the repositories of God's esoteric knowledge and that they therefore have spiritual authority superior to that of the Armstrongite clerics? Perhaps it is such questions that prompted St. Paul to write, "Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holyday, or of the new moon, or of the sabbath (Col. 2:16).

While Global is in the process of studying the calendar issue, Dr. Ernest Martin, who for many years was the WCG's leading expert on the subject, has already published a 30-page paper on "How To Calculate the Biblical Calendar." Dr. Martin, who was recently interviewed by Father Ronald Lengwin of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Pittsburgh on his KDKA talk show, continues to publish materials of interest to many ex-Worldwidiers. Other timely Martin writings include his paper "By Grace Are Ye Saved" and his lecture "Why Churches Fall Apart." For details write to: Associates for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. ## Letters

I thought the article you ran by Dr. Zimmerman criticizing Steven Collins' letter in AR60 was outstanding. I'd like to see the Report print more articles that show balance and facts in the area of Bible prophecy. Too many people who have left the WCG have gone down strange paths in their searchings and are coming up with ideas that they firmly believe yet are unrealistic and smack of paranoia.

The idea that the U.N. is sending helicopters to round up true Christians is ludicrous. Anyone who even casually follows the news on the U.N. knows it is a wimp of an organization. Here's one example. Because Moammar Gadhafi refuses to turn over the guys who are accused of blowing up the plane over Scotland in 1988, the U.N. has put a ban on all flights in and out of Libya. But on June 22 Moammar decided he wanted to attend the Arab conference in Egypt. So, giving the finger to the U.N., he just got on one of his Boeing 727s and told the pilot to head east. After the conference he just went back the way he came. Nobody did a thing to him. The U.N. only issued a statement saying he was a very bad boy. Does that sound like a powerful organization? Frankly, they are about as wimpy as they come.

The newspapers here in New York have been full of stories lately about how the U.N. is on the verge of bankruptcy. A few months ago I even saw a story on the TV news showing how some sessions of the General Assembly had to be cancelled because the U.N. building's roof was leaking. Newsmen here refer to them as a mismanaged and bloated bureaucracy lacking even the money to fix their leaking roof! All they have is a history of doing lots of paperwork, passing all kinds of lofty resolutions with no way of financing or enforcing them, and then doing nothing. They are pathetic. How can anyone think they are the awesome and terrifying Beast of Revelation!

May I ask - why did you ever run Steven Collins letter in the first place?

-New York

Editor: The reason is simple. Mr. Collins' views are similar to those held by many ex-WCG members and he expresses them well. Please keep in mind that we try to include a diversity of opinions in our letters section and in the by-lined articles that we run. Incidentally, Collins took exception to the Zimmerman article and should you wish to read his extensive rebuttal to Zimmerman's rebuttal you may write to him at: 3901 Crescent Drive, Sioux Falls, SD 57106.

We probably never would have found out the real scoop on GTA if it weren't for the AR. Pretty much the whole church in Tucson and Phoenix left CGI and are receiving tapes from Ron Dart. We personally don't want anything to do with organized religion and the Armstrongs. We should have known 20 years ago that GTA was a bad apple.

-Arizona

In these parts most who read your story about Mr. Ted Armstrong were suspicious you made the whole thing up. But that was before we saw the video tape of GTA with the masseuse. It was sent to CGI members who thought that the story was not for real. One of those who sent out copies was elder Gary Porter, 11968 N. Honesty Lane, Pocatello, Idaho 83202. We got our copy by just calling him at 801-562-2532.

I must admit I found the video upsetting. I did not realize that Mr. Armstrong was so impotent. His prostate is not working or he was drunk or something. Why would any normal man want to lie face down on a table with his legs spread and his butt up in the air and have someone rub oil in his rear end for a half hour while he played with himself? I was saddened to see with my own eyes all the difficulty he had getting any results. Obviously he was tricked by a woman who was deceived (I Tim. 2:4). I have to believe the woman deceived herself into thinking she was really a nurse. I'm sure she was not. I have been in hospitals and no nurse ever did that kind of crazy thing to me!

After viewing the tape a number of times and praying and fasting about Mr. Armstrong's repentance we are still not sure if we should leave the CGI. Are you also distributing copies of the video?

-Arkansas

Editor: Absolutely not! When an AR reader mailed me a copy I felt obligated to watch it once in order to verify the information we received on the GTA story. But after just a few moments of the pathetic and disgusting spectacle, I decided to fast forward in order to get through the ordeal as quickly as possible. I then mailed the tape back because I prefer not to have such material in my home. Frankly, I think most readers will be better off not seeing the tape. Furthermore, to those distributing the porno

tape, a suggestion: please put a label on it saying in large letters: WARNING: VIEWING THIS TAPE MAY CAUSE NAUSEA!

Some of my friends who have remained in CGI say that Mr. GTA's sex sins are not all that bad when compared to those of the current WCG leaders. They've told me some pretty wild stuff. I hope you cover those stories some day.

-Texas

Editor: We're investigating those rumors (and that is all we consider them at this point). We will comment further in a future issue.

Here in New Zealand the WCG changes are certainly evident, and in this respect enclosed is a press cutting from The New Zealand Herald, Sept. 2, 1995. This is the largest daily newspaper in the country and here is Jack Croucher, who controls the New Zealand WCG work, excited about their newfound understanding with the Greenlane Christian Fellowship movement which is a charismatic group that meets on Sunday!

-Colin Moffat

Frankly, some of us who once gave thousands of hard-earned dollars toward the building of "the House for God" in Pasadena are shocked that it has now become, in effect, the private property of one man - Mr. Tkach Jr. - to do with as he wishes. And we are heartbroken that he wants to simply discard God's House like just so much garbage. Can't anything be done about this travesty?

-Arizona

Editor: A lot of people have been asking the same thing. Frankly, I don't think there is much that individuals can do at this point. But let me recommend that you read an excellent article which appeared on page seven of the 6/3/96 issue of New Beginnings. Written by our friend Steven Andrews, an attorney and CPA, the article will give you some idea of the kinds of ethical and legal considerations that may impinge on Tkach's plan to sell off Ambassador Auditorium and the rest of the WCGs Pasadena properties. New Beginnings is published by the United Church of God, P.O. Box 661780, Arcadia, CA 91006-1780.

My husband, a member since 1981, remains in the WCG. Here in Wichita, they have gone from two congregations to one, with very few social functions. The changes don't seem to bother my husband. It also doesn't bother him that I write you a check, but he does not want to read AR.

-Kansas

I think it is really scary how so many in the WCG will simply follow whatever doctrine or policy change they are given. How can such a thing be happening?

-Rhode Island

Editor: Generally speaking the WCG membership is a rather unsophisticated and anti-intellectual group that is easily manipulated by some very obvious advertising, propaganda, and mind control techniques. For example, the membership had already been pre-programmed into accepting the new PT marketing methods via near-subliminal hints in past WCG publications. See, for example, the Q&A section of the 12/5/95 WN where all the marketing changes were subtly introduced and rationalized A few weeks later, the WN (1/30/96, p. 8) quietly announced that Carmel Omasta, a youthful and chic blond with an MBA from Cal State, Los Angeles, was the Tkach Company's new "product coordinator," the one in charge of marketing the WCGs line of "Christian products." The effectiveness of such pre-programming can be seen in the fact that when the new PT policies were officially introduced weeks later virtually no WCG member was surprised or upset.

I had been a member of the WCG all of my life (33 years), attending with my family and graduating from Ambassador College in 1987. That is where I first began to wonder what on earth was going on! During my first week of classes as a freshman, Mr. Greg Albrecht told us that we would find out a lot of things while we were at Ambassaor College, but that we should not write home and tell anyone about it because they did not need to know and would not understand. Well, I thought, what could be going on here that no one should know or understand? A great deal - as I have discovered in the last three years since leaving the organization.

Thank you for the great job you have done in exposing this great fraud to us all.

HWA always said that if his work was not of God it would fail. That was not good theology because there are hundreds of religions that are centuries old that are not of God, yet they still thrive. Nevertheless, it is interesting that one of HWA's predictions has finally come true.

Another Crisis?

Just as we are going to press, we have learned that the WCG's very existence is again being threatened by yet more financial troubles and political infighting. With the official WCG annual budget down to only about $50 million (and some say it's really less), Tkach is now hinting that it may be necessary to close Ambassador University after all. Dr. Duke was told just that when he arrived in Pasadena for a meeting on June 23. But an even more serious problem revolves around whether the membership can be counted on to continue sending their tithes directly to Pasadena or if they are going to begin giving their tithes to their local pastors. The question becomes: Who will control the limited financial resources that are left - the headquarters generals or the local commanders?

That kind of question has been whispered among WCG pastors for some time now. With Tkach already having cut their benefits and increased their workloads while providing them with virtually no fresh blood from a telecast or broadcast outreach, and with the Plain Truth and even Ambassador University on very shaky ground, there is increasingly very little reason for the WCG's field ministry and even Tkach's hand-picked regional pastors to stay loyal to Pasadena. To top it off, with Tkach having even talked of putting the entire ministry on a part-time basis and having them hold church services in their homes, he has been giving his field ministers every reason to start planning a major revolt. Perhaps it is already in the works.

Sources in Pasadena say that the regional pastors (formerly called the district supervisors) recently demanded to see Tkach who agreed to a meeting that took place the last week of June. As we go to press we have learned that the cantankerous regional pastors have now left town, but not before a few resigned.

Is it conceivable that the entire WCG membership would side with their local pastors in a showdown with Tkach? We tend to doubt it. But one insider told us, "I'm all for it! The regional pastors know best what doctrines to adopt and how to put together the whole doctrinal package for best results in their individual areas. Why shouldn't they be the ones controlling the resulting revenues?" No one is saying what really transpired at the recent meeting. Many knowledgeable observers are convinced, however, that unless Tkach can reverse the rising tide of discontent in the field ministry, his headquarters elite clique may not be far away from ruling over a church with no members.

* * *

We will be monitoring the latest WCG crisis and we will be getting out another issue as soon as finances allow. Our thanks for your continued support and encouragement.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

September, 1996 (AR63)

Tkach Goes Ecumenical

It was the kind of happening that most observers of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) never thought they'd ever see. For National Prayer Day on May 2, Ambassador Auditorium in Pasadena, California became the venue for a prayer service attended by 515 people including Mayor William M. Paparian and other Pasadena area dignitaries. What made the service so unusual, however, was not the day, the prayers, the politicians, or the Marine Corps color guard that participated. What was new was the use of the WCG's "House for God" for a religious service presided over not just by WCG ministers Michael Fezell and Tom Lapacka, but by Rev. Kent Puls of the Canoga Park Lutheran Church, Dr. Les Blank, dean of the school of theology at Azusa Pacific University, Major Charles Yuill of the Salvation Army, Rev. Garner Scott Odell of Westminster Presbyterian Church, and Father Efstathios Mylonas of St. Anthony Greek Orthodox Church.

Even in the decade following the death of church founder Herbert W. Armstrong in January 1986, such an ecumenical worship service at the very seat of WCG authority was unheard of. But after more than a decade of doctrinal change and with WCG leaders in the last two years having come out of the closet about their increasing contacts with what Worldwidiers used to call "the religions of the world," such a prayer service is now considered, well, "normal" by the WCG headquarters congregation.

The May 2 event was not a token sop to the spirit of ecumenism. In the last year there have been many cases of WCG ministers reaching out to other denominations in various ways. Some WCG clerics are now studying at seminaries of other faiths, a good number of WCG congregations share church buildings with other denominations, some WCG congregations have had joint sabbath services with other sabbatarian denominations (Worldwide News, "WN," 3/12/96, p. 12), some WCG ministers have suggested to their lay members that they attend Sunday services with other denominations, and last February, 43 WCG ministers attended the evangelical Promise Keepers clergy convention in Atlanta where they were prodded into "rekindling, guarding and spreading the flame of the Holy Spirit" (WN, 2/27/96, p. 1).

The new ecumenism, while surprising for the WCG, does seem to be a growing international phenomenon. The Los Angeles Times (3/16/96, p. B4) in a Religious News Service article titled "Move Toward Unity Seen in Protestant Churches" stated:

A new spirit of unity is taking hold in American Protestantism thanks to a swell of ecumenical initiatives around the nation, proposals that could see millions of Christians put aside divisions on many topics, including how Holy Communion is understood.

Among the American Protestant denominations pursuing a new ecumenism are the Evangelical Lutheran Church in America, the Episcopal Church, the Presbyterian Church (USA), the Reformed Church in America, and the United Church of Christ. Even more ecumenical than American Protestant denominations, however, is the Roman Catholic Church. The Los Angeles Times (9/30/95, p. B4) in a Religious News Service article titled "Catholic Church Widens Outreach to Other Faiths" stated:

Thirty years after the Second Vatican Council added interfaith dialogue to the Roman Catholic agenda, the changing American religious scene has profoundly altered the American church's outreach to other religious groups. Where once Catholic interfaith dialogue largely meant conversation with Jews, mainline Protestant and Eastern Orthodox Christians, today it also means growing relationships with Muslims and evangelical Protestants.

That the Tkach church is very much a part of this growing ecumenism was made clear on June 26 when leaders of the Seventh-day Adventist Church and the WCG met for the first time at the Adventist Church World Headquarters in Silver Spring, Maryland. Ostensibly, the leaders of the two groups got together simply to discuss their mutual beliefs (WN, 7/23/96, p. 4). But accompanying the June 26 Adventist News Network press release that we received about the meeting was another press release about another set of meetings:

Mississauga, Ontario - Considerable progress was made in recent talks aimed at improving inter-denominational relations between the Lutheran World Federation and the Seventh-day Adventist World Church. The meetings, which occurred June 16-21 in Mississauga, Ontario, Canada, sought to break down false stereotypes, identify common beliefs and discover real or imagined friction between the two churches. A statement released by representatives from both denominations stated that the talks were a significant step "in achieving mutual understanding."

The Mississauga meetings were the second in a series of yearly conversations to be held through 1998 and included the presentations of position papers related to, church doctrines and practices. Lutheran papers addressed the topics of justification by faith and the role of the law in the New Testament. Adventist papers discussed the relationship between justification, sanctification and the final judgement of God, and the Adventist understanding of the law and Sabbath.

Where all of this ecumenical energy is leading is anybody's guess. But a number of leading theologians are beginning to speculate that just as the entire world seems to be economically heading toward becoming what some call a global village (or global plantation?), there is similarly a possibility we will someday see some kind of globalization of religion. Such speculation is no longer the province of small apocalyptic sects. In an op-ed piece in the New York Times (8/31/96), famed theologian and author Karen Armstrong began by asking: "Is acceptance of Jesus Christ necessary for salvation?" She went on to discuss the well-known case of Rev. Richard A. Rhem who has upset many in the Dutch Reformed Church in America by his stated conclusion that such faith is not necessary for salvation. What was most interesting, however, were Karen Armstrong's final comments:

In the light of all this, some Christians even look forward to a new reformation, in which religious men and women across the globe pool the special insights of their faiths.

But Mr. Rhem's critics find this enthusiasm for other faiths deeply disturbing. To them, it seems a betrayal of a divine trust and a threat to religious identity. Some people join fundamentalist sects to find certainty in a world where nothing seems sacred. Others reassert the old exclusive doctrines - more stridently than ever.

Like the new fundamentalism, however, the new liberalism is here to stay. In the 21st century, people of all faiths will have to decide whether to embrace the new globalization by expressing it in religious terms or to react vehemently against it and retreat into denominational ghettos.

Putting aside the many obvious questions of global import raised by the above statement, it appears that the central spiritual issues now being faced by the world's major religions are not that much different than those now being faced, albeit on a smaller scale, by the WCG and its daughter churches.

Will the WCG Be Scuttled?

For at least two years, a number of long-time WCG employees have said privately that Joseph Tkach Jr. inwardly abhorred the legacy of Herbert W. Armstrong so much he had a secret plan to purposely scuttle what was left of the Armstrong ship and then shove off, himself, in some kind of lifeboat. We thought such a notion was a bit extreme. But now we are not so sure. So much of what Tkach Jr. has been doing is so strange, so contrary to the successful money-making formulas laid down by HWA, that it is difficult to see any other kind of rationale behind what is occurring.

A good example is the "new Plain Truth." As we reported in our last issue, the plan to put a price tag on the formerly free magazine resulted in a monstrous drop in circulation. The number of people willing to pay for the new magazine was so small that very quickly Tkach sent out a letter to all the old readers begging them to resubscribe. If they couldn't afford the subscription price, he said, he'd send it to them for free. Still, most did not reorder the magazine. And no wonder. Many have noticed that the new PT has become essentially a catalogue for selling Christian books, Christian videos, Christian CDs, and Christian knickknacks. The editorial content of the new PT is so vapid, so lacking in substance that even many critics of the WCG are longing for the old Police Gazette style of the PT's earlier years. Times change. In Russia, Pravda, the Communist propaganda paper begun by Lenin in 1912, once boasted a circulation of 11 million but in recent years saw that circulation dwindle to under 200,000. In late July Pravda (which in Russian means "Truth") ceased publication. Some are wondering how long it will take for the same fate to descend upon the Plain Truth.

Another WCG institution in deep trouble is Ambassador University. The WN in July admitted that "Ambassador has one to two years to become self-sufficient." The WCG has already cut back so much of its funding for the University that in August, Dr. Russell Duke, the university's new president, sent out a letter to all locatable alumni begging for financial contributions. In it Duke explained:

This past academic year a $5 million subsidy from the church supported a $12.5 million budget for 760 full-time students. That represented a rather remarkable reduction of $9.5 million in subsidy over just a five-year period... For the 1996-97 academic year we anticipate receiving $1.2 million cash from the church to support a $9.6 million budget. That's a reduction in subsidy of almost $4 million in just one year's time.

He went on to describe new program cutbacks and "another tuition increase." We don't know how well the fund raising letter did. But we do know that many alumni who feel that the WCG and Ambassador helped destroy what should have been the best years of their lives felt insulted just receiving the letter.

Out in "the field" in local congregations the WCG doesn't seem to be doing much better. Since our last issue we have received dozens of letters from current WCG members around the U.S. who say that in their church area it appears that the membership is being prepared for a time when local congregations will be on their own, cut off from headquarters "subsidiaries." Whether that is really Tkach's plan or simply economic pragmatism on the part of local pastors we cannot say. Already Pasadena has inaugurated what they refer to as "house churches" where members simply meet for services in the homes of their local pastors (WN, 5/21/96, p. 2). Many have taken the new plan as one more sign that the WCG-Titanic is steaming toward calamity.

While Tkach once talked of selling the WCG's Pasadena properties as the means by which the WCG corporation could be saved, no buyer has appeared on the horizon and possibly none will. Tkach admits that most sellable WCG properties outside of Pasadena have already been sold. WCG leaders are now talking about breaking the Pasadena properties up into segments and selling off each as the need arises. The first block to go will probably be the mail processing facility. With annual church income rumored to be under $35 million now and getting thinner by the month - "a worrisome trend" moans church treasurer Schnippert - it may be that Tkach has already prepared a lifeboat for himself and a few friends.

In June the WN announced that a new "transdenominational" Plain Truth Ministries (PTM) has been launched. Begun with a rumored $2 million "subsidy" from the WCG headed by Tkach Jr., the new PTM, also headed by Tkach Jr., is separately incorporated. Conceivably, should WCG Inc. go belly-up, PTM could continue on as a Christian business that keeps Junior and closest friends in the money for a few years. According to their official press release, PTM has already become a member of the Evangelical Press Association and the Evangelical Christian Publishers Association. So, apparently unbeknownst to most members, Tkach has officially positioned his church in the Protestant spectrum as an "evangelical" church. Besides Tkach, the other PTM board members are Greg Albrecht, Mike Feazell, Bernie Schnippert, and Monte Wolverton - the Tkach Co.'s brain trust.

One of PTM's priorities is a radio program that will have Tkach as spokesman. Scheduled to begin airing this fall, the segments will be only two minutes long and therefore should not tax the attention span of listeners too much.

The WCG: A Dysfunctional Family

In the last few years, the WCG has campaigned vigorously to change not just most of its core teachings, but also, more importantly, its public image. As an indication of just how well the Tkach Co. has succeeded in the latter, one has only to look at the July 15 issue of Christianity Today where a huge amount of space was devoted to singing the praises of the new Tkach church. The author of the article gushed, "Never before in the history of Christianity has there been such a complete move to orthodox Christianity by an unorthodox fringe church." True? Technically perhaps, but it reeks of overstatement. Throughout history there have been many cases of large groups, even whole nations, adopting Christianity en masse. Historians tell us that was the case with Russia. Around 988 when that nation was still steeped in paganism, Prince Vladimir shopped around for a new religion for his people and considered Judaism, Islam, and Byzantine Orthodoxy. Judaism, so the story goes, proved too austere; Islam, with its many prohibitions, including one against the drinking of liquor, was also rejected; but the Eastern Orthodox faith with its colorful icons, its liturgical music, its services of pageantry and incense, all offered the kind of grand gesture that appealed to the melancholy Russian soul. And so he converted his entire people to that truly orthodox form of Christianity.

As if in a hushed tone, the Christianity Today writer tells us of her initial, almost wondrous contact with the WCG's dream team:

Then came that phone call I will never forget. It was from Michael Snyder, assistant to the director of public relations.... The conversation that followed was nothing short of astonishing.... But most astonishing was Snyder's own testimony of faith, which convinced me he was a brother in Christ.

Whether this phone call occurred before or after Snyder left his wife for the wife of one of his co-workers in Christ, we're not sure. But, as reported in past issues, Snyder is no longer working for the Tkach Co. spinning out PR BS, and he has made it plain that he considers Worldwide a cult.

The Christianity Today article calls the WCG's transformation "a story that has no precedent in the history of cultic movements." That may very well be true. We do not know of any case where a cult group has been so successful in fooling so many cult experts. Omitted from the CT article were a number of pieces of data that would have given readers a more accurate picture of what has happened in the WCG. There was no mention of Ambassador Report's twenty years of reporting on the inner workings of the group. Nor was there any mention of pastor David Covington's recent resignation from the WCG or his dramatic open letter detailing why the WCG is still a cult (see AR 62). Also omitted was any mention of the fact that the author of the CT article, Ruth Tucker of Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, is now working for the WCG-controlled Ambassador University teaching Christian History 101 - bit of information that may explain a lot.

While more and more Christian organizations - particularly those which stand to gain from PTM's new business ventures - are praising the Tkach church for its increased "orthodoxy," some knowledgeable observers still see the Tkach church as a spiritually dysfunctional one. The recent Vol. 13, No. 2 issue of The Watchman Expositor contained an insightful article about the WCG by Phillip Arnn who has been monitoring the group for years. While praising the doctrinal changes made by the Tkachs in the last few years, Arnn specifically questions the means used by Tkach Sr. to achieve those ends. Writes Arnn:

Joseph Tkach's decisions affected tens of thousands of lives. Like the enlightened despots of past empires, he used his authority to bring about change for the good of the people under his care. However, his administration was a confusion of mixed signals. Though trained in the Armstrong school of totalitarian rule, he had come to recognize the abuses. As Pastor General he asked his ministers to be less authoritarian, yet he upheld their abusive actions when a member had the courage to appeal to headquarters for arbitration. On doctrinal issues, Tkach would write about New Testament justification by faith, then give contradictory sermons which preached Old Testament "works" salvation.

It appears that Joseph Tkach was the elder brother trying to lead his siblings away from the pain of the past while continuing to honor the parent who abused them. He dismantled Armstrong's teachings but kept Armstrong's form of government, which he used to enforce the changes.

Arnn correctly points out, "The attitude that God's government resides among the ruling elite is still evident, from the top down to the local ministers." Arnn gives a number of examples that match reports we have received. He also states, "The WCG is a dysfunctional family that is trying to move forward under the burden of the betrayal of trust that is the pain of the past." The dysfunctional family analogy is a good one. In fact, some psychologists familiar with the WCG have speculated that most of those attracted to it may actually be from dysfunctional families, and that because of their own abusive upbringing, members in Worldwide have often been unable to see that their ministry was abusive and their church environment dysfunctional. This latter theory is one we hope to investigate in future issues.

The Arnn article, like the rest of the Expositor issue, is excellent. Those who would like to obtain a copy should write to The Watchman Expositor, P.O. Box 13340, Arlington, TX 76094-0340.

Phillip Arnn is not the only writer who is somewhat skeptical about Worldwide's supposed change of course. Another is Peter Ditzel, a former WCG member who until a few years ago was writing for the Plain Truth and the Pastor General's Report (he did the Q & A sections for both, plus ghost writing for WCG leaders). Now, after a spiritual journey out of the WCG, he writes and edits for evangelical Christian publications including The Quarterly Journal, the Personal Freedom Outreach newsletter.

In the Journal's July-Sept. 1995 issue, Ditzel asked the question, "Has the Worldwide Church of God Really Moved from Cultism to Orthodoxy?" He answers that question on page one:

Based on my experience as a former member of and writer for the WCG, I believe it is at best premature to declare any such transformation. In fact, it may never be the best option to accept the WCG as an organization into the evangelical fold. Here's why.

He follows with a probing analysis of Armstrong doctrines and how they have and have not changed. In concluding, he advises:

Rather than being accepted as orthodox before it has demonstrated a full accountability, the WCG should - as with all cults - be kept in check by an orthodox Christianity that rises to its rightful place as the moral and spiritual leader of western society...."

The above article by Ditzel was followed by another in the Oct.-Dec. issue of the Journal. Titled "From the Plain Truth to the Real Truth," this piece tells the story of how he joined the WCG and then later came to the conclusion that he was in a cult. He writes about the inner struggle he had during that period of time:

The real question forming in my mind was this: If the teachings of Herbert Armstrong were not biblical and were, in fact, heretical, where did that place the WCG? Since the WCG was founded on Armstrong's human-devised, false doctrines, the answer was inescapable: the WCG is not God's Church; it is a false church, any changes Tkach might institute would make no real difference.

Not surprisingly, Ditzel suggests that those in the WCG, rather than try to reform it from within, would be better off just leaving it for safer Christian fellowship elsewhere. We talked to Mr. Ditzel by phone recently and found him intelligent, warm, and balanced. He also indicated that he is currently doing research for possible future articles on the WCG and its offshoots. Those who would like to obtain information about PFO's Quarterly Journal should write to: Personal Freedom Outreach, P.O. Box 26062, Saint Louis, MO 63136-0062.

Waiting for Superchurch

Just as the WCG is reaching out to touch other Christian denominations, some of the bigger Armstrongite splits are doing a bit of neighborhood cruising themselves. Through interchurch publications such as In Transition and Servant's News, through interchurch forums such as Friends of the Sabbath, and through the many sabbatarian discussion groups on the Internet, there seems to be a surprising amount of sabbatarian organization realignment in progress. Many keep asking us: Is some new super Armstrongite or Adventist organization emerging? In September of 1994, one expert in the field of Adventism, William Washington of TSL Publishing House (P.O. Box 08347, Cleveland, OH 44108) wrote us the following:

I wonder if events now taking place in the WCG could be of historic proportions. We could be witnessing the beginnings of America's fourth great Adventist revival that will result in the formation of at least one, new, major Adventist church (I use the word Adventist in its broadest sense). Adventists have not only prophesied falsely that the Second Coming of Christ was near, they also preached Conditional Salvation and repentance. And it was preaching repentance, not making false prophecies, that was truly their most important work.

Large scale Adventist revivals in the U.S. have traditionally occurred in times of great economic and political stress and in times of perceived moral decline. These revivals have not occurred randomly but cyclically: each great revival being concurrent with a great economic depression. The first was the 1830s and 1840s Millerite revival that occurred during the great depression of 1837 through 1845. The Millerite revival produced the Seventh Day Adventists, the Advent Christian Church, Church of God (Adventist), Church of God (Abrahamic Faith), and other groups. The second great revival was the 1870s revival which was concurrent with the 1870s great depression. From this revival came the Russellites (who became the Jehovah's Witnesses) and the Church of God 7th Day. Charles Russell, founder of the Russellites, and Andrew F. Duggar, leader of the original Church of God 7th Day, were both at one time affiliated with the Advent Christian Church. The third great revival came in the 1930s during the Great Depression, and produced the WCG and Sacred Names movements. Andrew N. Duggar was the son of Andrew F. Duggar, and A.N. Duggar was leader of the Church of God 7th Day when Herbert W. Armstrong was affiliated with that group.

Each of these great Adventist revivals and great depressions have in some way been connected to the first year of a Biblical week of years. The first year of the present week of years was from Spring 1993 to Spring 1994; this was also an apparent Jubilee year which could possibly mean that events one might expect to see in the first year of this week of years were shifted to the second year. History indicated that another great depression and another great Adventist revival were both due in this present week of years. We published a book in 1994 that dealt with the subject of Adventist revivals, depression cycles, war cycles, and weeks of years. I had wondered if we would see another Adventist revival; and then I learned from a friend who left the WCG in July that the organization was disintegrating. Could it be the start of the fourth great Adventist revival? Could one of the WCG splinter groups become the next SDA, or WCG, or JW's? Time will tell. But if the past is prologue, there will be another great depression in the near future; and from the wreckage of the WCG will come a great worldwide religious movement. We can only hope that this next movement, if there is a next movement, will not repeat the mistakes of the past and be led by another corrupt and cunning false prophet who establishes an oppressive and authoritarian cult like the JW's or WCG.

Mr. Washington's speculation about a new superchurch is a scenario many are hoping to see. But a unified superchurch composed of former Worldwidiers seems more unlikely with every passing month. On the issue of the sacred calendar alone, there are now so many competing views that this fall Tabernacles keepers will have four categories of competing church groups to choose from, each with their own sacred calendar and/or way of calculating OT holy days. Resignations from the splitoffs continue to abound. A recent example is that of Wesley B. Webster from GCG. In a resignation letter published in Servant's News in August, Webster (75462.2411@CompuServe.COM) indicated that Global is playing mind games with its members and that some of its leaders are less interested in preaching truth than they are in protecting the memory of HWA. Many complain that the latter is also a priority with UCG, CGI, and a number of other WCG spinoffs. Finally, as always, there are new prophets popping up. The latest one is Murray Hyson (RR 3 Westville, Nova Scotia, Canada BOK 2AO) who is sending out a 311-page book and a letter that details why he - not Flurry, Hulme, Meredith, or anyone else - is the True Apostle sent to finish HWA's end time work.

Bomb-making Prophet Gets Prison

Willie "Ray" Lampley, the former WCG member turned "Prophet of the Most High," has joined a growing list of Armstrongites whose religious beliefs have gotten them into trouble with the law. In April after listening to more than two weeks of evidence, a jury found Oklahomans Lampley, 65, his wife Cecilia, 49, and associate John Baird, 54, guilty of conspiring to build an ammonium nitrate bomb. In addition, Ray Lampley and Baird were convicted of carrying firearms in relation to a crime, and Lampley was also convicted of solicitation of a crime of violence.

The three were apprehended with the help of confidential informant Richard Schrum, who secretly infiltrated Lampley's Universal Church of God and tape-recorded conversations in which all three talked at length about their bombing plans. Before the sentencing in July, defense lawyers contended that Schrum was a wanna-be cop looking for the limelight after the Oklahoma City bombing. And Judge Seay even agreed that Schrum was "a shady character at best." Nevertheless, the jury found the evidence, including 30 hours of surreptitious tape recordings, convincing. The three had intended to bomb a number of targets including Department of Human Services buildings and the Anti-Defamation League's offices in Houston.

U.S. District Judge Frank Seay in Muskogee gave the three the maximum prison sentences allowable for the crimes under federal guidelines. While he did not comment how under the biblical standards advocated by Lampley he and his fellow conspirators would have been stoned on the spot, he did remind defense lawyers that, "If not for the government moving in on them, they may have killed a lot of people." Bombs do that. Judge Seay sentenced Lampley to 11 years and 6 months, his wife Cecilia to 4 years and 3 months, and John Baird to 10 years. A fourth defendant, Larry Wayne Crow, accepted a plea bargain to testify for the government. Crow pleaded guilty to misprision (concealment of a felony by one not a participant in the crime) and received probation and a six-month stay in a halfway house. Lawyers for the three said they planned to appeal, but experts say they do not see much chance of a reversal. (Reported on by Bill Swindell in the Tulsa World, 7/11/96, p. 1; see also ARs 61 and 54.)

Mystery Mailer Psychoanalyzed

In our last issue we mentioned that throughout WCG circles in recent years there has been a marked increase in the spread of unsubstantiated, unverified (and often unverifiable) rumors, a factor which has contributed to the morass of confusion in which the Armstrongite groups now find themselves. Even worse, one can often find examples of purposely created and carefully crafted disinformation. A prime example of the latter is an unsigned flyer that is getting wide distribution in WCG circles and which, perhaps because it mimics the layout and type style of a nationally circulated men's magazine, has been accepted by many as factual. While most readers will probably already have seen it, for the benefit of those who have not, here it is:

WCG Pastor General Junior Agonized Over Sex Change Operation

PASADENA, Calif. - Even in the topsy turvy world of religiondom, the pendulum swings of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) in recent years have set them apart. But just as things were about to settle down, rumors are frothing afresh from the Green Street sewer.

In conjunction with an article in the October 30 issue of the dissident publication, In Transigence, these rumors have sparked renewed inquiry into just what bizarre future faces its its Commander-in-Grief, the neophytic Joseph Tkach Jr.

Joe Jr., or just Junior as his subordinates prefer to call him, is most often described as a moody, reclusive curmudgeon who was quoted saying, "Most of the ministers who are left don't even talk to me." While his devotees say this is unwarranted and misleading, many of his detractors are even less flattering accusing him of a style of whining, meandering doubletalk that leaves even his most dedicated underlings clueless and discouraged. But in person, Joe seemed unusually open with a remarkable sense of humor.

From the Mouths of Boobs

In a follow-up interview to the In Transigence article, I asked about the growing spirit of contempt among the rank-and-file ministry. Leaning back in his overstuffed office chair, a look of puzzlement spread across his face. "How'd you come to that conclusion?" he asked. I was somewhat embarrassed, hoping I could have avoided relating what it had begun to look like I couldn't. And he insisted. So I told him that in the commissary, just minutes earlier, I overheard a table-full of ministers repeatedly referring to him as "that son of a pustuled crotch."

No sooner had the words left my lips than his head fell forward and he began to pound the desk with his fist as he erupted in uncontrollable laughter. After a few minutes he regained his composure. "Oh, no, no, you misunderstood them," he said with his eyes still streaming from laughter, "that was a phrase showing their respect. What they must have said was 'son of Apostle Tkach.'" I was quite relieved by his good humor and throughout the interview he was more forthcoming than I could have ever hoped.

Upward then Inward and Outward

Junior agreed that there had been some controversy sparked by that In Transigence article since last week, but he said the paper had quoted him accurately for the most part. Repeating the pledge he made earlier, to "follow Christ upward, inward, and outward," he said this demands more than just the oral skills by which he has risen so quickly. Little did this reporter comprehend, at the time, just what he could have meant by such a cryptic remark.

Randy Dick Takes Aim at Junior's Feminine Back Side

Though on the top of the corporate dog pile since his father's terminal illness became critical, knowledgeable sources reveal Junior's growing preoccupation with a vision calling him to an African missionary position as the "bride of Christ." Presently, he feels wholly inadequate for the task, except for his submissive spirit. Unusually troubling, however, is the lip service he has been forced to pay to some of WCG's more uncomely appendages namely one Randy Dick who, not only a deep offense to his "feminine" side, is now strategically positioned as Church Administration Director (CAD) and armed with ample wife and savvy to oust Junior from the top.

But Junior seemed strangely unconcerned. "All during my rise to power," he sighed, "some guy or another has been on top of me, but it's just not the same as being a woman." Hanging his head, he continued saying he was particularly unqualified for the job he now holds. Admitting the lack of any broad experience, he somberly raided off a long string of the exploits of former leaders he could never hope to match.

Junior claims his only real contribution to the church is as a bystander, saying he has watched the church through the eyes of a child, a student, a single man and a divorced man. "The only eyes I haven't seen it through are the eyes of a woman," he quipped with a coy wink.

He's Got a Ticket to Denmark

Since the early days of GTA, an extended hunting trip after the fall festival has been the custom of top ministers. Well, that - like most everything else at WCG - has changed. Questioned about rumors he had taken a sudden and somewhat secretive trip to northern Europe only days ago, Junior beamed saying he had just returned from his first visit to the famous Tivoli Gardens in Copenhagen. Reaching into his desk drawer, he retrieved a bag full of Danish sugar cookies, souvenirs, photographs of himself at the park entrance and five boxes of unopened playing cards. This piqued my curiosity since any fool knows Tivoli is closed in the fall. When I asked why the park had been kept open so late, he suddenly became sullen and defensive blurring out, "What makes you think you know everything; things change sometimes." Then he abruptly ended the interview saying, "If you have any more questions, write my secretary."

Scuttlebutt around the Ambassador University campus has it that the trip was, in fact, a preoperative visit to the renowned gonadectomist and plastic surgeon Knudsen Jorgensen. Famous for exorbitantly expensive sex change operations on West German celebs, Jorgensen could not be reached for comment.

Festooned by the rhythm of his royal paycheck and a massive inheritance languishing in Switzerland, money is certainly no object for Junior. But there is little doubt he's strategizing the best way to explain away the soon-coming changes to any surviving traditionalists.

Easy as a Camel Going Through an IRS Loophole

Fomented by conservatives, opposition has grown to an effort to reverse the longstanding doctrine prohibiting ordination of women as preachers. But most informed observers think Junior can deftly waltz through with the old Ticonderoga two-step: He won't have actually been a woman when he was ordained. WCG leadership, one step ahead of the Fem-Ordeal resistance movement, sees this maneuver as a slick and easy end run to establish a useful precedent even if on a somewhat dubious technicality.

Most of the ministry has no better sources of information than the rumors we all hear. "You know, when it comes to this sort of thing, Junior is really tight-lipped," said Randy Dick, "but I think this is what the CAD in me likes the most about him."

"You needn't listen to all that ya'duh, ya'duh, ya'duh; he just does what he's there for and leaves." After a moment of reflection he continued, "Of course, if he goes through with the operation a lot about him will change, but I don't think this will."

Randy Dick, formerly known as GTA's "right-hand-man," considers himself indispensable to the cash flow of the entire worldwide operation. Several years ago he blithely passed up a lucrative offer from the Playboy Channel for a part opposite Mr. Hands in an X-rated version of that old Saturday Night Live skit corn "Mr. Bill." Said Dick, "Their offer couldn't come close to what I get here." Then he whispered, "Sometimes I get to feeling guilty, but, hey, it's all legal and everything."

November 7, 1995

Granted, many have found the above article funny. But there is a serious problem with it. We know because we spent a considerable amount of time and money trying to verify whether any of it was accurate. After all, we are only too aware of the many sex scandals that have plagued the WCG over the last two decades, and we are always willing to get out the facts about the WCG's leaders. But in this case, we have discovered that none of the claims made in the mysterious mailer's flyer are true.

At first one might think that someone is simply trying to smear the WCG's new leaders. But is that really necessary? Aren't the actual facts bad enough? And if someone really wants to expose their negative side, isn't there a better, more ethical way?

Finally, what kind of person would be writing this kind of offbeat humor? We showed the mysterious mailer's flyer to a number of readers who have a substantial amount of education in the field of psychology. Most agreed with the astute observations one made about the likely personality of the flyer's anonymous author:

The first thing we notice is that the writer is very familiar with the locations, personalities, and climate of intrigue in the Worldwide Church hierarchy. This was not written by a complete outsider or an average lay person. Quite apparent is the fact that the writer harbors resentment toward Mr. Tkach and others who he probably feels have deprived him of something. What exactly that is we cannot tell. He appears to be resentful of their power or wealth or both.

There are little hints here and there that the writer is one who has traveled widely and experienced the good life, appreciates the manly sport of hunting, likes to gamble - one who enjoys only an occasional game of "old maid" would not esteem "five boxes of unopened playing cards," and likes popular music - notice the allusion to the Beatles' song "Ticket to Ride."

But much more interesting is the writing style. Notice the plethora of colorful adjectives. Those alone would lead me to suspect the writer was a professional communicator, either writing or speaking for a living. That conclusion is further buttressed by the writer's knowledge of journalistic interview techniques. It is interesting too that the style has a certain virile punch - what you might expect from someone who lives a fast and active man's life, so to speak.

Now here's something odd. Notice the word "festooned." I don't think I have ever seen that word except in fiction set in the Pacific - you know, action-adventure sailing stories. In fact, I was reading the famous story "Koolau the Loper" just the other day and I noticed it was used there. Who knows? Maybe your mystery man likes to read those kinds of adventure stories himself.

Very obvious, however, is that the writer is obsessed with sex. But notice - in a strange, crude, juvenile sort of way. I think this is someone who views sex as simply a cheap pastime or perhaps as just a body-pampering act like getting into a Jacuzzi for relaxation. And there seems to be an over-fascination with the buttocks of the male physique and this may indicate the writer is either homosexual overtly or latently so. On the other hand, his awareness of the psychology of female sexuality may point to bisexuality, while the derogatory way he writes about the female gender shows an individual who is disrespectful of women, anti-woman, in fact.

This is a tormented person. I am left with the impression that to this individual being in charge is very important. I would guess that the writer is some type of executive, probably an authoritarian one. Notice the references to who is on top, who is on the bottom, the obsession with rank. I suspect you may have here a man who is constantly protecting his position of higher rank within an organization. He must be on top. And yet - and this is not unusual for the type - he must secretly wish that he would at times not have to be on top, so to speak. You know, it is very stressful for executives, for example, to always have to be "on top." Researchers such as Dr. G. G. Scott, for instance, say that one reason that male patrons of so-called "S and M dungeons" are frequently executives or policemen is that those in such professions are made emotionally unbalanced by having to always be "in charge." I suspect your mysterious writer is tormented in that way.

The references to Jorgenson and Denmark are very curious. The writer does not seem to realize that most Americans wanting a sex change operation these days have the procedure done in Trinidad, Colorado. It has been many years since Americans have had to go to Europe for such surgery. My guess - and, mind you, while it may be an educated guess, it is only a guess - would be that the writer was in his sexually impressionistic late teens or early twenties in 1952 when the famous story of Christine Jorgenson's sex change operation in Copenhagen broke in the newspapers. That would mean your writer here is, oh, I'd say somewhere between about 59 and 69 years of age.

Here is another indication of his age. Notice that he views Mr. Tkach Jr. who is in his late forties now as being young, a "neophyte" he calls him. So too, Mr. Randall Dick is portrayed as a young man. I suspect the writer was once acquainted with the two gentlemen and now envies them their youth, their energy, or perhaps in homosexual envy he views them as good looking. This may indicate the writer is past mid-life, perhaps even approaching old age. Like von Aschenbach in Death in Venice he seems to be yearning for the days of his own, now-past, youthful glories.

A rather sad individual I would say. If you find out who he is, please give him my advice: Get into therapy.

We still have not discovered who the writer of the article was. Our copy came in an envelope with no return address. It was simply postmarked Tyler, Texas.

Earl Williams' Woes

When minister Earl Williams of Georgia left the WCG a year ago, some wondered if he would be the leader of a major movement composed of members leaving both the WCG and its Armstrongite offshoots. After all, it was Williams, who helped prod the Tkachs into making some of the WCG's most important doctrinal changes of the last few years. Many saw Williams as highly principled. That image was only enhanced last year when he posted a message on the Internet: "My wife and I have decided to bring complete closure to any relationship with the Worldwide Church of God. We are officially disfellowshipping ourselves from the church...."

Williams was on a roll. Now, however, it appears that whatever spiritual momentum he once had has been dissipated. In fact, some are now of the opinion that Williams' breakaway group Christ Church of Grace is on the way to becoming a destructive cult. Mr. Jasper Fletcher of Decatur, Georgia has written us:

I left the Worldwide Church of God over two years ago and your publications were a factor in my coming to that decision. I then joined one of the offshoots of the WCG, namely Christ Church of Grace, started by Earl Williams. I have since left Christ Church of Grace because of the many problems associated with that church and its founder. Because I was a deacon, a board member, and worked closely with Earl Williams, I am very aware of the problems of that organization. I wrote Earl upon my departure to try to address some of the problems. My letter was returned unopened. Disillusioned, I didn't do anything until now. Lately, however, I have had to come face to face with the responsibility of alerting my brothers and sisters to what is happening in that church.

In the attached open letter to Earl Williams, Mr. Fletcher alleged that the Williams church is becoming a cult "so fast that it's frightening," that Williams has become an abusive and autocratic leader, that "every premise upon which this church began has been changed, been cast off, or ignored," and that Williams has "turned away from a commitment to faithfully preaching and teaching the truth as revealed in the scripture." Those who would like a complete copy of the open letter should write to Jasper Fletcher, 3688 Citation Drive, Decatur, Georgia 30034. And those who would like Williams' side of the story can write to Christ Church of Grace, 2531 Burwick Walk SW, Snellville, GA 30278.

A Church Like China

Editor: Gary Alexander the writer, critic, and political commentator, is currently working on a book about investment opportunities in the emerging economies, with a focus on China. He recently returned from a three-week fact finding tour of that country and on his return wrote us:

Let me tell you how much my trip to China and my research of Chinese regimes in this century remind me of the history of the Worldwide Church of God and similar authoritarian regimes. In many ways, the Chinese history parallels WCG history, but on a much grander scale: In the 1950s China experienced a time of open self-criticism followed by purges and the Great Leap Forward followed by famines. In the 1960s there was the Cultural Revolution followed by the exiling of Red Guards to the countryside. In the 1950s and 60s new edicts from on high sought to change ruling "paradigms," sometimes twice a year, for over 600 million people!

If you want to see these switches in dramatic form, check out some Chinese films. In the last two weeks I've seen: China My Sorrow (1989, directed by Dai Si-jie), Blue Kite (1993, by Tian Zhuang), Farewell My Concubine (1993, by Chen Kaige), Red Sorghum (1987, by Zhang Yimou), and, probably the best, To Live (1994, also directed by Zhang Yimou).... Many of these are actually banned in China, but are available in the West.

Can you imagine a billion people living under an everchanging cult-like series of changing paradigms? I've just been reading Wild Swans by Jung Chang, a woman born in China in 1952. It's about the "Let 100 Flowers Bloom" movement of 1956-57 when Mao encouraged criticism and diversity of thought and artistic expression. The author writes (p. 212):

Under the Hundred Flowers policy, the country enjoyed about a year of relative relaxation. Then, in Spring 1957, the Party urged intellectuals to criticize officials all the way to the top. My mother... felt that China was really going to have a modern and democratic party, a party that would welcome criticism to revitalize itself. She felt proud of being a Communist. When my mother's level was told about Mao's speech, soliciting criticism of officials, they were not informed about some other remarks he had made around the same time, about "enticing snakes out of their lairs" - to uncover anyone who dared to oppose him or his regime.

It turns out that Mao was so stunned in 1956 by the Hungarian uprising and Khrushchev's "secret speech" about Stalin's excesses that Mao was determined to hear every piece of criticism in the land and then imprison, torture, and murder those who dared to follow his "100 Flowers" edict at face value. He told them, "Say what ever you want to say, and to the full." Then came the hammer, the famine, and the Red Guards. What a social laboratory!

Editor: From the upcoming book, Mr. Alexander has prepublished 144 pages dealing with China's history, geography, economics, sociology, and politics, and his own travel experiences in that country. Interested AR readers may obtain a copy for only $10 by writing to Gary Alexander, 11230 Leatherwood Dr., Reston, VA 22091. One section relates explicitly to the Worldwide experience and is particularly noteworthy because it shows how the Worldwide experience can, in an odd way, be turned into something of value:

Here's where my experience helps me. In August of 1966, just when Mao was cranking up his arrests and tortures, via the Red Guards, I was entering my senior year at Ambassador College, and Karen was entering as a first year student - but with three college years under her belt in Ohio, including a year at Kent State.

I don't want to dare to compare our experience to the Cultural Revolution - that would trivialize the true suffering of others - but we experienced a similar top-down, strict behavioral government, with constantly changing paradigms. We were taught to dress plainly, speak reverently of our leader; there was no open display of affection allowed. We were told to pray an hour a day, which mentally prepared us to believe everything our leader told us, and he eventually told us some very outrageous things. If we disagreed, we were "struggled" fiercely for variations from the party line, whenever we strayed.

Then in the 1970s, I read several books which helped me realize the mind games involved here: Eric Hoffer's The True Believer was the best one, along with Harry Browne's How I Found Freedom in an Unfree World. These books, and many others like them, helped me to see the power of cult-like manipulators over their "dumb sheep" (our leader's name for us).

Since then, I've recognized when I, or other people, fall under this spell. My experience has helped me weigh whether a person is speaking out of freedom, or speaking from under invisible strings of coercion, from a puppeteer/power figure.

That's why I think that the people of China I met are telling the truth. With a few exceptions, in the power structure, I felt the people we met - in accidental, unplanned interviews - were telling us the truth. They were generally happy with their lot in life and their chance to do better. I am not saying it is impossible to fool me, but I think I can smell out liars or con games better than most due to my 12-year experience in this esoteric sect.

British to Shuffle Throne and Royals

Of all the remarkable doctrines disseminated by Herbert Armstrong, perhaps the most colorful had to do with the return of Christ. The way HWA explained it, Jesus was not just coming back to earth, he would be returning to reclaim an existing throne - the royal throne of England. While the new WCG has now totally rejected all vestiges of this doctrine (see the nine-page attack on it in the 2/27/96 WN, for instance), many Armstrongites in the splitoffs still cling to the teaching.

How HWA came to conclude that the British royal family is composed of Jews ruling over the Israelite tribe of Ephraim would take a book to explain; it has to do with obscure groups of banished Jews, the Trojan War and the fall of Troy, and mind-boggling conspiracies involving royal seed and such. Suffice it to say, the so-called Stone of Scone, also called Jacob's Pillar Stone and the Stone of Destiny, a part of Britain's coronation throne in Westminster Abbey, was to HWA a very important thing - the very seat upon which the Messiah would one day sit.

Now, in 1996, the 336-pound lump of yellow sandstone is again making headlines. It seems that the Scottish independence movement has been gaining strength and a lot of angry Scotsmen have been talking about getting control of their land back from those uppity people down in London. But Prime Minister John Major, clever politician that he is, has come up with a plan of appeasement: Rather than give back all of Scotland to the Scots, why not just give them back a little bit - say, one stone? And so he has recommended to the Queen that the Stone - which many historians and scientists say had its origins in Scotland, and upon which the ancient Scots used to crown their kings, and which the Scots say is a war trophy the nasty English took back to England 700 years ago after one of their victories over them - should be returned to Scotland. And apparently the Scots, perhaps not the shrewd tough bargainers we thought they were, think Major's offer is a pretty good deal and have agreed to take back the Stone (Washington Post, 7/4/96). It will soon have a place of honor in Edinburgh, the Scottish capital.

Well, this flies in the face of everything HWA ever prophesied, and the Armstrongites have been infuriated by this wicked thing the Queen has agreed to do. A good example of the vehemence that the Queen and Prime Minister have stirred up was an article by Gerald Flurry, prophet of "the little book." In his Philadelphia Trumpet (Aug. 1996, p. 5), Flurry wrote of the stone (and naturally the emphasis is his alone):

It represents salvation to the whole world! The world cannot even imagine the great destiny of this stone! What a past! What a future! I BELIEVE THIS STONE IS THE MOST PRECIOUS PHYSICAL THING ON THE EARTH. I also believe that Queen Elizabeth JUST MADE THE WORST DECISION OF HER LIFE! AND THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT HAS MADE THE BIGGEST MISTAKE IN ITS HISTORY!

Nevertheless, the Queen says the Stone must go. It's no wonder she cannot pay Flurry more attention. What with the royals making tabloid headlines in sex scandals almost every week, she is concerned that before long even her subjects in England, let alone the rebels in Scotland, may want out from under her family's rule. And that, she knows, would not be good for the family business. George VI, Queen Elizabeth's father, once remarked that the British royals are "not a family, we're a firm." And a pretty lucrative firm it is with total public funding of the family said to be about $70 million per year.

So realizing that the royal family has a public relations problem, the Queen has done what any sensible CEO would do in such a predicament. She has called in her finest advisors and formed a "Way Ahead" committee to rethink the mission and means of support of the family business (New York Times, 8/25/96). Under discussion are such radical ideas as downsizing the royal family itself and altering the Crown's source of income by giving up the $70 million they receive each year in public assistance (to be replaced perhaps by reclaiming the rents - which now probably would exceed $100 million per year - that they once collected from Crown properties such as Regent Street and Trafalgar Square). Also being considered is putting an end to male primogeniture, eliminating the ban on royal marriages to Roman Catholics, and changing the Crown's status as Defender of the (Anglican) Faith. Prince Charles has gone on record as saying that rather than being the Defender of the Faith, he would prefer to be the Defender of the Faiths (plural). What all of this will mean for religious life in Britain is unclear. But one thing is certain. There will be some changes made.

New Date Set for Christ's Return

Among Bible-believing Christians one of the most frequently pondered questions always seems to be: When will Christ return? We regularly receive letters and articles on the subject. Over the years we have seen scores of different theories; so many, in fact, we have pretty much ceased reading unsolicited submissions on the subject. Recently, however, we received one that did grab our attention.

David Strickland of England sent us a nearly 200-pages-long manuscript entitled The Crystal of God. The first thing that struck our eye was the beautifully ornate quality of the handwritten manuscript. Then, as we began looking it over, we were absolutely amazed at the intricacy and detail found in this attempt at a biblical system for predicting the date of Christ's return. Giving particular attention to the biblical Jubilees, Strickland sees the date of Christ's return as only a few decades away. Has Strickland found the hidden secrets that unlock the means to predict the future date? We have no idea. We do know that in the past Mr. Strickland has produced some controversial and thought-provoking works and, whatever its theological merits or demerits, we suspect that in this work Strickland may one day have a best-seller on his hands.

Strickland is currently talking to commercial publishers. But, he tells us, making money was not his goal in writing the book. He would like to have scholars and serious Bible students read his work and to offer whatever criticisms and thoughts they may have. For that reason, he says, he is offering pre-publication copies of the manuscript in its draft form to AR readers at cost price which is 15 pounds (U.K.) or $25 (U.S.), including postage. Those interested should write to David Strickland, 20 Mutual Street, Hexthorpe, Doncaster DN4 0EF, United Kingdom.

While on the subject of dating Christ's return, one other author should be mentioned. David Whitaker has written on the subject and he tells us he is convinced that as in Jesus' time, "no man knows the day or the hour." He points out that there are many ways to use scripture to come up with different dates for the Messiah's return. To illustrate his point he has detailed two different Kabbalistic methods and has shown that while each system has its own logic and scholarly advocates, each produces a wildly different conclusion. Those interested may obtain a copy of the letter-essay on that subject for $2 along with a list of all his other available studies. Additionally, as a follow-up to the collection of his writings we reported on in AR59, Whitaker has put together a second collection of over 20 controversial articles not contained in the first set and is making that available for $10. Write to David Whitaker, 710 East Chestnut Ave., Enid, OK 73701-2328. Incidentally, our congratulations to Mr. Whitaker on his recent marriage.

Mount Sinai Lost, Found?

Most diligent students of the Bible are aware that the Mt. Sinai referred to in most Near East travel guides does not seem to have all of the topography of the biblical site: no adequate campsite at its base, no adequate water supply, etc. Furthermore, there is that interesting comment in Gal. 4:25 where Paul states that Sinai is in Arabia, what today is Saudi Arabia, not at the "traditional" Egyptian site given in the travel books. For those reasons we were intrigued by a publication sent to us by one of our readers. In Discovered! Newsletter No. 6 of Wyatt Archaeological Research a considerable amount of data is given which points to a specific, location on the Saudi Peninsula as being the actual site of Mt. Sinai. Assuming that their data is not fabricated, it is difficult to believe that they have not discovered the actual location. For information about the newsletter, write to Wyatt Archaeological Research, 713 Lambert Drive, Nashville, TN 37220. We understand that some of the same data is covered in the 223-page book The Mountain of Moses, available from CTI Publishing Co., 140 Marine View, Office 204, Solano Beach, CA 92075.

God on the Internet

"In ten thousand years human beings have gone from hunting to farming to cities to cyberspace. Behavior is screaming forward, and it might be nonadaptive. Nobody knows. Although personally, I think cyberspace means the end of our species.... Because it means the end of innovation.... This idea that the whole world is wired together is mass death. Every biologist knows that small groups in isolation evolve fastest. You put a thousand birds on an ocean island and they'll evolve very fast. You put ten thousand birds on a big continent and their evolution slows down. Now, for our own species, evolution occurs mostly through our behavior. We innovate new behavior to adapt. And everybody on earth knows that innovation only occurs in small groups. Put three people on a committee and they may get something done. Ten people, and it gets harder. Thirty people, and nothing happens. Thirty million, it becomes impossible. That's the effect of mass media - it keeps anything from happening. Mass media swamps diversity."

-Malcolm
in The Lost World
by Michael Crichton

Malcolm, the character in the new Crichton novel, is not alone in fearing Cyberspace. The Internet and the World Wide Web with their home pages, billboards, discussion groups, and huge files for downloading may be all the rage, particularly among the young, but on any given day one can read in the news media and on the Net itself about the many problems associated with our newest high-tech ways of communicating. For instance, legal experts around the globe today are grappling with the complex issues involving cyberspace and copyright infringement, libel, pornography dissemination, criminal conspiracy, information theft, electronic surveillance, and invasion of privacy. Some are even concerned about the possible use of high-tech hidden persuaders in the form of subliminal messages being implanted in software (the Los Angeles Times, 10/1/95, p.1). While such issues may not concern most users of the Net, some problems confront us all regularly.

One problem inherent in the new communications medium is the way in which low quality and/or poorly stated data ("noise") can be quickly and cheaply transmitted, thereby flooding cyberspace with cybergarbage. One Texas reader wrote us, "Quite by accident this summer I found a religious forum on CompuServe which has a WCG section consisting of downloadable files and a message board. Most of the messages are rhetoric/diatribes for and against the current church changes or discussions of HWA's past." And one California reader wrote, "Belated thanks for providing the address of the online forum that nonmembers are/were able to join. I followed it avidly for a while, then lost interest. Entirely too many lunatics babbling about entirely too much lunacy."

A second problem is negligently transmitted misinformation which can be, and often is, distributed around the world at lightning speed. Here is a case in point. Last October we ran a small story about how the Roman Catholic Church had set up an Internet confessional in the Pittsburgh area. We got the story online from a normally reliable source who quoted the July/August 1995 issue of Episcopal Life. Shortly after we ran the story, one of our readers wrote us, "With reference to page 9, AR60, I tried to confess my sins via <http://meaculpa.cmu.edu>, but there was no such address." Figuring we had merely gotten the address wrong, we called Father Ben Vaghetto, Chancellor of the Diocese of Pittsburgh. He patiently explained that not only was no online confessional in operation in Pittsburgh, but that no Monsignor Timothy Blessing, as quoted in the story, even existed. We then called an editor of Episcopal Life in New York to find out what was the basis of their story. She told us that although they had run the story just as we had quoted it, they had since discovered that it was a hoax. They had been duped from an Internet source, their printed story was then replicated a thousand fold online, we picked it up, and so on. Of course, journalistic errors have been around a long time, but now they can be made for wider dissemination at less cost and at much greater speed.

A third, and even more serious, problem inherent in the Net is its vulnerability to disinformation. There simply are ways in which bad information can be purposely disseminated while the sender's identity remains concealed. For example, in the last two years there have been a number of WCG-cleric impostors operating online. In the 2/15/95 Pastor General's Report, for example, Joseph W. Tkach Jr. complained of one such imposter spreading disinformation when he wrote, "The person on the Internet who claims to be me isn't."

A fourth problem involves censorship. A number of our readers say that they have experienced a considerable amount of censorship on the Net, particularly with some church billboards. This should not come as a surprise. Someone controlling a service because he/she is paying for its upkeep is not going to be keen on passing on messages attacking their organization or themselves. The experience of most of our Netaactive readers has been that postings on boards for WCG members and paid for by the WCG or its members are virtually always highly censored. Yet there are a number who have been part of such online discussion groups or chat rooms who are unaware that important bits of information have been filtered out of the discussion or that whole topics are deemed nonpostable.

Some say the new technology deprives users of the reality and spontaneity of face to face relations and very frequently Internet communication brings out the worst in people. An excellent observation on the latter was made by Michael Warren (Mike-W10070@aol.com) in the March/April Plain Truth where he wrote:

If you've ever toured the religion forums on the Internet on your computer, you know how divided Christianity can be. In one of the forums I inhabit, the debate over doctrine and theology continues literally around the clock.

At its best, the discussion can be healthy and beneficial. At its worst, it degenerates into venomous accusations and merciless condemnation. Sometimes in our zeal for the truth, we forget things like simple courtesy. Instead of agreeing to disagree about our differences, we're quick to condemn one another.

One pastor in my community lamented that the devil hardly had to worry about losing ground since we Christians are so busy fighting each other.

Critics point to other Internet negatives. Many say it is addicting, even more so than TV, and that with all the "noise" it can be both excessively time consuming and expensive for the amount of information retrieved. Another very real problem and one that is too much ignored, is the economic class bias inherent in the new technology. The Net is not an economic class leveler; it is another means by which the already wide gulf between rich and poor will grow wider. After all, to just access the Net requires at least a computer with modem, online time, and a certain amount of training, all of which come with a price.

However, even with all the above negatives, it is a fact that when used skillfully, the Internet can be a very powerful information tool. And whether we like it or not, the Internet is here to stay. Not only is cyberspace all around us now, it is expanding. And in no field does it seem to be expanding more rapidly than in the field of religion.

Today on the Internet one can read thousands of posted messages relating to religion, participate in theological discussion groups, enter into religious chat rooms, join online debates over doctrine, read the home pages of hundreds of denominations and local churches, read a digitized Bible in six languages, visually tour the Church of St. Luke in Stroudsburg, Pa. or the Sistine Chapel in Rome, see an exhibit of the Dead Sea Scrolls at the Library of Congress, buy or sell Christian products, get advice from online Christian ministries and counselling services, or join a cyberchurch like the First Church of Cyberspace at <http://excepe.com/chender> (at ground level the Central Presbyterian Church of Montclair, New Jersey). Already there are quite a number of clerics who routinely refer to themselves its cyberministers, including a handful who were once in the WCG.

There are also anti-religion sites. Former WCG member Larry Taylor (ltaylor@kaiwan.com), now a freethinking rationalist working on a Ph.D. at UCLA, has posted a number of remarkable papers having to do with Bible inspiration/infallibility/canonization on the "Secular Web" site at <http://freethought.tamu.edu>. They are very well researched and thought provoking but most certainly are not for the spiritually timid.

Of all of the religious organizations in the world, the one that is currently making the greatest use of the Internet is the Roman Catholic Church. We have seen over 210 Net listings for Catholicism. A few examples: A year ago the Holy See announced the start of a home page (<http://www.catholic.net>) created by a group of students at the New Jersey Institute of Technology in Newark. It even includes a section on the Vatican Mission to the UN. A few weeks later, the Vatican inaugurated its own electronic hookup and in only 24 hours more than 200,000 individuals logged on to read the text of a papal message translated into six languages. In the next two weeks more than a million people logged on to <http://www.vatican.va/>, a computer address that will probably become a new bully pulpit for the pope who has already established himself as a best-selling author and world-touring celeb. Want to send the pope a personal message? You can do it via the same address. And those subscribing to the Vatican Information Service (<http://www.vatican.va/vis/>) can receive Vatican communiqués on their computer (for only $400 per year). There are already many new Catholic programs being planned for the Net. At just one ground-level location - Christ in the Desert, an isolated Benedictine monastery in Abiquiu, New Mexico - there are 24 monks hard at work designing new Catholic sites for the World Wide Web (New York Times, 3/17/96).

While the Roman Catholic Church may have taken the religious lead in cyberspace, not too far behind in effective use of the Net is the Worldwide Church of God and its offspring. Here are just a few of the WCG-related organizations that have home pages: The WCG (<http://www.wcg.org>), The United Church of God (<http://www.ucg.org>), The Global Church of God's World Ahead (<http://www.deltastar.nb.ca/worldahead/index.ht.>), The Church of God International (<http://www.cgi.org>), Alan Ruth and Barnabas Ministries (<http://www.gatecom.com/~barnabas>), In Transition (<http://www.lo.com/~robinson/>), and The Jerusalem Sentinel (<http://www.espercom>).

One of the most popular sites for WCG members and former members is Byron Sanders' Web page on Armstrongism (<http://www.cybergate.com/~birone/Armstrongism.html>). Mr. Sanders has also generously provided Ambassador Report with a home page (<http://www.cybergate.com/~birone/arindex.htm>) where there is a listing of all past AR publications.

For those skilled in its use the Internet can provide valuable information about religion quickly and at reasonable cost. But for those just beginning to use a computer or even for those with even a little experience on the Net, learning how best to use the new technology can be frustrating and very time-consuming. That is why so many will be pleased to learn about God on the Internet, a new book by Mark Kellner, the "On Computers" columnist for The Washington Times and a frequent contributor to Christianity Today and other religious publications. Kellner's new book covers just about everything a would-be net surfer needs to know about approaching religious topics on the Net. From basic computer principles and jargon explained in easy-to-understand language to more advanced methods of researching religious topics, his book is an invaluable tool for both the beginner and the advanced Net surfer. The over three hundred pages of well-illustrated text discusses the top ten Internet religious sites using clear diagrams, gives the addresses of many Internet mailing lists, news groups, and file libraries, and even shows how the Internet can be used as a legitimate tool for the enhancement of one's spiritual life.

Most interesting to AR readers will be the chapter on the Worldwide Church of God. Kellner provides an excellent overview of recent developments within Worldwide and its spinoffs and makes what we think is an astute observation: that the Internet has played an important role in the WCG's disintegration. We agree. But in a phone interview with the Report Kellner went even further in predicting the effect the Internet will have on religion in the near future:

I think that increasingly it's going to be a major force in the world's religions. What has happened in Worldwide - the rapid proliferation of now doctrinal ideas, the disintegration of old structures, the massive organizational realignments - all of that is likely to happen in a number of other major denominations during the next few years. In fact, I would not even be surprised if before the end of this decade the Internet brings about major changes in the Roman Catholic Church.

God on the Internet is published by IDG Books Worldwide. It is available in most large bookstores for $24.99. Or it may be ordered by calling the publisher's toll-free number: 800-762-2974. Mark Kellner may be contacted by e-mail at Markkel@aol.com or through his Internet home page, <http://www.reston.com/kellner/kellner.html>.

Books and Such

Former WCG executive Frank P. Inglima has written a new book. Titled Don't Overlook the Bible, Look It Over, it is "a step toward understanding the Holy Scripture." The 152-page book sells for $8.95 from Inglima Publishing, 8649 Pacific Hills Way, Sacramento, CA 95828; tel. 916-682-4365.

Former WCG member Ivar T. Mattson tells us he is "among those who have returned to the mainstream church." He has also written a historical novel about Judas Iscariot titled Simon in which some readers have seen shades of certain characters prominent in the WCG. For information write to Ivar T. Mattson, 10421 E. 44 St. Tulsa, OK 74146-3712.

William L. Hamilton's religious background is mostly in the areas of meditation and Buddhism. He was never a member of the WCG. Nevertheless, in his new book Saints and Psychopaths one notices some interesting parallels to the WCG experience. He writes, "There are more psychopaths pretending to be saints than there are real saints. This book will provide you with some understanding of what a psychopath is, what a saint is and how to tell the difference." For details write to: DANA, P.O. Box 1527, Coupeville, WA 98239.

A number of readers have asked us where they may now obtain copies of The Truth Shall Make You Free. There are at least two answers because there are now two WCG-related books by that same title. The more famous of the two books is the one by John Tuit. Mr. Tuit no longer lives in New Jersey and mail being sent to his old address is apparently being returned. For details about his book write to: John Tuit, 980 Dehart Comm. Ctr. Rd., Hays, NC 28635. The other book by the same title is by Mr. Zie Muse, Rt. #4, Box 788 C, LaFollette, TN 37766. Write to him for details.

Margaret Robinson, widow of author David Robinson, tells us that do has only a few copies remaining of Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web. They are $20 each. Write to John Hadden Publishers, Box 35982, Tulsa, OK 74135.

Where Are They Now?

Dannie Rogers, AC-Pasadena class of 1970, is the WCG's new superintendent of U.S. ministers. Dannie, who in addition to his Ambassador degree now has a masters in theology from Emory University, is married to the former Barbara Lynn Rand and they have three children (WN, 5/21/96, p. 2). Mr. Rogers will be working under church administration director Michael Feazell.

Joseph W. Locke, who worked for the WCG for 30 years and who was once one of Tkach Sr.'s closest aides, has left Pasadena for Florida where he will be a funeral director (WN 7/23/96, p. 13).

Dr. Donald Ward, former president of Ambassador University, is now president of a Bible study group which offers religious instruction through the mail, on cassette tapes, and via the Internet. Years ago this would have been called a Bible correspondence course, but its creators, who are hyping it as a 'virtual university,' have dubbed it The International Biblical Learning Center (IBLC, 27068 La Paz, No. 488, Aliso Viejo, CA 92656).

Richard Ames, the former WCG television personality, is now with the GCG, headed by his brother-in-law Roderick Meredith. Many in that denomination are aware that Ames has a more professional broadcasting style than Meredith and some wonder how long it will be before he takes over as that group's TV spokesman. In the mean time, Raymond McNair, the evangelist formerly with the WCG and now with the GCG, seems to have fallen out of favor with Meredith. Sources in San Diego say McNair's actual duties have been cut back and some are wondering if he will eventually realign with another organization or start his own.

With United Church of God having already picked up such former WCG luminaries as C. Wayne Cole and Paul Suckling, it should not have come as a surprise that WCG evangelist Aaron Dean would join their ranks. But when he did recently, it raised a few eyebrows. Because of Dean's long friendship with former WCG superstar Stanley Rader, some have wondered if Rader will one day be openly supporting the UCG. Who knows? Rader already has a daughter in the GCG. And one Pasadena friend told us, "Mr. Rader continues to have a deep interest in the Bible and yeah, you got it, God works in mysterious ways."

Jehovah Visits Pasadena

As many readers already know, while Pasadena, California is often thought of as a somewhat staid place, it does have its share of colorful characters. The Pasadena Weekly (5/24-30/96, p. 4) reported the following incident which took place just a few blocks from WCG headquarters:

Cops Bust God

Police responding to a report of a man with a gun at Brookside Park on Tuesday afternoon found themselves chasing Jehovah. Car aficionados, take note: God, also known to police as 39-year-old Robert Cali, drives a Toyota.

According to an incident summary provided by police officials, Officers Eric McWilliams and Kevin Jackson were patrolling near the park when the man-with-a-gun call went out over the police radio. When they approached Cali, he allegedly drove away in his Toyota 4-Runner, trying to climb an embankment to escape the officers. He stopped the truck in the bushes at the south end of the park, got out, pointed his finger at the cops - and told them that he was "Jehovah."

God was feeling a bit wrathful, apparently, since he also allegedly told McWilliams and Jackson that he was going to kill them. Moments later, police charge, Cali turned the truck back down the hill, forcing the officers to jump out of the way. Cali swerved through the Brookside Park parking lot, police say, moving back and forth through a maze of cars and people. The Almighty-piloted Toyota ended up on a baseball diamond at the north end of the park, crashing through about 200 feet of fence. Cali eventually stopped the car, with cops tackling and handcuffing him after a foot chase that ended several hundred feet to the south.

With help from witnesses, police were able to recover a loaded .45 caliber revolver that Cali had allegedly ditched near a pay phone. Police say the ruler of the universe has been charged with assault with a deadly weapon for driving the truck at officers.

Incidentally, God may not be omniscient, after all: Cali claims to have no memory of the events leading up to his arrest, police say.

Police Lt. Dave Richter acknowledges that the incident is "kind of one of those bizarre cases."

Dr. John Mahan, 1943-1996

We are very saddened to report the passing of a dear friend of the Report and of many former Worldwidiers, in the Pasadena area. John J. Mahan Jr. Ph.D., died on September 3 at his Pasadena home from lung cancer. He was 53. A former U.S. Marine and Ironman calibre triathlete, Dr. Mahan had a private psychology practice in Pasadena and was the district psychologist for La Canada Schools and other local institutions. A member of First Presbyterian Church of Hollywood and never a WCG member, himself, John was nevertheless a loving and able counsellor to scores of WCG members and former members who all too often had psychological problems caused or exacerbated by their association with the Armstrong movement. Besides hundreds of friends, he leaves behind his parents, his wife, his stepson John Christian, and daughters Sigrid and Inger. Interment was at Resurrection Cemetery in Montebello.

Letters

During the early '70s, when discussing church problems with friends in Pasadena, I predicted that after Mr. Armstrong died, the church would fragmentize - to friends' disbelief I learned at [the 1993] fall Festival that Mr. Armstrong had made the same remark to a few confidants. Sorry that we were both right.

For the fellowship (we've been in 33 and 25 years) we still attend the... [WCG] congregation and can attest to the double standard. The words from Pasadena sound nice, but the reality of control tactics, guilt, and attempts to keep us too busy to think and have personal time in our family still exist.

The feeling we get from Pasadena is they want us to donate 10 percent or more, be regular in attendance to show we are good children, and then preach the gospel for them: We do the work and they get our $$$.

There was a short time in 1995 when we were being fed on Christ. No more, at least not here. We hear most congregations are like ours in the way they are being run (pseudo-New Testament), but there are some moving forward toward true Christianity - no doubt due to their individual pastors. We feel Pasadena has been preparing the local congregations for the time when they will be cut loose - possibly with Pasadena GONE.

-"No State"

Six WCG employees (four ministers) were sacked here [in Australia] this past week. There just isn't the money to pay them as so many WCG members are "sitting on the fence." The minister who was unhelpful to me (to put it mildly) as I was leaving Worldwide in 1993 has himself resigned and joined the Methodist/Presbyterian church. He was extremely innovative in church service format and now stories are surfacing about his playing factions in the congregation off against each other as well as other omissions/commissions.

-Mrs. L. Stratford-Smith
Australia

The July Ambassador Report has again provided a truthful appraisal of current problems. With one phrase the editor exposes the culprit - the "deeply entrenched fallacy of ministerial rank."

The interpretation of "ministerial rank" by the Armstrongites and other denominational systems is contrary to God's ways. It basically is opposed to God's way of selecting his servants. The "gift of gab" does not determine one's ability to be a preacher of righteousness. One's lifestyle does.

I am amazed how little the Worldwidites and their offshoots question the lifestyles of their teachers. Is it any wonder that some leaders' careers end in "massage parlors"?

Hey John! Just went to see Burt Reynolds' new movie Striptease. Wild! He plays a degenerate congressman who lusts after Demi Moore. Wants sex. I wonder why. They had him dressed up and made up to look like Garner Ted. The silver hair, the tight polyester pants, the leer and all. I couldn't believe my eyes. Wild!

When we read AR62, your comment after the letter from Arkansas left us thinking you did not approve of Mr. Gary Porter sending out the video of GTA with the masseuse. But in the letter there was an address for Mr. Porter and we ordered a copy. I'm glad we did. Although it was disgusting to see, it did wake us up. My wife and I have decided to leave CGI and find fellowship elsewhere.

For your information, Mr. Porter did not make any money getting those tapes out. He did it to help people like us. Please don't criticize him for doing us a service.

-California

Editor: I'm sorry if I left the impression that Mr. Porter was doing something wrong. I understand that he, himself, is very pained by what he discovered about GTA. One reader in Tulsa sent me a copy of an open letter in which Mr. Porter likened GTA to a Dr. Jekyll/Mr. Hyde. I'm sorry we do not have space in this issue to run it in its entirety as it is an outstanding discussion of the nature of true evil. Copies may be had by writing Gary Porter at 11968 Honesty Lane, Pocatello, ID 83202.

I make a living putting on piano concerts in nursing homes and retirement centers (1400 programs in under six years). My life's work is very rewarding, but not in dollars. I've seen most of the national parks, hiked and climbed several mountains out west, and met folks in all quarters of the sabbatarian movement. Most of that social contact with so-called law-keepers has been a bitter disappointment that I can only liken to Paul and Christ's experiences with the Jews. Yahshua told them, "None of you keeps the law [But] Midnight Ministries is a good investment in heaven's storehouse.

I tried to become a teacher using my Ambassador BA but California Credentialing rejected it. So I asked Big Sandy to send a letter which made things even worse. The Big Sandy registrar wrote that Pasadena had only been a "candidate for accreditation." So much for my hope to teach.

I can't help but laugh when I hear from friends still in WCG how it might actually be okay to keep Christmas and Easter. I told them they need to read Dr. Ernest Martin's literature because I learned those truths from Dr. Martin more than fifteen years ago!

-Washington

Editor: In last November's edition of the ASK Commentator Martin wrote:

The truth is, a great number of the Rabbis already know that Jesus is the true and only Messiah, but they at the present do not want to disclose it because to do so means they would have to join forces with the Catholics and Protestants whose type of Christianity is filled to the brim with idolatry and with unbiblical customs and pagan rituals. The Jewish authorities will have nothing to do with such rebellion to the teachings of the Holy Scriptures. What they see rampant in modern Christendom is pure idolatrous practices such as Christmas, Easter, a belief in the Trinity (which is a Greek concept of God and not that of the Jews or the Bible). They now see an image of a long-haired Zeus in almost all Gentile churches and in their books (and this "Jesus" looks almost identical to that of the Egyptian god of late antiquity called Serapis). Our churches are truly displaying a pagan god, not the real Jesus.

It thus appears that Martin has now taken positions on Christmas, Easter, and a few other topics that are somewhat different than his positions of about fifteen years ago. You might want to write to him for details of his current views. The address is Associates for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97225.

I used to make a point of trying to keep up with all of the WCG-related groups to see what they are thinking. But about a month ago I started thinking that I was wasting a lot of time. What with Global, United, Philadelphia, International, Christian Biblical, and about two dozen other groups sending me literature, it was taking me more than 30 hours a week just to read everything being sent to my home! What really got me thinking though was when Mr. Dankenbring sent me a flyer about the new fellowship groups he is forming. Here is something he wrote about the WCG off-shoots, and I'm quoting exactly:

in far too many cases off-shoot churches coming out of Worldwide... preach just more of the same old worn-out, shoddy, out-dated doctrines and exert the same old heavyhanded church "government" with a new coat of "paint." Many people are tired of the "same old routine"....

There is truth in what he wrote, but something bothered me. I recalled II Tim. 4:3 and wondered, could it be that some of us have gotten itching ears? That we always need some new doctrines? It sounds like we are getting sort of prone to trendiness. Who ever heard of a church that always has to get rid of old, stale doctrines and always have new, fresh doctrines? So last month I cancelled all my subscriptions to all the offshoot literature. I still want to read the AR when it comes out every few months just to see all the craziness I am missing out on. But instead of having the preachers draining me of time and money, I have gotten to taking books out of my local library. I can study what I want and not be bothered with ever changing doctrines from teachers who admit they never could get it right in the first place. I have more time now, and guess what? I am starting to feel better about life!

-Iowa

Having successfully removed ourselves from WCG nearly two years ago, yours is the only publication we read to get the "inside stuff." Beyond AR we don't want to give any more time or energy to those folk; 22 years was enough. Thanks for your efforts on behalf of us all.

-Michael Gitter
Wisconsin

Editor's Note

There was a time when getting inside information about the WCG and its offshoots was very difficult. Now, the problem is quite different. There is so much information floating around it is very time-consuming to sort out the worthwhile from the prosaic, trivial, and goofy. We have no plans to expand AR; already many people are spending too much time reading about the Tkach Co., the Armstrongites, and all the way-out movements that are popping up. We want to keep AR informative and interesting, yet readable and of a manageable size. With that in mind, please let us know what topics and stories you would most like to see covered. My thanks to those who send news clippings and relevant local news. And, as always, my thanks to all of you who are financially supporting our publishing efforts.

---

February 1997 (AR64)

Ambassador University Closing

Ambassador University President Russell Duke announced on December 30 that the University's Board of Regents has decided to close Ambassador's Big Sandy, Texas campus, the last remaining campus in what was once a three campus system. Duke explained that the 50-year-old institution would have enough money to finish the current semester, pay off its bills, provide severance pay to departing faculty and staff, and provide some assistance to current students desiring to continue their formal education elsewhere. However, declining enrollment and the University's withering financial base have made it impossible for the institution to remain viable.

Ambassador University, formerly Ambassador College, was started in 1947 by Worldwide Church of God (WCG) founder Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA) mainly as a training vehicle for the then growing ministry of the Radio (later Worldwide) Church of God. In recent years, however, the WCG's ministry has itself been withering in size, and sweeping changes in church doctrine by Armstrong's successors, Joseph W. Tkach Senior and Junior, have resulted in the defection of perhaps two thirds of the church's members and a loss of more than $170 million annually from its one-time annual income of over $210 million.

Few WCG observers were surprised by the Duke announcement; most had seen it coming. Nevertheless, the announcement still brought tears to the eyes of alumni who had been students at the Texas campus and at the previously closed California and England campuses. The announcement was particularly upsetting to many who had supported and sacrificed for the institution which had only in the last few years gained accreditation and general public acceptance after more than four decades of significant academic inadequacies.

As for what will become of the Big Sandy, Texas properties no one really knows. Some have suggested that the properties could be utilized as a luxury retirement community for the WCG's, rapidly aging ministry. But that suggestion apparently does not appeal to the Tkach administration, which is strapped for cash and is not eager for new expenditures. President Duke has indicated that the Board of Regents would consider utilizing the property in conjunction with some other Christian educational institution or ministry. Most likely, however, the properties will simply be put up for sale.

A number of interesting suggestions have been made as to how the properties may eventually be used. For example, some have suggested that with just a few modifications AU could easily be transformed into an excellent low-security prison. With the U.S. prison population having tripled in the last 15 years, many states have started looking to corporate America to provide them with efficient, state-of-the-art, privately managed prisons. With the rapid growth of companies such as Corrections Corporation of America, already managing 47 prisons, and The Wackenhut Corporation, currently managing 27, the new industry is in need of more sites than ever before. The Big Sandy properties are not only large enough to accommodate such an operation, but many of the necessary facilities are already built.

Another possible use for the properties could be as a resort of some type. And with more and more states liberalizing their gambling laws, the possibility that AU will one day be a resort and gambling casino is not as outlandish as it may first appear. Although Texas does not currently allow private gambling casinos, there are some Texas businessmen who hope that will change. Some WCG observers feel that the possibility of selling off the properties to a resort developer may be what Tkach actually had in mind when in November the University announced that its formerly private golf course would now be leased to a commercial operator. Already at the new operation, called Ambassador Hills Golf Club, for only five dollars members of the general public can tee off.

Whatever the eventual use of "God's little Eden in Texas," it is still not a certainty that the AU properties in Texas will find a buyer in the near future. Ambassador's old Pasadena, California campus has been up for sale for more than six years now and still no buyer is in sight for that chunk of Eden. The Texas Eden may fare no better.

Finally, there is considerable speculation about one more potential problem. Much of the land on which AU now sits was previously owned by the Hammer family, a once wealthy East Texas clan that became involved with the Herbert Armstrong ministry and in the 1950s deeded the land over to the then Radio Church of God. Typically, when gifts of land are made to churches, the deeds contain clauses that restrict the uses to which the properties may be put. If the Hammer's transfer contained the usual gift-to-church language limiting the use of the land for religious purposes, the campus may not be unencumbered of potential claims by the surviving Hammers once it is no longer used as a Christian college. Some are speculating that should WCG Inc. attempt to sell the land to subdividing land speculators, a resort developer, an agricultural corporation, the state of Texas, or a non-Christian religious sect, the surviving Hammers (who include Tony Hammer, Buck Hammer, Mrs. Garner Ted Armstrong, and others) may be in line for an automatic reversion of title to the property or, at least, may be able to interpose a major legal challenge to any attempt by Worldwide to sell the property. If that happens, closing Ambassador's Texas campus may turn out to be one more Tkach team fiasco.

Tkachs' London Theatre a Success

Critics of the Tkachs Senior and Junior frequently point to a long list of WCG setbacks as supposed proof of some kind of family curse and imply that somehow everything touched by the Tkachs is doomed to failure. That is not an entirely fair criticism. As an example of how the Tkachs' largesse has been a blessing to some, we need only look at the success of one of the Tkachs' favorite projects, the rebuilding of Shakespeare's Globe Theatre in London. As reported in AR45 (p. 5) and elsewhere, through its Ambassador Foundation, millions in WCG members' tithes have been channelled to this important cultural project. Now, finally, the theatre is nearing completion and its resident company's premiere production, Two Gentlemen of Verona, recently ended a sellout run in London before heading for New York.

As some WCG members know, the man most responsible for the resurrection of the original Globe is Sam Wanamaker (1919-1993), the actor-director-producer who in 1991 received the fourth annual Ambassador Award for Excellence (Worldwide News, "WN," 3/11/91, p. 1). At the Wanamaker fete on Feb. 16, 1991, Tkach Sr. said that the WCG's financial support for the project started in 1988 and was part of the WCG's efforts "to build a better world." But while Wanamaker's name is recognized by many in the WCG, few seem to know anything about his remarkable life. A 12/29/96 New York Times editorial by Karl E. Meyer has helped fill in some of the lesser-known facts from Wanamaker's bio that for some reason were omitted from WCG pronouncements about him. Here is an excerpt that we found interesting:

As a teenager in Chicago, Mr. Wanamaker saw a half-scale reconstruction of the Globe at the 1934 World's Fair, and later joined its Shakespeare troupe. He made his Broadway debut in 1942, fought in the Pacific theater in World War II and seemed destined for a successful career as director and classical actor, whose roles included a Stratford-on-Avon Iago opposite Paul Robeson's Othello.

But like Robeson, who was an avowed Communist, and innumerable other Americans who were former Communists or vaguely leftist, Mr. Wanamaker became unemployable in the blacklist decade. Some sought to salvage acting careers by confessing error and informing on colleagues before the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Summoned to Washington for such a rite, Mr. Wanamaker chose exile in Britain. As punishment, his passport was revoked in the 1950's.

The Shakespeare project helped Mr. Wanamaker keep his sanity and dignity intact.... Mr. Wanamaker lived to see the Globe's walls rise, this time with safeguards against fire. At his death in 1993, a cavalcade of players filled the memorial service in Southwark Cathedral. What might have pleased Sam Wanamaker more is the throng of students from all comers of the world who crowd the reborn Globe, its fine exhibition hall and its varied menu of readings.

Our unofficial London correspondent, Mr. R. M. Kachere, tells us that at the restored Globe there is a plaque honoring those that contributed toward its reconstruction and listed very prominently among the donors is the Ambassador Foundation. Additionally, Mr. Wanamaker is very properly honored by a plaque in the nave of Southwark Cathedral. It says "In Thanksgiving for Sam Wanamaker, Actor, Director, Producer, 1919-1993, whose vision rebuilt Shakespeare's Theatre on Bankside in this parish."

Now Tkach II Can Say: "This Is the Life! - real ABUNDANT living!"

One of the all-time-great Herbert Armstrong Plain Truth articles was a 1963 piece titled "This Is the Life! - real ABUNDANT living!" In it, Apostle Armstrong extolled the beauties of the good life - specifically, his own! It was vintage HWA. Life was good for him, he said, because he had found God's way and in return for doing the right thing God had blessed him and blessed him ABUNDANTLY!

It was not just in the Plain Truth magazine that HWA would so unabashedly applaud his own financial good fortune. Many Ambassador alumni can recall how on many a Sabbath he would tell his congregation of how God had blessed him:

Brethren, other than my clothes and a few personal items, I own virtually nothing. Everything I once owned I have given to God's Work. Nevertheless, God has blessed me, and blessed me greatly, God has seen fit to provide me with everything I need. Take, for example, my beautiful home. It is not mine. I don't own it; the church does. But I get to live in it. I don't own the beautiful grounds and gardens you see at our campuses; the church owns them. But I get to walk there and see and smell the beautiful flowers. I don't own the luxurious corporate jet that takes me around the world. The church does. But I get to fly in it...."

Of course, while such statements may have been technically true, they were, nevertheless, intended to deceive. HWA had for many years been guided by a team of astute CPAs and lawyers. He therefore undoubtedly understood something of which the vast majority of his unsophisticated followers were completely unaware - namely, that possession of great wealth and legal title are not synonymous. As HWA's top advisor, lawyer-accountant Stanley Rader once expounded to a startled Ambassador alumnus visiting his home, "It's not what you own that counts, it's what you control!"

One of the funniest of HWA's pulpit ploys was the frequent emphasis he put on the so-called "give versus get" principle. Put simply this was the idea that those in "the world" wanted only "to get," but the truly spiritual wanted very much "to give." What he neglected to explain was that as WCG members would give, HWA was usually the one who would get - their tithes and offerings, that is.

Other "technical truth" techniques used to deceive the sheep as to the magnitude of how much HWA was really getting included: (1) the exclusion of church-paid-for perks when discussing personal income (these perks went into the millions per year with HWA), (2) using only church salary as an income figure when, in reality, HWA had the power to receive separate salaries from his church, college, foundation, etc. (3) telling members he had just given the church a big loan when, in fact, HWA retained and used his corporate offices to repay himself such loans at will. We still don't know if Loma Armstrong or Ramona Armstrong ever got separate salaries, but a number of other family members received separate incomes from the Armstrong organizations for doing very little. There were other little tricks, but you get the idea.

When HWA's successor, Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach I, came along, some hoped that they would see a greater level of fiscal restraint and a higher standard of truthfulness. Those well-wishers were disappointed. Now, with the old Armstrong empire crumbling about them, some WCG members are finally distrustful of their current leader, Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach II. Many believe that he may be using the same deceptive "technical truth" ploys that HWA did to deceive his sheep and many are wondering just how much he really makes. A few months ago, In Transition wrote the WCG and asked for full disclosure as to the salaries and perks paid to all top church officials. The WCG refused to cooperate. Instead, through its field ministry the WCG's leaders have spread the story that no one in the WCG hierarchy receives a salary of more than $100,000 per year from the church. A lot of people, however, don't believe that that is all Tkach II is getting.

Since our last issue, one WCG insider has quietly come forth claiming to have seen an official WCG document stating that Tkach's actual remuneration exceeds $340,000 per year. Although we can't prove that figure is accurate, we suspect it is. Undoubtedly, the Tkach Co. will deny it. However, there is one way for WCG officials to get out the truth. All they have to do is let our auditors look at the books of WCG Inc., the Ambassador Foundation, Ambassador University, Plain Truth Ministries, and the many other corporations now controlled by Tkach. How about it Joe? We'll be waiting for your response (but we won't be holding our breath).

Fezell Calls For Volunteer Pastors

J. Michael Fezell, the Tkach Company's number two man, has seen the future and apparently it does not bode well for the WCG. Admitting that the Company's constantly plunging income was the inspiration for one more paradigm shift, church administrator Fezell has put out a call for volunteers to serve as "lay pastors" of smaller WCG congregations (WN, 9/17/96, p. 1). In the same WN containing the Fezell article, a smaller article accompanying an Application Request form, explained that:

Although lay pastors will not receive a salary, they will receive reimbursement for ministerial expenses, supervision from their regional pastor and continued in-service training and administrative support from headquarters. It's a volunteer commission....

The move was widely seen as another step toward a completely unpaid WCG field ministry. Some paid WCG ministers, sensing that the new volunteers represent a threat to their own employment, have begun derisively referring to the volunteers as "the lays." And some WCG pastors have even speculated that before long the WCG will see female lay pastors. They point out that accompanying the articles calling for volunteer ministers was a large article titled "Every Woman Has a Ministry." Another interesting observation is that Tkach, who has an accredited MBA, seems to be mimicking the current downsizing trends of the corporate World where CEOs continue to make huge salaries and even give themselves bonuses while they downsize their corporations and shove many of their employees into poverty. Yes, the gap between the rich and the poor is getting wider - even in the WCG.

Christian men and women interested in volunteering as WCG lay pastors should keep in mind that once accepted into the lay program you will be required to go through a five-day "intensive training session in Pasadena" and you may also be required to relocate. To request an application form, write to: Lay Pastor Application - CAD, Worldwide Church of God, 300 W. Green Street, Pasadena, CA 91129.

WCG Slouches Toward Sunday

You would think that with all the WCG's financial woes its top honchos would put the brakes on any more doctrinal changes, at least for the time being. But noooooo. Tkach & Co. continue to coax their ever shrinking band into the world of Protestantism. Why the Tkach clique doesn't just tell its members they are already Methodists, Lutherans, or something else, and immediately bring in the few remaining Protestant doctrines they have yet to adopt, we don't know. Nevertheless, the latest little paradigm shift, not unlike the recent slide into Easter worship (see AR62, p. 2) is somewhat subtle only if you are a brain-dead WCG member. If you've been reading the Report for a few years, you probably already knew something like this was coming.

In November, the WCG introduced a new church service time slot in Pasadena. While on Saturdays at WCG headquarters there is still a morning service remaining, now there is also a late afternoon service for those who can't make the earlier one (convenient for those who are on the golf links or working at McDonald's all morning). The Ambassador Auditorium late show begins at 4:30 p.m. every Saturday. If you open an almanac and look at the sunset times for early winter in southern California, you notice an interesting thing. For most of the winter, those late services actually extend well beyond sunset into what WCG clerics used to call the first day of the week. It takes little imagination to see that the late service will eventually become the late, late service (leaving more time on the links) and then within a few years, or sooner, many will find it quite natural when services begin on Sunday morning.

Once the Sunday services arrive, it will be interesting to see what form they take. Last summer, the WCG began experimenting with a "contemporary worship" format at special Friday night meetings that supplemented their regular Saturday services (WN, 8/27/96, p. 13). At these contemporary worship services, members could come in casual dress to sing modern "praise and worship songs" to a rock beat and watch Christian videos. Among those who've participated in the program are Mike Hale, Mike North, Terry Miller, and the Oasis Praise Band. One guest speaker last summer was actor Bruce Marchiano who played Jesus in the movie Matthew. Pasadena members we've talked to say they are not sure if the experiment proved a success.

More Doctrinal "Clarifications"

If The Guinness Book of Records contained such a church category, certainly the WCG would be listed as the world's all-time doctrinal change champ. In November the Tkach administration continued its record run by issuing new doctrinal formulations on abortion and the death penalty. The statements (WN, 11/19/96, p. 9) contained these issue-sidestepping and paradoxical tidbits:

The Worldwide Church of God teaches that under all ordinary circumstances abortion is not a legitimate biblical or ethical choice and constitutes sin. When a mother's life is at stake, however, abortion is considered a legitimate biblical choice by the church. Member's choices about abortion in other extraordinary circumstances, such as rape or incest, are not considered a test of fellowship.

The Worldwide Church of God teaches the biblical mandate that God has placed responsibility for human government and justice into human hands, under his sovereign authority, and that such human government is to be exercised justly, honestly, fairly, ethically and responsibly... [biblical citations]. Therefore capital punishment may or may not be appropriate, depending on its administration.

Finally, the WCG seems to be changing its decades-long teaching on church hierarchy. Since at least the mid-1950s the church had taught that Paul in Eph. 4:11 was setting up a hierarchy of "ministerial rank." But in a lengthy multi-authored article in the 9/17/96 WN, the Tkach Co. reinterpreted that verse to be a description of individual ministerial talents or functions. According to that WN article (p. 11):

Doesn't everybody know what an evangelist is? No. We have used the title as an administrative rank, but Paul was probably not describing a church-government hierarchy in Eph. 4:11.

In Transition Terminated

In October, publisher John Robinson announced that as of January 1997, his religious newspaper In Transition will cease publication. Since early 1995, In Transition has provided those in the sabbatarian Christian community with frequently interesting "News of the Churches of God" of Armstrongism. According to the publisher, among those factors precipitating the publication's demise were "an increasing calcification within the different fellowships.... a growing tendency for ministers and other members to view their group as the only true church or, at least, to view themselves or their group as spiritually superior to others within the Body of Christ" [in much the same way as the sabbatarians running In Transition view nonsabbatarian Christians - ed.] and a realization that the publication was serving as a vehicle "to polarize rather than to unify the different fellowships of the WCG offshoots and the greater Sabbatarian community."

While true as far as it went, we nevertheless discovered that there were other factors at work as well. One knowledgeable source told us:

John meant well. I know he thought if we just got out the facts, truth would prevail, the various "Churches of God" [the WCG breakoffs] would all straighten out their organizations and eventually they would come together in love to perform a great end-time Work, sort of what we all envisioned years ago. But so far it hasn't worked out that way.

As a member of United [Church of God] John was getting a lot of flak from United members who thought he was devoting too much space to other groups like Global. From members of other groups he was getting flak for being too pro-United. From those who like GTA he was getting flak about mentioning Ted's legal problems. From those who didn't like Ted he was getting flak about not providing enough detail about GTA's sexual activities.

Many could sense that he was trying very hard - perhaps too hard - to give Mr. Herbert W. Armstrong an honored place in the minds and hearts of those who have left Worldwide. But it is pretty hard to ignore all the dirt that has come out about Mr. HWA, especially when you consider it was Mr. David Robinson, John's own father, who blew the whistle on Mr. Armstrong having committed incest with one of his own daughters. Many readers came to suspect that John was struggling with the issue of whether or not his father had been a true Christian. It did not help him when many noticed he did not even give his father's death a mention in In Transition, let alone a proper obituary. That even upset some of his friends. I can only imagine what his relatives thought.

As for Mr. Dixon Cartwright's plans to continue on with another publication, we hope he can succeed. It's possible he will as he has been In Transition's real editor anyway. While he doesn't have John's dynamic leadership, he certainly is a skilled editor and has good intentions. But as John and the rest of us discovered, a publication of this type can be a trial.

Trial or no trial, for thousands of avid readers In Transition has provided some wonderful tidbits of controversy. A good example is the December issue with its lead article by Aaron Dean, a long-time Stanley Rader aide. In that piece, Dean, now based in Gladewater, Texas, not far from where Cartwright's new publication is based, hinted that HWA would never have named Joseph Tkach Sr. as his successor had HWA not been seriously ill (and presumably not in a lucid state of mind) when he did so shortly before his death. (Actually, Dean should know. He was part of the Tkach cabal that pulled off the death bed coup.) Almost as if to suggest that he, himself, should have been named HWA's successor, Dean (and publisher Robinson obviously) included along with the fluff piece a number of photos showing how close Dean had been to HWA. Many did not miss the inference that if Tkach Sr.'s appointment was invalid, then Junior's is invalid as well. (Needless to say, Dean, who has been on the Big Sandy faculty until recently, can kiss his severance pay goodbye.) But even in United the piece has caused some ruffled feathers because some are now saying that if Dean was really meant to have succeeded HWA, then his credentials are superior to those of UCG Chairman David Hulme. (Maybe Dean shouldn't count on ever getting anything from UCG either.)

John Robinson's loyalty to the legacy of Herbert W. Armstrong is now self-evident, but that was not always so. Just weeks before his death, author David Robinson, very aware that his time was near, phoned Report editor John Trechak and told how he had signed over the copyright of his book Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web to his son John with the confidence that after his death his son could be trusted to promote, reprint, and distribute the book. In fact, in what was one of his very last phone calls to Report editor Trechak, David, in a weak and strained voice, quietly said that almost the only thing that had kept him alive the previous two weeks was his determination to complete a short history of how the Tangled Web had come to be written and published despite the vigorous efforts of Herbert Armstrong's lawyers. The history was finally just about completed, he said, and it was to be included along with those copies his son would distribute after his death.

Before his father died, John Robinson purchased almost all of the remaining supplies of the Tangled Web. It was assumed by everyone who knew of the matter that at some point John Robinson would be selling the copies he purchased along with the 44-page history of how the book came to be. Everyone also assumed that later, as holder of the copyright, John Robinson would be reprinting the book and acting as its publisher. But that never happened. He has never publicized the fact that he has copies for sale; what copies he has are rotting in a warehouse somewhere.

Some in Texas are now saying that John Robinson and his associates have become Herbert Armstrong's greatest defenders. Nevertheless, many of us will be sorry to see In Transition out of business. It performed a valuable service in reporting the goings-on in the largest of the Armstrongite groups - a service AR did not have the financial means to perform. As mentioned above, Robinson associate Dixon Cartwright intends to continue putting out a publication somewhat similar to the one terminating. It will be called The Journal: News of the Churches of God (Box 1020, Big Sandy, TX 75755). Cartwright plans to cover even the smaller Armstrongite breakaways, but admittedly will focus on the larger ones: "United, Global, International, and, as much as feasible, Philadelphia." The latter phrase leaves us thinking that most of the 100 or so Armstrongite groups now in existence will not come within the scope of their coverage. And whether or not it will even have the ability to fully monitor the behind-the-scenes activities of the major seven or so Armstrongite breakaways remains to be seen.

Global and United - Now Less So

The two biggest WCG breakaways, the United Church of God and the Global Church of God, are reportedly experiencing existence-threatening difficulties. In the fall of 1996 Roderick Meredith's Global Church had to take out a $1.2 million dollar loan to keep up its ministerial outreach. At about the same time seven key administrative personnel were let go. They were administrators Jeffrey Patton, Brian Weeks, Michael Kahlenberg, Brian Hoselton, Eric Myers, Lory Nelson, and Ron Nelson. Still remaining are Larry Salyer, Carl McNair, and Edwin Pope. Some insiders say that because aging evangelist Rod Meredith stubbornly refuses to share power with subordinates clearly more competent than himself, the situation within Global is likely to deteriorate further in the coming months.

Even bigger problems are plaguing the 20,000-member United Church of God. The biggest of the WCG splitoffs, United is getting increasingly disunited and appears about ready for a split of its own. Informants leaving the group tell us that besides haggling over such matters as sacred calendar calculation, the really big issue upsetting both its ministers and members is what its Arcadia, California "home office" euphemistically refers to as "the governance problem."

In simple terms what it comes down to is this. The denomination's home office executives feel they should be the ones calling the shots regarding which ministers will serve where, how local congregations will be organized, and how the denomination's money will be spent. However, many UCG field ministers and members have come to believe that the old authoritarian top-down style of leadership inherited from Herbert W. Armstrong is no longer apropos. After all, they say, the Arcadia executives were chosen by the ministers who met in Indianapolis in 1995. It was not the headquarters executives who chose the field ministers. While not all UCG field ministers are ready to apply the same democratic principles to their own flocks, many members think it is time that they do. After all, they say, the local ministers would not be getting a salary if the membership were not financially supporting them.

UCG's home office execs see their church as being organized along standard business textbook lines. The UCG's tripartite structure of home office execs, field ministers, and members is somewhat analogous to the typical business organization structure of corporate officers, middle management, and workers. The big difference with UCG, however, is that the folks on the lower rung are not getting paid by those over them; they are paying the guys above them. Perhaps a better analogy of UCG's tripartite structure might be found in certain kinds of political writings where nations are divided into royalty (or super elites), supporting professional classes, and the general public (often disparagingly referred to as the masses, the great unwashed, or the bewildered herd). UCG's top honchos have assumed that the old authoritarian structure brought over from the WCG would hold, that those at the bottom would remain passive "spectators of action" who only pray and pay. But after their bitter WCG experience, not all UCG members are willing to abide by the old status quo.

At the root of the current "governance problem" in UCG is the classic elite versus egalitarian tension so often encountered in political theory. The big question for UCG has therefore become: Is the breakaway church going to be run by the elites (in this case individuals ordained by the old WCG that has since proven profligate) or is the church's ministry going to derive its earthly authority from an egalitarian legitimization granted by the spirit-filled membership? It will be interesting to see if United can find a solution to the problem.

The fight for control is likely to heat up in the next few months. Already a few outspoken UCG ministers have been disfellowshipped by their fellow ministers. And more than a few UCG congregations are talking about bolting the umbrella group. Many are openly calling the Arcadia home office "tyrants."

One related facet of the overall problem is the question of who is going to pay for the retirement of the many aging ministers that left WCG to find refuge in UCG. But an even more inflammatory issue involves the delaying tactics of the UCG's top executives in fulfilling promises made to relocate the church's so-called home office. At Indianapolis in May 1995, it was decided by the assembled ministers that Arcadia, California was to be only a temporary headquarters location. Many in UCG view the Los Angeles area as an inappropriate headquarters location because of its "worldly" environment, its distance from major centers of UCG membership (the majority of its members live east of the Mississippi), and on recent business studies that have concluded that Los Angeles County, where the home office is located, is currently the very worst U.S. metropolitan area for the start-up of a new business venture.

Clearly the Arcadia bosses have been dragging their feet about moving. And many UCG pastors and members feel that what is really motivating their stubborn refusal to move is not the good of the church, but financial/career/personal self-interests. One UCG member told us:

A lot of us have heard that David Hulme has been working on a Ph.D. at USC. Some of us think he is using the church only to get an income to finish his education and then move on. Some think he wants to get back into the concert productions business, maybe even take over the old Ambassador Auditorium, and that those are his real motivations for staying in L.A. Steven Andrews has more opportunities if he stays in California because of his accounting and law credentials and some of us think he is not too eager to take the bar exam in another state. Did you hear about his crazy argument for wanting to keep headquarters in California? We refer to it as "Cookiegate." We also know that some at the home office own real estate in the L.A. area and don't want to lose money selling now in what is considered a buyers' market there. Furthermore, a lot of us think the home office bunch are just spoiled, stuck-up types who can't see themselves living away from the sun and fun of Hollywood rather than here with us poor folk in America's heartland.

On the other side of the coin, some of the leaders in Arcadia seem to think they are the victims of a conspiracy. One loyalist said:

Mr. Hulme and the others have been very tolerant of dissent. Let's face it, Mr. John Robinson and others are more interested in their own power base and income. They are collaborating with members from other groups to start up their own competing operation. IBLC [the International Bible Learning Center which Robinson helped start in 1995] is not good for United. It is a business competitor and is already taking away members and income from the church. Frankly, if you ask me, Mr. Hulme has been far too liberal in allowing such nonsense in the church.

But what exactly is "the church"? While the Arcadia home office seems to feel that they are "the church" and that the field ministers and members have simply to decide if they will stay with "the church," others out in "the heartland" feel quite the opposite. Many UCG members have the rather democratic view that UCG's membership constitutes "the church" and, as one member put it, "the home office can stay with the church - or they can leave the church!" As John Robinson himself wrote in the December In Transition:

The honeymoon seems to be ending between a significant number of members of the United Church of God, an International Association, and the church's home office as some members, including elders, express concern that the church's leadership is moving away from the "spirit of Indianapolis."

GTA Sex Trial Postponed

Evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong (GTA) has been given a little more time to come up with an explanation as to what he was doing in a Texas massage parlor on Saturday, July 15, 1995. Plaintiff Suerae Robertson, the masseuse who is suing him for sexual assault (see ARs 60-62), requested and was granted a postponement of the trial date. The Clerk of the Smith County Courthouse in Tyler, Texas informs us that a new trial date has not yet been set.

In the meantime, the Church of God International, which GTA founded and which still retains him as a minister and broadcaster, has lost about half its members in the past year. Nevertheless, the GTA radio and television programs remain on the air in many markets.

Herbert Armstrong Resurrected!

Just when some thought it might be safe to go back into the "Churches of God" - HE'S BACK! Yes, Herbert W. Armstrong is up and around. No, not physically - although this past January 16, as they've done on the anniversary of his death each year since he died in 1986, small groups of true believers gathered at the Armstrong grave in Altadena, California to pray for his immediate physical resurrection. Thankfully, at least that hasn't happened. Nevertheless, HWA is back in spirit as his writings and ideas are being rediscovered by thousands around the world.

In most of the Armstrongite groups - the Global Church of God, the Philadelphia Church of God, the United Church of God, and a host of others - HWA's books, articles, and pamphlets are being reprinted, distributed, studied, and analyzed by religious zealots for whom, it seems, the last twenty years just never happened. About the only HWA writing that has not come back into circulation is 1975 in Prophecy. All the others on Israel identity, sabbath and holy days, even divorce and remarriage are again coming into use.

One of the most active in this resurrection process is Richard Nickels, president of the Bible Sabbath Association and founder of Giving and Sharing, a sabbatarian publishing group (P.O. Box 100, Neck City, MO 64849; tel. 888-687-5191). In recent years the latter organization has become one of the best sources for copies of HWA classics. Nickels' collection Early Writings of Herbert W. Armstrong contains many important HWA writings published between 1928 and 1953. While insisting he is not a worshiper of HWA, Nickels nevertheless feels that HWA's teachings, with only a few exceptions, were fundamentally correct.

Finally, for those with net access, there is the Herbert W. Armstrong Memorial Page on the World Wide Web at <http://www.golden.net/~mtech/memorial/hwa/hwa.html> where you can get a number of HWA writings. At this site you can even get the entire text of HWA's book Mystery of the Ages. Of that book HWA once wrote, "Time may prove this to be the most important book written in almost 1,900 years." The Tkachs disagreed and the book is no longer available from the WCG, but it is available at the Memorial Page.

Whodunit?

You are a murder mystery fan and you start reading Ellen Hart's latest, The Oldest Sin. On the opening page you notice that the book has something to do with a Bible college in the Los Angeles area. The year is 1971. A few pages later you notice that the founder of the college is "an Apostle" and, guess what? He has "a Commission." Hmmm. The Apostle has an evangelist son and his wife thinks the Apostle's followers are "spineless wonders." The Apostle's church is "the only true church," it's run along authoritarian lines, and the whole thing is "sinking into a kind of madness." Now you're really hooked. A few more pages and a liberal minister appears. He says makeup is okay, you can eat pork, and he's got some new ideas on tithing. Before you know it the "Church of the First Born" is heading for an annual convention, a week-long sabbath festival they call "Tabernacles Week." But then you panic and blurt out, "Oh no! Don't go! DON'T GO!! The sermons are bad enough, but this is a murder mystery. Someone is bound to get hurt real bad!"

You want to put the book down in terror of what you know will happen at any moment. Instead, to gain some composure, you turn to the dedication page. It reads:

For Gregory Johnson, one of the greatest gifts of my college years and beyond, and also for all those long-ago friends who survived their membership in the Worldwide Church of God.

Oh, that explains it. You read on and the parts about dorm life at the Bible college bring back a lot of memories of your own years at Ambassador. You vaguely remember a Greg C. Johnson, "yeah, he was that talented, well-dressed guy who hung out with the arty set." But who is Ellen Hart? You dig out all your old Envoys and you can't find an Ellen Hart. But that picture of her inside the back cover looks familiar. And then you remember. Ellen Hart is none other than Pat Boehnhardt, AC/AU (or whatever) Pasadena, 1971.

Those of us who had the pleasure of being at Ambassador in the days when she was there recall her as one of the absolutely most fun-loving, witty, and creative people who ever passed through that institution, or any other for that matter. She wrote prose, poetry, songs. She sang and played guitar and piano. And a lot of us still remember those lunch-time Student Center organ ducts she played with PT writer Charlie Vinson. After Ambassador, Pat returned to the Minneapolis area where she had twelve years of experience as a professional chef. She then began a professional writing career and became a two-time winner of the Minnesota Book Award for mystery/detective fiction. The Oldest Sin, her tenth book, is published by Ballantine Books, a division of Random House, and is available at most major bookstores.

Whodunit? We can't tell you. But if you were ever in the WCG or a church like it, you will find The Oldest Sin a wonderfully entertaining reading experience.

Letters

Some time ago we were told that when the church's Pasadena properties are sold the money would be used to allow local Worldwide congregations to build their own church buildings. Now we have heard that the money will just be given to some of the church's top ministers. Which story is true?

-Missouri

Editor: There is no telling what the latest plan is. But in the September WN (p. 7) Bernie Schnippert, WCG's treasurer, stated that the first priority would be "to fund a retirement plan for faithful full-time ministers and employees who meet the criteria of age, years of service, loyalty, membership status and other requirements not delineated here." After that, if there is anything left over, the plan is to perhaps use some for other, not as yet determined, purposes. So, no need to worry. Tkach and friends will be well provided for.

We left the WCG in 1995 and went into United. Now we are out of that organization too. About three months ago we started reading the Tangled Web, The Truth Shall Make You Free, and Armstrongism, Religion or Ripoff? Needless to say we were shocked. But we know these things are true because we read much and talked to many people.

We heard so many rumors about WCG and they came true. Now we are hearing rumors about United. One is that Bob Dick was at one time receiving two paychecks, one from WCG (before he officially resigned) and the other from United. We also heard that United was two years in the making before they emerged. They tried to tell us they just went to Indianapolis and it was just born, almost spontaneously. Do you realize that these same ministers were therefore the very ones who were once aligned with the "great falling away"?

We also heard that some evangelists in GCG are wanting to align with United, but they are doing it secretly. They know Meredith would never step aside and share the spotlight with anyone else. GCG is hurting for money, so what to do? What to do?

To obey blindly for the sake of a command is not a virtue in itself, but a slavish submission from fear of punishment. Religious knowledge is much more profound and complex than historical knowledge. Most religious beliefs are confirmed through experiences rather than from texts and man-made traditions.

The Case of the Missing ARs

Did you receive our last issue, AR63? Apparently a lot of our regular subscribers did not. AR63, which began with an article titled "Tkach Goes Ecumenical," was mailed out at the very beginning of October. Normally, within three weeks of mailing out an edition we start hearing from readers. But by mid-November we had heard from only a handful. Then a number of long-time friends wrote or phoned and said they still had not received their issue.

By mid-December it was obvious that something was very wrong. For instance, the amount of contributions received after the October mailing were so low we wondered if we would be able to continue publishing. In fact, this issue only gets out through a small bank loan. From the number of complaint letters that we received and from the fact that we had very few address correction updates from the post office it appears now that perhaps two thirds or more of our last mailing just disappeared.

What happened? Frankly, we still don't know. At first we suspected that the record number of bulk mailings that politicians made before last November's U.S. elections somehow interfered with our own bulk mailing. But, why then did so many foreign mailings, including many air-mailed to Canada, also somehow get lost? We haven't a clue. We have talked to postal officials and they too cannot figure it out. Whatever the cause, it has set us back a little bit.

If you are one of our regular subscribers and did not get a copy of AR63 (October 1996) please be sure to mention that in a letter. We still have a few copies left over from our last printing and we will try to get one out to you ASAP.

My apology for this issue having to be so short. But it's all that we can afford at this time. With a bit of luck we will be able to get out a larger issue next time - hopefully in a couple of months. My thanks to all for your patience and support.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

More Secrecy at the Tkach Co.

Joseph W. Tkach Junior, the heir to the religious empire started by Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA), now rules over a Worldwide Church of God (WCG) so enfeebled that reading the WCG's monthly financial reports in the church's Worldwide News (WN) is a little like reading the medical chart updates for a terminally ill hospital patient. For the months December 1996 to April 1997, the WCG Treasurer's reports began: "Income increase in December needed for stability," "December stable," "1997 starts out fairly stable," "February income stable and within projections," and "Income stable as first quarter closes."

In the new WCG, "stable" translates into a mournful "there is no change." No longer are solemn fasts called when there are three consecutive months when revenue growth for the year dips below 30%. Now in Worldwide the most that can be hoped for is just paying bills on time. At church headquarters in Pasadena, California, mere corporate survival for one more month brings whimpering sighs of pseudo-relief and whispered prayers of pious thanksgiving. The WCG's financial condition is so precarious now that for 1995, the Tkach team and its accounting firm, Coopers & Lybrand, were just barely able to get their financial audit done - and not until mid-January of 1997! In explaining the delay to the church's membership, church treasurer Bernie Schnippert, sounding a bit like an exhausted, would-be John Paul Jones, admitted in the February WN that "The audit for 1996 has not yet begun." But what is even more revealing is this statement from the same article:

For some years the church has published the audit, in whole or in part, in the WN. This is helpful for the few who gain some insight into the financial matters of the church, but others have said it is unnecessary and confusing.

Since the audit for 1995 is so late as to be almost irrelevant to our current financial picture, and since the full audit covers numerous pages, we have chosen not to publish it.

Paradoxically, by adopting the new approach, the Tkach group is returning to a style of financial secrecy that permeated the WCG in the sixties and seventies when the organization learned the hard way that such an approach just did not work. It was church counsel Stanley R. Rader who around 1979 initiated the greater levels of financial accountability and openness that are now being obliterated by Tkach and company. Treasurer Schnippert assures us that any church member who really wants a copy of the financial statement may obtain one by just writing to him. Should any of our WCG-member readers ever receive a copy, we would certainly appreciate an opportunity to review it and then, hopefully, dispel some of the nasty rumors now circulating about where Worldwide's dwindling assets are really going.

Not surprisingly, with the increased secrecy has already come increased discontent among the WCG's laity. And much of that discontent has been prodded on by all-too-transparent double talk from the WCG's leadership. Here is but one example. For many years, HWA and those loyal to his vision taught that the properties that the church owned were an important part of the overall mission of the church. While there is no doubt that HWA was extravagant and spent foolishly in many areas, there is also no doubt that the actual physical plant of Ambassador's Pasadena, Texas, and English campuses did serve as very tangible symbols of the better world that HWA envisioned.

Along came the Tkachs and before long there was supposedly no longer a need for beautiful real estate as symbols of a vision (nor, indeed, some might argue, for the old vision itself). Instead, there arose "a new paradigm." So what to do with all that real estate? To the bottom-line-oriented Tkach team there was only one answer: Sell it, of course. But a lot of people couldn't understand the paradigm shift. And so Tkach and company had to come up with an excuse for wanting to sell off all that real estate. The properties cost too much to run, they said. They just weren't efficient money makers for the Work. Well, a lot of members actually bought that story. And then some of those folks began asking why, if the properties were such a drain on the Work, did not the church just walk away from them? Even worse for the Tkach team, if the church has so mismanaged its income as to have bought so much property that it never needed in the first place, then why should members keep sending money to church headquarters?

Well, of course such logic would never do because the unstated, but very real, fact is the properties are not being sold as any kind of a blessing to the church members or to get out any gospel or to take care of any pressing need. The main reason they are being unloaded is to provide a retirement fund, not for all the many dedicated employees of old, but mainly for the top honchos now running the Tkach Company. Read Schnippert's Q&A pieces in the WN for December and February and it is difficult to come to any other conclusion.

Meanwhile, Schnippert claims that "our income in 1997 in the United States is projected to be more than $100 million less than the church's highest income year" (WN, 2/18/97, p. 11). Actually, it is closer to $170 million less because in 1990 the WCG's yearly income peaked at over $211 million. Today, Schnippert doesn't talk much publicly about yearly figures. He just says he is hoping for a daily income of only $122,000 (WN, 1/21/97, p. 6). And he even admits he is including the revenues from Plain Truth

Ministries (PTM) in that figure (WN, 4/22/97, p. 10). From what we have been able to figure out from his somewhat obfuscating statements, Schnippert is making his yearly revenue projection based on a six-day work week (minus about ten no-mail holidays per year). That would give him annual combined WCG-PTM revenues of only $37 million. Of course, if his projection is based on only a five-day work week then that yearly figure will come out to less than $31 million.

It's no wonder that as we go to press, at WCG headquarters there is again talk of more layoffs coming. This, after more than 700 employees have already been let go in the past two years.

Worldwide's Failing Strategy

Worldwide's financial problems have not come about because the Tkach team is not trying. Unfortunately, however, for Worldwide's still loyal members, what the Tkach team is really working hard at is their own little pet business, Plain Truth Ministries, Inc. - not to be confused with Worldwide Church of God, Inc., a separate corporation. What the new corporation is all about is not so much ministering to a flock, but the merchandising of so-called Christian products. Look at the new Plain Truth magazine (PT) and what you see is a lot of ads for books, videos, trips, and even diet plans.

ISSN 0882-2123

Opinions expressed in by-lined articles are not necessarily those of the publisher. References to books, ministers, and organizations do not constitute endorsements.

---

That is not to say that the PT is completely worthless. In the Sept./Oct. '96 PT, for instance, there was an article by former U.S. President Jimmy Carter. That the Tkach team should be able to enlist the name and prestige of a former U.S. President to bolster its image is no small accomplishment. And Carter's article, while not necessarily reflective of the views of most Worldwidiers, was thought provoking. Among the more interesting comments it contained was this one:

Now leaders of the highly organized Christian right, have successfully injected into America's political debate some divisive religious questions. The most vivid examples involve sexual preference, which obviously have highly personal and emotional overtones....

Since almost all Protestants now condone divorce as an acceptable way of life and rarely mention fornication or adultery, it is much easier and more convenient for heterosexual Christians to focus on homosexuality, refusing to acknowledge that this is a sin never mentioned by Jesus.

In the Jan./Feb. PT, among the books favorably reviewed was Tony Campolo's Is Jesus a Republican or a Democrat? While Campolo says Jesus is neither, some Worldwidiers who read the book were surprised at how liberal his positions were on such topics as illegal aliens and California Proposition 187, environmental activism, support for public schools, gay tolerance, and gun control. While Campolo's views, like some of Jimmy Carter's, may be espoused by many intellectuals, they are not likely the type that will bring in big bucks from those as demographically right wing as most evangelicals or Armstrongites.

Then there was the March/April Plain Truth. It featured a cover story about evangelist Billy Graham. Emblazoned on the cover was the title of the interview-article, "Just As I Am," a phrase Graham often uses to describe the conversion experience and one, coincidentally, that is the title of Graham's new book on sale at most bookstores. The phrase is also one that many Ambassador alumni recall was absolutely detested by Herbert W. Armstrong. Nevertheless, Graham is now being actively promoted by the Tkach organization and WCG members are even being encouraged to volunteer for duty at Billy Graham crusades.

The latest PT, the May/June issue, features interviewer Sheila Graham "Up Close and Personal With Pat Boone" (no kidding, that was the title of her article). Boone, who hawks his products in the pages of the PT, has been in trouble of late with the evangelical community. Back on January 27 Boone appeared at a televised record industry awards show donning a heavy-metal outfit that included a chest-baring black leather jacket, earrings, a studded dog collar, shades, and a fake tatoo. The outfit, which Boone now says was worn merely as a joke, convinced some evangelicals that Boone had literally lost his mind.

Among those offended by the display was evangelist Keith Crouch who heads the Trinity Broadcasting Network. Crouch asked his viewers to "pray for Pat," then pulled Boone's Gospel America program off the network and refused to renew it until he was assured that Boone had not become permanently demon possessed. Finally, however, after noticing that 90% of those writing to his network asked that Boone be returned to the air, Crouch decided to bring him back via a special two-hour Boone-a-thon in which he promised his near-record audience that "We're going to put the devil under our feet tonight..." and give him "a couple of black eyes in Jesus' name." Using a laser gun to zap a photo of Boone in the infamous leather outfit, Crouch then brought out the singer before an audience that included leather-clad Bikers for Jesus. He then got Boone to apologize to those who had been offended. With that performance assuring Crouch that it was again safe to associate with Boone, Gospel America was reinstated on the Trinity Network. Television critic Howard Rosenberg called the Boone-a-thon "The resurrection of Pat Boone." It is not clear whether WCG executives were in the TV audience for the resurrection, but the article about Boone in the latest PT is an important part of the campaign to cleanse the singer's sullied reputation. And, we have been told, Boone's line of Christian products will continue to be advertised in the Plain Truth.

In addition to helping Pat Boone, Billy Graham, and other Christian celebrities, recent Tkach activities have included increased intercourse with Hank Hanegraaff's outreach, the Promise Keepers, Mission America, the Church of God Seventh Day, the American Bible Society, and the Baptist Church. Tkach even spoke one Sunday recently before a Temple City, California Baptist congregation. And in March Tkach was a guest speaker at the National Association of Evangelicals convention in Orlando, Florida. All of these activities by Tkach have enhanced his own public image and that of his new pet business, Plain Truth Ministries, Inc. But how much good has all this effort done for the Worldwide Church of God, Inc. or for the WCG's members? Not much, really. And even with the new PTM, as Worldwidiers refer to it, when it comes to business strategy the Tkach team has yet to come up with a marketing plan that makes any sense.

Flurry Wins Big in Court

When talking marketing strategy with his subordinates, HWA would often quote his one-time friend, the great, gay tennis champion William T. Tilden II, who taught him to: "Never change a winning game; always change a losing game!" Armstrong would repeatedly pound that maxim into the heads of his top lieutenants and headquarters disciples. It's pretty obvious that some, like those who are now the WCG's top executives, were just not paying close attention.

One Armstrong disciple, however, who was paying close attention was Gerald Flurry. Of all the WCG breakoffs, his Philadelphia Church of God, headquartered in Enid, Oklahoma, is the one that has most closely followed the old HWA marketing plan, and it is his group seems to be taking the lead in terms of most effectively promulgating the old Armstrong message. Flurry's PCG also seems to have the best financial growth record of all the breakaways. Now, most paradoxically, it is Tkach's lawyers who seem to have given Flurry and his Philadelphia Church of God their biggest boost.

Early this year Flurry announced that his Philadelphia Church of God (PCG) was republishing Herbert Armstrong's book Mystery of the Ages. It was a bold move by Flurry as the WCG corporation holds the copyright to the book and the WCG still has the means to do its enemies harm in the courts.

No sooner had the reprinted books started rolling off PCG presses than WCG lawyers brought suit in Federal District Court in Los Angeles, asking the court to bar PCG from printing and distributing the book. Normally, before a full hearing on the merits of a case where an injunction is sought, there is a shorter hearing at which the court decides if there is enough of a case against the defendant (here PCG) to warrant the granting of a temporary restraining order (a "TRO"). Hearing the WCG motion for the TRO was Federal District Judge J. Spencer Letts. The attorneys for the parties were Benjamim Scheibe of the law firm of Browne & Woods (Browne as in Allen Browne), accompanied by veteran Worldwide counsel Ralph Helge, for the WCG, the plaintiff; and Mark Helm, from Munger, Tolles & Olsen representing Flurry's PCG, the defendant.

The February 18 hearing started out this way:

JUDGE: I've read plaintiffs materials. I don't seem to have anything from you, Mr. Helm. Am I right about that?

MR. HELM: That's correct, your honor.

JUDGE: Do you have anything to say?

MR. HELM: Yes, sir, I do.

JUDGE: Outstanding! [At this point some could sense a certain smugness on the part of the WCG's lawyers - ed.]

MR. HELM: Your honor, we have only recently been brought into this case, and so what I will tell you is based on my understanding of the facts as they exist now. Obviously, we'll need to investigate further. We do not think that a TRO is appropriate at this point. The plaintiff has represented to the court that this is a garden-variety copyright infringement case. Nothing could be farther from the truth. This is a very significant case involving issues arising under the First Amendment, including the free exercise of religion clause....

At this point attorney Helm proceeded to give the court an overview of how the late Herbert Armstrong had left the WCG in the hands of the Tkachs, how the Tkachs then deviated wildly from the doctrinal path of the church's founder, and how beginning around 1989 the WCG's leaders had ceased distribution of HWA's "magnum opus" Mystery of the Ages. Helm continued -

This is not a case where the Worldwide Church of God is exploiting the copyright in order to disseminate and earn profits from Mystery of the Ages. This is a case where they are trying to suppress and not disseminate Mr. Armstrong's books. That's our understanding.

JUDGE: That's mine as well.

MR. HELM: And so, your honor, the founders of my client, the Philadelphia Church of God, were ministers in the Worldwide Church of God who got to the point where they believed they needed to split off and form their own church, which was more faithful to the tenets and the views of Mr. Armstrong. They view his book, in essence, as the scriptures of their religion.

At this point, Helm may have been a little more open than his client would have wished, but, nevertheless, he was being truthful. He went on to explain that Flurry was not charging for the book. Then Scheibe interjected a number of arguments based on cases that Judge Letts did not think were relevant.

JUDGE: [Impatiently and speaking to Scheibe-] For sale?.... Which do you want to do? Are you here to contest jurisdiction, or are you left to contest the merits?

MR. HELM: [Who was already winning without even having filed a brief but thought he should say something-] Well, your honor, perhaps then we should discuss how to proceed. As I say, I've been on this case for exactly 24 hours, and I....

JUDGE: Well, let me help you. I can't imagine a TRO is going to get granted.

MR. HELM: I'm sorry?

JUDGE: I can't imagine a TRO is going to be granted.

MR. HELM: Okay.

JUDGE: I just thought I'd let you say so....

MR. SCHEIBE: [Unable to fathom that he had already lost the round-] Your honor, I would like to address the merits. I'm somewhat at a loss with the court's suggestion there's not a probability of success on the merits here. I don't think there's any question but that religious materials are amenable to copyright protection.

JUDGE: Of course they are.... Let me tell you why I think you're not going to succeed on the merits here. The copyright seems to me to have two primary purposes, neither of which are at issue here. One is to keep there from being confusion about who is the person publishing the work. The second is to keep strangers from profiting from the work. Neither of those is at issue with somebody who wants to suppress the work entirely. There is no confusion. And what you are talking about, on the strength of your papers, is something that so far as I know no copyright case has ever put at issue. It wasn't a question of whether there would be two publishers or three, but rather whether there will be one or none....

This is admittedly a work by the founder of a religion who has died.... This [the Worldwide Church of God] is an entity that has a corporate structure and it also has a religious structure. The people who inherited the corporate structure are not all of the people who used to have religious position. Some of the people that had religious position have now either been taken out of the corporate structure, or they were never in it. The question is - and it is to me a new one - does the surviving corporation, through its board of directors and a such people, have the right to suppress the founder... the right to prevent there from being future printing of the religious founder's work?...

Scheibe then argued that although Flurry had a right to add upon the teachings of HWA, he should not be allowed to distribute word-for-word copies of HWA's writings.

MR. SCHEIBE: Here they just slavishly copied and they're distributing a direct copy with an altered copyright [notice] which is a crime.

JUDGE: I understand your position but I don't agree with it. The issue is going to be something that I haven't seen yet, and that is with a founder's work - I can tell you, although I don't know to what its germane, my own view of what it ought to take to be a religion - some combination, maybe size, and certainly you have size here, but I think the founder plus the first set of disciples is sort of the rule against perpetuity, a religion that meets the rule of perpetuity certainly is one and should have all religious protection....

I do think that if it is, as I suspect it is, that when you're dealing with the first generation after the founder, that you're dealing with very different religious issues. And you are dealing with a founder's work in the first generation after the founder's [death] and you've had a split in the religion, which was by definition different from the corporation.... the founder did not dream, I suspect - this is what he's going to be saying - he didn't dream that by giving this corporation, which was his corporation that reflected his religion, that those who would come after him would use their corporate power to suppress his religion or to keep any prior practitioners of his religion, or keep any people that were vested with the authority of that religion, notwithstanding they don't have the corporate position, from making that book available on a continuous, freshly printed basis - I don't believe the founder dreamed that...

The scope of Judge Letts' comments stunned Worldwide's lawyers and seemed to come as something of a surprise even for PCG's counsel. Some legal observers who have seen the transcript of the proceedings say they are surprised at the Judge's profound insights into the case. The judge's reference to the dreaded Rule Against Perpetuities, for example, brought ahs from a number who, after much thought, began to see that HWA's legacy may have been dual - part corporate, part intellectual or spiritual, and that for the latter, there may be significant legal protection available from the courts.

According to Flurry, "Ten days later the Worldwide Church dismissed the case and it filed a new complaint the next business day in Oklahoma in a cynical and obvious attempt to find a more favorable judge." While Worldwide lawyers have been searching for a more favorable judicial climate, Flurry has been taking out huge newspaper ads around the country extolling what he sees as a great victory given by God. In fact, since beginning to re-publish HWA's Mystery of the Ages, he has been telling his followers that their Work has entered a new phase, and that God has set before them a new "open door." No longer does he see his mission as being merely to save "the Laodiceans." Now he plans to get his Armstrong message out "to all the world."

Inching Toward Ishtar

While Flurry seems to prosper with each pro-HWA step he takes, the Tkach organization seems to run into walls with each new liberalization. Not only is the Tkach company having problems in the financial area, even their theological strategies are bogged down. Just two years ago, Tkach Junior was telling friends privately that he hoped to see the entire WCG keeping Easter by 1997. It hasn't worked out that way. Last year Worldwidiers were given permission to observe Easter services with Protestant congregations who were observing that religious day. Only a few took up the offer. Many Worldwidiers still tremble at HWA's warnings about Sunday worship which he called the "Mark of the Beast."

This year the WCG announced that Easter services would be held March 30 in Pasadena at Ambassador Auditorium and in Gladewater, Texas with the Gladewater Ministerial Alliance at an Easter sunrise service presided over by Joseph Tkach himself. At both sites, the public was invited. And that was a face-saver for the Tkach team as at neither site did very many Worldwidiers show up. Instead, most remaining Worldwidiers opted to keep their traditional Passover, now referred to by Tkach as "the Lord's Supper," with its old Armstrong method of calculation which came out to April 20th. Not only that, privately many Worldwidiers are still derisively referring to Easter, as HWA used to do, by its old pagan name, Ishtar.

Insiders claim that fear of financial disaster has forced Tkach to back off this year in instituting mandatory Easter observance in Worldwide. But the betting is that by next spring, or 1999 at the latest, the, WCG will be keeping Easter as a group.

If that proves true, the Tkach church's acceptance of Easter may prove to be just in time for what may well be one of the most important events in the 2,000 year history of Christianity: the establishment of a new and universal method for calculating the date for Easter observance.

To understand a little about what is involved, we must go back to the Nicean Council of 325. That Emperor-initiated gathering of Christian leaders recognized that the gospels placed the death and resurrection of Jesus in relation to the Jewish Passover. They concluded that Easter should be celebrated on the Sunday after Passover as that feast's date had been calculated in Jesus' time, that is, on the first full moon following the vernal equinox. The Jews later deviated from the equinox benchmark and later there were also minor Christian modifications of the Nicean ruling. Nevertheless, there was a substantial amount of Christian harmony regarding the issue of when to keep Easter until 1582 when Pope Gregory XIII again "changed times and seasons" (as HWA referred to this proclivity of the popes) by adopting the reformed calendar we know today as the Gregorian calendar. The Orthodox Catholic Churches of the East, not recognizing the supremacy of the Bishop of Rome, did not go along with Gregory's unilateral calendar change and instead retained the older Julian calendar (as did Great Britain and its colonies until 1752 when they went Gregorian - which is why for that year in British history the dates Sept. 3-13 are omitted).

Since 1582 the Roman Catholic Church and the Eastern Orthodox Catholic Churches have kept Easter - the day that theoretically should unite them more than any other - on different days. Only once in four years do the two ways of calculating Easter bring about the same day for the celebration. Some years the dates are quite far apart. This year, for instance, the Roman church and its Protestant daughters celebrated Easter on March 30 while the Eastern Orthodox Churches celebrated Easter on April 27 (as always on a date following the Passover).

Now it appears that this East-West dichotomy of calculation may disappear. High-ranking leaders of most of the world's largest Christian denominations met in Aleppo, Syria, March 5-10 to discuss possible ways of bringing about a unified way of calculating the date for Easter. While barely reported on in United States newspapers, the historic gathering included official representatives of the Vatican, the Orthodox Ecumenical Patriarchate of Constantinople, the Orthodox Patriarchate of Moscow, the worldwide Anglican Communion, the Lutheran World Federation, the Middle East Council of Churches, the Armenian Orthodox Church, and many other Roman Catholic, Orthodox Catholic, and Protestant denominations. Then on March 24, in a surprising display of unity, the conference leaders under the auspices of the World Council of Churches announced a proposal by which all Christian churches worldwide would be keeping Easter on the same date beginning in the year 2001 (the year that actually begins the new millennium).

This plan is not without its critics and church politics among Christians everywhere being what it is, it is not altogether certain that the big change will come about. But if it does, will Tkach and company follow? Already, in deciding to keep Easter, Tkach chose to follow the more popular Roman way of calculating the date, rather than the Eastern way which takes into account the Jewish observance of Passover. And with a majority of the world's Protestant denominations likely to follow the lead of the Vatican and the World

Council of Churches, we can probably expect Tkach and company to do the same.

No Millennium Needed!

Ever since the death of WCG founder Herbert W. Armstrong, the Tkach administration has been tirelessly tinkering with the theological legacy of HWA. One would have thought that by now they would have run out of doctrines to change. Not so! The latest doctrinal "clarification" concerns the millennium, or the biblical thousand-year reign of the Messiah. In an April WN article titled "A balanced approach to the Millennium," J. Michael Feazell and Mike Morrison wrote:

Since the New Testament does not emphasize the nature of the millennium, we conclude that it is not a central plank in the church's commission... Although the WCG has traditionally been premillennial, the church does not require its members to believe that Christ will set up a temporary kingdom after he returns. We are sure that, no matter what Christ does after his return, no one will be disappointed.

Don't you feel relieved? Feazell and Morrison go on to state that WCG ministers, while still required to believe in Jesus, may believe and teach anything they wish, or nothing at all, about the millennium. They say it makes no difference. They go on:

In November 1995, Richard J. Foster wrote the following letter to those on his Renovaré mailing list. It provides some helpful comments about speculations about prophecy [They then quote the Foster article and, of course, by doing so in the WN put upon it the WCG's imprimatur]:

As the year 2000 draws near, we are seeing more and more end-time scenarios as apocalyptic zeal rises to fever pitch.

There were early-bird predictions: Edgar C. Whisenant's 88 Reasons Why the Rapture Will Be in 1988 and a follow-up book The Final Shout: Rapture Report 1989, 1990, 1991, 1992, 1993... sold several million copies; South Korean Lee Jang Rim convinced followers around the globe that Christ would return in October, 1992; and on the air and in his book, 1994, the popular American radio Bible teacher Harold Camping targeted Sept. 6 as the date for the final trump. [He could have added HWA's 1975, and a string of other dates once favored by Armstrongites.]

The year 2000 is now favored by most prophesy preachers - though it isn't clear whose calendar we are supposed to follow or why God favors round numbers.

(Two heavy hitters on the apocalyptic scene have weighed in with their contributions: Hal Lindsey with Planet Earth - 2000 A.D. and Pat Robertson with The End of the Age, a novel conveniently set in the year 2000.)

This is big business in Christian book stores and at the Christian Booksellers Convention. And in the general public, a prime-time series on ancient prophecies warned that futurists from Nostradamus to Edgar Cayce have targeted the year 2000 for the end of the world.

We are awash in a sea of apocalyptic tabloid books. Not since the Millerite movement [which led to Adventism and Armstrongism] a century and a half ago has there been such a feeding frenzy over the end of the world. We can only expect it to increase.

Foster then gives an excellent explanation as to why such end-time hysteria hurts Christianity. He provides an outstanding historical perspective of the phenomenon, and then concludes with a detailed set of suggestions on how Christians can refuse to demean the gospel by mixing hope of the Second Coming with reckless speculation. So far so good. And many will find the article worth studying in its entirety. (The publisher is Renovaré, 8 Inverness Drive East, Suite 102, Englewood, CO 80112-5609.) However, what has caused considerable stir in Armstrongite circles is the section subtitled "A trustworthy model" which concludes the article:

In the fourth century St. Augustine opposed the prophetic literalism of Chiliasm. Instead of the imminent, material, millennial kingdom of Chiliasm, he helped his people see the City of God.

Out of pastoral concern he taught them that the kingdom of God was already a present reality among them in the community of faith and that its full consummation will come in God's time and in God's way in the blessed hope of Christ's return.

Augustine's wise, sensible, biblical vision won the day and influenced the church for centuries to come. May something of that same faith-filled sensibility arise today.

Chiliasm is the doctrine of Christ's expected return to reign on earth for 1,000 years, otherwise called millennialism, something Herbert Armstrong championed for his entire preaching career. And, as many WCG oldtimers recall from Armstrong's book God Speaks Out on the New Morality, HWA considered Augustine one of the greatest heretics of all time. Again, Tkachism has turned Armstrongism on its head.

It won't be the last time either. Just as we go to press, we have learned that there is talk at WCG headquarters of changing the WCG's teaching on the immortality of the soul. HWA emphatically taught that humans were not immortal souls. He spent considerable time discussing it and there is no doubt about what he actually taught on the subject. Now, Tkach has let the cat out of the bag regarding where he is heading on the matter. In February on Hank Hanegraaff's Bible Answer Man radio program, Tkach said:

The suffering of hell is beyond any experience of misery found on earth today, and it's clearly included in the teaching of Jesus, and the reality is far beyond what those symbols say to us, and that there's no cruelty there but perfect justice, and it's eternal, there's no escaping it.

Was Tkach saying under his breath, "Been there, done that"? Whatever the case, a WCG that teaches the Catholic doctrine of the immortal soul cannot be too far away.

WCG Follows Vatican's Lead on Evolution

Of the scores of WCG doctrines that have changed over the last few years, one of the most significant, yet most underreported, has been its change on the theory of biological evolution. In the HWA era the WCG's position was clearly that of most Bible fundamentalist groups who teach a special creation and view the creation of man as having occurred on a sixth literal day of a literal week only about 6,000 years ago. But recent WCG articles, videos, sermons, etc. have shown that the WCG's position has itself (excuse the pun) evolved. Now the WCG teaches a type of creative evolution - that is, evolution probably did take place, not gradually but in fits and starts, and it was God who was behind the evolution.

Whether or not the new WCG position is reasonable, scientific, or necessarily anti-biblical is not the point here. What is interesting, we think, is the fact that the WCG's new stance is rather close to that of the Roman Catholic Church.

It may come as a surprise to many, but the Roman Church has never really formally condemned the theory of evolution. In 1950, Pope Pius XII in the encyclical letter "Humani Generis" did strongly caution that evolution could be used to bolster the philosophical positions of atheists and materialists who wanted to remove the necessity of a Creator from the process of creation. Nevertheless, the encyclical stated that evolution doctrine was a "serious hypothesis" that was not objectionable and could be accepted by Catholics as long as it was not embraced as "certain doctrine."

Now comes Pope John Paul II. On October 22, 1996, in a formal statement sent to the Pontifical Academy of Sciences, the pontiff said that "fresh knowledge leads to recognition of the theory of evolution as more than just a hypothesis." While many laymen did not understand what the Pope was getting at, members of the scientific community understood very well the portent of the announcement. "A theory holds greater weight as a coherent explanation of natural phenomena that has passed critical review, is accepted by most scientists in the field and can correctly make predictions. A hypothesis is a tentative explanation that is not yet widely accepted but may have significant evidence behind it and may in time be elevated to the status of theory" (Robin Smith of Mission Viejo in a letter to the Los Angeles Times, 10/29/96, p. B6). Thus, the Roman Church has, indeed, in a very precise way advanced the acceptance of biological evolution concepts.

What the Pope exactly meant by "fresh knowledge" has not been formally explained by either the Pope or the Vatican. It is interesting, however, that just months before the announcement, there was an international conference on God and evolution at the Vatican Observatory headquarters in the Pope's summer residence near Rome. Among the invitees were some of the greatest names in the world of science, including physicist Paul Davies, recent winner of the Templeton Prize, who suggests that science and Christian theology are now coming together. While the conference was not widely reported in the press, our own sources in Rome indicate that what may have prompted the gathering was leaked information that NASA was almost ready to announce, as it later did in August, that meteorites found on earth and believed to have come from Mars contained evidence of extraterrestrial life. Some Vatican insiders feel that the Pope and some of his closest advisors were thrown into a needless panic by intelligence reports of the upcoming NASA announcement. Ironically, while the NASA announcement did come in August and the international press was very quick to play up the new evidence for life on Mars, not long afterward a number of leading scientists at Pasadena's Jet Propulsion Laboratories indicated they disagreed with the NASA report and some have privately speculated that Congressional calls for reduced funding of NASA's unmanned space missions (in which JPL in Pasadena plays an important, even central, role) may have biased some researchers in favor of finding evidence of life on Mars when, they claim, there really is none.

Whatever the reason behind the timing of the pontiff's October 22 statement, many religionists in the United States were aghast at its pro-evolution wording. Christian columnist Cal Thomas, for example, viewed the Pope's statement as an outright attack on the book of Genesis and concluded that, "With his statement about evolution the Pope has caught up with the times. He has accepted a philosophy that stands at the core of communism."

In contrast, however, most Catholics could not understand what all the hullabaloo was about. Most we talked to said that Catholic schools have been teaching the theory of evolution for decades and Catholic intellectuals pointed out how some Catholic scholars have long been in the vanguard of promoting pro-evolution concepts. For example, one of the important teachings of Teilhard de Chardin was that God, in his great love, has afforded mankind the opportunity of participating in his own evolution. Teilhard, once described in Henry Luce's Life magazine as "the greatest living thinker-prophet of the 20th century," was not only one of the century's greatest Jesuit scholars, he was also a leading paleontologist who beginning in 1923 led scientific expeditions into China where he found traces of paleolithic man, a prelude to the discovery of Peking Man in 1929. Nevertheless, while Teilhard's intellectual influence on the Catholic Church has been profound (and as some conservatives see it, very negative), some modern Catholic scholars see hints at the necessity for evolutionary thought in the writings of some early Catholic theologians. For instance, Father George Coyne, the Jesuit priest and astronomer who heads the Vatican Observatory has pointed out that "In the Augustinian tradition that God is absolute goodness, there is almost the necessity for goodness to reproduce itself, to pour itself out." Naturally, the implication is that both biological evolution on earth and life forms on other planets would be manifestations of God's love.

John Tagliabue, writing in the New York Times (10/25/96) pointed out that, "The [Pope's] statement appeared to be the latest action in the fulfillment of frequent urgings by the pope to Catholics that the church should be prepared to amend wrong teachings adhered to in the past." Yes, the Pope, like the WCG's Pastor General, is bringing about paradigm shifts. But who, even just three years ago, would have thought that the two religious leaders ever would have so much in common?

The Vatican-Babylon Connection Reevaluated

Of the many insensitive teachings promulgated by the late Herbert W. Armstrong, probably none was more "politically incorrect" than his view that the Roman Catholic Church was "Babylon the Great" of prophecy and "the Great Whore" of Revelation. Of course, that idea did not originate with Armstrong. Over the centuries many Protestant denominations have held similar views and, in fact, a good number still do. In attacking the legitimacy of the Roman Church, HWA and his subordinates often relied on information contained in the book The Two Babylons by Rev. Alexander Hislop (1807-

62) who had been the pastor of the East Free Church of Arbroath, Scotland.

Because of the teachings of Herbert Armstrong and the book by Hislop, for decades many Worldwidiers harbored a near paranoid distrust of, and often open hostility toward, anything even vaguely Roman Catholic. The Catholicism-bashing ideas of Armstrong and Hislop spread well beyond the WCG and its offshoots. Contributing to the anti-Catholic mood in Worldwide and elsewhere was evangelist and author Ralph Woodrow who, although never a WCG member, was well-known in WCG circles because of his writings which often buttressed certain concepts taught by HWA. One such book, Babylon Mystery Religion, purported to expose the pagan origins of Catholicism and among Worldwidiers it eventually became even more popular than Hislop's Two Babylons.

In recent years, however, Woodrow has questioned a number of ideas that he had promoted, and in particular those that had come from HWA. He has now come to believe that Hislop and HWA were wrong in many of their conclusions about the Roman Catholic Church's history. In an April 3 letter to the Report, he told us:

As you know, in my earlier Christian experience, I was influenced by the writings of Herbert Armstrong in some areas, one being the teaching about pagan mixture. The textbook quoted by many was Hislop's The Two Babylons. Because it was very detailed, with a multitude of notes and references, Hislop's work seemed to be well documented and became the basis of my book Babylon Mystery Religion.

Eventually, however, a history teacher in Colton, while appreciating other things I had written, began pointing out to me that Hislop is not a reliable historian. Then through your paper I learned that the Worldwide Church of God had sent out a memo that questioned conclusions based on my book or on Hislop, or which built too heavily on assumed details about "Nimrod." These factors prompted me to thoroughly restudy Hislop and do further research.

The subtitle to Hislop's book is "The Papal Worship proved to be the worship of Nimrod and his wife." Hislop claims that Nimrod was a big, ugly, deformed black man; his wife, Semiramis, was a most beautiful white woman with blond hair and blue eyes, a backslider, known for her immoral lifestyle, inventor of soprano singing, the originator of priestly celibacy and many other religious practices. These claims and many others appear to me now to be based merely on an arbitrary piecing together of mythology. I discovered that many of the books cited by Hislop clearly do not support his claims. In fact, many of his claims could not be substantiated by any recognized history book!

That realization has prompted me to discontinue publication of Babylon Mystery Religion - despite the fact that orders do not cease to come in for it. I have now replaced it with a 122-page book titled The Babylon Connection?

While Woodrow's new book most certainly is not an endorsement of every Roman Catholic practice and teaching (he is still critical of a good number - just as are many Catholics today), he nevertheless does shed much light on many false ideas about Catholicism that have been circulating in Armstrongite and Protestant denominations for decades. The new book, which incidentally has received strong praise from the Tkach team, is available for only $7 at many bookstores or by writing to Ralph Woodrow, P.O.

WCG Congregation Votes to Exit

Tkach's efforts to convince his followers that the mainstream churches were right all along is apparently getting results. In early April the WCG's congregation in Geneva, Ohio, voted to exit the WCG as a group and to seek affiliation with the Christian Church in Ohio (Disciples of Christ).

According to an official press release issued by the group in April, the Geneva Independent Christian Congregation - which formerly called itself the Geneva Congregation of the Worldwide Church of God - also voted to switch its day of worship from Saturday to Sunday to accommodate the needs of many of its members who could not always meet on Saturday. "We were finding that with single mothers, Saturday morning was the only day they could get the kids to the doctor or dentist. Employment conflicts kept other members away. There were just always conflicts coming up," said Bill Meyer, the congregation's interim pastor.

The congregation also voted to cautiously continue to explore the possibility of merging or affiliating with other local congregations - possibly with an eye toward initially cooperating in joint youth programs. A few members seem inclined to remain in the WCG, but Meyer said the decision to seek affiliation with the Christian Church in Ohio, headquartered in Elyria, was passed with no dissenting votes.

"I was really surprised by the level of unanimity. The basic issue prompting the separation from the WCG was the maintenance of an absolute hierarchy within the denomination that reserved all essential decisions to a Pastor General in Pasadena, California," said Meyer. "The denomination wanted to collect and administer almost all funds from Pasadena. Members were expected to mail contributions there, and then a fraction would come back to the local church. That was just unacceptable and in fact most of our congregation had declined to contribute this way for months."

To Meyer, the Christian Church in Ohio looked like a good fit because of its congregational autonomy, its accountability mechanisms for pastors, its openness to the full participation of women in the life of the church, and its broadly open understanding of the universality of the church. Said Meyer, "This has been a long journey for us as a congregation. We've systematically studied in our congregational Bible studies the themes of religious tolerance in Romans 14 and 15, the theme of Christian freedom in Galatians, the priesthood of all believers in Hebrews, and the need to translate faith into action in the book of James."

Meyer sees the WCG as attempting to harden the hierarchy by issuing church charters to clarify the relationship of the local churches to headquarters. And ethics documents were being drafted that would require all pastors to pledge loyalty and obedience to the hierarchy. [This is exactly the type of organizational model HWA called "the Image of the Beast" when referring to the Roman Catholic Church's imitation of the Roman Empire's hierarchial governmental system - ed.] To Meyer and his congregation that was unacceptable. Meyer says that the dramatic process of reform in the WCG has now largely stalled.

"We were very excited to be moving away from an exclusivist, legalistic doctrinal stance. And our congregation had strongly supported the breath-taking process of reform that took place in 1995. But we had expected, once the crisis atmosphere had calmed down, that a newfound doctrinal orthodoxy would soon work its way into logical and biblical changes in the church's governance and culture. Orthodoxy of doctrine should lead toward orthodoxy of action, and we didn't see that happening."

In addition to the above changes in the Geneva group, the congregation has voted to celebrate communion weekly, a departure from current WCG practice. Additionally, Meyer says, "We are allowing women to preach in Geneva. Most of us don't believe Paul's household codes permanently restrict women any more than they permanently sanction slavery. In fact, if anything, the early church pushed freedom for both to the absolute limits of what law and surrounding culture would bear."

Executive Exodus Continues

The flight of executives and ordained ministers from the WCG, which began over twenty years ago, continues and seems to be speeding up. The 3/18/97 WN announced the retirements of. Robert Bertuzzi, Arthur Docken, Ken Swisher, Rowlen Tucker, Donald Wendt, and Robert Whittaker.

United Moving to Sunny Cincinnati

Meeting March 8-10 in Louisville, Kentucky, the United Church of God held its third general conference of elders in two years. The conference was mainly devoted to discussions of procedures for church governance, always a preoccupation in Armstrongite groups. The most important vote of the conference resulted in a decision to move the church's Arcadia, California "home office" to Cincinnati, Ohio, the town made famous by Pete Rose, Jerry Springer, and Joe Bauer. One WCG evangelist now with UCG is reported to have said:

Why, any nit wit should be able to see that God has chosen Cincinnati to be the headquarters of his representatives on earth. Its on the Ohio River. That's significant! Ohio is an Iroquois word that moans "something great." River is water, the symbol of the Holy Spirit. Cincinnati has ten letters and that represents the Ten Commandments. The city was named after Cincinnatus, a famous Roman nobleman and patriot. You see, he was loyal to the government that God had set up, not to some young upstarts who were wet behind the ears, and God chose him during a crisis to serve the crown city of the empire against invading pagans who were bringing heresies to the very seat of government, and he was noble - he knew how to speak the language properly and how to dress properly because he had been educated at a school for the empire's top leadership. He demanded his troops obey orders that were given top down. There was no democracy. They knew better than to question his orders. They obeyed. They won. And he retired. There is a message here for us. A very clear message. The United Church of God is being led by a mighty patriot of the coming Kingdom who has been taught noble ways and has been hand-picked by God to lead the end-time Work to do SOMETHING GREAT with obedient followers who keep the Ten Commandments with the power of the Holy Spirit that is flowing like a river through the leadership top down to the brethren as the leadership RULES an obedient church only for a little while before he leads the church into the wilderness to the place of final training....

Whew! When asked what the WCG's leadership thought of the UCG move, one Pasadena insider was more concise: "Around here some are calling them the Sin City group."

One other interesting piece of information to come out of the Louisville conference was the fact that at least three of UCG's home office executives are making close to $100,000 a year. Not bad for a denomination that has less than 20,000 members, especially when you consider that the UCG leadership admittedly had difficulty staying within budget during 1996. The group's financial problems were bad enough that in late January UCG President David Hulme, the evangelist (not David Hume the Scottish philosopher of Olympian intellect), had to publicly apologize for handling certain church business matters in a way that was, in effect, much like HWA would have handled them. So, while the UCG does not openly criticize HWA's legacy, they are wisely moving away from at least some of his ways. As for UCG's financial status, it is apparently such that some Arcadia employees, who don't seem to be all that keen on moving anyway, have suggested it may take a very long time for enough funds to accumulate to finance the voted-for move to "Sin City."

As Ambassador Closes

With Ambassador University about to hold its last commencement and close its doors for good, we have one suggestion for all Ambassador alumni. If you do not have a transcript of your Ambassador academic record, you need to obtain one now. Even if your degree is unaccredited, having some proof of what classes you took at Ambassador may some day prove valuable. For information, write The Registrar, Ambassador University, P.O. Box 111, Big Sandy, Texas 75755 - before there is no more Ambassador.

Tom Hall, 1940-1997

Tom Hall (Ambassador, Pasadena 1968) has passed away. One of the most personable individuals we ever met through the Ambassador experience, Hall worked for the World Tomorrow television program as an interviewer and producer of considerable talent until the mid-seventies when he became disillusioned with the Armstrong organization. After Worldwide, he decided against an ongoing career in religion. At a chance meeting at the Pasadena Public Library some years ago, he humorously told AR editor Trechak, "I decided to get an honest job." Putting his love of people and public service to good use, he developed a successful career in broadcasting. Nevertheless, he remained a committed Christian and once even turned down an offer to work for the Pat Robertson organization. The following thoughtful obituary appeared in the April 16 Los Angeles Times:

Tom Hall; Popular Radio Talk Show Host

Tom Hall, popular African American weekend radio talk show host at KABC for 19 years, has died. He was 57.

Hall died Saturday of lymphoma and leukemia, KABC spokesman Bill Lennert said Tuesday. He said Hall's last broadcast was March 15.

Hall was one of Southern California's earliest and most respected minority radio hosts. Hall, who began working for KABC-AM (790) Talkradio in 1979, regularly interviewed experts on politics and local issues. He was particularly known for his astute and humorous handling of "People's Forum," a segment for call-in comments on a variety of topics ranging from science to sex therapy to the national economy.

The radio host had also worked as a public affairs reporter for KNBC television for "The Saturday Show" and "The Everywhere Show." Hall made a brief appearance in the motion picture "The Formula" starring George C. Scott and Marlon Brando.

Before his talk show, Hall spent five years working as interviewer, writer and producer for a television documentary crew. The experience took him to Africa, Europe and the Middle East as well as throughout the United States and earned him credits on more than 40 documentaries. He also had a private consulting company.

Hall is survived by his wife, Luana, and four children. The family has asked that memorial donations be made to the Tom Hall Scholarship Fund, KABC Talkradio Community Relations, 3321 S. La Cienega Blvd., Los Angeles, Calif. 90016.

Where Are They Now?

Long-time WCG administrator Richard Rice, 60, has been retired and has moved back to Louisiana with his wife Virginia. Evangelist Dean Blackwell, 64, has been retired by the WCG and is currently working on a master's degree in religion at Azusa Pacific University. It is not known what denomination, if any, Blackwell will be serving in the future.

Former Ambassador faculty member Mark Kaplan is currently a USC candidate for a Ph.D. in religion. He previously earned a degree in history from Brooklyn College, another degree from Ambassador, Big Sandy in 1971, and an M.A. in Hebrew studies from the University of Texas in Austin in 1976. A former WCG minister, Mark is now a UCG church pastor in Southern California and is also lecturing for the International Bible Learning Center in Hawkins, Texas.

Joseph C. Bauer Jr. (Ambassador, Pasadena 1967), the director of the Ambassador band in the late 1960s, the coordinator of Garner Ted Armstrong's national campaigns in the early 1970s, and once the holder of numerous WCG/AC administrative positions, was recently spotted by founding AR co-publisher Margaret Zola at a travel industry convention in Las Vegas. Seems that "Broadway Joe" is no longer in the religion business, but hosts a sometimes-controversial radio talk show while also teaching communications at the University of Nevada at Las Vegas.

During the Ambassador-Pasadena school year of 1969-70, Larry A. Taylor (class of 1973) was a resident of the infamous 360 Grove Terrace dorm which included, among other characters, PT writers Keith Stump, Charlie Vinson, Jeff Calkins (currently practicing law in Orange County), and AR editor Trechak. Over the years, Taylor, a Mensa member, has researched and written on numerous philosophical and scientific topics (see AR63, p. 9). Currently a UCLA Computer Science Dept. Ph.D candidate, Taylor is also AI Sr. Software Engineer with the Space Telescope Science Institute in Baltimore, Maryland. Larry, whose e-mail address is: <ltaylor@primenet.com>, recently sent us this message:

I have been telling people that the Hubble Space Telescope has "photographic proof" of evolution. Years ago, the "nebular hypothesis" was still speculation about the origin of stars and planets. In recent years, however, the now powerful telescopes and techniques have discovered stars and planets in various stages of growth and development. Some of the photographs are quite beautiful. Check our web site, <<http://www.stsci.edu>>, especially the Orion, Helix and Eagle nebula pictures, and the accretion disk around Beta Pictoris.

The storms of space (see "twisters") and the clash of atoms picture not a fixed creation of the Bible, but the continual creation and destruction of many worlds. This does remind me of an ancient text, not Genesis, but Titus Carnus Lucretius' poem "De Rerum Natura (On the Nature of Things)."

On March 2, the popular CBS television news program Sixty Minutes ran a segment dealing with Internet misinformation. Some Ambassador alumni who watched the program were surprised to see one time Plain Truth writer and Ambassador theology lecturer J. Orlin Grabbe (Pasadena class of 1970) being ambushed by CBS reporter Leslie Stahl at the "Area 51" bar in Reno, Nevada. With shoulder length hair, a custom-tailored 'eather jacket, and an in-your-face attitude, Orlin provided CBS with the colorful image and sound bites they wanted while he got some free publicity. Inadequately covered in the interview, however, was the fact that Grabbe, who left the WCG in the early 1970s and went on to get a Ph.D. at Harvard and then teach at the prestigious Wharton School of Business, is the author of International Financial Markets (Prentice Hall), now in its third edition and considered by many international financiers to be the leading college textbook in the field. Today Grabbe lives in Reno where his exact occupation remains something of a mystery. Nevertheless, his writings on international finance, post-modern culture, the illegal drug trade, money laundering, and government conspiracies are so popular in cyberspace that Don Cox of the Reno Gazette-Journal has called Grabbe "a star of Internet gossip." As for his favorite Reno hangout, Grabbe writes:

Gawking X-File wannabes are similarly excised from "Area 51," the bar. Only bona fide galactic travelers, otherworldly spooks, ex-CIA agents, coal-mining Deros, UNR ravers, slumming Blue Lampers, and neighborhood alcoholics are allowed.

We suspect that a few ex-Worldwidlers that we've known would fit right in. Dr. Grabbe's popular web site is at: <<http://feustel.mixi.net/grabbe/kalliste.html>>. Those who want to reach him at a more terrestrial location can try writing to him at 1475 Terminal Way, Suite E, Reno, NV 89502.

Letters

Thanks so much for [AR63]. I was particularly intrigued by what you wrote in "Will the WCG Be Scuttled?" I had attached the beginning of it to a letter I put together last month to send to the ministers but decided against it. It's obvious a number of us are thinking the same thing: that Tkach and Co. are preparing their lifeboat and, actually, probably have been for several years.

You wrote that many long-time employees believe Joe Tkach Jr. so abhorred HWA that he set out with a secret plan to scuttle the Armstrong ship. I personally doubt the secret plan part as a means of destroying a financial empire that would have benefitted Joe Jr. personally. Rather, I would posit his secret plan has simply been trying desperately to develop a lifeboat to insure his existence and prominence after the WCG-Titanic, if you will, finally goes under.

I don't believe the WCG-Titanic is still steaming toward calamity. I believe it has been dead in the water since 1986. It experienced the calamitous collision with the iceberg of reality over 10 years ago when HWA died. Most of us did not realize the extent of the damage and we all gave it a good try to prove the WCG was not a personality cult.

Despite our efforts to the contrary, the ship ground to a halt and began to sink. As with the actual Titanic, most did not realize the finality of the situation until many hours later when the SOS flares were fired. The WCG administration does indeed seem to be desperately firing flares now with the launching of Plain Truth Ministries. But, still, the band plays on and there are still some who do not allow themselves to believe the truth and won't until the ship's stem plunges beneath the waves.

The WCG administration has data that is not available to members or outsiders. But, if we were able to obtain this information and graph the WCG's daily income and weekly service attendance from 1986 until now we would easily see that the trend will take the WCG out of existence within the next couple of years. The break with United last summer dropped the income by nearly half, and the hemorrhaging continues. There is a steady stream of WCG members in all directions now: to the offshoot groups, to other Christian fellowships, or simply back to their homes.

It seems to me that the old WCG was held together by three legs: (1) HWA's charismatic personality and leadership, (2) an eccentric and cultic doctrinal framework, and (3) an authoritarian and cultic governmental structure. I believe the cult was broken with HWA's death and there simply was no putting this Humpty Dumpty back together. There were simply not sufficient dynamics of control to hold it together any longer. Now, ironically, there are three major groups attempting to raise the church-Titanic, each one trying to capitalize on one of those three legs, although leaning on the other two as well. There are the HWA personality offshoots: Flurry, Meredith, etc. There is the WCG doctrinal legacy group: United. And, finally, there is the WCG line of succession or government control group: the Tkach Co. church....

A Family Film Becomes a Horror Flick!

As a church kid, I had gone to Ambassador against my own wishes. What I got was an education worth less than the paper my degree is printed on. Even my old church now rejects the "theology" degree they gave me! My wife and I quit the WCG physically in 1993, but we had already quit mentally around 1987 when Tkach Senior decided to become a magician and play with smoke and mirrors. Since then, we started our own little business and we are somehow surviving.

A few weeks ago after finishing a long, hard day of work, we remembered that our local theater was having "Family Night" when tickets are discounted and we can get free popcorn, as well. So we got the kids and went to the theater. There we just happened to run into some old friends who had left the WCG around the time we did. We sat down behind them and started watching what was, for the most part, a fun movie. It was That Thing You Do, Tom Hanks' directorial debut, about a midwest rock group that has a hit single and travels to California to make a television appearance.

So there we sat in the theater, eating popcorn, and enjoying the movie when all of a sudden it happened. In the blink of an eye we were taken back to Ambassador! Gagging on some popcorn, I shouted out, "Sonuvabitch!" My family and our friends started cracking up. For some of the interior and exterior scenes of the TV studio, Tom Hanks had decided to use Ambassador Auditorium as a set. We watched as the scenes filmed at cult headquarters played themselves out into a metaphor for the experience our family, and many others' I'm sure, had had in Worldwide.

In the movie, one of the characters walks into a back stage dressing room in the "House built for God" and throws up in a marble sink. There is smoking, cursing, and talk of fornication! I wonder what would have happened if I had done any of that in "God's House"? I wonder, too, if I had given the Tkachs a big enough check, like the movie company surely did, if I would have been allowed to have an orgy in there. (But then many of the ministers would probably have wanted to come and take over.)

In the movie, the "leader" of the band, making a giant ass of himself, has a big fight with his pretty girlfriend, a dedicated and decent girl, who he breaks up with right there in front of the rest of the band. It reminded me of the way the Tkachs took their big dump on top of all the loyal sheep that had taken so much of the Armstrong's garbage for years and had paid such a huge price for it besides. I thought it extremely appropriate that these movie scenes should be part of the legacy of the Gang of Four now at the helm of Armstrong's sinking, rat-infested prison ship.

The short scenes filmed at Ambassador were like a slap in the face that could have ruined our evening had we let it. But we quickly got over it and thoroughly enjoyed the rest of the movie. Afterward we had a good laugh with our friends. Maybe my revulsion at the Ambassador scenes helps to explain why I'll never darken the door of a church again. "Fool me once, shame on you. Fool me twice, shame on me!"

I don't want to identify myself in print yet because I still have family in WCG and its satellites. But someday when I do, I hope to apologize to all those people I helped deceive with my misdirected tithed dollars and my time as an AC faculty member. Until then, sign me:

-Still Pissed off in California

I just had such a frightening experience I must write to you. I was doing my Friday morning housework and had my TV on in the other room. About quarter to ten as I washed the dishes, I heard a familiar voice. I recognized that resonant baritone, that authoritative yet somewhat rambling style, and just knew it was Garner Ted Armstrong back on the air. As I dried dishes I just listened passively as he talked about our nation's troubles and about Lincoln and Washington, about his collection of bird paintings, about his views on crime, about how he occasionally drinks a beer and only sometimes has wine with dinner.

But then he started drifting into weird stuff. He talked about how "you live in a matriarchy, but I live in a patriarchy." Yes, I thought, that sounds like the GTA I knew. But then he really got crazy talking about how he puts women in their place and doesn't allow women to speak their mind. And that he knows how to discipline them when they do. I had enough, and walked into the TV room to shut him off. That's when I discovered it was not GTA after all. I had left the TV on channel 39, our Court TV station, and they were broadcasting the latest parole hearing of cult leader and mass murderer Charles Manson! You would not believe how much Manson sounds like GTA! I can't help but think they have the same demonic spirit. They also both don't seem to have a conscience. Would you believe that Manson now has his own Web site where you can hear his voice and read his messages from prison? The announcer said that Manson has even been recruiting new cult members into his cult right from his prison cell. It's too bad the politicians let him escape the death penalty. He is a menace to society. Come to think of it, so is GTA.

Hello Friend. I just finished scanning the [home page] summary of the AR. I am pleased to know that this information is available to the public. I too was a part of the WCG. But what I would like to know is why does this report omit the fact that African-Americans were not even accepted to the Big Sandy campus until the year (1987?) when the campuses were combined and that they just happened to appoint an African-American that year for [student body] president? What about separation of the sessions at SEP camp so that a certain class of children wouldn't mix in with the "better children" at Orr, Minnesota? It really is interesting to me that nobody even acknowledges these facts. Maybe you all need to interview some of those former AC grads that are not white who were turned down from Big Sandy and had to go to Pasadena based on some ridiculous foolishness about not enough of males-females to date each other. Maybe u might want 2 interview some of those African-American counselors at SEP that have their story to tell about the humiliation that they had to suffer while watching their younger brothers and sisters be singled out. I figure since your report is so good at telling it like it is and was, u might want to touch up on this in your summary on the Internet.

My best friend is a f@#%#&@ moron. He left the Armstrong church and now spends his life reading everything put out by the exers. He can never get enough of Heap, Smith, Cox, Flurry and the Prophecy Flasher. So a while back he says to me the Hail Boop Comet is coming, and I says, So what? Well he says it's a sign the end of this rotten world is here. Well the day finally comes when Boop arrives and he calls me up to go out and see the sign with him. It took me a long time to find it. I was expecting a real comet like on the opening of Superman on TV. You know, a big light and WOOOSH! So what do we get? It was this little pin prick with a little bit of hardly noticeable haze behind it. And speed? Hey, we're talking slower than a sidewalk slug here. So I knock on my friend's head and says, YO! Hello in there! Don't you think if God was sending us all a warning message he could do better than this?! No response. The guy's a f@#*#&@ moron.

At the risk of seeming to practice pop psychology, I noticed in "Tkach Goes Ecumenical" a certain detachment in your comments, even perhaps a bit of pooh-pooing of this trend and the WCG's efforts to learn from other religious communities. I hope I'm wrong, but I would urge anyone who dismisses the WCG's new ecumenism to reconsider. While it is true that the new Pastor General has not moved in a democratic way to implement reforms, the exposure of the church to leaders from other faiths - and vice versa - can only bring good things. When leaders - and members - see that other churches can function without the top down tyranny of past WCG leaders (and maybe the present ones, but I'm not close enough to tell), all sorts of good things might result....

This cross-fertilization of the WCG might well produce good things. When people see how other churches operate, it's harder - not impossible, but harder - for an authoritarian style to go unchallenged. That, in turn, may explain the potential "autonomy" move of the congregations you report about on the second page. Once the WCG moves into a congregational style of government, one of two things can happen. The group may weaken, as my impression is of the COG-7th Day folks who I believe are essentially congregational, and become more oriented towards an outreach of sorts while leaving local matters to local boards. Or the other alternative is they may become more vigorous, as we see with the Southern Baptists who call and fire their pastors locally, but whose "convention" is a powerful force in evangelism and other areas.

Bottom line, in my view - the WCG does well to expose its people to other Christians, if for no other reason than to give members some preview of where they can go when the WCG collapses.

Choice blessings,

I was once a WCG member in the St. Petersburg, Florida congregation and I have fond memories of the camp outs, canoe trips, pool parties, yard sales, softball tournaments, picnics, spokesmen's clubs, dances and dinners - the "good old days" of "we are family." But now I have moved on and am studying in a monastic seminary, a cloister, for ordination into the Roman Catholic priesthood. I hope to become a pastor as well as a hospital and prison chaplain.

I would welcome letters from friends new and old.

Even though I am no longer an "Armstrongite," I really think it is important for all of us to watch world news. Mr. Herbert Armstrong made many errors, but in my opinion he was right about a few things - this world is in terrible shape, evil abounds and seems to be spreading, there is much suffering, there is much injustice, and there most certainly are many false teachers and crazy preachers!

I think you are doing a great job in revealing who some of the phonies are. But you also deserve a special thanks for continuing to provide the names and addresses of some remarkable organizations. I often check them out. When I do I often confront views that I don't completely agree with, but I also frequently confront new ideas that prove to be worth my consideration. Over the years I have learned much from Dr. Martin, Dr. Tabor, Concordant Publishing, and others. Now I have gotten interested in the work of Dr. Robert Bowman who was a fighter pilot in Vietnam and then went on to become a top military rocket scientist. Now he is a Christian writer who has some pretty profound ideas, I think.

You mentioned him in AR58 and since reading some of his articles I have become convinced that many of us who were in Worldwide had many ideas that were really quite anti-Christian. Frankly, in our legalism of old, I think many of us were confusing the compassionate and empathetic Jesus of the New Testament with that law and order conservative of the same era, Pontius Pilate. Garner Ted Armstrong, with his church's helmet and crossed swords shield (it reminds me now of the black skull and crossbones symbol for poison) is still teaching that Jesus is a conservative Republican who just can't wait to apply an iron fist to all those who are not sending GTA their tithes....

Dr. Bowman's article on Christian economics in the March issue of Christianity In Action was one of the most eye opening articles I have ever read. I was particularly amazed at how many scriptures show the answers to the world's economic problems, yet are virtually never quoted by preachers today. The Armstrongites, in particular, I think, have been sold a bill of goods....

One thing that bothers me about Dr. Bowman's ministry, however, is his title of Most Reverend. It doesn't offend me personally and I understand that he is a bishop in a Catholic Church offshoot, but I think it is an instant turnoff to many Bible believers who might otherwise read his writings and at least give his ideas the consideration they deserve. What do you think about all this?

-Washington

Editor: I agree with you that for many of us who were in Worldwide, religious titles like Reverend, Bishop, or Father can prejudice us against a man and against what he is saying. I also agree with you that Dr. Bowman is a profound thinker and, I would add, a courageous Christian. The article you referred to is one that will likely make him enemies in high places. It will be interesting to see if televangelist Pat Robertson and some others will respond to the comments Bowman made about them. More importantly, however, I would like to see how they would respond to the scriptures that he quoted. For those interested, the address for Christianity In Action is 5115 AIA Hwy., Melbourne Beach, FL 32951.

With the Churches of God in the confusion that they are, I suppose it is not surprising that we are hearing some of the most bizarre rumors. There are some who see grand international conspiracies everywhere, even in the churches! One member told me that he had heard how the WCG was now being controlled by space aliens from a hidden base in Nevada! I try not to listen to such insane rumors, but one about Ambassador Report did catch my attention and has me concerned. Someone said that one of the PT's former editors has been writing a book that is a biography of John Trechak and an exposé of Ambassador Report. What bothers me is that they supposedly have a lot of dirt on you because they have had investigators sifting through your office's trash bins and also they know how to listen into conversations with electronic devices. We are worried that somehow such people might see our name on your mailing list and that bothers us because we still have many relatives in the Church and we don't want to be cut off family-wise. Is there any truth to these stories?

-Illinois

Editor: Except for the part about the space aliens, which would really explain a lot (just kidding!), I don't think so. First of all, any book about me personally and about Ambassador Report is going to turn out to be a very small book. There is just not any kind of a big secret story here. Second, if someone wants to go through my trash cans, they certainly would find some dirt, also some banana peels, coffee grinds, etc. Why would anyone do such stupid stuff.? As for your privacy concerns, let me assure you our mailing list is very secure and not available to the public. I seem to recall that about twenty years ago we did give some addresses to a local Christian publisher who wanted to mail out a catalog of religious materials, but it was a one-time-use arrangement. Since then we have thought it wise to adamantly refuse all requests for information about who is on our mailing list. In fact, we are so careful about safeguarding the identities and privacy of our readers that we do not even discard mail we receive without it first going through the shredder.

As for people who might want to spy on us through electronic means, I suppose such things are possible, but such efforts would certainly be a waste of time. The AR is just not engaged in any kind of criminal or exotic activities. We heard years ago that there were certain assistants to HWA who went about doing electronic snooping on members and former members, but they apparently ran into some serious legal difficulties and are now long fled from Worldwide circles. While I really don't think any kind of activity like that is being directed against AR or myself, I have a hunch as to how that rumor may have gotten started.

About two years ago, I noticed that each evening a van (with tinted windows, no less) would park across the street from my home and it would not leave until daybreak. Although this pattern went on for about four months, I didn't think much about it until one day a neighbor said to me that he had peeked through the van's tinted windows and had seen a large array of lit LEDs on a substantial amount of electronic equipment. He laughingly said he wondered if I was being monitored by the FBI or some other government agency! Well, that evening I went up to the van, knocked on the door, and when its lone inhabitant poked his head out, I asked if he would mind coming out so we could talk. He agreed to listen and I simply explained that as he was not known to any of us who lived on the block, some of us were wondering what he was doing there every night.

Well, here is where it got a little strange. With an expression that reminded me of something you would expect on a robot in a science fiction movie, he explained that he was a follower of Rev. Moon and that his leader had married him to a woman in the Philippines who he had to support but whom he had never met. He said that between supporting that wife in the Philippines and tithing to Rev. Moon he could not afford any living accommodations other than his van. And, he said, he just happened to like our street because of its seclusion, peace, and quiet. As he refused to let me see the inside of his van, I can't say what, if any, electronic equipment he had I assume that like a lot of van owners he may have had a stereo system or short wave radio. Whatever the case, I have not seen him or his van since, and I can only hope he has come to his senses and left the Moonies by now. I have mentioned that odd incident to a few and suspect that perhaps some have blown a rather innocent story a bit out of proportion.

No, I don't think you need to be concerned

Keep up the good work. I like the information - the good, the bad, and the ugly. It is only those who wish to hide things that want the press and freedom of information stifled.

About 12 years ago, I wrote AR a letter expressing my dismay with the Worldwide Church and voiced my apprehension over a post-Armstrong administration. I solicited your staff to draw up a few scenarios concerning its prognosis and was delighted that you reserved a good portion of your next newsletter to that request. A much belated thank you is in order here. Well, after leaving that organization, my zeal for Bible study hit a low ebb, and I lost contact with the membership and all interest in the activities of that church. I felt I had wasted a lot of time and it was about time to get a life.

Recently, I invested in a computer and while browsing the Internet, BOOM! There it was. AR's home page. Scrolling down the list of back issues and reading the topics chronicling what can only be described as the total disintegration of the Armstrong empire left me completely awestruck. I couldn't stop shaking my head as I reeled in my jaw after it hit the floor. I felt like Rip Van Winkle after twenty years of sleep.

In that letter to you years ago I made mention about the WCG membership being scattered to the four winds. But I see now that there are more splinters in the church than there are in an old picket fence. Simply amazing. A comedy of horrors. Keystone cop evangelizing and revolving door theology are some impressions that come to mind as I review this sad history. You've been watchdogging this organization for over twenty years now. How would you encapsulate this entire experience? As for myself, I consider my tour through the WCG as a rite of passage. Because in the process, and through your newsletter, I became acquainted with the Concordant Publishing Concern where my faith revived. And, with its links to similar faiths on the Internet, I will never hunger for spiritual food again. Far from being a negative avocation, I believe your exposés produce positive fruit for many who would otherwise be fleeced sheep headed for the slaughter. Once again, my heartfelt thanks for the work that you do. You know, thinking back on it now, it really hasn't been just so much "wasted time."

A Big Time for Cults, A Bad Time for Cult Fighters

Since the Heaven's Gate mass suicide in Rancho Santa Fe near San Diego in March and the subsequent flood of articles on the tragedy, many have noticed some scary parallels between the Heaven's Gate cult and traditional Armstrongism. Both groups staunchly believed (and still do) that we are in "the end time" and rapidly approaching the dawning of a new world. While cult leader Applewhite and his followers waited for a space ship, Armstrongites waited (and some still wait) to be taken to Petra or some other place of safety. Both groups had their special inspired leader who had special insights given by God. Applewhite's bunch waited for "the change" while Armstrongites wait for the first resurrection. The Heaven's Gaters had "the two" while many Worldwidiers have thought "The Two Witnesses" must be in their midst. Both groups used scripture in unorthodox ways. Both regimented the lives of members. Both encouraged alienation from family and friends. Both emphasized their own insider's view of world events. Both ridiculed outsiders, no matter how well-educated, as being "of this world." Both made very skilled use of the electronic media and even the Internet. Both encouraged members' docility and pacifism. And, of course, both encouraged outrageous levels of self-sacrifice.

The news media revelations that have come out about the Heaven's Gate cult only reinforce something the Report has pointed out for over twenty years. Cults, as we have been careful to define the term (groups that encourage isolation, non-thinking, absolute obedience, and giving everything - see AR1, p. 36), are not simply "new religious groups"! They are a distinctive type of pathological social organization that tends to destroy the lives of those who become enmeshed in them. Unfortunately, as we have seen in recent months with the Aum Supreme Truth cult in Japan, the Order of the Solar Temple in Switzerland and Quebec, and now the Heaven's Gate people, bizarre and dangerous cults are popping up ever more frequently. And, with so many millions apprehensive over the approach of the year 2000 with its number two followed by three zeros (OH NO!) we can expect more religious lunacy and cult pushers than ever before. We will also be seeing some of the more zany WCG spinoffs making headlines before too long (more on that next time).

For about as long as our own publication has been around, one organization that has helped tens of thousands of families involved with cults has been the Cult Awareness Network (CAN). There has probably never been a group more dedicated to studying and exposing the methods of unethical cult leaders. And over the years we always considered the very dedicated people who worked for and with CAN as among our best friends.

Unfortunately, CAN - or, at least, the real CAN, the one dedicated to battling the cults - is no more. As we reported in AR62, CAN became the principal target of a massive campaign by Scientologists bent on silencing critics of their cult founded by science fiction writer L. Ron Hubbard. The Scientologists' campaign began with directed rumor attacks and anti-CAN publicity salvos. Then around 1991, CAN and its local affiliates and individual staffers were hit with a barrage of lawsuits filed by several dozen Scientology members and others. In one week alone during 1992, Scientologists filed 12 different suits against CAN. Most were civil rights claims which alleged that CAN was denying membership to Scientologists (who CAN saw as wanting membership only to disrupt CAN operations). Most of the suits were dismissed, but in time the lawsuits wiped out most of CAN's annual budget and brought the group financially to its knees.

CAN was forced into bankruptcy and has now closed its operations entirely. But, in an additional development that should make all Americans seriously question whether our judicial system has not lost its rational moorings, bankruptcy proceedings resulted in CAN losing its name, logo, post office box, and telephone number to the highest bidder, a lawyer named Steven L. Hayes, who, it turns out, is a Scientology member! Since then, CAN's old personnel have been fired and replaced with Scientologists who, under the old CAN logo, put out booklets that promote Scientology while attacking the anticult movement and leading cult fighters such as Dr. Robert Lifton, Dr. Margaret Singer, and Dr. Louis J. West. This is no different than if the cigarette industry could win a lawsuit against the American Cancer Society and then, with the help of the courts no less, take over the mail address and phone number of the cancer fighting organization in order to promote cigarette smoking under the American Cancer Society's very own logo!

"It kind of boggles the mind," said David Bardin, an attorney who has represented CAN in Washington. "People will still pick up the CAN name in a library book and call saying, 'My daughter has joined the Church of Scientology.' And your friendly CAN receptionist is someone who works for Scientology!" (The Washington Post, 12/1/96.) In helping to bring about this outlandish fraud on the public, the courts are seemingly blind to the great harm they have thereby wrought on both the public and the reputation of our nation's judicial system.

The actual lawsuit that proved to be the straw that broke CAN's back had been brought by an 18-year-old Life Tabernacle member named Jason Scott. He sued after having gone through an involuntary deprogramming session with famous exit counsellor Rick Ross, a long-time friend of the Report. CAN became a joint defendant only because a CAN volunteer had unilaterally recommended Ross to Scott's distraught mother. Ironically, a few months after getting his judgment from the court thereby driving CAN into bankruptcy, Scott became disillusioned with his Scientology lawyers and replaced them with a lawyer who had previously battled Scientology. Scott has since reconciled with his mother and settled out of court with Rick Ross. But as for CAN, the damage was already done and it was permanent.

The whole episode points out not only how vicious some cults can be toward their perceived enemies, but it also points out how precarious the cult fighting business has become. Even as this is being written, for example, our Christian friends at Watchman Fellowship are facing a number of lawsuits that have been brought at the behest of Scientologists and others. Fighting cults in the press has increasingly become a tough thing to do.

With the rapid financial decline of the WCG, somehow a rumor has gotten started that we have decided to discontinue publishing the Report, as though all we have ever cynically cared about is seeing a corporation go under. As a result of that widespread rumor we have lost some of our contributors. Nevertheless, the rumor is just not true. The increase in cultic activities around the globe, the massive increase in religious anxiety caused by the approach of the next millennium, the continuing transformation of the WCG, the related question of what will become of its assets, and the ongoing life of Armstrongism through new religious organizations all tell us that there are still many questions to be investigated and many amazing stories to be told.

My thanks to all of our long-time readers who support our efforts and know from experience that we are not quitters. With your ongoing support, we will continue on. And, we will do so in the spirit of that old journalistic tradition that powerfully commands us to "give comfort to the afflicted and affliction to the comfortable."

AMBASSADOR REPORT

September 1997 (AR66)

Tkach Creates New Center To Remember Ambassador

After a life of 50 years, on May 19 Ambassador University had its final commencement. The proceedings, viewed by many alumni as akin to a funeral, were held at Big Sandy, Texas, at the last remaining campus of what was once a thriving three campus system. Giving the commencement address was Joseph Tkach Jr., viewed by many alumni as the key instigator of the events that led to Ambassador's demise. The Worldwide News (WN), the official newspaper of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG), reported in its June issue, "If the university is not sold as a going institution, it will be closed Aug. 31 and the physical plant sold." Up for grabs will be not only the university's 350-acre campus, but the surrounding 1,900 acres which are also owned by the WCG. The Dallas, Texas real estate firm of Grubb & Ellis will be handling the sale. They are the same folks who are trying to sell off the WCG's 70 acres of Pasadena, California real estate.

To replace Ambassador University, Tkach Junior has now established something called the Ambassador Center at Azusa Pacific University (APU), a self-described nondenominational Christian university located about seventeen miles east of Pasadena, California. The new center will be headed by Dr. Russell K. Duke, Ambassador's last president. From the official WCG version of the story, APU will pick up some of the students left stranded by Ambassador's closing, will house Ambassador's old records, and will "provide the sense of cultural heritage necessary to provide vitality for the WCG." Duke says he will be teaching an APU class on the doctrines of the WCG.

The WCG announcement about the creation of the Ambassador Center brought heated comments from many Ambassador alumni. Typical were those of one angry alumnus who told us:

Tkach has finally revealed himself to be the duplicitous bastard that he really is. The church sent Michael Fezell and him to Azusa Pacific to take classes. No one figured they'd get brainwashed there and that they would be used by the evangelicals to undermine everything that Mr. Herbert Armstrong ever taught. All this happened with the assistance of those they met through APU. And it all happened while Tkach lied to us that it was not happening just as some, like you guys at AR, were telling us it was happening.

Now this lying SOB has the nerve to tell us he is starting the Center as a way to preserve Ambassador's heritage. Hell, if he wanted to do that he should not have participated in the destruction of Ambassador in the first place. Just who do Russell Duke and Tkach think they are fooling? That APU class Duke is going to teach will be nothing more than an attack on everything Mr. Armstrong believed and taught. But what galls me even more is that they are going to be using Worldwide tithe money to give themselves hefty salaries while they attack everything those tithes and offerings were intended to support.

Frankly, there is no way that I would ever get interested in the kind of Christianity that they push at APU. Here is an institution that has undermined the dedicated work of thousands who believed that Mr. Armstrong was doing the very Work of God. APU has helped Tkach destroy a dream. Those evangelicals over there have promoted a fraud in the name of religion. And now they are going to promote this Center - and I'd bet they are getting paid well to do it - that will hurt thousands more. It is all a great tragedy, a great, great tragedy.

Fezell Fading Away?

When church founder Herbert W. Armstrong was at its helm, the Worldwide Church of God could always count on an almost regular stream of ministerial defections or changes of personnel made at the whim of its top leader. While much has changed under the leadership of the late Joseph Tkach Senior and now Joseph Tkach Junior, the musical chairs habit has not been broken and remains a central part of WCG culture. In the WCG's long slide away from the teachings of Herbert W. Armstrong, no individual has had more influence upon the Tkachs than J. Michael Fezell. Having grown up in the Tkach household and having been a lifelong friend and confidant of Joseph Tkach Jr., many assumed that he would continue to be a major power in the new WCG. But now, insiders tell us, Fezell's influence is waning.

In the April WN, Fezell announced that "the time has come to eliminate the office of director of Church Administration, a post I have held since September 1995." The responsibilities of that office were taken up by pastors Dan Rogers and Randy Dick. Fezell supposedly remained on as assistant to the president. At that juncture not much more was said officially. Now, however, we have learned that Fezell's power within the WCG hierarchy is almost zero. Evangelist Greg Albrecht has become the WCG's number two man and often its most visible spokesman. The Fezell family has been moved out of the Orange Grove home they occupied next door to the Pastor General's. Fezell's wife Vicki has not been seen at WCG services for some time. And "the Fez," himself, has told friends that he would prefer to be pastoring a church in another denomination, perhaps the famous Lake Avenue Congregational Church in Pasadena where he often attends.

A Visit With Pastor General Tkach

When WCG Pastor General Joseph Tkach Jr. appears in public or in photographs in the church's publications, there is usually a smile on his face. Insiders tell us, however, that the last few years of church infighting and defections have taken a heavy toll on him. A few months ago, one of Tkach's old friends, a former member who has stayed on good terms with certain headquarters personnel, was invited to Pasadena by accountant Jack Kessler, a friend and counselor of Tkach. The old friend said, "Jack Kessler invited me out for some discussion with him and Joe. It was a fairly nonspecific invitation and I didn't know until I got there what it was about.... I had no expectations, I didn't know why I was there." Whatever the real reason for the invitation, the old friend came and saw, and afterward wrote a set of letters to other ex-Worldwidiers about his trip to Pasadena.

Whether or not it was his intent that those letters be made public, by posting them on the Internet they have received a fairly wide distribution. What he had to say is quite revealing about Pastor General Tkach and about the state of affairs at WCG headquarters. Here are some of the comments that we found the most revealing:

Jack [Kessler] is an interesting guy and very, very funny. He's very much a gentleman and a fine host. He made me feel welcome in a very awkward and odd situation. Jack spent a lot bringing me to Los Angeles, and he paid for it with his own money. The WCG didn't buy the trip. When I got to the Los Angeles airport, I walked off the plane and saw this balding gentleman in a sports coat. I wasn't sure it was Jack and he was holding this manila envelope. A couple approached him and he slid a sign out and they just shook their heads in confusion when he gave them a peek at it. I walked up to him, wondering if it was Jack, and he pulled this sign out, it read: U SHAKKA ZULU? That was my Internet moniker during the April 1st joke. I nearly split a gut laughing. For those of you curious to what Jack looks like, he's kind of a cross between "Frasier" and "Winchester" on M.A.S.H.

Jack took me to Redondo Beach. I hadn't been there since 1988 when I worked for Continental Airlines. He bought me dinner at a very nice little restaurant. I had my first taste of crab cakes and they weren't too bad. Funny how I still feel guilty eating things like that. Cult habits die hard I guess. Afterwards we drove to Century City and he took me on a tour of the law office he runs. They have extensive computing facilities, almost better than what we have where I work. Definitely first class installation. From his offices you have a wonderful view of Los Angeles, the Pacific Ocean, and Beverly Hills. We spent an hour or so there, then drove to Pasadena. Joe wasn't home yet (he was speaking at a fund raiser for a troubled kids ministry), so we walked the campus several times. He showed me where Rader lived, and Feazell, and Duke, etc. We ended up at Barney's Pub, ordered a pitcher of Sierra Nevada Pale Ale, and some chicken wings and killed some time. Then we walked back to Joe's and he was home.... Joe lives in Ellis LaRavia's old house on Orange Grove. It's a barn-shaped building, nice, comfortable, but not ostentatious. It looks like, and is, a family home. Joe broke out three bottles of his home brew Scottish Ale, and it was delightful-tasting beer, with a slightly fruity taste of Lambic beer, although it was not Lambic. Then he showed me this collection of hot sauces from around the world. These sauces come with really wild names: "Sudden Death," "After Death," "Inner Beauty," "Slap Me on the Ass and Call Me Sally," and hundreds more. I recognized none of these brands except for a few Jamaican varieties. Having been raised on Mexican food in Arizona, I didn't want my manhood challenged on account of a chile pepper. I decided to give these things a go. Jack and Joe showed me how to eat this stuff and man oh man, I nearly cried this stuff was so hot. This stuff could blast a hole in the worst head cold. It probably could etch steel or refine uranium too.

Saturday morning I got up before everyone else, went for a walk to "the Ranch" (now Hughes Market) as I forgot to bring some shaving cream and shampoo. And as I had blisters from my new shoes and from all the walking that Jack and I had done, I got some antibiotic cream to keep my feet from getting blood poisoning. I was walking back to his house when Joe caught me and asked me if I'd eat breakfast with him. We ate at a Jewish delicatessen in Pasadena. Joe is on a high fiber diet. He's lost about 25 pounds on this diet so he eats only oatmeal for breakfast. I had eggs and potato pancakes.

As it did throughout the weekend, the conversation turned several times to why I wasn't attending. When I started to explain why, Joe would tell me what a great job other denominations thought the WCG was doing. This was exasperating so I just dropped the subject. I told him, "You aren't ready to hear it yet." Joe told me several times, "We need people like you who are fighters." I told Joe, "But I don't need the WCG anymore nor want the pain anymore of watching what this church does." He insisted that if I knew the true story (and I can't think of anyone who has a bigger picture of the last five years than I have) that I would want to return.

I went to the WCG services where I got all kinds of strange looks. From those that know me and my current non-WCG member status, to those like Bernie Schnippert and Ralph Helge who couldn't figure out who this guy with Kessler and Tkach was....

One thing that became quite evident while staying with Joe is the pressure he has been under from the UCG, PCG, and GCG people. Joe said a week doesn't go by where he doesn't get a call, letter, or someone walking up to him telling him that they wish he was dead, or praying that he soon would be. He has also received a good number of direct death threats. He said his house has had six attempted break-ins. Fortunately he has quite a good alarm system.

Joe seems to be in a siege mindset and seems to find great comfort and support from denominational leaders Hank Hanegraaff and others. I think this makes it highly unlikely we will ever see any decentralization in the WCG, as Joe will of course not want to see any assets go to any splits, now or future. Plus those that are new covenant minded have put similar pressures on Joe. That doesn't make him too inclined to listen to them either, although I think the latter are less concerned with assets than with some local freedom.

The IRS has audited him every year of the past five years....

One of the amusing stories he related was the influx of charismatics on campus. He said one week he had a charismatic woman come up to him telling him how she could see the "glow of God around him." The next week he had a charismatic man telling him he was in the "grip of Satan." Even the charismatics can't agree. He also related a story of these people (from Four Square, I think) who go on those prayer walks around the campus and anoint the sidewalks with olive oil. It got so bad they were leaving huge oil stains on all the sidewalks. Joe said, "We finally told them we don't mind you praying, just don't vandalize the property in the process." I suggested he pass out cans of PAM Aerosol Olive Oil spray.

Joe told me he expects to sell the property soon [this was back in the spring - ed.]. He said he expects to lease a property somewhere in California for three years, before deciding to purchase a final property somewhere. He also said that one of the reasons for a hierarchy [church government] versus going to a congregational approach is the way U.S. law treats the two church structures. If a congregational church splits up, the assets are divided among the splits, as it is deemed to be democratic on a local scale. In a hierarchical structure the assets stay with the hierarchy.

One of the more surprisingly controversial moments during my stay at Joe's was [our] conversations with Joe about women preachers. Both Jack [Kessler] and I think there is absolutely nothing wrong with women preachers. God is not a respecter of persons based on race or gender. This got an interesting response from Joe who went into an exhaustive discourse about the "orthodoxy and orthopraxy of the historic Christian faith." I had to ask him what "orthopraxy" meant. Basically, while orthodoxy has to do with a standard of doctrine, orthopraxy has to do with a standard of practice. Walking the acceptable path in the NAE [National Association of Evangelicals] seems to be the guiding rule here. The long and short of it was that since most Christian churches don't ordain women, the WCG won't either. He said it wasn't an "unpardonable sin," but I didn't think to ask him if he thought it was a pardonable sin to ordain women. Sometimes I am not as quick as I am in e-mail.

Joe prays with women preachers in Pasadena on occasions so I am not really clear what he really thinks on the subject. It is clear that women won't be ordained to any speaking role in the WCG.

The whole trip was very odd for me, because I like both Joe and Tammy. They are real people, live normal lives, have kids and a cluttered house just like you and me. To be honest, I think he's the most "REAL" Pastor General the WCG has ever had. There are no pretensions from either Joe or Tammy. But he isn't like you and me. He runs a church that has a sordid history, even if most of that happened prior to his tenure.

Worldwider Charged With Murder

According to Australian police, on June 18, Worldwide Church of God member Gay Elizabeth Lock, 53, was found murdered in her Mudgeeraba, Australia home. Apparently attacked while she slept, Mrs. Lock died from a single blow to the head. Mrs. Lock's husband, Russ Lock, an Ambassador College-Bricket Wood alumnus and computer programmer at the WCG's Australian office in Burleigh Heads, was the one who phoned the police to report the murder. A few days later, however, after burning the blood-soaked mattress on which the victim had last slept, Lock turned himself into the police and confessed to having committed the crime with a hammer. Lock, who remains in custody and has been denied bail, has indicated he intends to plead guilty, but "with diminished capacity." No one we have talked to has been able to point to any factors which may have led to the family tragedy. The couple had one daughter, Sharyn. And according to the WCG, letters and sympathy cards may be mailed to her via the church's Australian office (P.O. Box 2600, Burleigh MDC, Queensland 4220, Australia). No date has yet been set for Russ Lock's trial.

Teddy Bare on TV

Garner Ted Armstrong recently made it onto one of America's top television talk shows, but not in the way he probably would have preferred. On Geraldo Rivera's July 11 telecast, the well-known television journalist devoted a whole program to the subject of how videotape is playing an expanding role in our legal system and in our private lives. The program titled "Sex, Crime, and Videotape," which was aired nationwide on a Friday afternoon, shocked many viewers because of its startling frankness. Here is how one of our readers described the segment about GTA:

I had just gotten home from a trip to my bank. I got some ice tea out of the fridge and just turned on the TV to relax. All of a sudden I saw Mr. Garner Ted Armstrong naked. Totally NAKED! It was him all right. Oh, they put this video dot over most of his private parts so as not to offend anyone supposedly. But I think that only made it worse. After all, when the masseuse put her hands up in the dot area, I'm sure everyone could imagine what she was up to. It was disgusting. Even more so when he later groaned off camera. That was really disgusting.

What surprised me the most, however, was how casual Mr. Armstrong acted. I get embarrassed if I go to the doctor's office and I am asked to take some clothes off. But it seemed to me like Mr. Armstrong does this kind of thing all the time. What is wrong with that man? And, I wondered, why hasn't he gotten rid of all those dirty tatoos of naked women all over his body? I saw a program recently about how you can have tatoos removed. Surely he must know about that. Or does he like having pictures of naked women all over his body? I really feel sorry for his wife having to look at such things on her husband's skin.

And one more thing. I am not too happy with Mr. Rivera either. He could have just interviewed the masseuse and her lawyer without showing us the actual massage parlor encounter. Why did he have to also show us the dirty video tape?

Well, first of all, Geraldo Rivera is not just a newsman; he is also in the entertainment business. Tapes of lurid subject matter get more people to watch, sell more advertising, and make more money for his program. Let's not forget that Geraldo was the fellow who published a book a while back that revealed the names, along with many private details, of a large number of famous women he had supposedly slept with over the years. (Talk about someone violating others' privacy in order to make money!) So, obviously, Geraldo is quite willing to go beyond the limits of good taste. Nevertheless, Garner Ted is a public figure and one who is clearly not living the life he is telling others to live. So maybe the broadcast will have done some good by discouraging others from supporting his ministry or, at least, from going into massage parlors.

Most of the information covered on the Geraldo program has already been reported on in ARs 60-62. (For example, it was explained how GTA had allegedly attempted to sexually attack the masseuse on an earlier visit to her establishment, and then when he called for another appointment she had a video camera set up in order to document his behavior for legal reasons.) However, the Geraldo program concluded with some new information from Suerae Robertson, the masseuse who is suing GTA, and her attorney, John Osborne. As they flashed on the screen, "Suerae Robertson-Videotaped her sexual harassment by an evangelist," here is what was said:

GERALDO: Suerae, do you feel safe now? Do you feel challenged by this organization, this International Church of God?

SUERAE: Well, after several death threats to myself, to my attorney, to his family, indications that they knew where my grandchildren were at, and the research that was done on this man when we found out that I'm just one of many that he has done this to...

GERALDO: Allegedly.

SUERAE: Allegedly done this to.

GERALDO: John Osborne, what is the status of this case?

OSBORNE: Right now the case is languishing in the Court of Appeals. The Church of God is trying to get out of the suit. A judge initially ruled in their favor. She later recused herself from sitting in the case, having to do with her husband's relationship, I think, with Garner Ted. But, at any rate, the Court of Appeals is going to rule whether or not the church should be a party to this lawsuit. Once they do, we proceed from there.

GERALDO: The video tape should make the case pretty open and shut - unless they interpret it as Suerae, in some way, inviting that kind of conduct.

OSBORNE: Well, she had a choice. She could either try to persuade a jury pool in a small Texas town where this man is a big fish - her word against his - or she could seek some sort of proof that this man is capable of acting in this fashion. And I think she made the right decision.

As those words were being spoken, a section of the GTA sex tape was played showing the naked evangelist reaching out to put his hands on the hips of the masseuse who was backing away from his advances. It was not a pretty sight.

As we go to press, the Court of Appeals has still not ruled as to whether or not the Church of God International will be joining GTA as a defendant in the lawsuit. The plaintiff claims it should because GTA's promiscuous lifestyle was well known to the church's board members, and they still allowed him to function in a position where his sexually predatory instincts could do harm to others.

In regard to the latter, it is significant what recently transpired in another Texas case involving sex and clergymen of another denomination. On July 25, a Dallas, Texas jury awarded nearly $120 million in damages after finding the Roman Catholic Diocese of Dallas had ignored evidence that a priest was sexually abusing boys and that it then tried to cover up the scandal. The award is probably the largest judgment for sexual abuse that has ever been made against a church organization. Unless the judgment is overturned on appeal, the damages are to be paid by the Diocese of Dallas and the Rev. Rudolph Kos who was found to have committed the sexually abusive acts. The plaintiffs were 10 men and the family of another who committed suicide. The abuses were committed between 1977 and 1992 while Kos was a seminarian and later a priest. As in the GTA case, the plaintiffs charged that the priest's proclivities for improper sexual contacts were known to the church's hierarchy, but that he was still allowed to function as a cleric in situations where his urges would lead him to sexually abuse altar boys and other church members. Kos now lives in San Diego after being suspended from the church's priesthood. He still faces criminal charges that have been brought by two of the plaintiffs.

Apparently, in spite of all the sexual misconduct we see about us in society today, jurors down in Texas do not think it appropriate for clergymen to engage in sexual debauchery or for church organizations to turn a blind eye to such conduct. If that is the case, Garner Ted and his International Church may not fare too well if their case ever goes before a Texas jury.

Divided United Focuses on Three Issues

The United Church of God (UCG), holding even at about 20,000 members, remains the largest of the WCG's Armstrongite offshoots. The new organization is churning out new doctrinal booklets, runs ads in Reader's Digest, and is spending money taping what is supposedly going to be a "prime-time TV special" that will star church president David Hulme. That many WCG personages of old still remain on the UCG payroll is evident by some of the by-lines that appear in the church's magazine New Beginnings: Mark Kaplan, the famous Jewish scholar; Peter Shenton, whose father had once been a leader in the Flat Earth Society; David Register, the sports car and good life enthusiast; and Robin Webber, formerly Joseph Tkach Senior's "right hand man for secret assignments." Nevertheless, the UCG continues to lose important personnel. One such loss came in late spring with the resignation of pastor Ron Weinland. In a May 26, 1997 resignation letter, Weinland startled many when he wrote:

Many of God's faithful are crying out for leadership. Where is it? It has been caught up in committees that seem to go nowhere. It is caught up in debate by differing mindsets that will not come to agreement. It is caught up in a divided council, so that meaningful and decisive actions expected from leadership are in a quagmire. It is caught up in people who resist and work against the very Constitution and Bylaws [of the church] so that they can get their own way. Can God be pleased with such confusion? Does the membership respect a ministry who fail to give strong leadership through a willingness to stand for principle, integrity, open honesty, and ethical values?

On 12/27/96 I wrote a letter to all the Conference of Elders [COE]. It stirred up quite a controversy. In that letter I only hoped to draw attention to some very serious problems that were being smoothed over, justified, minimized, or simply ignored. The most serious issue was that of the disappearance of reserves through mismanagement, careless stewardship, and/or presumptuous assumption of authority above that allowed by the Constitution and Bylaws.

In preparation for that letter, I was horrified by accounting figures that projected we would only have around $1 million in reserves, when there was supposed to be over $5 million by 3/31/97. We didn't even have the monies in reserve for the annual General Conference, as we were supposed to have. My projections were actually off, because we didn't even have $1 million in reserves by that time. Instead, by all practical measures, if we had paid all our bills to that date, instead of holding back ministerial expense checks and church allocation checks, we would have been in the red.

To many, this kind of stewardship and accounting was unconscionable. But where was the outcry? Where was the decisive leadership that should have taken swift action with those who put the church in such a precarious position? Did anyone go to outside legal sources to see how serious these actions were? To my understanding, no one did. Instead, the whole process was whitewashed, justified, and excused. I've wondered what God would have to say about such handling and eventual disappearance of one third of a year's income from the tithes of His people....

In my cc:mail message to the COE on 5/15/97, I gave reasons why I believed the Treasurer [Steven Andrews] and President [David Hulme] should resign or be asked by the COE to step down. The HO [home office in California] leadership has continued to resist the process of governance to which we had all agreed to submit ourselves. The "Code of Ethics" of the ministry makes it clear that we are to uphold the Constitution and Bylaws. That would include the COE taking action against any who do not uphold that process, nor live up to our "Code of Ethics."

I also drew the attention of the COE to the March 28 letter of Bob Dick and David Hulme that was essentially a slap in the face to both the COE and OCE. In addition, I mentioned Edwin Stepp's divisive sermon (4/26/97) message sent out by the HO. Thirdly, attention was drawn to the legal department's audacity to present a laborious document to the COE concerning the overturning of the balloting process in Louisville.

As the result of a continuing barrage of such conduct and presumption by some, I said I could no longer conscientiously support the leadership of the HO. Furthermore, if the COE did not have the will to decisively address these matters, then I would no longer be able to support the COE. To me, failure to act on these matters spelled "approval."

The actions of the council to uphold the balloting and quickly move on to other business were simply typical of the way things work within UCG. Too many people seemed to accept this action as decisive and swift. It had that appearance, but it did not deal with the cause. I highly respect the courage of one elder who sent a letter to the council addressing that very thing.... that "the COE needs to not just treat the symptom, but to also get to the root cause..."

What is so sad in all of these events of the past two years is that far too many brethren and too many ministers don't even know about many of these ongoing problems. Too many ministers paint a picture of only positive events and smooth over anything that might be negative. We tend to say "peace, peace," when we really don't have peace. Like a dysfunctional family that tries to protect its image, we cover, smooth over, whitewash, and justify the negative and unethical actions of our family. Read Ezek. 13:8-17 on your knees and honestly ask God if that applies to us....

I am resigning because I can no longer conscientiously support the current practices of this organization. The organization is slowly slipping back into that from which we were jolted loose. It took major doctrinal changes and corrupt government to awaken the church two years ago. We came together at Indianapolis to chart a new course. We only began to address the "effects" of what happened to us in WCG. But what we have yet to address is the "cause." The cause is spiritual and we must learn to righteously judge and discern the difference and act upon those conclusions.

As a result of the inner political turmoil described by Weinland, the UCG is now led by a two-headed executive branch named Dick-Hulme. This two-headed executive, actually Robert Dick (Chairman) and David Hulme (President), now sign letters jointly. That gives some indication of the level of distrust most of the UCG ministry has for its leadership. The UCG's membership, however, is seemingly oblivious to the political infighting that is monopolizing their leadership's attention. Many UCG members are viewing the new two headed executive as a sign that God has shown them the "Two Witnesses" of Revelation. We tried to reach President Hulme for a comment, but he had just taken off for Europe for "cultural events" that included attendance at London's new Shakespeare Center to which he had once helped funnel WCG money. We have since learned that on June 12, Hulme was also "presented to" Queen Elizabeth, undoubtedly as a reward for bringing the bacon, so to speak, back to Britain.

In the meantime, one of our ministerial sources told us: "If you think that those guys are concerned about prophecy or any other biblical teaching you are badly mistaken. In United the ministry is focused on only three things: their salary, their benefits, and their retirement plan."

The Splintered Churches of God

While the UCG holds onto the largest number of ex-WCG Armstrongites, other WCG offshoots continue to fight for the limited number of Armstrongites still available.

Rod Meredith's San Diego-based Global Church of God (GCG) claims it is growing. But sources in that organization tell us that in reality GCO income is up only about six percent over last year, while its television outreach, ad campaigns, and administrative expenses continue to grow. Ex-GCG members have said that the GCG remains mired in rumors that it has been engulfed in a conspiracy led by Jesuit infiltrators bringing in heresies. While not one piece of evidence has ever surfaced to substantiate such a bizarre conspiracy theory, Meredith of late has seemed virtually powerless to stop the spread of the idiotic story which some say has cost him hundreds of members. Another source of problems for Meredith has been the ministry of Myron Martin (Patriots of the Kingdom, P.O. Box 20004 CDO, Concord, Ont. L4K 4T1, Canada). Martin recently put out an open letter to Meredith in which he all but brands Meredith as a false prophet. Some Global executives say privately that the answer to Global's problems would be to put evangelist Dick Ames, formerly the most polished and natural spokesman on the WCG's old World Tomorrow program, on the air as a replacement for Meredith on Global's World Ahead program. But, they say, they are concerned that Meredith's fragile ego could not take the shock of seeing his brother-in-law succeed in such a high profile role.

As always, the writings of Bill Dankenbring are making waves. In the May-June issue of Prophecy Flash! Dankenbring prefaced one of his articles with "New BOMB SHELL Explodes over Passover Controversy!" The article, "A New Look at Jesus' Last Week and the Sufferings of Messiah!" made a number of biblical observations that have thrown some of Dankenbring's critics into a tizzy. But Dankenbring warned them in the article, "Let the reader beware: If you read this material with an open, unprejudiced mind, this article could completely change your life!" And inside the front cover of the Flash! he also prophesied:

This NEW TRUTH will sweep like a TIDAL WAVE over the garbled misunderstandings and errors of the past! It will STAGGER the assumptions and preconceived opinions of men like a SEISMIC JOLT! It will strike the cozy beliefs and false teachings of churches like a MIGHTY EARTHQUAKE - sending "shock waves" around the globe!

Actually, Dankenbring's piece was based to a large extent on the research of Glen W. Myers who wrote and recently updated a paper that points out major flaws in the popular Armstrongite teaching that Jesus was arrested on a Tuesday evening before being crucified on a Wednesday. For a copy of the updated paper write to Myers at: 1047 Iroquois Street, Clearwater, FL 33755.

Meanwhile, Dankenbring's colorful style is being mimicked in another publication. Garner Ted Armstrong has started his own Prophetic Newsflash! newsletter. And some in Texas say his writing is improving as he continues to study Dankenbring's original Prophecy Flash! for more ideas.

While GTA is trying to bring his new prophecy newsletter up to speed, many of the ministers and congregations that have left his fold in the last two years have been hard at work putting together a new church organization. Formerly called just The Churches of God, approximately 28 elders of the fellowship met in Tulsa, Oklahoma at the end of May and came up with a new organizational structure and a new name: Church of God Outreach Ministries (COGOM). Its main mailing address will now be P.O. Box 5462, Tulsa, OK 74155. One prominent ex-CGI minister who did not attend the conference was Tom Justus of the Church of God Sabbath Day (P.O. Box 1645, Springdale, AK 72765). He has indicated he has reservations about COGOM's new organizational structure. Another problem the new group faces is a budding, but very real, debate over the so-called sacred names issue, a doctrine that HWA in decades past had rejected as being excessively divisive.

WCG No Longer Welcome in Russia

While the WCG as a whole has been on the wane for the last few years, one WCG foreign project has persisted - Worldwide's missionary outreach to Russia. Now, however, a public backlash against Western culture and Western religions entering Russia may put an end to that program.

In an insightful article in the July 14, 1997 issue of Alberta Report, Chris Champion wrote:

Mark and Glenda Berg, schoolteachers from Winnipeg, gave up their lives for a year in 1994 to take the Gospel to a faith-famished land. They worked on the edge of Siberia, in the Russian city of Chelyabinsk east of the Urals, dispatched as missionaries from the Worldwide Church of God to the former Soviet Union. "We taught Bible to public school teachers," reports Mrs. Berg. "But while we were there, the laws regarding what we could and couldn't do changed quite frequently," she says. "And the farther east you go, the more regional politicians there are who want to have control." By the time the Bergs left Chelyabinsk, even the local Russian Orthodox priests, who had initially been friendly, were bristling at their evangelical methods. "There was some pressure by then" to get out, she recalls.

Since the Bergs left Russia, government pressure on missionaries from the WCG and other Christian denominations has increased dramatically. And what is happening in regard to religion in Russia hints at where that country as a whole may be heading.

First a bit of historical background. Not unlike many other nations, since the official establishment of Eastern Orthodox Catholicism in Russia in the 10th century, there developed a very close working relationship between the state and its official church. Unlike its Western European counterparts, however, in Russia the church was not always the submissive member of the church-state marriage. Prof. Serhil Plokyh, director of church studies at the Canadian Institute of Ukrainian Studies at the University of Alberta, points out that for 400 years, except for the 18th century period of state control under Peter the Great known as "Caesaro-papism," the church actually dominated the partnership.

With the Bolshevik revolution of 1917, the church's special privileges were eliminated and under the militant atheism of the Soviets, most practicing Christians were persecuted unless they registered with the government as official churches. While large numbers rejected the state's intrusion into their spiritual lives and still worshipped in "catacomb" groups, without government sponsorship and with government persecution that saw many thousands of Christians sent to labor camps, Christianity did not thrive under communism. With the collapse of the Soviet Union in 1991, interest in all things Western accelerated throughout the Russian sphere for a few years. Sensing that the time was right to proselytize in the East, many Western denominations, including the WCG, began sending missionaries into Russia.

Missionaries say that for a few years their presence seemed welcome. However, when it started to become obvious that the fall of communism was not going to bring about a new prosperity in Russia very soon, but instead was bringing ever greater privation to the Russian masses, a resentment toward much of Western culture began growing. Now, with the Russian economy not able to provide millions with even a subsistence-level existence, with the Russian military in a state of nearly complete dilapidation (its budget is now only one tenth that of the U.S. military budget), and with huge increases in the crime rate and other social problems, many Russians are becoming militantly anti-Western. And with Roman Catholics, American evangelicals, Jehovah's Witnesses, Scientologists, and Eastern cults making major inroads into Russia, the reinvigorated Russian Orthodox Church has begun to use its formidable influence to halt what it sees as sheep rustling by missionaries from the West.

Earlier this year a bill was introduced into the Russian Parliament to protect the Russian Orthodox Church from competition from the newer religions. The bill's purpose was to severely limit the property rights and proselytizing rights of any religious group that had not been registered by the old Soviet state 15 years ago. So harsh was the bill that even many older denominations saw it as effectively restoring the Russian Orthodox Church, with its 60 million believers, to its old position as the official state religion of Russia.

In pushing for the bill's passage, Russian patriarch Alexy II likened the "eastward expansion of foreign sects and missionaries in Russia" to the eastward expansion of NATO. And in a sign of growing tension with the Vatican, on June 11 the Holy Synod, the forum that brings together the Russian Church's top clergy, announced that the Russian Orthodox Church had called off a proposed meeting between Patriarch Alexy II and Pope John Paul II that was to have taken place in Vienna on June 21 ahead of a European Ecumenical Council. In a "historical note," the Synod restated its opposition to Roman Catholic missionaries encroaching on Russian territory.

In response to the anti-religious-freedom foment in Russia, Pope John Paul II, the U. S. State Department, and many churches and human rights organizations in the West publicly denounced the Russian Parliament's religion bill. The United States Senate even passed an amendment to a foreign aid bill in July to cut off all aid to Russia if Yeltsin signed the religion bill into law. But all this bullying by the West only infuriated the Russian public which viewed such tactics as foreign meddling in the internal affairs of their country.

Yeltsin, who earlier had vetoed milder versions of the bill, was clearly put into a difficult political position. Nevertheless, in the end, he vetoed the new bill. However, knowledgeable observers in Moscow have told us that the Parliament's votes were so overwhelmingly in favor of the bill (300 votes to eight), it is quite possible that the legislature will vote to override the veto in the near future. Not only that, many local Russian legislatures have already passed laws restricting the activities of newer religious groups in their regions.

Obviously, Russia is no longer going to be a very hospitable place for missionaries from the WCG or from many other Western religious organizations. Already there are reports that Armstrongites and other sabbatarians in some of the more remote former Soviet Republics have decided to flee those regions. And there have even been reports of the murders of a number of Sabbath-keeping Christians in former Soviet regions that now have large Islamic populations.

In light of all these developments, we should ask ourselves what will be the future of democracy in Russia. Many international affairs experts have pointed out that the chaotic political situation in Russia today is remarkably similar to the Weimar Republic period in Germany which ushered in Hitler and the Nazis. Today, with many Russians clamoring for a strongman to replace Yeltsin, and with Russian nationalism and especially Russian Orthodox religious fervor on the rise, we should not be too surprised if Russia, for most of the twentieth century the world's leading atheistic communist power, were to become the twenty-first century's leading fascist power.

The Godfather of the United States of Europe

One of the central tenets of Herbert W. Armstrong's teachings on prophecy was his prediction that before the soon-to-happen return of Christ there would be a United States of Europe led by a great political-military strongman who would be given the blessing of a great European religious leader.

The idea of a politically united Europe is not new. After all, Europe had already been largely united in the days of the Holy Roman Empire. And of course, despots such as Napoleon and Hitler had their own visions and plans for a united Europe. Nevertheless, it was not until after World War II that the idea of a politically united Europe really started being seriously advanced by important European leaders.

Today, such an idea is no longer thought of as merely a theoretical possibility. It is a subject heatedly discussed and reported upon in the world's leading newspapers virtually every day. In the last fifty years, the nations of Europe have achieved ever increasing levels of economic, legal, and military integration. And many of Europe's most influential and powerful leaders are openly working to bring about a fully political European Union within the next decade. In recent months, the most important developments in Europe have centered on attempts at establishing an all-Europe currency to be called the Euro. While it is by no means certain that this attempt will succeed, leading the charge has been German Prime Minister Helmut Kohl who seems to have made the creation of the Euro the hoped-for capstone of his entire political career. Should Kohl succeed, many experts say it is quite possible we will see the creation of a United States of Europe in just a few years.

Armstrongite church leaders are naturally quite excited about such a prospect and evangelists such as Roderick Meredith, Garner Ted Armstrong, and Gerald Flurry are filling the airwaves and the pages of their magazines with warnings that such a coming European Union will be the beginning of the end of Great Britain and the United States. Nevertheless, putting aside for the moment questions of whether a politically united Europe is really prophesied in the Bible or whether such a union would really mean the end of the Anglo-American economic and military hegemony, some will find it more than a little interesting to learn of the origins of the modern movement to unite all of Europe.

It will probably come as a surprise to many, but there is actually a historical figure who among European scholars is quietly referred to as "the Godfather of the United States of Europe." He was very influential in world affairs before, during, and right after the second world war. And it was this individual who, in a series of speeches in the late forties, coined the term "the United States of Europe" and sketched out in considerable detail what the nature of that future union should be like. In doing research on the history of the plan for uniting Europe, we recently came upon some rare old books containing the key United Europe speeches of that great historical figure.

We discovered that on 19 September 1946, at Zurich University in Switzerland, that statesman gave a speech in which he explained for the first time his vision of a united Europe. Here is how he began:

I wish to speak to you today about the tragedy of Europe. This noble continent, comprising on the whole the fairest and the most cultivated regions of the earth, enjoying a temperate and equable climate, is the home of all the great parent races of the Western world. It is the fountain of Christian faith and Christian ethics. It is the origin of most of the culture, arts, philosophy and science both of ancient and modern times. If Europe were once united in the sharing of its common inheritance, there would be no limit to the happiness, to the prosperity and glory which its three or four hundred million people would enjoy. Yet it is from Europe that have sprung that series of frightful nationalistic quarrels, originated by the Teutonic nations, which we have seen even in this twentieth century and in our own lifetime, wreck the peace and mar the prospects of all mankind.

And what is the plight to which Europe has been reduced? Some of the smaller States have indeed made a good recovery, but over wide areas a vast quivering mass of tormented, hungry, care-worn and bewildered human beings gape at the ruins of their cities and homes, and scan the dark horizons for the approach of some new peril, tyranny or terror. Among the victors there is a babel of jarring voices; among the vanquished the sullen silence of despair. That is all that Europeans, grouped in so many ancient States and nations, that is all that the Germanic Powers have got by tearing each other to pieces and spreading havoc far and wide. Indeed, but for the fact that the great Republic across the Atlantic Ocean has at length realized that the ruin or enslavement of Europe would involve their own fate as well, and has stretched out hands of succor and guidance, the Dark Ages would have returned in all their cruelty and squalor. They may still return.

Yet all the while there is a remedy which, if it were generally and spontaneously adopted, would as if by a miracle transform the whole scene, and would in a few years make all Europe, or the greater part of it, as free and as happy as Switzerland is today. What is this sovereign remedy? It is to re-create the European Family, or as much of it as we can, and provide it with a structure under which it can dwell in peace, in safety and in freedom. We must build a kind of United States of Europe. In this way only will hundreds of millions of toilers be able to regain the simple joys and hopes which make life worth living. The process is simple. All that is needed is the resolve of hundreds of millions of men and women to do right instead of wrong and gain as their toward blessing instead of cursing.... [Here the great orator praised the Pan-European Union, Count Coudenhove-Kalergi, Aristide Briand, and the work done by the old League of Nations.]

I was very glad to read in the newspapers two days ago that my friend President Truman had expressed his interest and sympathy with this great design. There is no reason why a regional organization of Europe should in any way conflict with the world organization of the United Nations. On the contrary, I believe that the larger synthesis will only survive if it is founded upon coherent natural groupings.... [He referred here to the Pan-American League and the British Commonwealth of Nations.] These do not weaken, on the contrary they strengthen, the world organization. They are in fact its main support. And why should there not be a European group which could give a sense of enlarged patriotism and common citizenship to the distracted peoples of this turbulent and mighty continent and why should it not take its rightful place with other great groupings in shaping the destinies of men? In order that this should be accomplished there must be an act of faith in which millions of families speaking many languages must consciously take part....

I am now going to say something that will astonish you. The first step in the re-creation of the European family must be a partnership between France and Germany. In this way only can France recover the moral leadership of Europe. There can be no revival of Europe without a spiritually great France and a spiritually great Germany. The structure of the United States of Europe, if well and truly built, will be such as to make the material strength of a single state less important. Small nations will count as much as large ones and gain their honor by their contribution to a common cause. The ancient states and principalities of Germany, freely joined together for mutual convenience in a federal system, might each take their individual place among the United States of Europe....

In all this urgent work, France and Germany must take the lead together. Great Britain, the British Commonwealth of Nations, mighty America, and I trust Soviet Russia - for then indeed all would be well - must be the friends and sponsors of the new Europe and must champion its right to live and shine.

By 1948, the great statesman's dream that there be a Congress of Europe had become a reality. And on 7 May 1948 before the distinguished gathering of the Congress of Europe, meeting at The Hague, he rose up to speak. Beginning with a reference to his 1946 speech in Zurich, he said, "events have carried our affairs beyond our expectations And then:

We need not waste our time in disputes about who originated this idea of United Europe. There are many valid modern patents. There are many famous names associated with the revival and presentation of this idea, but we may all, I think, yield our pretensions to Henry of Navarre, King of France, who, with his great Minister Sully, between the years 1600 and 1607, labored to set up a permanent committee representing the fifteen - now we are sixteen - leading Christian States of Europe. This body was to act as an arbitrator on all questions concerning religious conflict, national frontiers, internal disturbance, and common action against any danger from the East, which in those days meant the Turks. This he called "The Grand Design." After this long passage of time we are the servants of the Grand Design.

This Congress has brought together leaders of thought and action from all the free countries of Europe. Statesmen of all political parties, leading figures from all the Churches, eminent writers, leaders of the professions, lawyers, chiefs of industry and prominent trade-unionists are gathered here. In fact a representative grouping of the most essential elements in the political, industrial, cultural and spiritual life of Europe is now assembled in this ancient hall. And although everyone has been invited in his individual capacity, nevertheless this Congress, and any conclusions it may reach, may fairly claim to be the voice of Europe....

It is necessary for the executive governments of the sixteen countries, associated for purposes of the Marshall Plan, to make precise arrangements. These can apply at present only to what is called Western Europe. In this we wish them well and will give them all loyal support; but our aim is not confined to Western Europe. We seek nothing less than all Europe. Distinguished exiles from Czechoslovakia, and almost all the Eastern European nations, and also from Spain, are present among us. We aim at the eventual participation of all European peoples whose society and way of life, making all allowances for the different points of view in various countries, are not in disaccord with a Charter of Human Rights and with the sincere expression of free democracy....

I was anxious at first lest the United States of America should view with hostility the idea of a United States of Europe. But I rejoice that the great Republic in its era of world-leadership has risen far above such moods. We must all be thankful as we sit here that the nation called to the summit of the world by its mass, its energies and its power, has not been found lacking in those qualities of greatness and nobility upon which the record of famous States depends. Far from resenting the creation of United Europe, the American people welcome and ardently sustain the resurrection of what was called the Old World, now found in full partnership with the New.

Nothing that we do or plan here conflicts with the paramount authority of a world organization of the United Nations. On the contrary I have always believed, as I declared in the war, that a Council of Europe was a subordinate but necessary part of the world organization. I thought at that time, when I had great responsibility, that there should be several regional councils, august but subordinate, that these should form the massive pillars upon which the world organization would be founded in majesty and calm. This was the direction in which my hopes and thought lay three or four years ago. To take an example from the military sphere, with which our hard experiences have made us all familiar, the design for world government might have followed the system of three or more groups of armies - in this case armies of peace - under one supreme headquarters. Thus I saw the vast Soviet Union forming one of these great groups. The Council of Europe, including Great Britain linked with her Empire and Commonwealth, would be another. Thirdly, there was the United States and her sister republics in the Western Hemisphere with all their great spheres of interest and influence....

As great orators are wont to do, this statesman ended his speech with a plea for the putting aside of petty disputes and a call to action:

A high and a solemn responsibility rests upon us here this afternoon in this Congress of a Europe striving to be reborn. If we allow ourselves to be rent and disordered by pettiness and small disputes, if we fail in clarity of view or courage of action, a priceless occasion may be cast away for ever. But if we all pull together and pool the luck and the comradeship - and we shall need all the comradeship and not a little luck if we are to move together in this way - and firmly grasp the larger hopes of humanity, then it may be that we shall move into a happier sunlit age, when all the little children who are now growing up in this tormented world may find themselves not the victors nor the vanquished in the fleeting triumphs of one country over another in the bloody turmoil of destructive war, but heirs of all the treasures of the past and the masters of all the science, the abundance and glories of the future.

We have quoted goodly portions of these two brilliant and stirring speeches for a reason. By now, many will have noticed that in 1948 the statesman's vision of a future united Europe was very close to what it now appears Europe is on the verge of becoming. Who was the statesman who gave these speeches? Who was this great servant of "The Grand Design," this Godfather of the United States of Europe?

Believe it or not, it was none other than Sir Winston S. Churchill! That fact will come as a surprise to many Armstrongites just as it did to us. That is because for so many years Churchill was not only portrayed by WCG ministers as the greatest of all twentieth century British leaders (which he probably was), but one who represented, not liberal Internationalist ideas, but the kind of British spirit that stood for God, country, empire - "Anglo-Israel" values to Worldwidiers. Yet, it seems, the real Churchill was a far more complex man and a far greater visionary than he has been portrayed by the likes of Herbert W. Armstrong, Raymond McNair, or Gerald Flurry. For example, it is interesting that even today Flurry regularly warns of the supposedly prophesied destruction of Britain by a united Europe and in almost the same breath will quote Churchill as though he had warned of the dangers of such a European political alliance.

Those who would like to read the two Churchill speeches in their entirety will find them in The Sinews of Peace (Houghton Mifflin, 1949) and Europe Unite (Houghton Mifflin, 1950). Unfortunately, those two collections of speeches by Churchill are out of print and are not easy to locate, but university libraries or public libraries in larger metropolitan areas may have copies.

Finally, for those interested in studying this subject in more depth, we recommend the article, "Churchill's United Europe" (History Today, June 1992) by Roland Quinault, Senior Lecturer in History at the Polytechnic of North London. The author writes that Churchill had been a longtime and enthusiastic supporter of a united Europe, had for a number of years led the European unity movement both in Britain and on the Continent, and was the one mainly responsible for the creation of the Council of Europe and its Strasbourg Assembly in 1949. Quinault writes:

Churchill would have welcomed the creation of a single European market in 1992 since he was, by preference, if not always by practice, a free trader.... He believed that true European unity could not be imposed by a powerful leader, but only achieved by the free union of peoples, based on self-interest and genuine sentiment. Consequently he emphasized the need for popular support towards this end....

Quinault writes that Churchill "hoped to create a Europe which was united, but not uniform" - in other words a Europe where the individual characteristics and traditions of Europe's many ethnic groups would be preserved. In that regard, Quinault sees Churchill as desiring that Britain remain somewhat culturally detached from the Continent and quotes the statesman as saying:

We have our own dream and our own task. We are with Europe, but not of it. We are linked, but not comprised. We are interested and associated, but not absorbed....

Some Armstrongites might suspect that Churchill's position was merely aimed at thwarting the expansionist plans of the Soviets and that Churchill still envisioned a rather imperialistic Britain for the future. However, Quinault writes:

Churchill regarded Russia as part of the European state system and he did not want a United Europe to be inherently anti-Russian.... Unlike [Margaret Thatcher], Churchill was prepared to surrender some national sovereignty and to strengthen the authority of the Council of Europe and its Assembly. In those respects, his views were closer to Heath, than to Thatcher. But he wanted the Council of Europe to be subordinate to the United Nations and he was never as exclusively Eurocentric as Heath.

While a more enthusiastic campaigner for European union than John Major, Churchill never called for Britain to be at the heart of Europe. At Maastricht, Major echoed Churchill's policy, by refusing to commit Britain to a federal Europe within a set timetable. He also followed Churchill in supporting the enlargement of the European Community and the retention of defence links with the USA and NATO. There can be little doubt that Churchill would have endorsed the Maastricht settlement as a sensible compromise between present reality and future dreams. He desired European union, but he wanted it to be effected by mutual consent, not imposed dictat.

Churchill's views on European union have been largely forgotten, but they are still as relevant today as they were after the war. The British should remember that the man who personified the bulldog spirit was also the godfather of European unity, while Europeans should recall that this patriotic British premier had a surer vision of European development than many Continentals. It would be most unwise to ignore Churchill's thinking on Europe for he had a knack of getting things right.

Reading through Churchill's European unity speeches, one is amazed at how much his vision of a united Europe seems to be what is actually in the process of being created right now. However, it is also important to see how different his vision was from that prophesied by the Armstrongites. Furthermore, it is important to be aware of the fact that the dream of a politically united Europe still faces hurdles that are not just very real, but very possibly insurmountable.

Is European Unity Certain?

In the last fifty years, those wanting a more economically integrated Europe have made amazing progress in their quest. There is now an astonishing degree of cooperation between all the nations of Europe on matters of trade, transportation, communication, finance, and in the war against international terrorism and crime. In many areas of the law, European law is taking precedence over national law. At the same time, American influence in Europe is not as strong as it was in the sixties and seventies (see "U.S. Boasts It's the Only Superpower, but Winds of Change Are Blowing" by Jim Mann in the Los Angeles Times, 6/10/96, p. A5).

Nevertheless, many reports indicate that whatever greater levels of unity Europe will achieve in the near future, it will at best be only a greater economic one or, if political, only a fragile political one. Tyler Marshall, writing in the Los Angeles Times (5/20/96, p. 1) stated, "Cultural differences, myths and rivalries are stymieing the quest for a continental union. Diversity - Latin verve! British pragmatism! - once was seen as strength. But now it is proving divisive." Not even highlighting the obvious differences in language, religion, and ethnicity, Marshall discussed how the nations of Europe are still divided by history, differing educational methods, and especially by cultural values: "Many argue that, with Europe's cultural differences so deeply ingrained, the best that advocates of greater unity can hope for is broader understanding of what they face."

Just how powerful those cultural differences are can be seen in the fact that not only are European countries not readily merging politically into one another, some European countries seem to be splitting up! There is no need to point out the recent Balkanization of, well, the Balkans with Yugoslavia's division. And we all know that just five years ago the Czechs and Slovaks divorced each other. Now, the Scots are talking about greater independence from Britain, the Basques are crying out louder than ever for complete independence from Spain, and the Corsicans are increasingly demanding total independence from France - there has even been bloodshed from armed Corsicans over the issue (New York Times, 6/2/96).

Now, in Italy, where the Italian Communist Party only last year made big gains, the northern part of the country is moving toward separation from the southern part in an independence movement led by demagogue Umberto Bossi of the Northern League (New York Times, 5/12/96 and 6/11/96). Bossi, whose style reminds many of that of Benito

Mussolini, has already declared a portion of northern Italy to be independent. Calling the new nation Padania, Bossi has even designed green costumes and medieval heraldry for the military officers of the as yet unrecognized country. And, in what many Italians viewed as an outrageous display of near-Napoleonic arrogance, Bossi in August even attacked the pope saying:

We're a long way from the times of Pope John XXII, the great Lombard, who said the church's interest in politics was finished and it was time for people to busy themselves with their consciences. Since then, the Polish pope has arrived, has taken the church and invested it much more with secular powers than spiritual powers (New York Times, 8/21/97).

Obviously, the forces of European division are just as real as the forces of European unity. Nevertheless, we should keep in mind that not only are there an infinite number of different treaty arrangements possible between nations, but many different types of political union are also possible. For example, before the thirteen American colonies came together under the United States Constitution (signed 1789), they were federated more loosely for eight years under the Articles of Confederation (signed 1781). It may very well turn out that Europe will go through a similar type of intermediate step on its way to a more complete union. Or in the next few years Europe may actually achieve some type of political union, but because of unbridgeable cultural differences, it could turn out to be a political union that lasts only a very short time - just like HWA predicted. We'll see.

Tabor on "Mystery Mountain"

It was about a year ago that we first learned that on a mountain near Las Lunas, New Mexico there exists a rock on which has been carved an abbreviated Hebrew inscription of the Ten Commandments. When we also discovered that a handful of scholars believed the inscription to have been made by ancient Israelites, we were a bit skeptical. We thought it more likely that the inscription was the work of pranksters, perhaps Mormon zealots bent on promoting that religion's Lost Tribes theories through an outright hoax. Now, however, new research by Professor James Tabor has given us second thoughts.

Writing in the Summer, 1997 edition of the United Israel Bulletin (1123 Broadway, New York, NY 10010), Tabor points out that the inscription is in an ancient form of Hebrew that scholars have only known about in the last 100 years and that there is evidence that the inscription was seen on the mountain back in the 1880s. Furthermore, there is evidence that other stone markings at the site are in actuality a sky map that astronomically dates a particular eclipse. Amazingly, one scholar puts the date of that eclipse at Sept. 15 of 107 B.C. Tabor points out that that date on the sacred Hebrew calendar was actually 1st Tishri (Rosh Hashannah) in that year. Could it be that the inscription was made on or about that time? Tabor is not the first scholar to have written on the subject of the mysterious stone. Barry Fell in his major study America B.C. (New York: Pocket Books, 1989) discusses the inscription on "Mystery Mountain." But Tabor, who is now planning to do archaeological excavations at the site, has shed important light on the subject. Those interested in the travels of the ancient Israelites will find his article of interest.

Gary Alexander Enters Politics

Gary Alexander (AC Pasadena, 1967) the writer, editor, musician, disc jockey, music critic, financier, and tax revolt advocate recently turned 52 and announced that his resumé would contain a new credit - politician. Gary is currently running for a seat in the Virginia State House of Delegates under the Libertarian Party banner. He tells us:

Despite the awesome legalistic hurdles put up by the Demopublican duopoly, I keep telling myself that the original American idea was for part-time volunteer legislators, like you and me, to take a year or two out of their busy life, for public service, like the Swiss do. Putting a finger in the dike of the floodtide of spending by the Leviathan state seems like a noble cause.

Gary brings to the political arena not only outstanding communication skills, but considerable business experience, dynamic energy, and an uncompromising idealism that is rather rare in politics today. One thing he does not bring is a hefty financial base, and so he informs us that he welcomes any and all contributions to his campaign. Those who respond will be added to a mailing list for official position papers. The one we read recently was both unique in its political views and quite colorful. Write to: Alexander For Delegate, 11230 Leatherwood Drive, Reston, Virginia 20191.

Incidentally, Alexander recently did a movie review of the new documentary on the 1993 Branch Davidian tragedy. The movie Waco: The Rules of Engagement was produced and directed by William Gazecki and contains new data that again raises troubling questions about many facets of that government operation. Alexander told AR, "My main point is that in 1979, WCG headquarters almost got similar treatment from the state of California. What if the Ambassador campus in Pasadena had been armed and paranoid back then? As I point out in my review, we Americans root for freedom in China, but we root for the SWAT team back home. We want law and order against all oddballs, not realizing that someday the so-called oddballs might be us." The review appears in the September issue of Liberty magazine.

Armstrong Brewery Expands

Most WCG members are vaguely aware that besides evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong, WCG founder Herbert W. Armstrong had one other son, Richard David Armstrong, who died in a car crash near San Luis Obispo, California in 1958. Old timers say Richard was the Armstrong son who was more gifted in both matters of the head and heart and for that reason was probably HWA's favorite son. Most Worldwidens are not aware, however, that Richard Armstrong and his young wife Lois (nee Lemon, who later married WCG minister Ben Chapman) had a son, Richard David Armstrong II.

The younger Richard Armstrong was, of course, raised in Worldwide and in the mid-eighties he even spent time at Ambassador-Pasadena. Eventually, however, he drifted away from the church. Today Richard Armstrong, 38, is a successful businessman in Grants Pass, Oregon where he is co-owner of the Blue Pine Brew Pub, a small brewery with an attached family-style restaurant and pub.

After undergoing a recent expansion, the brewery is now producing up to 300 gallons of ale a week. Some of their popular items are Pearsoll Peak Pale, an American pale ale; Rip Roaring Red, an amber ale; Big Barley Brown, a British-style brown ale; and Midnight Stout, a dark, full-flavored beer. The restaurant seats almost 90 and regulars recommend the salmon and crab cakes. Besides providing gastronomical delights, the establishment promotes local artists, musicians, and organic gardeners. Eventually every wall in the dining room will be covered by murals painted by local artists. Already the ceiling is painted with a mural reminiscent of the Greek gods Zeus and Aphrodite. As in the pub, the blue pine tables in the restaurant were milled from his own property by Richard himself. And on the outside of the building, rainbows and stars in brilliant colors adorn a facade that is becoming a local landmark.

Besides regular dining, part of the establishment may be rented out for private parties. And, the owners say, they are already planning a gala Oktoberfest. The Blue Pine Brew Pub is located at 422 S.W. Fifth Street in Grants Pass, just a nine hour drive north of San Francisco.

Where Are They Now?

The WCG has announced that Canadian regional director Frank Brown, 59, has been retired. Replacing him in Canada is Gary Moore, 45 (Ambassador-Pasadena 1974).

The June WN announced that "Shorty Fuessel, pastor of the Amarillo, Texas, and Liberal and Scott City, Kansas, churches, resigned from the full-time ministry." No other details were given.

Former Ambassador University President Dr. Donald Ward has been the head of the International Bible Learning Center (IBLC) for over a year. He recently announced, however, that because of funding problems he would be leaving IBLC to start his own Bible education service, the Center for Bible Education (CBE). Ward's new group is at Box 452, Hawkins, TX 75765. Shortly after Ward's announcement, IBLC announced it was leaving Hawkins, Texas where it had been based and was moving to California. Their new address is not yet official but their new phone number is (818) 951-4252. Active in the latter group are such former WCG luminaries as Mark Kaplan, David Antion, Dr. John Merrit, Judd Kirk, Leon Walker, and Leslie McCullough, in addition to SDA pastor Samuele Bacchiocchi.

Hot Links

More and more, current and former Worldwidiers are turning to Web sites for information. Some sites valued by ex-Worldwidiers are:

In Transition - it may no longer be going out in newsprint, but editor John Robinson has maintained a Web site that still has updates on Armstrongite offshoots. Also quite valuable at the site are back issues of In Transition. Robinson's two-part article on the history of WCG church government doctrine which appeared in the last two issues of IT is especially worth reading. The site is at: <<http://www.io.com/~robinson/>>.

Ex-WCG cleric David Covington puts out his Crossroads publication but, unfortunately, only via the net. This summer's Crossroads #4 is now available and contains a commentary on the mechanics of mind control which asks, "Why did we do all those crazy things?" The issue also puts a major focus on relationships after the WCG: making friends, dating and marriage/divorce. There is a doctrinal section, a book review, and don't miss the anecdote about the twilight zone. The Covington site is at: <http://members.aol.com/coving1d>.

Former Worldwider Ed Mentell has a web site that many will find helpful, even entertaining at times. Particularly valuable is an easy-to-access complete text of Daughter of Babylon, Bruce Renehan's history of the WCG. Mentell's site is at: www.herbertwarmstrong.com.

Much of what is reported accurately about the WCG and its offshoots can make you cry. So anyone who can find a bit of humor in it all is providing a service. One ex-member who works hard at being a satirist is Douglas D. Becker. Formerly the creator and publisher of the Tkach-22 newsletter, Becker is now turning his talents on the WCG via his web site. And, not all of his material is completely tongue-in-cheek. He wrote us:

You need to look at my web site under the item "Learn about seeking the truth from reversed speech." This will link you to the site of Australian researcher David John Oats with some samples of what he has discovered. He is a clinical psychologist who discovered the reversed speech phenomenon about seven years ago and now has a couple of books on it.

In my own research, I started with the early 90s Dean Blackwell sermon called "Prediction Addiction" where near the end of the tape he says: "Prophecy is of no private interpretation." When that phrase is played backwards he says quite clearly (except for the last word): "We should follow the devout one instead of the usurper." In other, more modern, sermons there have been similar kinds of statements, particularly when the minister was especially emotional.... This is real stuff, it just hasn't come to light until recently.

Douglas Becker's unusual web site is at: <http://www.all2true.com>.

Is Bill Gates the Beast?

Among Christians interested in Bible prophecy, the identity of the Antichrist has for many centuries been a topic of great interest. Among Armstrongites, however, there was a traditional view that the Antichrist of the Bible was none other than the pope. While the WCG no longer promulgates that teaching, many of the larger Armstrongite offshoots still do. One ministry that retains the old Armstrong doctrine is Alex Cain's Church of God which publishes a small magazine called The Countdown (Church of God, P.O. Box 53, Farnborough, Hants. GU140YZ, U.K.). Their May and June issues contained articles on the papacy as Antichrist, and in the June issue there was an appendix which listed nine famous Protestant churchmen who in centuries past also believed the same thing.

In coming up with an identity for the Antichrist, many Christians have found ways of interpreting the number 666 (of Rev. 3:18) and Mr. Cain's article does the same thing. Today, however, we are seeing a plethora of new theories about "666," and some of them are, well, colorful to say the least. For example, one of our readers recently sent us a page from the May 1997 newsletter of televangelist Zola Levitt. It contained this intriguing statement regarding the "number of the beast":

I noticed something interesting about the Internet. It is referred to as the Worldwide Web and Net addresses begin with www. In Hebrew, "w" corresponds to the letter vav which has a numerical value of six. So, www in Hebrew is 666. That correlation would only be understood by those who speak both Hebrew and English and who have also studied biblical prophecy. The people most familiar with Revelation are non-Jewish Christians. Of them, those who know Hebrew usually focus on the Old Testament. It is an interesting connection since the Internet is playing a role in unifying the world.

Then, a few weeks ago, we received the following e-mail message dealing with the same subject:

The real name of the billionaire CEO of Microsoft, the world's leading computer software company which created the DOS and WINDOWS programs, is William Henry Gates III. Nevertheless, nowadays he is known as just Bill Gates. By converting the letters of his current name to the ASCII-values and adding his "III", you get the following:

B 66
L 76
L 76
G 71
A 65
T 84
E 69
S 83
I 1
I 1
I 1
Total = 666!

Some might ask, "How did Bill Gates get so powerful?" Coincidence? Or just the beginning of mankind's ultimate and total enslavement? Before you decide, consider the following:

M S - D O S 6 . 2 1
 $77+83+45+68+79+83+32+54+46+50+49 = 666$

W I N D O W S 9 5
 $87+73+78+68+79+87+83+57+53+1 = 666$

Coincidence? You decide.

-Wally <wwallaby@aol.com>

We don't think any of the above theories make much sense, but if anyone feels otherwise, please let us know why.

Letters

It's almost too much for me, this chameleon Church of God. Yesterday, May 18, while switching channels I just happened to see WCG evangelist Greg Albrecht talking about his born-again church. He was on evangelist James Robison's television show on the Trinity Network. I remembered how you had reported way back in AR18 about the Menge murder and Robison's diabolical scheme to buy the Big Sandy campus years ago. Well, as I watched the program I thought, I don't think I have ever heard the name Jesus said more often in so short a time. First Albrecht kept emphasizing the name, Jesus, Jesus. Robison could not be outdone. So he started in, Jesus, Jesus. That's all you need. Just Jesus.

Frankly, you can write what you want about Mr. Herbert Armstrong, but at least he was not a total fool. He knew that the person of Jesus was less important than Christ's own message that there was something for us TO DO!

For Robison and Albrecht, next to saying the name Jesus hundreds of times an hour, about the only thing that seems to be important is to convince everyone how bad they had once been. Albrecht kept saying how terrible a person he had been before discovering Jesus just a few years ago. Yikes! A few years ago? Where was his head when he was at Ambassador? Nevertheless, there was Albrecht telling everyone, including a few dozen happy, smiling, WCG members in the audience, that even as a WCG minister he did not know Jesus. Not only that, what he did know as far back as the mid-eighties was that many of the WCG's central doctrines were in error! Well, if that is what he felt back then, why in the world didn't he just leave? And if he did not have any character then, why should anyone believe that he has any character now?

As for Albrecht claiming that just a few years ago he had been a very bad person, well, he personally convinced me. But, as it was Robison's show, Robison was not about to be outdone. He started a lengthy confession of his own about how just a few years ago in his ministry he had not known Jesus either! And his vanity had been (?) so great that he had considered running for President of the United States and had even considered putting out a magazine to be called The Last Word! Albrecht then said that the WCG would have done that too if only they had thought of the idea first.

Before ending his show with five minutes of sales pitches for his new book, The Face of the Father, Robison got Albrecht to admit that the new Tkach team has changed virtually every single doctrine that Mr. Armstrong ever taught. Then Robison asked Albrecht if he thought Mr. Herbert Armstrong had ever been converted. Albrecht said he just did not know and pretended that he "could not judge the man." Obviously, the implication was that Albrecht had just not seen any sign of conversion in the life of Mr. Herbert Armstrong. But as he spoke he just shook his head sending a body language message to everyone that "no, I really don't think he was ever converted." You would have thought that the audience of Worldwidors would have jumped out of their chairs and run screaming out of the studio in protest. But they just sat there like dumb sheep and kept on smiling for the cameras.

While I am sure that those Worldwidars are now as brainwashed as can be, I am still not sure which of those two evangelists is the more self-righteous or idiotic. Honestly, I wish that Mr. Armstrong could have come up out of the grave and been sitting right there during that television talk show. No doubt the two evangelists' foolish talk would have made him so filled with righteous indignation and so sick to his stomach he would have been tempted to leap out of his chair and puke all over them!

-California

John, I just got back from a trip to Langley, Virginia where I was on company business. In large writing in the lobby of one of our government buildings there I saw this inscription: "You shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free - John 8:32." What government department claims this scripture as its own? The inscription was in the main lobby of the headquarters building of the C.I.A. So now it is not just churches that misappropriate the Word of God.

Incidentally, everyone at C.I.A. headquarters casually refers to the head of the C.I.A. as "the D.O." That stands for Director of Operations, but it is pronounced by everyone there as "Deeo." That made me very uncomfortable. John, I recall that in your Ambassador days you were an opera buff, just as I am today. I'm sure you know how frequently that phonetic word occurs in the climaxes of the great operatic masterpieces. Of course, in Italian and other Romance languages "Dio" means God. Unfortunately, at Langley I couldn't help but suspect that some C.I.A. employees are getting the two meanings mixed up. As you may already know, it's a strange bunch back there at Langley.

-"No name please"

Some say that AR is very anti-WCG. But you were honest enough to report quite accurately about how valuable Mike Fezell's April WN article was. I wrote for a copy of the original paper from RENO-VARE and I found it to be just about the most helpful article I ever read about the Millennium teachings of the Bible. Thank you for telling us about the good in Worldwide, as well as the bad.

-Colorado

Last February, African-American History Month, the Ambassador Chorale combined with the Jarvis Christian College Choir in several performances. For many years, relations between the two schools were strained. But happily, things have been more positive the past couple of years. Then, on its last out-of-state trip, the Ambassador Chorale performed at the bombing site in Oklahoma City.

Dr. John McKenna, AU's last theology department chairman, was a Baptist. Some always feared bringing in theology professors of other denominations. However, Dr. McKenna's contributions here have been quite positive. He helped AU's last batch of theology majors in many ways.

A historical magazine was published and distributed on AU's last Graduation Day. It contains a year in review section as well as photos, a time line, and information on AU's presidents. It contained several photos of Garner Ted Armstrong, something which might not have happened in years past.

I was disappointed in some of the misleading material on the Catholic Church in AR65. It is the Beast, or at least an important part of it. You need to read Foxe's Book of Martyrs, To call Protestant churches "daughters" of Catholicism misses important facts. Those "daughters" fought and died to remove themselves from "Mother" Rome which has always been the false church.

-Pam Unruh
Wichita, Kansas

Editor: By using the mother-daughter analogy I was not trying to denigrate either the Protestants or the Roman Church. The analogy was Herbert Armstrong's and is one that is still frequently used by Armstrongites. Personally, when one studies the incredible atrocities done by both Catholics and Protestants to each other during hundreds of years of European religious wars, I am not so certain that Herbert Armstrong's analogy was such a bad one.

I left the WCG the year after graduating from Big Sandy in 1978. I have many happy memories of all the wonderful people I met and became friends with while in Worldwide. But after many long years of study and reflection, I entered the Roman Catholic Church this year. Eight years ago I took classes at a local parish to learn what Catholics had to say about themselves and their faith. Most of what I had previously believed about Catholicism proved to be false. I had believed what the WCG said about the Catholic Church without checking for myself. What I found was a very spiritual and Bible-centered faith.

The issues that most non-Catholics get upset over (Mary, the pope, purgatory, confession to a priest, etc.), when examined closely, become easily understood and logical. Many of the practices of the WCG have similarities in the Catholic Church. Herbert Armstrong was "the Pope" of the WCG. The extensive counseling that many members received was no different than the spiritual guidance Catholics receive in the confessional. HWA's second chance theory corresponds with purgatory.

If any of your readers are still confused about what theology to embrace, I would recommend that they give Catholicism an honest look. I now see why the Roman Catholic Church has endured for two thousand years. I will be happy to correspond with anyone who would like to learn more about the Catholic Church. It would be great to hear from any of my former classmates.

We left Global last year when we discovered the pervasive Jesuit influence. We then went United, but we are having doubts. Some members say that some at the top are members of something called "the League." It is a secret group of Ambassador graduates who are in most of the Churches of God. Now we have learned that some of them are part of "the Brotherhood" - a secret group of Masons and Internationalists who are higher than even the Jesuits. Do you have any information about whether there is a group behind "the Brotherhood"?

-Ohio

Editor: Sorry, you kind of lost me there.

I think your work is good therapy for those traumatized by experiences in the Worldwide Church of Armstrong. But as far as changing an organization that "does good" by preying on God's children, it isn't a reasonable aspiration. Only lawsuits and public exposure will bring such beasts to "repentance."

Concerning secrecy in the Church or any other religious organization, it's just the nature of such beasts to be dictatorial and necessarily secretive about their corrupt acts.

Much was said by Armstrong concerning church government, implying that his corporation was the government of God on earth. The truth is, most churches have no legitimate governments. They are simply dictatorships called corporations. Like tobacco corporations, church corporations are havens for foul spirits and all manner of corruption. The dictator at the top tells everyone else on the payroll what to think and do. Hireling ministers become idol worshippers. It seems to me that most ministers will do almost anything to get their paychecks. A successful minister cannot have a close relationship with God as a truly righteous minister will follow God instead of a church corporation (Matt. 6:24).

It is ludicrous to think Christ will come to put a dictatorship over the world. Dictatorships are the enemies of God and all mankind. If anything, God will force church corporations to become more democratic. All men who have led or served dictatorships have proven themselves incapable of governing others as God would have them. In Worldwide, it was said that God's government would be a benevolent dictatorship. But dictators are not benevolent, and the benevolent are not dictators.

The more I comprehend the mind and heart of God, the more I realize Armstrong and the other dictators in his corporation were tragically out of touch with their members and with God. Of course, it paid for them to be out of touch.

A Special Thanks

We have been a little long between issues because of a shortage of both time and money. Besides covering latebreaking news next time, some of the stories we are now working on for AR67 relate to: the very serious social aberrations and mental problems that are increasingly common in the WCG and its offshoots, Judaism in transition, the so-called Coder heresy that is penetrating the Armstrongite offshoots, some new bizarre cults to which ex-Worldwidars are going, the new Millennium hysteria, the conspiracy theory craze, and some new sources of information to help with the question of what in the world is going to be happening next. We will be going to press with that issue as soon as we pay off the bills for this one, hopefully within six to eight weeks.

We don't make a habit of running too much material in praise of ourselves. But we are human like everyone else, and when AR is praised or we get warmly thanked for our efforts, it is very much appreciated. In the June-July 1997 issue of Small Magazine Review, writer-reviewer Nick DiSpoldo did a short piece about Ambassador Report and in his review had these kind words for us:

Robert O. Ingersoll, the "Great Agnostic" of the 19th Century, would applaud Trechak, although Trechak is a Christian. Nevertheless, he has vigorously investigated religious rip-offs and scams....

Trechak practices what he preaches: he gives away the Newsletter and asks for a donation, if possible. AR has been consistently published and Trechak is relentless in his pursuit to rid organized religion of its rogues and bogus biblical brainwashers.

I thank Mr. DiSpoldo for his kudos. But I should point out that even though I personally take on most of the editorial burdens of putting out the Report, I do rely heavily on the creative input, criticism, advice, and thorough work done by a half dozen volunteer editors. Hence the "we" in my editorial comments is not just an "editorial we," but an actual group of individuals who have a say about what finally goes into each issue. While most of them, for one reason or another, prefer not to be credited publicly, this publication would not be as readable as it is were it not for their professional, yet unpaid-for, assistance.

Another group that deserves special mention is our information providers: those readers who provide us with news clippings, printed data, and important tips from literally around the world. Those tips are almost always what initiate our investigations and are therefore indispensable for making AR as informative as it is.

Finally, I should point out that even though we do distribute many copies of our newsletter for free, there are limits to how many we can just give away. This publication would not be possible if it were not for the special generosity of a minority of our readers who are really carrying far more than their share of the financial burden of our publishing work. On behalf of the majority of our readers, who are not able to contribute more than an occasional mite (even though we appreciate and indeed really need those "mites"), I want especially to thank that hard-core group of regular contributors for making possible the continued publication of Ambassador Report.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

December 1997 (AR67)

Sunday Distinctly Better?

Just a year ago, the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) was still officially "sabbatarian." That is, its official publications openly acknowledged that the WCG held its weekly church services only on Saturdays, the seventh-day sabbath. To WCG founder Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA), seventh-day sabbath keeping was so theologically essential that even with all the doctrinal tinkering he did during his lifetime, he never would have tolerated any deviation from that teaching so central to his theology. In fact, many still recall how on a number of occasions Armstrong warned his followers that should any WCG preacher, including himself, ever question that doctrine from the pulpit, they were to immediately get up and leave.

Well, we hate to say, "We told you so," but a few years ago we did write that it was only a matter of time, before Worldwide's leadership would start easing in Sunday as the preferred day for worship. At that time, Tkach Jr. publicly and sarcastically chided us for even suggesting it could ever happen. Now, in the July Worldwide News (WN), buried on page 14 so as not to get too much attention (after all, the well-established Tkach technique is to ever so gently slide new doctrines into the consciousness of members via sermon asides and minor WN articles), there was a short Tkach article titled, "Proclaiming the gospel on Sunday, too." Here is how he has eased in his preference for Sunday worship:

Some members are troubled by the fact that a few WCG congregations now meet for worship services on Sunday....

The vast majority of our congregations continue our tradition of meeting on Saturday. This is usually the day that serves the members best, and in many areas it does not prevent effective evangelism....

However, in some areas, Sunday is distinctly better than Saturday for being able to attract new people to services where they may hear the gospel proclaimed.

Some members have pointed out that the church's "Goal, Mission, and Ministries" statement specifically states that it would offer "worship services on the seventh day (Saturday) and annual festivals, the church's Festival of Tabernacles being the major collective worship event of the year." Regarding that statement, Tkach would only say, "This is still true, and I think it will continue to be true." But for how long, he did not say. However, regarding that old sabbath "tradition" he did offer this new understanding:

Even under the old covenant, God did not require his people to attend worship services on the Sabbath.... Nevertheless, it is a good practice (but not a required one) to designate one day a week to set aside the normal routine and to focus on building our relationship with Christ and his people.

We have not heard of even one current WCG member who has left the WCG over this statement. Tkach's conquest of the WCG's collective consciousness now appears to be complete.

Tkach Rewrites History

In George Orwell's novel 1984, the Party of Big Brother had a motto: "Who controls the past controls the future; who controls the present controls the past." The motto referred to the Party's never-ending work of destroying the records of its past and rewriting its history as a means of controlling its followers' thinking and the course of future events. In Orwell's novel the process was quite deliberate and was carried out for purposes of "reality control" or, in the futuristic language of Newspeak, "doublethink." The whole process led to what Orwell called "controlled insanity" and it was all done with one goal: to perpetually maintain the Party leadership in its position of power and privilege.

While 1984 is often classified as a dystopian, or anti-utopian, satire (a type of fiction), it is also a very helpful primer on the nature of organizational thought control, whether that organization is a nation-state, a corporation, or even a church. The motto about the rewritten past controlling the future refers to a phenomenon well-known to historians: Those parties that win wars or other types of struggles are usually the very ones who write the official histories of those wars or struggles. When they do, the record of the past is usually distorted in favor of the victor. And in creating the distorted records of the past, the writers of such propagandistic histories play an important role in manipulating future events.

Blatant examples can be seen in the way the Soviets of old wrote and rewrote their official histories of the Russian revolution and its aftermath. Some historians (Howard Zinn, for example, in A People's History of the United States) point out how many American education-committee-approved history books, whether through omission or misplaced emphasis, contain significant distortions of America's past. The Roman Catholic Church's official histories of itself have been criticized similarly. For example, WCG founder Herbert Armstrong claimed that in the extant histories of the Catholic Church there seemed to be a "lost century" - about a hundred years' worth of missing data at a point in time when the early church was theologically in transition.

Armstrong, himself, thoroughly understood the history rewrite technique and used it himself. His own Autobiography has been called by many with first-hand knowledge of the facts (including his evangelist son Garner Ted Armstrong) more than 50 percent fiction. Yet it played, and continues to play, an important role in the ongoing life of Armstrongism. Another example of the personal propaganda-as-history genre was Against the Gates of Hell by HWA's attorney Stanley R. Rader, whose history of the WCG's legal battles of 1979-1980 were a hall-of-mirrors distortion of the events many of us witnessed close up. Similarly, GTA's short history of the founding of his Church of God International is infamous for its glaring distortions and gargantuan omissions of fact. Yet that short work continues to perpetuate the CGI branch of Armstrongism.

Now, WCG Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach Jr. adds his name to the above list with the publication of his new book Transformed by Truth. In it Tkach tells the story of how the church that Herbert Armstrong founded was led through a "miraculous reformation" to become the vastly different Worldwide Church of God that he now heads. Unfortunately, while much of the book does make a contribution to our understanding of Armstrongism, it is far from being an objective recounting of the WCG's recent past.

Perhaps the most obvious flaw in the book is what it does not discuss. Not surprisingly, Tkach makes no mention of such unseemly matters as the debaucheries and promiscuous sex life of his church's founder, his own father's infidelities, or his own divorce. But even in the area of pure theology there are amazing omissions. The most glaring one concerns Dr. Ernest L. Martin, the one-time head of Ambassador's Theology Department who went on to become president of the Foundation for Biblical Research and the Associates for Scriptural Knowledge. It was Martin's research papers, beginning around 1961, that first introduced Pauline theology to Herbert Armstrong and the WCG. Since then, tens of thousands of Worldwidiers, including Joseph Tkach Sr. himself, were profoundly influenced by Martin's ideas on the New Testament. Yet, nowhere in the main text of Tkach Jr.'s book is there a hint at Martin's existence, let alone an acknowledgement of his profound impact on WCG theology. Other important WCG and former-WCG writers and teachers passed over in the text are Ken Storey, Gary Arvidson, Ken Fischer, Al Carozzo, Kenneth Westby, Charles Dorothy, Brian Knowles, Howard Clark, Charles Hunting, Anthony Buzzard, Robert Kuhn, George Geis, Lester Grabbe, Earl Williams, and dozens more. Their important contributions to current WCG theology are simply ignored by historian Tkach and his editors.

Not surprisingly, Ambassador Report also goes unrecognized. Twenty-two years of exposing the sins and incessant infighting of the Armstrong and Tkach regimes - reporting that put pressure on the WCG to make fundamental changes - are not given any mention. Nor are the important books written about Worldwide by Joseph Hopkins, Marion McNair, John Tuit, and David Robinson.

Instead, the story that Tkach wants his readers to swallow is that it was almost solely through Pastors General Tkach Sr. and Tkach Jr. and their small inner circle that God worked to transform the WCG. Supposedly, it was only within the last decade that God revealed "new truths" to the WCG ministry, and when God did so, it was to the Tkachs who immediately taught those "new truths" to their followers. Long-time AR readers know that thousands of lives were destroyed, thousands of families torn asunder, and hundreds of millions of dollars thrown away before the Tkachs finally acquiesced under pressure and reluctantly agreed to the kinds of doctrinal changes that many "liberals" had wanted made for more than twenty years.

Three Conspiracy Theories

Tkach goes to great lengths to convince readers that the WCG's changes came about through divine intervention and that there was never any secret agenda, timetable, or conspiracy to change the WCG's old doctrines. He specifically mentions three conspiracy theories that are currently circulating regarding the changes that have been made:

(1) The first theory is that the changes were made by evangelists Albrecht, Feazell, and himself as acts of revenge against the church for the abusive way they were treated when they were growing up as "church kids." In what little he says on this, Tkach never denies that there had been abuse. Instead, he says, "Proclaiming the gospel of grace is certainly an unusual way to get revenge." Yes, it is. But when it results in the near total destruction of whole institutions, it is effective revenge, nevertheless. Then he immediately states, "Would to God all 'revenge' was so sweet!" And that is all he tells us about theory number one. Tkach's true believers will read it one way. Those more cynical will take it at face value as the admission it really is. One probably could not find a better example of effective doublespeak.

(2) The second conspiracy theory Tkach blames on departed evangelist David Hulme. Writes Tkach, "David theorized that my dad had all these doctrinal reforms in his mind for ten or fifteen years and was just patiently waiting for the moment when he could mobilize his plan of reform."

This "theory" did not originate with Hulme. Hulme got the idea from AR and we got it, ourselves, from Joseph Tkach Sr. who, circa 1987, confidentially indicated to a mutual acquaintance that he planned to change at least 40 major WCG doctrines over the course of the next few years. (That was not too surprising to us as we knew Tkach Sr. had studied Ernest Martin's writings in the mid-seventies.) The full extent of the changes to come were probably not anticipated and their exact timing may not have been put on a precise schedule. But there most certainly was a plan to substantially overhaul the WCG's doctrines at least as far back as 1987.

(3) The third conspiracy theory is that Tkach Jr. and company had enough "dirt" on Tkach Sr. to be able to blackmail him into making changes. There is no way to prove to what extent this is true or untrue. But certainly Tkach Jr. at least knew of some of the skeletons in his father's closet. We had revealed a good number in the pages of AR. Junior certainly knew of his father's relationship with "Mrs." Ellen Escat. And quite likely he knew even more than we reported. There is no reason for us to think that such inside knowledge did not give Junior and friends significant leverage with "the old man."

Covington's View

Regarding Tkach's book, former WCG minister David Covington on his Ministry of Healing Web site (<http://members.aol.com/exwgcg>) offers these insights:

The WCG has maintained that Mr. Tkach Sr. simply understood these truths as he was exposed to them, there was no timetable of changes and that he courageously instituted them against great losses of members and financial income. This is simply incomplete and is mostly a corporate advertisement. I believe the approach has been dishonest and played on past manipulations to continue controlling present members. Consider the following:

Mike Fezell admitted to me that he and Tkach Sr. were among those responsible for squelching the love and Jesus message of the 1970s "liberals." He recounted stories of being angry back stage in the auditorium as he listened to a sermonette on "love, love, love." But Tkach's Truth book makes no mention of these courageous reformers.

Greg Albrecht told my wife and I that Mike Fezell had struggled tirelessly "fighting" Mr. Tkach Sr. to get him to institute changes. But, the Truth book seems to indicate Tkach Sr. saw these things himself and acted against all odds.

Greg Albrecht also showed me the cross he wears around his neck (with his father's dog tags attached) and admitted he has done so secretly since the mid-'80s. C. W. Davis [Fezell's assistant] told my wife that Mike Fezell had told him in the fall of 1994 that the changes would be coming in three to five years. But, the Truth book goes to great lengths to disprove "conspiracy theories." While I doubt Hulme's belief that Tkach wanted to make the changes since the '70s, I also doubt the administration's statements that they did not have a plan of implementation.

The administration does not [adequately] mention the 40,000-50,000 people who have left the church and either joined evangelical churches or decried Armstrongism altogether. The WCG in the book gives support to the fact they aren't "conning" anyone by saying that Tkach made these changes against knowing he would lose half the church, and made these changes on Christmas Eve 1994. In fact, he made the changes the week before on December 17, 1994 in Atlanta when he realized he was going to be losing up to half the church either way, whether he went with grace or law.

After the Tkach book's end-notes (where we had hoped to see an index, but were disappointed) there is a fold-out flow chart showing the pedigree of the WCG, the Christian denominations from which it sprang and their roots. This chart is followed by another showing the WCG's more than 100 offshoots. It provides the names of all the groups' leaders, dates of their founding, and some indications as to their size and viability. We were amazed at how much detailed information the WCG maintains about its offshoots and competitors. Tkach, for example, is all too aware that his biggest competitors are United Church of God which he views as being in David Hulmes' pocket, Global Church of God which is headed by Rod Meredith, and the Philadelphia Church of God which is headed by Gerald Flurry. Tkach gives their current membership figures as 18,000; 7,000; and 3,000 respectively. But by also listing the names and church-founding dates for such important WCG reformers as Ernest Martin, Ken Storey, and Earl Williams, Tkach unwittingly reveals that he is aware of the important roles played by such men in the WCG's evolving theology. The Truth book's failure to recognize the contributions made by such men was no accident. Additionally, as David Covington points out, "By putting courageous reformers such as Ernest Martin and Earl Williams on the chart with Meredith, Flurry, and the other Armstrongites, Tkach buries them in obscurity - more revisionism."

It is more than a little bit funny, but Tkach is not the only one who has his own special version of the WCG "Reformation." In letters to their own constituents, the leaders of Azusa Pacific University, where the new Ambassador Center is located (see AR66), have been giving themselves much of the credit for Worldwide's "Reformation." And before his own fans Hank Hanegraaff, radio's "Bible Answer Man," has been claiming most of the credit for Worldwide's transformation. Yes, Worldwidiers of late have had many angels of light - each with their own version of historical "truth."

Armstrongism Unveiled at Last

None of the above is meant to suggest that the Tkach book is a complete fabrication. Much of it is undoubtedly accurate. Furthermore, in those chapters where Tkach deals most directly with the theology of Armstrong, Tkach actually provides a fair amount of new data about HWA that is quite valuable.

For instance, he admits it really is true, as many HWA critics have claimed, that HWA's theology was eclectic. Virtually every doctrine that was once claimed to be unique to Armstrongism was actually lifted from some other denomination. (One exception is the "born again equals spiritually conceived" doctrine which Armstrong apparently devised himself.) Tkach names a number of those sources HWA drew upon and even shows that when HWA claimed God had revealed "new truth" to him, it often meant that he had read of the idea in the writings of some other preacher. Tkach shows how in the twenties, HWA had actually attended a Baptist Church for a time, and how he had been influenced by the writings of a number of evangelical preachers including Charles Finney.

Tkach reveals that, contrary to what WCG officially taught in later years, HWA really did once consider himself to be "God's prophet." And on at least one occasion, HWA actually did publicly proclaim, "I am Elijah!"

The Truth book contains many little revelations: Tkach Senior was born in 1927 (just as AR has said, not in 1926 as Tkach Sr. had claimed). Tkach Sr. was once miraculously healed of an ulcer condition, thus allowing him to indulge his taste for hot chili. The WCG has developed a working relationship with the Foursquare Gospel Church and the Missouri Synod Lutheran Church. Tkach thoroughly understands the psychological concept of "cognitive dissonance" (p. 149) - the technical term for Orwell's "doublethink." Tkach says there are churches in existence that are "Sunday Sabbatarian." Roderick Meredith is a false prophet. And many of Tkach Jr.'s old friends are absolutely convinced he is demon possessed (p. 73).

But of all the revelations provided us by Tkach, the one that will probably shock Armstrongites the most is found in the first endnote for chapter twelve. There Tkach makes the startling claim that he has written documentation that in the late 1920s, when HWA was already preaching in seventh-day churches, he was actually persuaded that there really was no biblical requirement for strict sabbath observance. Here is an excerpt from that HWA document:

In a word, Mr. Dugger, my present status on the question is just this: It now appears to me that the Bible says the Sabbath is abolished, ended, and done away. That, so far as Divine Command is concerned, there IS NO SABBATH.

Tkach also claims to have another document from the same era in which Armstrong is supposed to have written:

Paul said we are not under the law. I have studied this from every possible angle, and tried every possible interpretation. And I cannot persuade myself that the plain, obvious meaning Paul intended to give us by that statement was anything except that we are not under obligation to obey the Mosaic Law, including the Ten Commandments.... Paul's writings, in other words, appear to confirm the idea that God's Law means supreme love to God and equal love to one's fellows, and not specifically the Ten Commandments at all.

As far as we know, Tkach has not made the above two documents available for inspection by independent researchers, so doubts about their authenticity will linger in the minds of many. Nevertheless, if they are genuine, it would suggest that HWA had two theologies: an exoteric one for his sheep, and an esoteric one for himself (compare James 1:8). Or as Tkach euphemistically puts it in his book, "Herbert Armstrong himself was a very complex man."

Justified Lies

Tkach's Truth book, itself, is a rather complex affair. For by sitting now in Herbert Armstrong's chair while simultaneously tearing down Armstrong's mystique and doctrinal edifice, Tkach has put himself into what many perceive is a hopeless ethical dilemma. On page 21 Tkach makes this admission:

One of our greatest challenges has been trying to explain these doctrinal reforms to outsiders while maintaining our credibility internally, and some groups have greatly hindered our efforts by their reporting.

How were Tkach and company able to get around this problem? Strangely, Tkach already gave away the answer on the previous page. There he described an interview he and Feazell supposedly gave to Christian journalist Lorri MacGregor. According to Tkach, the experienced cult fighter was distrustful of the two men. Tkach then describes a stressful moment in the exchange when the skeptical journalist blurted out:

"Tell me, do you believe in 'justified lying'?" .... "Do you believe you can legitimately lie to someone who is not an authentic believer?"

"Certainly not," Mike Feazell replied, "We were far too self-righteous for that!"

And suddenly she warmed up to us.

Notice the word that we have underlined above and how cleverly the issue under discussion was sidestepped. MacGregor asked about a present doctrine or policy. Feazell did not really provide an answer to the question that was asked, but only responded by making a claim about the WCG's past. But even there he is not telling the whole truth. Those who were in the WCG in HWA's era know that while the WCG was legalistic and self-righteous, there were many deceptions that were perpetrated on "the world," in order to effectively carry on "the Work." Many old-timers can recall, for example, how they received free "educational literature" from Ambassador College for years before they discovered that behind the college there was really a church organization that was actively proselytizing. Tkach continues:

Lorri explained that she had to ask the question about "justified lying" because she is a former Jehovah's Witness, and members of that group reportedly sometimes engage in the practice. ("Justified lying" assumes that nonbelievers do not deserve the truth, and therefore believers can lie to "outsiders" if it serves the purposes of the group.) Once Lorri understood how legalistic our church had been through the years, it made sense to her that justified lying would never have been accepted, let alone encouraged among us. We had a truckload of problems, but justified lying wasn't one of them!

There is absolutely no reason why a legalistic organization cannot also hold to the practice of "justified lying." The U.S. Central Intelligence Agency is globally famous for it. And those of us who worked for the WCG in the sixties and seventies know from personal experience that the WCG practiced it. Thus the above statement by Tkach is untrue. If we can assume that the one who made it is not entirely deluded, but gives himself some justification for making what he cannot help but know is a lie, then Tkach's statement, itself, is a marvelous example of a very contorted, but very real, "justified lie."

We suspect justified lying comes into play in another very important part of Tkach's Truth book. He tells of HWA's hypocrisy in regard to his old anti-medicine teachings. But, claims Tkach, before dying, HWA told Tkach Senior that "things needed to be changed" (p. 107). Junior readily admits (p. 65) that Armstrong may have been referring to only the church's healing doctrine. But, in the polemical writing of the next paragraph, he says there was no way for HWA's successors to determine precisely what HWA really wanted changed. So, Tkach claims, they were forced to embark on a campaign of biblical research "to identify, if possible, what changes Mr. Armstrong might have had in mind before his death." Therefore, according to this line of reasoning, the massive changes that the Tkachs have made since HWA's death were actually done to carry out HWA's wishes. In effect, Herbert Armstrong made them do it!

Tkach tells of how Garner Ted Armstrong had tried to initiate minor doctrinal changes in the WCG during the 1970s in the form of what was then called the Systematic Theology Project. Tkach writes, "The Systematic Theology Project (STP) was actually one of the most positive steps the WCG had ever taken." But, he acknowledges, the conservative wing of the ministry distrusted its authors and disparaged the project, saying STP stood for "Slowly Turning Protestant." Tkach admits that the STP resulted in HWA finally disfellowshipping his son Garner Ted for his "liberalism" and "modernizing" tendencies. So while Tkach claims that he and his father had no idea what HWA meant when he said "things needed to be changed," there was plenty of evidence as to the kinds of changes HWA did not want made.

Lobster as Christian Symbol

Tkach devotes a whole chapter to what he now calls his father's Christmas Eve sermon of 1994. Tkach Jr. points out that the immediate effect of the sermon was that many members ran out to restaurants and gorged themselves on lobster. This, Tkach feels, was a good thing because it was symbolic of their new-found freedom in Christ. Writes Tkach:

One friend, a longtime church member, ordered a plate of mussels. Every insect in the ocean was on his plate. And you know what? It really didn't trouble me at all. I've tasted shrimp, I've tasted pork, I've tasted just about everything now.

Although it shows that Tkach can be less than charitable at times, some of the more entertaining parts of his book are where he takes swipes at perceived rivals such as David Hulme (p. 52) or puts down the hypocritical behavior of evangelical clerics such as Dr. Joseph Stowell (p. 60). Sometimes Tkach also displays an above-average wit. He refers to Flurry's Philadelphia Church as a "militant church of God" that is "a snapshot of the WCG in the 1950's." And Meredith's Global Church is "a snapshot of the WCG in the 1960's." Hulme's United bunch - which Tkach says has already watered down one of HWA's so-called essential doctrines - is "a snapshot of the WCG in the 1970's." That's not only very funny; it's also very true.

One of the funniest parts of Tkach's Truth book comes at the end of the last chapter. There Tkach relates the story of one evangelist who felt that as Tkach Sr. was giving his so-called "Christmas Eve" sermon in 1994, Herbert was surely up in Heaven watching it all and leading the cheers for Tkach finally bringing the New Covenant to the WCG.

Even funnier, however, is the way Tkach prefaced that last chapter about "The Enigma of Herbert W. Armstrong." Tkach called time out from his narrative to give an "Advisory" warning to those about to turn the page to the next chapter:

To all current or former members of the Worldwide Church of God:

PLEASE READ THIS FIRST!

This chapter is not written to attack or belittle Herbert Armstrong in any way. I will not dare to judge the quality of his spiritual relationship with God...

What makes Tkach's "Advisory" so hilarious is that by the time the reader gets to it, Tkach has already given us enough solid evidence to conclude that HWA was a duplicitous, conniving, scripture-twisting hypocrite who was unconcerned with either the physical or spiritual well-being of his followers, but was motivated almost entirely by egocentric empire building and self-aggrandizement.

The New American Hero

From his own comments (p. 168), we see that Tkach's book is aimed toward at least two audiences: (1) evangelicals whom Tkach wants to convince of the WCG's new "orthodoxy" and (2) current WCG members whom he wants to win over more fully to the governing theology he has decided upon for them. In reality, however, there is a third audience: former WCG members. Much of the Tkach book, and perhaps its most effective parts, are aimed at the 30,000 Tkach estimates have left Worldwide for the Armstrongite offshoots and the 40,000 he estimates have left Worldwide but have yet to join another group (p. 105).

But in addition to trying to reach those three audiences, there is one other thing that Tkach is attempting to do with his new book. He is trying to position himself and his personal ministry within the spectrum of Christian product marketing. That can be seen not only from admissions in the book (see pp. 104, 194-6), but also from the book's advertising campaign. It is rather remarkable to read in the promotion blurbs, for example, how Dr. D. James Kennedy sees the WCG's change as "far more intensive than those that brought about the Protestant Reformation." And Dr. Gordon E. Kirk of Lake Avenue Congregational Church considers WCG's transformation, to of the most dramatic works of God of the century." He even compares it to Paul's conversion on the Road to Damascus.

The use of such extravagant claims hints at what niche in the Christian marketing world Tkach is hoping to carve out for himself: He will be the new "American religion hero," the savior of whole churches, a voice from the wilderness of the cults bringing fresh recruits to the evangelical army of God.

Many who knew him ten or twenty years ago tend to dismiss Tkach as a lightweight. They overlook the fact that he is bright, has an accredited MBA, is a reasonably good speaker and writer, has an educated and talented inner circle of advisers and executives, will have plenty of cash to work with as soon as the college properties are sold and, not insignificantly, is skilled at projecting sincerity while simultaneously being politically calculating. His critics should not be too quick to write him off - especially when you consider how many gullible people there are out there.

Incidentally, Tkach's Transformed by Truth is published by Multnomah Books and sells at Christian bookstores for $19.99. Even Worldwide members are not being given free copies.

Not Everyone Fooled

In Apologia Report, the online theological weekly (Vol. 2: Number 28), there was recently this comment:

After looking over the content summaries of Ambassador Report on the Web, it strikes me that Personal Freedom Outreach may be the only evangelical countercult organization in print that could be considered in possible agreement with a significant amount of Ambassador Report's consistent criticism of the Tkach administration now behind the WCG. Could it be that the evangelical church is too uncritical regarding the issue of the WCG's "move to orthodoxy"?

With the acceptance of the WCG by the National Association of Evangelicals, most Christian churches are now assuming that the WCG is a reformed denomination that no longer has cult characteristics. However, not everyone has been fooled. There are still a few countercult organizations around the world who remain skeptical about Tkach's new WCG. For example, in the April edition of MacGregor Ministries News & Views, Lorri MacGregor wrote:

In some ways [the new WCG] is a kinder, gentler church, trying to heal itself from all the turmoil and find its way into the solid mainstream of Christianity. In other ways its structure remains authoritarian when compared to other Christian churches.

Because of lingering beliefs set in place by Herbert W. Armstrong, the appointment of the Pastor General of the WCG is done without any input by the members. The Pastor General has the power to appoint his own "Corporate Governance." He also appoints his own Advisory Board of Elders and controls the bylaws of the corporation. Dissenters in leadership positions have no recourse except to leave or be expelled. Local congregations have little or no voice at headquarters. Many have expected a change in this format, but a decade and more has passed with little progress in this area.

That is one of the main reasons why we still consider the WCG to be a cult. It may be only a Tkach cult now, rather than an Armstrong cult, but it is still a cult. So when we read in Tkach's Truth book about how Mrs. MacGregor seemed to be endorsing the new WCG, we wrote her and asked what was up. Here was her reply:

I was not a happy camper when I read Tkach's comments in his book. After all, I went to them with 22 hard-hitting questions I had compiled from our WCG correspondents. They did give me written answers to those. Over lunch we had some casual "table talk." Apparently he reported his version of this. I said we would continue to monitor the fruit of the church and while I have cautiously encouraged them in their move to doctrinal correctness, I have never "endorsed" them.

Who Will Get the Real Estate?

Sources within the WCG say that the Tkach Company appears to be closer to selling off its Big Sandy, Texas properties and maybe even its Pasadena, California properties as a prelude to building a new Tkach Center somewhere else. A number of prospective buyers apparently have expressed a desire to make a deal. Nevertheless, it looks as though Worldwide will not get the kind of cash it had hoped for.

Worldwide's Texas real estate seems to be worth only about $30 million in the current market. A possible buyer appears to be an organization planning to build a military academy called the Southern Military Institute. Despite the speculations of some close to Garner Ted Armstrong, it does not appear that any conditions or covenants on the deeds to the land will prevent an outright sale.

As for the Pasadena properties, experts tell us that although there has been a slight improvement in the Southern California real estate market of late, the Pasadena real estate will sell for considerably less than the $250 million the WCG had hoped to get. Insiders say that Worldwide's agent is talking to at least one potential buyer about a sale price in the range of $100 million to $150 million. Who the buyer might turn out to be is not certain. But a number of religious organizations have apparently taken a look at the property. One religious celebrity who has been seen on the Pasadena campus is a Dr. Hoeh look-a-like, Jack Hayford. He pastors the Church on the Way in Van Nuys, California, besides having a popular television ministry.

Who Will Get the Music?

When the WCG's financial problems brought an end to the Ambassador Auditorium concert series in 1995, many music aficionado's lamented the loss of the concert venue often lauded as the finest on the West Coast. For 21 years the Auditorium had drawn many of the world's most acclaimed performing artists: Arthur Rubinstein, Beverly Sills, the Juilliard String Quartet, the Kirov Ballet, the Dance Theater of Harlem, Andre Watts, even Bing Crosby.

Because the Auditorium was smaller than most big-city concert halls, its limited seating capacity could not produce sufficient revenues to pay the high fees demanded by worldclass artists. The only way such outstanding artists could be brought to Ambassador was through huge subsidies provided the series by the WCG. Thus in a very real sense, it was the tithes of WCG members that were supporting the fun of a relatively few in Southern California. Another fact not generally known to either the concert-going public or even to many who performed there is that for 21 years virtually every performance in the Auditorium was recorded. Today in Pasadena the WCG has over 900 boxes of high-quality audio and video tapes of performances at Ambassador Auditorium.

Before the concert series ended in 1995, the WCG's leaders had actually planned to just give the collection away to an educational or cultural institution. The Huntington Library was considered, but they turned it down for lack of storage space. Then at some point Stanford University was chosen by Tkach Sr. as the institution to get the archives. The collection was boxed for shipment, but then a legal hitch developed. Sensing that copyright or other legal problems could one day develop regarding the collection, Worldwide asked Stanford for an indemnification clause in their contract. Stanford, not wanting to be stuck with legal expenses for something Worldwide may have done in the past, refused. Thus the deal was called off and the tapes still sit in storage in Pasadena. WCG insiders say that the fate of the archives will be decided after the Auditorium is sold. Some wonder, however, if Tkach Jr. may not have come to view the tapes as a potential source of income.

The collection is unquestionably worth a fortune. Already some of the tapes have been mastered and released commercially to the public. "Jakob Gimpel at Ambassador," a Chopin recital by the late pianist is now available on double CD and sells for about $32. Arthur Rubinstein's "Last Recital for Israel" is available on both CD and video and has been one of the best-selling classical recordings of the last few years. It is very likely that many other potential best sellers exist in Ambassador's trove of tapes. And it will be interesting to see what eventually becomes of the collection.

Who Will Get the Money?

With many people becoming increasingly suspicious that before long there may not be any Worldwide Church of God in existence, we are getting letters from readers asking what will become of the remaining assets of the WCG. Here is what we know at this time. On June 7, 1987, unbeknownst to the WCG's membership, and less than two years after the death of church founder Herbert Armstrong, the WCG filed with the state of California papers titled "Restated Articles of Incorporation of the Worldwide Church of God." Signed by Joseph Tkach Sr., Chairman of the Board, and by Gene Michel, Assistant Secretary, the document in Article VI states:

In the event that the corporation's charter is surrendered to, taken away by, or revoked by the Association, the corporation shall be dissolved.

Upon the winding up and dissolution of this corporation, after paying or adequately providing for the debts and obligations of the corporation, and after compliance with Section 680 of the California Religious Nonprofit Corporation Law, the remaining assets of this corporation shall be distributed to one of the following organizations, corporations, trustees or other entity. In the order of their preference as listed:

A. The Association, or in the event it is unable to take title for any reason, then to

B. The individual members of the Advisory Council of Elders of the Association in trust for religious purposes, as exemplified in the Bible as defined and as expounded by the Association, or in the event they are unable to take title for any reason, then to

C. The organization, corporation or trustee or other entity supported by the Pastor General of the Association, or in the event such power or appointment is not valid for any reason, then to

D. Ambassador College, a California nonprofit corporation.

Of course, there is no longer any Ambassador College. And a check with the Los Angeles County Assessor's Office revealed that all Pasadena properties formerly owned by Ambassador College, Inc. have some time ago been quietly transferred over to the Worldwide Church of God, Inc.

Most lawyers or government officials casually looking over the filed legal document might not find anything too suspicious. And they probably would not guess that by calling the document a "restatement," Tkach and his lawyers were able to avoid a vote by the entire church membership. To most it would probably appear that the WCG Corporation is the means by which the WCG Association's assets are protected. If the Association (who we might call "The People of the Church") decides it does not want the corporation to manage the church's assets and there is a severance between the corporation and the association, then a sale of the assets would, under section A, result in those assets going back to the Association ("The People of the Church").

But, notice the phrase, "or in the event it is unable to take title for any reason..." There is the catch.

Because control over the WCG Association's collective mind lies with Tkach and his propaganda team (who have the church's mailing list and sufficient liquid assets to wage propaganda campaigns and corporate legal warfare), Tkach and his inner circle have not only the means to initiate a legal severance between the association and the corporation, but they might also have the means to insure that the WCG Association ("The People of the Church") will be "unable to take title" for some reason.

What could that reason be? Even though he sits as Pontifex Maximus at the top of the WCG's hierarchy, Tkach may not be able to simply disfellowship the entire membership of the WCG Association without raising the eyebrows of some judge down the line. But what if he could get the lay membership to take themselves out of the Association? Believe it or not, even as this is being written, sources still in the Tkach organization have hinted to us that Tkach is about to set in motion events intended to do just that. If there is no WCG Association, or if it is in total disarray, then Tkach and his small inner circle will, by law, be given the authority to distribute the remaining $200 million-$300 million in assets to whomever they choose!

Under the language of Section B, above, Tkach and the inner circle would ostensibly have to use assets "for religious purposes," but such a condition can be gotten around quite easily. There would be little standing in the way of Tkach & Co. taking what assets remain and using them for some nominal nonprofit religious purpose such as their Plain Truth Ministries or even for some entirely new religious organization. You can be certain that Tkach and the vengeful "Gang of Four" will be amply provided for under any reorganization plan. Incidentally, such a chain of events as we describe could be blocked by appropriate actions, but not one member of WCG or its offshoots has yet thought to ask us how.

Finally, we found it interesting that the above Restated Articles were filed by the WCG in 1987. We were recently informed that in that same year HWA's attorney of old, Stanley R. Rader, was again quietly retained by Tkach Sr.'s organization with a contract that extended at least seven years. During those years, the majority of WCG members were misled by Tkach Sr. into believing that Rader was long gone. In his last years HWA clearly indicated he wanted Rader kept away from all WCG power and influence.

However, in his new book (pp. 77-78), Tkach paints Stanley Rader as a humble servant of Christ whom Herbert Armstrong strongly defended against his detractors and who, by winning against the forces of darkness in the famous California versus WCG lawsuit, saved not only the WCG, but every American's right to free expression of religion. What Rader has been doing with the WCG the past ten years is anybody's guess.

Tkach's Message for Us

Joe Tkach was recently spotted shopping near Pasadena while wearing a T-shirt that said, "The Harder I Work, The Luckier I Get." It's an ironic proclamation from someone who inherited his wealth and who attacks Herbert Armstrong for having taught "salvation by works."

Aussie Murder Update

In our last issue we reported the murder in Australia of Mrs. Gay Lock apparently by her husband Russell Lock, a WCG member and employee. We have since learned that at the time of the murder Mrs. Lock was a WCG "deserter" who had begun fellowshipping with an Armstrongite breakaway group. A number of readers in Australia who had personal information regarding the tragedy wrote us and filled in some details of the case. One wrote:

Gay's murder is a tragedy for all concerned. Russell Lock's parents are such a lady and gentleman, very quietly spoken, kind and hospitable.... Russell Lock was persuaded to leave Bricket Wood before graduation [more than two decades ago] to work in the Australian office of WCG. You may recall his time in Pasadena in the early 1970s. He even appeared on the cover of the WCG booklet "How to Have a Happy Marriage."

Another reader, who also wishes to remain anonymous, wrote:

When the murder occurred, Russell's mother Barbara was away in Japan at an art exhibition. Barbara knew nothing of the murder until she arrived back in Brisbane on the Friday afternoon when her family broke the news. It was the following morning that Russell went to the police and confessed to the crime and produced the hammer he used to perform one hard blow to the head while Gay was sleeping.

Naturally all the amateur sleuths around the place are busy trying to create a scenario. Those still in Worldwide hope the verdict will be that Gay had cancer and it was a mercy killing. I would like to think that was so for the sake of Barbara and her husband, but that would only be wishful thinking. The more likely scenario is the fact that Gay had left Russell a couple of times because of the church, while Russell was so steeped in Tkachism, Gay spurned it and got out. I have been told that Gay was heading some Bible Studies for women who left Worldwide. Someone suggested that John 16:2 had to be correct and that Russell really believed he was doing God a favor by killing Gay. None of the hierarchy from Worldwide were present at Gay's funeral. The service was conducted by the group of women Gay was leading.

Russell is being held in the remand section of the Arthur Gorrie Correctional Centre awaiting [further proceedings]. In that same centre is one David Smith being held on a charge of robbery with violence. He was born into the WCG to parents who are still in the church. In the company of others, he was involved in the robbery of a bank in Moorooka, a Brisbane suburb. No one was killed in the gunfire, but an innocent woman who happened to be in the wrong place at the wrong time is now in a wheel chair. She has a bullet in the spine which they claim is too dangerous to move. While she remains alive they can't prove that the bullet came from either David's or the policeman's gun.

Friends of the Lock family say that the presiding judge in the case has found Russell Lock mentally incompetent to stand trial at this time. Nevertheless, he still faces a number of hearings, a possible trial, and perhaps sentencing at some point. He is being held in the psychiatric section of the jail which was described by one friend this way:

He is being held in a top security remand prison where one stays till trial and subsequent sentencing. There is razor wire all over the place, dogs sniffing visitors for drugs, and guards everywhere. You have to take off your belt, your shoes are X-rayed, and no money, no pens, no identification are allowed in.

Other friends who have visited Lock say he claims not to have any memory now of what happened on the fateful night. Whether his mental condition will ever improve enough that the judge will declare him competent to stand trial remains to be seen. However, whether he remains in such psychiatric and legal limbo for the rest of his life, or is found competent to stand trial for a homicide he has already confessed to, in a way seems almost a moot question. It is unlikely that any disposition of the case could entirely remove the pain that the tragedy has wrought upon the Lock family, their churches, and their friends. And, of course, there is an innocent woman who is now dead.

The Varieties of Religious Experience

One of the great classics of American scholarship is The Varieties of Religious Experience: A Study in Human Nature by William James, widely regarded as the greatest American philosopher of the early twentieth century. In that work, often described as the most important work on religion ever produced in America, James attempted to make sense of the wide range of religious activities engaged in by various cultures. It is too bad that James is no longer with us. He would have a field day studying the incredible variety of religious beliefs and practices now sprouting up both in Worldwide and among those who have left it. And certainly it would take someone with much knowledge of the human psyche to make complete sense out of what is happening. It really is time to call in the shrinks.

One of the theological battles that Herbert Armstrong fought for decades was over what he sometimes described as "emotionalism." HWA had a strong bias against both sentimental Christianity (anything that portrayed Jesus as having a sweet or feminine nature) and "Pentecostalism" (speaking in tongues or "holy roller" public displays). HWA's rather formal approach to religion still persists in a number of WCG offshoots. A good example is the Global Church of God. Notice this excerpt from the June 26 co-worker letter of Roderick Meredith, Global's Pastor General:

It is imperative that we realize that biblical Christianity - true Christianity - teaches the Ten Commandments as a WAY of life. Yet, most of professing "Christianity" constantly emphasizes the person of Jesus Christ and almost totally neglects His powerful message about the coming world-ruling Government of God and our need to prepare for it.

Christ's Gospel was NOT about His own person, but about the Kingdom of God.... The true Jesus of the Bible was not a young "smart aleck" who tried to do away with His Father's law!

Now compare that to the opening of Joe Junior's May co-worker letter:

Dear Friend,

Remember the "Jesus People" of the '60s and '70s? It was the time of the hippies. Young people were trying drugs, sex, communes and all sorts of unconventional behavior. They were desperately searching for meaning in life - and some of them found Jesus.

Jesus changed their lives and gave them meaning. They tried hard to follow Jesus' example - even to the way some of them dressed. Some of them wore robes and sandals, walking wherever they went, letting their beards grow.

We may smile at their idealism, but we may also admire it. It is certainly a good goal to want to be like Jesus.

Or, how about this excerpt from "The Truth Will Set You Free" (Plain Truth, March/April 1997), an article by WCG evangelist J. Michael Feazell:

This Easter, I'm worshipping the Lord. He conquered sin and death. He saved my life. He gave me what it takes to be a child of God. Because he's alive, I'm alive in him. I can never thank him enough. I can never obey him enough. He knows that better than anybody. That's why he died and was raised for me. That's how much he loves me. And that's how much he loves you, too.

Clearly, whether for bad or good, a different spirit now pervades the WCG. The kind of "emotionalism" that HWA condemned is being actively promoted by the Tkach team. Even the WCG's youngsters are encouraged to get into the act. In the July WN, for example, there were testimonial letters from youngsters who had attended the WCG's summer camp. One letter from Jeff Feazell, one of J. Michael Feazell's teenage children, began this way:

Thursday night what the speaker was saying was bringing me down. I was having doubts about my faith. I felt as if I never had Jesus in my life. Maybe I hadn't been studying my Bible and praying enough.

When the speaker asked us to come down and accept or recommit ourselves to Christ, I knew I had done it before, but I didn't feel like I belonged down there. When it was over I didn't want to talk to anyone, because I knew they would ask, Jeff, why didn't you go down and accept Christ?

I sat on the floor against a column in the lobby. A friend asked what was wrong, and

I burst into tears and said: "Where did he go? I never had Jesus in my life. I don't know what I believe any more." Other friends came around me, prayed and sang, uniting to bring Jesus back into my life. I saw Jesus in each and every one of them. They even offered to fast me through the rest of the conference. It was like having a bunch of Jesuses all around me.

Back at the dorm I saw a room of people crying out to the Father, thanking the Lord "for bringing our brother Jeff back into your army." Several accepted Christ that night....

To the Tkach team, the above represents an acceptable level of emotionalism. However, there are limits to the amount of emotionalism that they will accept. Earlier this year in a few WCG congregations, there were outbursts of "speaking in tongues." But then in the June WN (p. 4) Tkach made it clear that he would "not allow the gift of tongues in our services." In addition to run-of-the-mill glossolalia, we have also heard of cases of where some during sabbath services have drifted into altered states of consciousness during which they would begin loudly barking like dogs or laughing uncontrollably, or would fall down semi-conscious as though in a stupor. (Actually, when we first heard of this, we recalled some of the sermons we heard years ago while sitting in WCG services and we thought such reactions were understandable.) But, now the WCG has put the kibosh on these types of "manifestations." In the June WN Tkach wrote: "Slaying in the spirit, laughing in the spirit, getting drunk in the spirit and making animal sounds are not in Scripture." Without condemning denominations that encouraged such "manifestations," Tkach made it clear that he did not want such behavior in WCG services. A number who had hoped to liven up WCG services by such practices are reported to have now switched their denominational allegiance to televangelist Benny Hinn (not to be confused with Benny Hill, although there are some similarities).

The Conder Controversy

The large number of theological controversies raging within and between the WCG breakoffs makes it impossible for us to cover all of them adequately. Some of the ongoing debates center on Bible prophecy, the sacred calendar, the ways of calculating certain holy days and, of course, church governance. Anyone wanting to wade into the mire of those debates should get on the Internet or, at least, write to the breakoffs and get enough literature so that a comparison of viewpoints can be made.

One new issue, however, should be mentioned here. The latest controversy to hit many of the Armstrongite spinoffs, one that appears to have many Armstrongite ministers in a panic, concerns the controversial writings of Darrell W. Conder, a professional genealogist who had once been a personal assistant to Pastor General Joseph Tkach Sr. About two years ago, Conder published a book titled Mystery Babylon The Mother of Harlots in which he put forward the idea that many of the customs of the Catholic Church and Christianity in general derive from ancient customs of the pagan mystery religions. Like others who have written on the subject, Conder's views were somewhat similar to those found in The Two Babylons by Hislop. As such, Conder's views were not acceptable in the new WCG and it was about the time that his book appeared that he and WCG parted company. Nevertheless, those views were very much acceptable in the Armstrongite offshoots. And so, two years ago, Conder's first big book got good reviews in the pulpits of UCG, GCG, and other Armstrongite churches and Conder developed something of a network of enthusiastic readers.

After the publication of his first book, however, Conder's historical probings continued and his views began to go decidedly beyond those of Hislop and company. Those new views made it into print in his second book, Mystery Babylon and the Lost Ten Tribes in the End Times. In it Conder not only paints the Roman Catholic Church as sinister beyond anything even Hislop or HWA ever imagined, but Conder now also puts forth the thesis that all of Christianity is a hoax perpetrated by the early Catholic fathers in a Satanic attempt to destroy all Israel through Baal worship. While believing in Anglo Israelism and retaining the Old Testament, Conder now maintains that the New Testament is unreliable. He even rejects the Christian Messiah and claims Jesus is merely a mythic literary creation of the early church fathers.

Of course, such ideas are not entirely new. HWA was referring to such debates when he talked about the "higher critics" of nineteenth century German rationalism. What is shocking, however, is that such issues were not debated earlier in the spiritual lives of so many who have devoted so much of their time, energy, money, and spirit to the Armstrongite churches. As it turns out, Conder's ideas are having a dramatic impact on many in the Armstrongite groups. So much so that some Armstrongite ministers, while usually sidestepping any mention of Conder's name, are finding themselves increasingly having to do battle with Conder's ideas.

Conder's two books (which sell for $19.95 apiece), his free Masada Magazine, and other related writings are published by Commonwealth Publishing, P.O. Box 11476, Salt Lake City, UT 84147-0476. From their Web site <<http://www.commonwealthp.com>> you can download some materials for free. To anyone wishing to study Conder's views, however, we offer this strong caveat: Study some of the writings of his critics, as well. One such critic is Eric V. Snow who writes:

I believe Conder's [new] book is the most thorough going trash imaginable, but refuting it isn't as easy as you may think. Dealing with his arguments on the messianic texts is particularly a challenge - more than you may think a priori.... This guy is real poison, and advocates repudiating Jesus as our Savior, and the New Testament as the Word of God. He wishes to return to some type of Judaism, to the faith of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob.

Mr. Snow, a UCG member who has degrees in marketing, history, and philosophy, has written a rather scholarly, yet very readable, book-length paper titled Is Christianity a Fraud? - A Preliminary Assessment of the Conder Thesis. Copies of Snow's paper, with its abundant citations, footnotes, and a helpful bibliography, can be obtained (for $5 to cover costs) by writing the author: Eric V. Snow, 811 Foote St., Jackson, MI 49202.

Another author whose writings are relevant to the issues raised by Conder is David Whitaker of Enid, Oklahoma. His many years of studying the Hebrew language and the Kabbalah have given him a unique perspective from which those concerned about Conder's thesis will obtain valuable insights. In AR60 we wrote about Whitaker and we mentioned a package of his research papers that were available from him for $10. Since then, Whitaker has updated his index of writings and there are additional papers that may prove of interest. For a complete list of the papers he has available, send one dollar to cover costs, and write: David Whitaker, 710 E. Chestnut Ave., Enid, OK 73701 (tel. 405-237-3028).

Flurry Flourishes

Of all the WCG spinoffs, the one that currently seems to be the most dynamic is Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Church of God (PCG). Bruce Bell of New York writes:

Believe it or not, the PCG has been doing an outstanding job of performing God's end-time commission. All the other broken offshoots are weak and trembling now and are definitely Laodicean. Many ridiculed the PCG, but look at them now: Solvent, powerful, full of grace and truth, imbued with a power from on high!

Mr. Bell's enthusiasm is not shared by all who have checked out the PCG. Eric Bernard of New York has been monitoring the publications and broadcasts of Flurry's organization and he writes:

Flurry praises HWA as the greatest man who ever lived. Then Flurry proclaims himself to be HWA's successor with a "double portion" of HWA's spirit - thus saying that he, Flurry, is twice as great as the greatest man who ever lived. Flurry's followers are deceived, duped, and willingly brainwashed. They are in deep trouble.

Flurry has written articles stressing that, as the only representative of God on earth, his followers must have complete faith in him. He is preparing his church to follow him in flight to "The Place of Safety" - Petra [in the desert of Jordan]. He has not stated this explicitly, but lately many of his articles have strongly implied that at a certain time, God will contact him personally to proclaim the "time of flight." Shades of Jim Jones!

Flurry's Philadelphia Trumpet magazine frequently publishes articles about Jordan. It was even the cover story for his July 1996 issue. And we have learned that substantial PCG money has gone into a number of projects in Jordan as a means of maintaining contacts with high-ranking officials there. Those contacts are apparently intended to serve as a foot in the door for the planned exodus to Petra. Such contacts also impress many PCG members who apparently believe that a one-way ticket to the Jordanian desert will be their ultimate salvation. A trip to Petra is one of the Armstrongite carrots that Flurry offers his devotees. On the stick side, secrecy and, a heavy-handed ministry also come into play. Dr. L. Jackson of Maryland told us:

I wrote a letter to Mr. Flurry and said that as I had been a WCG member, I might like to attend one of his churches. I called the phone number they gave me and a stoic voice informed me they would have to "visit me" first. Then came an avalanche of personal questions. Flurry's new-old church is just like, and maybe worse than, Armstrong's in the '50s and '60s. And, no, I didn't get permission to attend.

The Flurry Gestapo probably did him a favor. Another AR reader, David Cavall of New York, writes:

I was briefly involved with PCG and it was unbelievable. The ministers are arrogant, condescending ignoramuses who are biblically ignorant.... They use subtle and not so subtle methods of keeping you in the organization. They are at least as dangerous as the WCG was in its heyday. They are also getting bigger and richer.

Flurry, who sees himself as having taken on Herbert Armstrong's Elijah mantle, has taken his followers ever further into heresy. Unlike Darrell Conder, who has subtracted from scripture by declaring the New Testament bogus, Flurry has added onto the Christian canon by teaching that some of Herbert Armstrong's writings are de facto scripture. For example, he teaches that HWA's books The Mystery of the Ages and The United States and Britain in Prophecy are as important as the very Bible itself. Of those two works Flurry has stated:

There is a colossal reason why Christ moved us to print both these books.
WITHOUT THEM WE CAN'T UNDERSTAND THE BIBLE OR GOD'S MASTER PLAN! That's how critical they are today! [1/21/97 co-worker letter]

Also appended to the Bible is Malachi's Message, Flurry's magnum opus which is supposed to be the "little book" prophesied in Rev. 10: 10, and whose last seven chapters Flurry equates with the "seven thunders" of Rev. 10:3-4. Flurryites are taught that "MM" is a divinely inspired writing and to encourage its veneration, Flurry now subjects his followers to a Catholic-like catechism whereby his followers repeatedly go through long strings of questions which they must answer appropriately. Examples:

Q: Who fulfilled the Elijah role in this century, and restored all things? A: Herbert W. Armstrong. Q: Whom have the Laodicean ministers truly disfellowshipped? A: Mr. Armstrong (and by extension Christ Himself). Q: Who then is the man who is the spiritual father of the ministers today? A: Mr. Armstrong. Q: Who has replaced Christ as the head of the WCG? A: The man of sin. [etc., etc., ad nauseam.]

As we reported in AR65, Flurry's republishing of many of HWA's works still under WCG copyright was challenged in court by the WCG. A federal district court in California refused WCG's request for a temporary restraining order to block Flurry's publishing of the book and the matter awaits further court scrutiny in Oklahoma. Now, however, Tkach has actually assisted Flurry in his case by putting this chapter nine endnote into his new Truth book:

In February 1997 we filed suit against the Philadelphia Church of God - one of our splinter groups headquartered in Edmund [sic], Oklahoma - to block the republication of Mystery of the Ages. The Worldwide Church of God still holds the copyright to this book, and we contend that no one else has the right to publish it. We feel it is our Christian duty to keep this book out of print... because we believe Mr. Armstrong's doctrinal errors are better off left out of circulation.

This statement may initially seem odd because it essentially admits a major Flurry contention, namely that Tkach does not want HWA's theology disseminated. But if that is the case, Flurry may well have a First Amendment freedom of religion argument that will prevail as regards his republishing and distributing the book. Why then would Tkach's lawyers allow such an admission in print? It could be that by clearly and publicly stating the above position Tkach not only puts up an acceptable front for the evangelicals, but he also gives Flurry, in an under-the-table manner, the legal means to publish the book. If that seems self-contradictory, recall that the federal judge who refused WCG's request for a restraining order also hinted that although Flurry might be allowed to publish WCG copyrighted materials written by HWA, Flurry may also be required to pay fees to the WCG for doing so. HWA's theological writings may yet prove to be money-makers for Tkach!

The House of Yahweh

While Flurry's PCG may appear to be the most extreme of the WCG offshoots, it is not. The one group that is probably the scariest of the lot is the House of Yahweh. This bunch is led by a former Abilene cop and rockabilly bandleader named Yisrayl Hawkins who, during his days as a WCG member, was known as "Buffalo Bill" Hawkins. His old moniker was an appropriate one.

Hawkins claims that his arrival was predicted in the Bible and that he is one of the Two Witnesses of Revelation. (Who the other Witness is we don't know.) Like the old WCG, Hawkins teaches that we are right now very close to the end of this world and he likes to set dates. Supposedly we are within three years of "the end" as the clock started running with the signing of the Palestinian-Israeli Peace Accord. Like most Armstrongites, Hawkins' followers keep the seventh-day sabbath and the Old Testament holy days. But what makes this group so scary is both its ultra-authoritarian leadership and its open militancy. The House of Yahweh headquarters sits in a well-guarded 40-acre compound in Abilene, Texas. On holy days when Hawkins speaks, he is surrounded by a phalanx of armed guards. Part of his message is that as one of the Two Witnesses he will have supernatural power to bring tremendous destruction to the whole planet. But still, he needs the guards.

Hawkins has built up his following through buying time on public-access television and by effective use of the Internet (he is at <http://www.yahweh.com>). Those who get hooked are instructed to use The Book of Yahweh - a special edition of scripture which contains a number of unique readings inserted by Hawkins. The Yahweh name for God is preferred, but of the other biblical names - El, Elohim, Adonai, God, Lord - these, says Hawkins, are all pagan titles that pollute scripture and are actually titles of Satan and other evil beings. And who is Satan? Well, Hawkins answers that in his book Unveiling Satan: Her True Identity. Yes, says Yisrayl, it's a she. In addition to sales of Yahweh books, Hawkins supplements his income by selling mobile homes to his followers. But should they ever leave his flock, the trailer is forfeited to Hawkins without any repayment of money. So total is Hawkins' control over his followers' minds, many of them have pierced their ears as a sign of submission. Even stranger, more than 200 of them have legally changed their names to Hawkins.

Abilene police view the group with alarm. There have been reports of polygamy and the stockpiling of weapons at the compound. So far, however, there has not been an investigation because police fear that any confrontation could swiftly escalate into a shootout. A number of Hawkins' men are former members of the Posse Comitatus, once considered one of America's most violent militia groups.

A number of news organizations have sounded the alarm about the House of Yahweh.

The CBS television program Hard Copy aired an alarming report about them in May 1996 and repeated it earlier this year. Cult watchers we talked to all agreed that Hawkins' cult may be heading for tragedy. As cult expert Rick Ross told us, "There is the potential for another Waco. The House of Yahweh could very well be the next cult to blow, big time."

The Really Way Out

The House of Yahweh bunch is pretty extreme. But, believe it or not, it is not as strange as the religious trip some ex-Worldwidiers are now on.

Des Griffin, an ex-WCG member whose writings are popular in conspiracy buff circles, came out last year with a book titled Storming the Gates of Hell (Emissary Publications, 9205 SE Clackamas Rd., #1776, Clackamas, OR 97015). In chapter 17, Griffin speculates that "premillennial dispensationalism" may have set the stage for a future phony "return of Christ." Griffin wonders if such a hoax might not have some connection to the UFO phenomenon, particularly as associated with top-secret facilities such as Groom Lake (Area 51) some 100 miles north of Las Vegas, Nevada, and at four facilities in the Palmdale/Lancaster/Arvin (Bakersfield) areas north of Los Angeles where development of flying saucers and related technology is taking place.

At first, the idea that people would confuse Unidentified Flying Objects with the Second Advent may seem a bit science fictionish. Nevertheless, in 1983, there actually was a group of ex-Worldwidiers who became obsessed with the notion that flying saucers were coming to take them away. So strong was the delusion, the former WCG minister who led the group actually convinced his followers to quit their jobs, abstain from even marital sex, and wait for the saucers to arrive. Alas, they never did (see AR27).

Now, it appears some WCG exiters are again focusing their attention on UFOs that are supposedly on their way. One ex-member (a highly educated and sincere individual, by the way) puts out an esoteric newsletter called The Earthworks Group Newsletter. The June issue contained these statements:

On April 14th when Donna B. (our channeling lady) and your editor spoke with Anitra, our contact on the starship over our area of western NY, she told us that people would interpret the changes differently according to what they were psychologically and spiritually prepared to accept. Those who were prepared to see UFO's would see silver shuttlecraft coming down to land on Earth. Some people would see what Anitra called "a loving blanket of light encircling the Earth." And some people would refuse to look up and acknowledge that anything different had happened at all!

Alas, months later the silver shuttlecraft have yet to land. But this group has been disappointed before:

In late December of 1996, your editor moved circa 45 miles across the border from our home in southwestern NY to a rented house in a small town in PA in order to be in a position for communications work that Anitra said we would be doing after the landings. This town in PA was on a better ley line than was the town in NY where we were then living, Anitra explained.

But the landings didn't happen in late December, and we had to go back to work at our job in NY after the Christmas vacation.

In another issue, the writer explained that when they prayed "Thy kingdom come," they had "ETs" in mind. This fascination with extraterrestrials and the blending of so-called "ufology" and biblical theology seems to be on the increase among former Armstrongites, just as it is in the general public.

We learned not long ago, for example, that some ex-WCG members are now enthralled with the writings of one Hatonn (it's a one-word name like Cher or Sting). Hatonn, who no one seems to have ever seen, puts out a huge newspaper called Contact from P.O. Box 27800 in Las Vegas (but our investigators have discovered that he and his associates also have a secretive base of operations in Tehachapi, California - by some odd coincidence, both areas lie within or near the mysterious aircraft zones mentioned by Des Griffin in his new book). Hatonn's "ministry" is difficult to describe. Some of his literature seems to be Bible-related and centers on prophecy, yet much of it is incomprehensible, at least to us, and seems to center on Hatonn's claim that he is a channeler for a space alien who is presently orbiting earth in some kind of a space vehicle. This is definitely very strange stuff.

But not as strange as the "ministry" of Mary L. Horton, a former WCG member and the ex-wife of Jerry Horton, the former production manager for the World Tomorrow radio program. In 1992 Mary came out with a book titled Time's Forgotten Words - the Chronicles of OM from Across Time (M.C.M. Publishing Group, P.O. Box 9, Rancho Cucamonga, CA 91729). The book mainly consists of messages she has received from, well... afar. Here is how it is explained in the Introduction to her book:

In the fall of 1990, Mary L. Horton became the recipient of a unique and unusual phenomenon. She began to hear the thought projection of word sounds; however, these word sounds were not in any language she knew or of which she had any awareness.

Surprised and perplexed by these events, Mary transcribed the word sounds by syllables for later review.

At some point Horton consulted with a Hindu educator who told her that some of the words were similar to the Sanskrit language. Later, "Mary began to receive thought words in rhymed verses consisting of three line stanzas in English with highlighted word sounds similar to Sanskrit."

The main part of her book consists of more than 200 pages of these three line stanzas with the first line always being: "Across time your words come to me" followed by two lines ending with words that rhyme. We are told that this three line pattern is supposed to have something to do with the trinity - not just the Christian trinity, but the Buddhist, Hindu, Greco-Roman, Scandinavian-Teutonic, and Sumero-Semitic trinities, as well. And all of this information comes from the OM God. The whole book has a certain rhythmic, almost hypnotic, feel to it. But what does it teach? It's hard to tell. And why would former Worldwidiers find it appealing? Again, we have no idea.

When Time's Forgotten Words first appeared, we were convinced that hardly anyone would really buy the book, particularly with its cover price of $19.95. We were wrong. It's done well enough that chaneller Horton now has two more books out: Time's Forgotten Mysteries and Time's Forgotten Messages! Well, at least the author is not holed up in some Texas compound surrounded by heavily armed militiamen guarding one of the Two Witnesses.

Lit and Links

One ministry that is causing a stir in Armstrongite circles is that of Wade Cox. His writings on the sacred calendar are particularly controversial, but what we have found most informative, and even entertaining, is his two-part cassette sermon on "The Place of Safety." The address to write to is: Christian Churches of God, P.O. Box 369, Woden A.C.T. 2606, Australia.

While the folks at Concordant Publishing Concern have gotten very little attention in AR over the years (mainly because there has been nothing scandalous to report about them), they nevertheless continue to be of great service to hundreds, if not thousands, who have left the Armstrongite churches. One of our long-time readers, Dean Koehler of Texas, recently wrote us:

If any of your readers are interested in the so-called "Bible Code" that has been in the news lately, let me suggest that they take a look at the very different approach taken by the Concordant Publishing Concern. Their choice of texts, manuscripts, chronology, grammar, and other considerations for translation of the Hebrew scriptures are all discussed in detail in the introduction to The Concordant Version of the Book of Genesis. It is available (for $5) in English and German by writing to Concordant Publishing Concern, 15570 Knochaven Rd., Santa Clarita, CA 91335. Web site: <<http://concordant.org>>.

Clyde Walters, 1943-1997

It is with much sadness that we report the passing of Clyde Hamilton Walters Jr. (Ambassador, Pasadena 1970). While Clyde's name has appeared in AR only a few times over the years, he played an important part in the early conception of AR and he was one of our most generous contributors and very best of friends for over twenty years.

Clyde came out to Pasadena in 1967, drawn by the strict theology of Herbert Armstrong. As was the custom of Ambassador College in those days, the student newspaper did a special fall issue in which a small photograph of each new freshman was published along with a few upbeat comments. Next to his photo there was this lighthearted comment:

Clyde Walters from Covington, Kentucky has attended University of Kentucky, worked in a bank with Adrian Smith, the basketball player, and spent time in the service with tennis champion Arthur Ashe. Clyde attempted to apply to Ambassador in 1965 but a letter from the President detoured him into the service for two years.

Upon graduating from Ambassador in 1970, Clyde was hired by the College to work full time in their data processing center. Within a few years, however, problems within that organization led to many, including Clyde, being downsized out of a job. After a period of unemployment and then working for the local Fedco store, Clyde landed what he thought would be a secure and stress-free job with the U.S. Postal Service. He eventually became what some of us humorously called "The Postman to the Worldwide Stars" because for many years it was Clyde who handled the zip 91105 route with its many homes of top WCG executives.

During the years that followed, Clyde, an avid reader and bibliophile, became interested in the labor movement and took evening college classes in labor relations. Then followed a lengthy period of service as a union representative, dispute resolution counselor and arbitrator, an editor for union publications, vice president of local 220 of the National Association of Letter Carriers, and a delegate to national union conventions. Most who knew him well believed he was destined for higher office.

Just a few weeks before his death, in a phone conversation with AR's editor, he talked passionately and at some length about the importance of working men and women remaining dedicated to the union movement as a means of protecting the hard-fought-for rights unionists had won earlier in this century. He said, "A lot of people don't realize that if they don't fight for what they already have, a lot of their rights are going to be taken from them. It's happening all around us already." Maybe it was due to his reading Noam Chomsky of late, but whatever the case, he had never sounded more well-informed, more dedicated, more confident, more energetic. As it turned out, however, it would be our last conversation. On September 6, he called in to work complaining of severe neck pains. Then after being out more than a week, police went to his home in Pomona and found him face down on the floor, apparently the victim of a heart attack. He probably died just two days short of turning 54. He is survived by his mother, a brother, and a sister, all back in Kentucky.

One postscript. When the WCG began its slow downward spiral in the mid-seventies, Clyde was one of those who, very conservative by nature, was utterly appalled that a Christian church would be willing to change many of its foundational doctrines for reasons of income or political expediency. For a time he went through deep disillusionment with not just Worldwide, but all religion. Then at some point an AR friend introduced him to the theology of A. E. Knoch as published by the Concordant Publishing Concern. Clyde would later comment that it was that discovery which helped him to overcome his profound disillusionment and depression. He later said of that time, "For a while I feared that there were just no real Christians left on this planet. But then I discovered there were still some who were totally uncompromising with the Bible. I also came to see that God's power and love are, in fact, much, much greater than almost all churches have imagined." From that point on, Clyde's outlook on life and on all humanity changed and he never stopped growing as a human being and as a Christian.

We will miss Clyde not only for his tremendous generosity to the Report and the affection and loyalty he had for his many friends, but for his concern for the poor, his dedication to the union movement, his years of work on food drives for the homeless, and for his love of the great truths of the Bible. It was undoubtedly that love that helped him to have a rather unique sense of comradeship with the entire human race. While he was certainly someone who had his own strict standards and unbending principles, more importantly, he was one who could look at the down-and-out or the morally challenged, and with genuine sincerity say, "There but for the grace of God, go I."

We take solace only in the assurance that our dear friend has surely gone to a better place.

Letters

Thanks for your quick response in sending us all 65 back issues of Ambassador Report. It made for heavy reading. However, I can honestly say that the truth, however sad and revolting, makes one thankful to have a Just Savior in whom one can truly rely. (Ironically, it occurred to me as I write, it was exactly 30 years ago today that I first heard Garner Ted Armstrong on the radio.)

Reading Ambassador Report helps us to better understand why multiple thousands of converted brethren left WCG over the years; they knew much of what my wife and I just found out in great detail. Like too many in the Church, we were mindlessly ignorant of much of the ministerial misconduct and corruption because we blindly trusted the Church leadership - many of whom were more interested in oppressing and fleecing the flock than in humbly guiding us to become more like our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

May our great, kind, and loving Creator continue to watch over and bless you and your family and your ministry of telling us as it is rather than spinning carnal malfeasance into "God's will." Stay humble and make every effort to continue to write as accurately as possible. I believe God will in return continue to bless your efforts, despite whatever false accusations and perceptions are made against you. As Christians we need to conclusively prove and hold fast to all things that are good, and not let the sins of some cynical ministers - regardless of rank - who claim to represent Jesus Christ, drive us from God's revealed Truth. We have His Holy Spirit and we know better.

In AR66, Ed McKinney wrote, "Hireling ministers become idol worshippers.... most ministers will do almost anything to get their paychecks." That reminds me of something a former WCG minister in Phoenix once told me. He said, "I'll preach anything Mr. Armstrong tells me to, as long as he signs my paycheck! " We found out he later got in trouble for ripping off church funds from a WCG congregation in Tennessee. I guess that Tkach's paycheck, as fat as it was, wasn't fat enough.

-Arizona

One of our friends in Pasadena told us that Mr. Tkach's liberalization of WCG doctrine has led Mr. Tkach's mother, a long-time WCG member, to begin "questioning." They say Mr. Tkach recently had her kicked out of the church residence where she had lived for many years. And that she was forced to move in with her daughter Tanya in Colorado. Tanya's husband, thankfully, is a minister and board member of the sabbath-keeping United Church of God. Why haven't you reported this major story?

-Connecticut

Editor: Because it's not accurate. A spokesman for Mrs. Tkach Sr. and Tanya Horchak explained to us that because of advancing age, Mrs. Tkach Sr. and her children all decided it would be best for her to live in Colorado with her daughter. They said that doctrinal differences played no part whatsoever in their joint decision.

I remember the exact moment, and the feeling of my head swimming, when I first realized HWA was my enemy.... In the WCG we always wondered who "the Beast" was. Stupidly, we thought it was in Germany. But all false religion is wicked (Paul) and beast-like (John). HWA was like "a little horn" (Daniel), with "a mouth speaking great things," and "more stout than his fellows." But, it's "...and shall wear out the saints of the most High" that seems to apply right now!

-Peter N. Griffiths

I was intrigued by your quotes of Sir Winston Churchill's United Europe speeches. His idea of a United Europe functioning under a United Nations is certainly unique. But I am surprised that he would have thought in such an anti-British way.

-Canada

Editor: You can be certain Churchill was not thinking in an anti-British way. Dr. Ernest Zimmerman, who is something of an expert on European history of that era, has pointed out that already in 1943 Churchill was aware and dismayed that the United States was clearly going to be the dominant world power after the war. By 1943 Churchill was already taking a subordinate role to Franklin Roosevelt. Churchill undoubtedly saw a United Europe as Britain's best bet at maintaining some type of leadership role at least in Europe. Such a union would accomplish at least two things for Britain: It would help to prevent another devastating war between Germany and France, and it would provide political and economic allies to the British against growing American involvement in European affairs. Furthermore, as Zimmerman points out, don't forget that Churchill was adamantly opposed to the dismantling of the British Empire. If nothing else, he was staunchly loyal to the Crown.

One other comment. Churchill was not the first one to advance the idea of a United Europe under the auspices of a United Nations. Just a few days ago I came across that very idea in a book written in the mid-nineteenth century by famous Russian anarchist Michael Bakunin. Considering how well-read Churchill was, it is most unlikely he would not have been aware of Bakunin's writings on that subject.

I was reading Martin Gardner's book Science: Good, Bad and Bogus when I came upon some positive references to Ambassador Report. It's nice to know that someone as respected as Gardner thinks so highly of what you've accomplished. Also, in the same chapter where you are mentioned, he makes an interesting point about the religion scene. He says many people today don't seem to want religion that makes any sense. They now seem to want emotionalism and weird beliefs.

Late News

Sources within the United Church of God say that that group is on the verge of a major split. The field ministry is upset over the excessive spending and governance style of the Arcadia, California home office which, many say, refuses to abide by the democratic principle of majority rule. Apparently the home office group is stalling on its move to beautiful Cincinnati. Already church attorney Steven Andrews says he is leaving UCG's employ.

More trouble for Garner Ted Armstrong and his Church of God, International. Posted on the Web this week was this message from Pam and George Dewey, and confirmed by CGI board member Skip Martin:

According to reliable sources, in a startling move this week, the Ministerial Council of the CGI has voted UNANIMOUSLY to retire Garner Ted Armstrong from all responsibilities with the CGI - yes, including broadcasting - with the Board to come up with a retirement package. If he rejects the package, his credentials will automatically be revoked and he will evidently be "out in the cold."

As I understand it, a letter was sent from Tyler to local congregations this week instructing them to not play a Ted tape, but rather one provided by Tyler featuring Vance Stinson.

It doesn't sound like this will be an amicable separation, and Ted has launched a campaign against those who have made this decision.

Evidently, there were recent revelations about some things going on in Ted's life that no one knew about for a long time prior to the massage-parlor episode.

The Sue Rae Robertson case is still slated for trial at some point.

In the midst of such chaos, Richard Nickels of Giving and Sharing continues to call for a national conference of leading Armstrongite ministers to attempt to bring about some kind of cooperation between the breakaway Armstrongite groups now savaging each other.

Meanwhil ... Joseph Tkach Jr. is reported to be on a national tour promoting sales of his new book, Transformed by Truth.

We Need Your Help!

Our last issue, as informative and entertaining as many people said it was, brought in a record low response. One friend suggested to me that by mentioning the positive review of AR at the close of the last issue I may have given the impression of being "one of those smart-aleck Laodiceans who say they are in need of nothing." I hope I didn't leave that impression because that is most certainly not the case! Without the financial support of our readers, this publication cannot exist.

As I have done more than a few times over the years, I have simply borrowed the money to put this issue out. This time, however, I did so without having paid off what I borrowed to do the last issue. In the past, when I have gone ahead like this on faith, things have worked out. I hope that will be the case again this time.

My thanks to those of you who are helping Ambassador Report, and me personally, in these stressful and crazy times.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

April 1998 (AR68)

GTA Ballistic on CGI's Boot

Just in case you haven't heard - January 9, 1998 is a day that will "live in infamy." At least, so says evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong, because on that day the board of directors of the Church of God International-- finally gave him the boot.

As we reported in previous issues, Garner Ted Armstrong (GTA), the son of Herbert W. Armstrong (HWA), the late founder of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) and of the defunct Ambassador University, has been making headlines again because of his sexual peccadilloes. Yet, in spite of a lawsuit charging him with sexual harassment, many articles exposing his sexual indiscretions, and even a video tape showing him cavorting naked in a massage parlor which has been shown at least three times on national TV, until this past fall the board of the Church of God International (CGI) refused to remove the promiscuous pastor from his leadership position in that organization.

In September, however, CGI leaders discovered that Armstrong's sex sins were even more outlandish than had been portrayed in the press. A female member of the church came forward and said that she had been GTA's mistress from 1990 to 1995. That affair only stopped, she said, after the masseuse's lawsuit began and after both Armstrong and his wife called her to ask for her "continued support."

The church leaders, in a message sent to their members and posted on the church's Web site, then admitted: "We now know of several other women Mr. Armstrong has been with sexually since the early 1980s." The board was finally forced to conclude that it is not good to have a minister who is "known as a womanizer."

In November, the CGI board unanimously voted to give Armstrong a retirement package of $125,000 per year in return for a promise to stay out of their pulpits. Church attorney Shelby Sharpe (his real name) strongly suggested to Armstrong that he accept the offer. At that point the board thought they had a deal and there was not even any plan to publicly take back GTA's ministerial credentials. However, they soon began to suspect that GTA was not about to go gentle into that good night.

GTA laid low for awhile and even flew to California for his yearly ritual of New Year's celebrations. But friends in California say they never saw him more depressed. Some who have known him for many years said that he was "completely baffled" as to why fellow ministers could not get over his little problem. While GTA may be baffled, psychologists we talked to have not hesitated in diagnosing him as being a classic case of someone addicted to a bizarre lifestyle, with a wife who is a classic co-dependent, and with both Ted and his wife clearly being in massive denial. GTA never made it to the Rose Parade. He flew back to Texas with something on his mind.

A few weeks earlier CGI's board discovered that Armstrong had been feverishly working behind their backs to discredit them, spreading rumors of having been "set up," hinting at "a conspiracy," and accusing the church board of financial malfeasance. They soon realized that GTA was about to challenge them for a larger share of CGI's tithe revenues. In a January letter to their members, the CGI board lashed back at GTA:

He has turned to fabrication and distortion, imputing motives and making allegations that are self-serving and totally void of the truth. He has told so many "untruths" that it is difficult to know where the truth begins....

Mr. Armstrong's recent letters, filled with innuendo, accusations, and misinformation, have only led to an environment of suspicion, discord, and confusion. His blatant disregard for the truth is beyond the limits of reasonable behavior expected of a minister....

So, on January 9 - according to Armstrong, "a day that will live in infamy" - the board of CGI gave Armstrong the final boot. Back in 1995, CGI membership had peaked at about 5,000. After the massage parlor scandal broke, about half of CGI's membership and about 60% of its ministers left, leaving CGI with less than 2,500 members. Now, after the latest split, only two thirds of that figure remain in CGI, with those that have followed GTA out of International numbering less than a thousand.

Leaders of the shrinking CGI include: Ben Chapman, James Throgmorton, Loren Chamberlain, Bob Tackett, Ken Register, Vance Stinson, Bronson James, and Charles Groce who is serving as interim chairman. CGI still maintains a telecast outreach which is now called The Armor of God. Current broadcasters are Bronson James and Vance Stinson. CGI's mailing address remains P.O. Box 2525, Tyler, TX 75710. Their Web site is: <www.cgi.org>.

Garner Ted Armstrong's new setup is divided between two corporate shells: his new Garner Ted Armstrong Evangelistic Association and a new church dubbed the Intercontinental Church of God. It has been speculated that the new church was named after one of GTA's favorite hotels. Both corporations are operating out of P.O. Box 747, Flint, TX 75762. Their Web site is: <<http://www.gtaea.org/>>. The Evangelistic Association is putting out a television show appropriately called just Garner Ted Armstrong. It mostly airs at inconvenient times on a few small stations. The new Intercontinental Church has a small congregation in Dallas/Fort Worth and small satellite congregations in Seattle and New Orleans. In addition, there are a number of living-room groups around the country that get together weekly to watch GTA video tapes (of him preaching, not the X-rated ones).

Sounding a bit like Don Quixote, Armstrong has described his new work as "the new beginning of the last phase of God's work on this earth for this time." When it was announced that GTA had started an Intercontinental Church, some recalled CGI's official seal of an old helmet with crossed swords, and it was speculated that Intercontinental's new seal would be crossed ICBMs above the helmet of a space cadet. Nevertheless, GTA has settled for a seal depicting a global map beneath a crown, suggesting to some Armstrong's status as one of the world's greatest televangelist clowns and his ongoing reign as the great prince of promiscuous preachers.

United Dethrones Hulme

January was a bad month for more than one ex-WCG minister. On January 20, the governing body of the United Church of God (UCG), its Council of Elders, removed David Hulme from the church's presidency. We asked one UCG insider why, and he responded, "Do you want the short answer or the sordid whole truth? The short answer is David Hulme thought he was Herbert W. Armstrong."

The longer explanation is that last year the UCG Council of Elders (COE) voted to move the denomination's home office from Arcadia, California to Cincinnati, Ohio (see AR65). Even though an independent consulting firm had advised against the move, a majority of the COE thought it was necessary in order to put to rest rumors of continued UCG ties to the WCG. Since then, in spite of the fact that the financial wherewithal to move was found, Hulme did almost nothing to implement the decision. In fact, COE members got the impression that Hulme and his close associate, church treasurer Steven Andrews, were doing everything in their power to see to it that the home office stayed right where it was.

But there were other COE complaints against Hulme. Some suspected that Hulme was attempting to start a cult of Hulme. As evidence of this they point to the fact that there were huge expenditures for a planned UCG television program in which Hulme, in the style of Garner Ted Armstrong, would be the only featured speaker. In pursuit of TV stardom, say his critics, Hulme unilaterally chose himself as the UCG's media spokesman, was overspending church funds, was hiring employees without board permission, was transforming personal views into church policy, was withholding employee salary information from the COE, was refusing to carry out Council decisions, was controlling all UCG publications solely toward cult-of-Hulme goals, was refusing to attend many COE meetings, and was firing employees that were perceived as upstaging him. For instance, Hulme fired Jerold Aust, the UCG writer who consistently turned out more articles for UCG publications than any other writer including Hulme.

Finally, some COE members complained that Hulme was traveling to numerous foreign countries on what was purported to be UCG business, but he had done so without COE approval and with the expectation that his exorbitant bills would be paid for by the UCG treasury. In other words, Hulme had been behaving pretty much the way that Herbert W. Armstrong used to behave. No wonder some say Hulme thought he was Herbert W. Armstrong.

With such an abysmal performance, we would have thought that Hulme would have not just been removed as president, but would also have been immediately removed from the COE. Amazingly, however, after the January decision, Hulme remained as a member of the church's board and at full salary. Robert Dick became interim president, and the behind-the-scenes process was begun for a switch in church administration.

Meet the New Boss

Those of us who have been out of the WCG and its offshoots for a number of years are often unfamiliar with the varieties of governance now found in the Armstrongite groups. About two years ago one of our readers, UCG member Eric Snow of Michigan, gave us this explanation of what church government is like in some of the major WCG offshoots:

The UCG is, as one friend of mine in Global likes to call it, a republic, not a democracy. We aren't congregationalist in our form of governance, but the elders do vote for members of the Council of Elders, on the bylaws, and on doctrinal issues as well as the annual budget. The problem with the WCG's form of governance wasn't hierarchy as such, but an uncontrolled hierarchy with no checks and balances on it. Of course, our moderate [UCG] position won't please either Dr. Meredith and Globalites on the one hand, or the Alan Ruth/Ray Wooten/Norman Edwards congregationalists on the other, but it does seem to be lined up with Scripture when examined carefully. Of course, the Bible is mainly silent on the subject of church governance, but we can see no examples of lay members firing ministers in the New Testament. Neither does a one-man, top-down dictatorship exist either, which even Dr. Meredith admits these days.

Well, how is the UCG republic faring? If recent events in UCG are any indication, a lot of former Worldwidiers are not getting an education in democratic institutions, but they are getting an education in human nature. The UCG's yearly general conference was scheduled for March 7-10 in Cincinnati. But well before the conference important decisions apparently had already been made. Here is the way one of our UCG sources explained it to us in early February:

The question who will be the next president and when has already be answered.

Leslie McCullough will be the next president. He will be selected by the Council of Elders when the general session begins in March. Dennis Luker would like to become the Chairman of the Board. Oh, and by the way, about fifty elders will probably be terminated. The official ruse will be that there isn't enough money. The truth is, some elders are going to be eliminated because they supported David Hulme.

The conference has come and gone. Board member Peter Nathan of England, a Hulme loyalist, resigned. Hulme also resigned from the board and has been replaced by Aaron Dean, described by one Armstrongite as "a spiritual powerhouse who, as the very last and closest personal assistant to Mr. Herbert Armstrong, should have been his successor." Besides Dean, the other members of the board now are: Robert Dick, Leslie McCullough, Victor Kubik, Dennis Luker, Gary Antion, Donald Ward, Leon Walker, Roy Holladay, Jim Franks, and Burk McNair. While Robert Dick, not Dennis Luker, remains as chairman, sure enough, former WCG evangelist Leslie McCullough was elected president. The election result proved convenient for McCullough who, as luck would have it, had purchased a new home in Cincinnati just weeks before the surprise vote. Nevertheless, it was a stressful conference for some. One source reported:

The participation in this year's General Council meeting was not prepaid by the UCG. The coffers were empty and people had to raise the money locally or pay for the trip themselves. Many elders did not attend, which is why on some of the issues, they sent faxes to affirm their decisions. And that is also why church attorney Steven Andrews refused the faxes, and after that Chairman Robert Dick sent out e-mail saying the faxes were okay.

COE members had been bristling as much with Andrews as with Hulme whom Andrews has supported. Just a few months ago the relationship between the COE and Andrews had become so strained that the COE had demanded of him a public apology for what they viewed as his attitude of insubordination. In response to that demand, the only public statement issued by Andrews was a written refusal to apologize. Where that tension will resolve itself is anyone's guess. Andrews, a lawyer, had hinted that he might seek his remedy in the courts. Along with his friend Edwin Stepp, Andrews has now resigned. In the meantime, we are told:

In a recent New Beginnings, there was mention of an attorney hired by the Council of Elders to deal with Steven Andrews. What no one has said is that Dennis Luker is the one who hired the attorney. How was the lawyer found? Dennis Luker looked in the yellow pages of a telephone directory. Just so you know. Advertising in the yellow pages does work!

As for why the COE chose McCullough for their president, one of our UCG informants wrote:

McCullough spends a lot of time on the phone talking to United's ministers about their problems. He promises to do something, but never does. He is very much a status quo kind of guy. For a church that is run by committee for the benefit of the minister class, he is perfect.

In a move some describe as "politically brilliant," McCullough has announced that unless he is reappointed by the board in three years, he will step down. In the meanwhile,

Chairman Dick is spending more time in foreign travel and is, as one member put it, "proving himself dispensable."

Premature Ejection

Is the evolving UCG going to be an improvement on the WCG? If their latest general conference was any indication, the more things change, the more they stay the same.

On their Web site, the editors of The Journal, an unaligned Sabbatarian newspaper put out by UCG members, recently ran an amusing story about how they were treated by the UCG's leaders at their general conference. Editor Dixon Cartwright and writer Bill Stough attended the fourth general conference of UCG in Louisville, Kentucky (not far from Cincinnati, UCG's new home-base). Cartwright had attended all previous UCG general conferences without incident. But this year was different.

According to The Journal, on Sunday, March 8, Cartwright was sitting near the back of the hall with about 650 other people listening to a panel discussion by the COE who were fielding questions from the audience. One elder asked why two of the panel members, Leon Walker and Donald Ward, were listed as being on the staff of the independent paper. A discussion followed during which an elder in the audience, Joel Meeker of St. Louis, rose and addressed the chair, asking, "Is the reporter here from The Journal who is not a member of the general conference of elders here with the permission of the chairman?" Chairman Robert Dick said no, to which Meeker responded, "Then I would request, sir, then, since this session, as I understand it, is reserved for members of the general conference, that he be asked to leave." Chairman Dick ordered Cartwright and his associate to leave. Cartwright refused. Chairman Dick then called for hotel security guards to escort Cartwright and Stough out of the building.

We asked one of our UCG experts what was really behind the strange incident. He pointed out to us that Joel Meeker, besides being a UCG elder, is also editor of the French edition of UCG's Good News, a publication that some view as competing somehow with The Journal. "What many elders don't like about Cartwright's newspaper," he said, "is that it has some independence and often reports unfavorably on United and favorably about some of United's sister denominations. The Journal may be promoting Sabbath-keeping churches as a group, but it is simply not filling a role as a UCG booster. A lot of United ministers want to see it disappear or, at least, be less offensive by not reporting certain facts."

Hulme Exhumed!

Just days ago virtually all Armstrongologists were convinced that the career of evangelist David Hulme was dead and buried. But now we have learned that Hulme is revolting. That is, he is about to lead a new Church of God revolt. Here is the report we have just received from an exasperated UCG informant:

More chaos and confusion! After saying just a few weeks ago that he had no intention of starting a competing church, we now discover that David Hulme may be starting an independent group to be called simply "The Church of God." Original, isn't it? And how will he explain away his previous comments about not planning to start another church? Well, he will say he is not starting another church. God is!

The new movement seems to be picking up a little speed. UCG member Eric White tells us:

Clearly a schism is developing over the home office relocation and "central only" versus "local also" preaching of the gospel. At services our pastor read an April 4 letter from Bob Dick and the Council of Elders condemning this action and the misunderstandings some are evidently promoting during this time....

Someone told me that Mr. Hulme may be setting up a new COO based in Fresno, California. For some time, the standard rumor has been about the United Kingdom branch seceding from the UCG. But the real issue is: Why don't they go join Global, instead of setting up yet one more Church of God organization?

So there you have it. Another split is probably on the way. Already the anti-Hulme forces have dubbed Hulme's followers "the Hulmites" (pronounced: Heoomites) and the dogma of his followers "Hulmitism" (pronounced: Heoomitism, it rhymes with rheumatism).

Meanwhile, Back on the Titanic...

December 4, 1997 was a bad hair day for Joseph Tkach. He awoke to discover that the tabloid *New Times Los Angeles*, just arriving at newsstands, had a major story about his reborn WCG. With a cover illustration of Tkach's bearded face, a tiny church building in his right hand and a screaming puppet crucifix over his left, the article's title was billboarded, "Honey, I Shrunk the Church."

The article by Ron Russell describes a rapidly devolving WCG being destroyed by its leaders. Here are just a few of Ron Russell's revelations:

What makes the implosion of the once-prosperous Worldwide Church of God unusual - indeed unprecedented in modern American religious life - is that Armstrong's followers haven't so much abandoned the church as the church's new leaders appear to have abandoned them. Under the stewardship of Joseph Tkach Jr., a 45-year old former social worker, Worldwide's leaders have set off a stunning exodus.... Among the many who have left are those who view Tkach and his colleagues as opportunists who've commandeered the religion for personal gain. "They stole the church!" declares Aaron Dean, a former close aide to Armstrong....

"I've come to the conclusion that the church under this group exists to perpetuate itself and to make money," says David Covington. Formerly one of Worldwide's top field ministers, he spent 25 years in the organization before resigning last year....

Russell points out how, as a result of the changes he made in WCG doctrine, Tkach "has become the darling of conservative religious talk shows." But, at the same time:

A former high-ranking church official says that Tkach's compensation package exceeds $300,000, including a hefty raise he reportedly was given even as plans were being drawn up to lay off staffers.

Russell is quick to point out that the WCG's top four leaders were given numerous opportunities to answer his questions, but that "Albrecht, the public relations chief, told New Times that neither they nor any other church officials would make themselves available for comment." Russell then discussed the WCG's chaotic financial situation and made this startling observation:

The leaders also refused to publish the church's bylaws until a smuggled copy turned up on the Internet last year. Afterward, the church printed the document in its monthly newsletter. The bylaws confirmed what doubters had long suspected - that Tkach, as head of the church, wields virtually absolute financial authority. Not only does the title of Pastor General denote his eminence in spiritual matters, but as chairman of the church's board of directors, he possesses the extraordinary power to appoint or remove other board members "at any time, with or without cause or notice."

More troubling to some, however, is an obscure document drawn up in June, 1987, the year after the church patriarch's death, and during the administration of Tkach's father. The document, a copy of which was obtained by New Times, amends the terms under which church assets may be distributed in the event that Worldwide ceases to exist. Should that occur, once outstanding debts are paid, the amendment gives the Pastor General exclusive ability to control the assets and to assign them to an entity of his choice. "That's why [the leadership] has been careful to retain a hierarchical, as opposed to a congregational, structure," says David Covington, the ex-Worldwide minister.

December 4 was not just troublesome for Tkach because of the appearance of the New Times article. Later that day Tkach was to be a guest on Larry Mantle's popular radio talk show done at KPCC's new studios on the campus of Pasadena City College. Fortunately, AR staff members, who years ago worked for the station, were tipped off that Tkach was going to appear, and so we were able to get Larry some recent issues of the Report, an advance copy of the Ron Russell article, and a list of suggested questions. For months, Tkach had been touring the country promoting his new book and had been having an easy time on conservative religious talk shows (he was even on giggling Pat Robertson's 700 Club on March 5). But this time Tkach was put in the hot seat.

Tkach probably suspected he might be in trouble when a few minutes into the show Mantle casually mentioned that he, himself, used to listen to the old World Tomorrow broadcasts, had admired the broadcasting skills of the Armstrongs, and that he also personally knew and liked David Hulme. Tkach surely also noticed how Mantle excitedly told his listeners that Tkach headed a church that had changed all its founder's teachings "almost overnight!" But the interview really started to get interesting when Mantle started to question Tkach's motives:

MANTLE: But why not leave the church [properties] for them? I understand that you've gone through what is in a sense a conversion process. You have embraced evangelical Christianity that says you are saved by grace, not by your works.... And that's fine. But why not, you and the others who hold that belief, go off either joining other mainstream denominations or starting your own group and leaving [it] for those who put all their money into this, the Herbert Armstrong church?

TKACH: Well, they're in the minority. We're the majority. And we put all of our money into this too. Ah...

MANTLE: But I thought you'd lost about three quarters of your membership!

TKACH: We've lost about, not only three quarters of our membership, but also three quarters of our income. They took their income and they, ah, they went and started their own work and...

MANTLE: But they would have stayed had your father not made this Christmas Eve, 1994 sermon in which he announced the [changes to be made]. They would have stayed!

TKACH: I can't say that they would have stayed.... Of the total number... of 150,000 people, the majority have stayed. The minority want to hold on to Armstrongism.

Mantle quoted from Russell's article about HWA's excessive lifestyle and the allegations of incest with his daughter (which Tkach did not deny) and then he asked Tkach, with all that known, why he did not distance himself further from Armstrong. "You've been pretty conciliatory," he said. But, replied Tkach, "I don't want to stand in condemnation of Herbert Armstrong," adding with an audible snicker, "I'll let God do that." One caller asked Tkach how his church could still be the Worldwide Church of God because, "Isn't a denomination defined by its doctrines?" And, after all, hasn't he changed all of the WCG's doctrines? Even non-churched radio listeners could see the problem. Then toward the end of the hour-long interview, Mantle's interrogating got quite pointed:

MANTLE: I do want to talk, before we conclude, about control of the church. Again, referencing this New Times story. It is stated in there that you control the board of directors of the church. So you can pick and choose who is going to be the board of the Worldwide Church of God. That board controls the church and its assets. As a result, effectively you control the church's assets. Is that accurate?

TKACH: Ah, not entirely, no. Ah, first of all, I'd mentioned that we are currently in the process of revising our bylaws so that the position I hold is elected by the board. So the idea that I own all the property, or ever have, is absolutely preposterous and false.

MANTLE: Or control it. I don't think anyone is alleging you personally own it. But that, for example, if the property were sold and the church dissolved, that you would be able to dispense that money to the nonprofit organization of your choice.

TKACH: Ah, the way, if I recall our articles and bylaws correctly, the way that they prescribe we would have to proceed is that the board would determine who, ah, who the assets would go to.

MANTLE: But if you control the board then, effectively, you control - at least as your bylaws are currently written - you do control that.

TKACH: But they prevent inurement. I couldn't give them to myself. I couldn't prosper from it myself.

MANTLE: No, but if you had some pet... I mean let's say, for example, you believed in UFO visitations and you decided you wanted to give all the church's assets, I mean millions of dollars, to the UFO Network, there'd be nothing precluding you from doing that.

TKACH: Yeah, I would have to, if the board disagreed under this scenario, I would have to, ah, terminate everyone's responsibility on the board and then do that myself.

MANTLE: Stuff like that has happened before.

TKACH: Yeah. I don't think I would get away with it.

MANTLE: Who would stop you though, if it's in your bylaws allowing you to do it?

TKACH: (Quietly and audibly gulping) My family would stop me.

[EDITOR: At this point we wondered who Tkach meant by "my family." His aging mother? His WCG relatives who are not even on the board? His UCG relatives? The

UFO Network? Perhaps even the Mafia? He didn't say.]

MANTLE: And the bylaws are going to change that. You're not going to have the level of authority?

TKACH: As my book tells in the last chapter, that is something we've said we're going to do. And that's something that we're working on. Ah, yeah. I think it'll be something that we will have completed this year. And when I say this year I mean 1998.

Tkach to Step Down?

It's not likely to happen, but Tkach has been hinting privately that he could, at least ostensibly, step down as President of the WCG. In mid-November the WCG's board began to discuss potential changes in the way it functions. Apparently, Tkach had instructed church counsel Bernie Schnippert to do research into how the church was legally organized with the goal of eventually making changes in the bylaws. Some ideas that Tkach has been playing with include putting a term limit on the Pastor General's service, broadening the grounds for removal of the Pastor General, and the development of a "more collective mechanism for appointing board members and the pastor general."

These sound like sensible ways to bring the WCG more into the Christian mainstream. But many wonder if the WCG's membership is ready for such changes. In fact, some do not feel the proposed changes would accomplish anything other than the complete fragmentation of the WCG as a unified church. Should that fragmentation be accomplished, it could very well set the stage for the transfer of all WCG assets to a new corporation controlled by Tkach and his colleagues.

In the course of the WCG board's discussions of the new corporate direction, Dr. Schnippert explained what is meant in church documents by the term "the Association." Most who would have read the legal documents would have concluded that the term referred to the WCG's lay membership, or at least to its full ministry. Not so, says Schnippert. The way the board looks at it, "the Association" refers only to the WCG's Council of Elders - all of whom are handpicked by Tkach and all of whom can be fired by him at will. Students of European history will notice that, viewed in that light, the WCG's current system of governance is virtually identical to that of the Roman Catholic Church where the Pope handpicks the College of Cardinals and the College then picks his successor. The WCG system is also akin to that reportedly found in some secret societies. We therefore don't hold out much hope that Tkach is serious about implementing changes that would be of real benefit to current, let alone past, WCG members.

Merchandising Christ

Those who know Joe Tkach Jr. personally say that one of his great psychological needs has always been to "fit in," to, be a part of "the world." Some say it was his childhood in the WCG - when he couldn't join all the other kids in keeping Christmas, Halloween, April Fools, "and all the other fool days" (as HWA would say) - that made him feel estranged from the mass of humanity. He has apparently been trying hard to "fit in" ever since. And one way he has been fitting in has been through transforming the WCG into an evangelical merchandising operation.

Many remember the days when it was the Catholics who were big on selling religious trinkets, statues of Jesus and Mary, postcards, and candles. But now, using modern marketing methods taught in business schools (such as the one in Phoenix where Tkach got his MBA), many evangelical groups are merchandising Christ with far more sophistication.

First, there are the "specialty Bibles." These tend to target specific audiences. Some new titles are Rappin' With Jesus which turns the plot to kill Christ into a drive-by shooting, Path to Victory, an athlete's New Testament which comes illustrated with pictures of baseball star Orel Hershiser, friend of the Tkach organization, the Couple's Devotional Bible, the Singing Bible, the Kid's Comic Book Bible, and the Women's Study Bible which includes notes on fertility and menopause. There is even a bulletproof New Testament.

Then there are the modern Christian celebrity books. Unbeknownst to most purchasers of these, however, is the fact that most are ghost-written, and often by non-Christian writers. In "The Scandal of Christian Ghostwriting" (Midnight Messenger, Jan.-Feb. 1997) writer Texe Marrs pointed out:

My investigation of the Christian book world has uncovered the disgusting fact that the majority of books supposedly authored by famous Christian personalities are, in fact, the products of ghostwriters. Both novels and nonfiction books are involved. Sometimes the real writer is recognized in the acknowledgement section or elsewhere in the book, but, most often, he or she is not.

One such ghostwriter who has written many Christian books is Mel White of Dallas. He uses the title "Reverend" but few of his readers are aware that the ghostwriter is a homosexual who pastors a church Marrs describes as "a militantly gay church." Another author who uses a ghost is Hal Lindsey whose book The Late, Great Planet Earth, Marrs says, was actually written by a woman, Carla Carlson, a fact Lindsey has admitted.

Beyond the Christian celebrity books, one can find hundreds of Christian self-help books, some written by "Christian psychologists." Then there are Christian thrillers, Christian bumper stickers, Christian music CDs, Christian jewelry, Christian wall decorations, Christian clothing, and Christian knickknacks (items with religious artwork or with scriptures quoted on them). There are even Christian cereals, Christian cookies, Christian diet books, Christian chewing gum, and a Christian dice game called "Pilgrim's Progress" with dice that have no 6 (the number of man), but do have a 7 (the number of perfection). There are numerous Christian board games; one is called "Bibliopoly." There is a talking Patty Prayer Doll and even Gold Cross Fragrant Pantyhose. Writes Roy Rivenburg in the Los Angeles Times (9/24/95):

What would [Jesus] think of this melding of commerce and Christianity?... today, with religious retailing booming - and secular companies swallowing up Christian ones - some say it is hard to tell whether the Gospel is something sacred or just another brand name. Indeed with the exception of furniture and major appliances, it is possible to outfit an entire home in Christian products - bird feeders to body lotions, luggage to lamps.

To promote the consumption of such "holy hardware" and "Jesus junk," as it is actually referred to by some of its purveyors, there is now a burgeoning Christian marketing movement which among other things has given us "Christian super stores." A fact not generally known to most Christians who purchase Christian products is that not only are fortunes being made in, the new industry, but many of the small Christian companies making and distributing the products are actually owned by large conglomerates which have no interest in religion except for its profit-making potential. For example, Time Alliance, a Christian music company, is owned by TimeWarner, the corporate giant which published Madonna's Sex book. And Zondervan Press, which publishes the top-selling Holy Bible, New International Version - which is the WCG's officially recommended Bible and the version it quotes in all WCG publications - is actually owned by Rupert Murdoch's HarperCollins which also publishes The New Joy of Gay Sex.

Joseph Tkach Jr. wants his church to be a part of this new age of Christian merchandising, and so Plain Truth Ministries was created. Of course, much like the body-building magazines of old which served primarily as catalogues for in-house bodybuilding products, the new Plain Truth magazine functions mainly as a catalogue for Christian products which have ties to the Tkach company.

Plain Truth Ministries, which was founded on money siphoned from the WCG, may very well prove to be a big money-maker for the Tkach marketers. But whether the new marketing methods will also save the church that originally bankrolled it remains to be seen. There is still no committed buyer for the two major WCG properties Tkach is trying to unload. In spite of a renewed emphasis on tithing, the WCG's announced budget for 1998 is 10 percent lower than it was in 1997. Some WCG insiders are now even saying that the WCG switch to evangelicalism may not have been such a great business decision. According to Empty Tomb, a Christian research and service organization based in Champaign, Illinois, giving to evangelical churches is in decline. In a study titled "The State of Church Giving through 1995," the group said that evangelicals were now giving only about 4 percent of their incomes to their churches as compared to about 6 percent in 1968. No wonder Tkach is not focusing his attentions on the new evangelical WCG but is, instead, concentrating on his PTM marketing operation.

In II Pet. 2, the Apostle Peter warned of false teachers whose methods would cause the way of truth to be evil spoken of, and who through feigned words would make merchandise of the church. That word "merchandise" is also found in John 2:16 where Jesus said, "Make not my Father's house a house of merchandise." Some seem to have forgotten that Jesus threw the money changers out of the Temple. He did not teach his disciples to study their methods and do likewise.

European Unity Closer

While the Tkach team keeps their followers' minds focused on loving thoughts and consumerism, the goal of politically uniting all of Europe got a step closer to fulfillment on March 24 when the European Commission officially recommended that 11 countries be allowed to join Europe's single-currency plan, which is set to begin next year. The plan is not without numerous obstacles including high unemployment in many countries and strong opposition in more than a few. Nevertheless, advocates of European union are moving ahead.

At this time, Greece, which wanted entrance into the monetary union, has failed to qualify for entrance. Britain, Sweden, and Denmark could qualify and are interested in joining, they say, but only at a later date. That leaves 11 countries which want entrance now and which have qualified: Germany, France, Belgium, Italy, the Netherlands, Luxembourg, Austria, Spain, Portugal, Ireland, and Finland. Armstrongites still holding on to founder Armstrong's prophetic scenario for Europe will find the following information interesting: According to The World Factbook published by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency, of the 11 countries, Finland (whose population is overwhelmingly Evangelical Lutheran) is the only one without a large Roman Catholic population. In Germany churchmen are almost evenly divided between Roman Catholics and Lutherans and in the Netherlands the number of Roman Catholics are about equal to those of the Dutch Reformed denomination. In all the other countries of the 11, the overwhelming majority of the population are Roman Catholic.

On May 2, European national leaders will meet in Brussels to sign the final monetary union agreement and to resolve one issue that still remains: Who will be in charge of the new central bank.

Many former WCG members, particularly those in Britain, recall the dire prophecies of the Armstrongs and view a United Europe with alarm. As a sign of decline, some point to the increasing ownership of famous British institutions by foreigners. Egyptian Mohammed al-Fayed, for example, seems to specialize in acquiring British emblems. So far he has acquired Harrods, London's most famous department store (HWA always shopped there), Turnbull & Asset, the famous British shirtmaker, the castle of Clan Ross in Scotland, and even Punch, the weekly magazine of satire, cartoons and witty reviews. Now the inevitable purchase of Rolls Royce by Volkswagen or BMW is seen as another sign that Germany will eventually come to dominate Britain economically. With regard to such concerns, a law school librarian recently sent us the following:

The European Commission has just announced an agreement whereby the official language of the EU will now be English, rather than German which was the other possibility. As part of the negotiations, Her Majesty's Government conceded that English spelling had some room for improvement and has accepted a five-year phase-in plan that will be known as "EuroEnglish":

In the first year, "S" will replace the soft "C." Certainly, this will make the sivil servants skip with joy. The hard "C" will be dropped in favor of the "K." This should klear up konfusion and keyboards kan have one less letter.

In the sekond year, there will be growing publik enthusiasm when the troublesome "PH" will be replaced with the "F." This will make words like fotograf 20% shorter.

In the third year, publik akseptanse of the new spelling kan be expekted to reach the stage where more komplikated changes are possible. Government will enkorage the removal of double letters, which have always been a deterrent to akurate speling. Also, al wil agre that the horrible mes of the silent "E" in the languag is disgrasful, and they should go away.

By the 4th yar, peopl wil be reseptiv to steps such as replasing "TH" with "Z" and "W" with "V."

During ze fifz yar, ze unesesary "O" kan be dropd from vords kontaining "OU" and similar changs vud of kors be aplid to ozer kombinations of leters.

After zis fifz yar, ve vil hav a reli sensibl riten styl. Zer vil be no mor trubls or difikultis and evrivun wil find it ezi tu understand ech ozer.

ZE DREM VIL FINALI KUM TRU!!!

Obviously, the talented author of the above has a wonderful sense of humor. But for many Englishmen, behind that humor lurks a reality that inspires genuine fears.

What Will Happen?

That the entire world is now undergoing a profound and unprecedented technological, cultural, economic, and political transformation is no longer even questioned in the mainstream press. The observation that the entire world is in transition is made so often by major authorities in the media it is getting almost hackneyed. We can all sense that the next few years, let alone the next century, are going to bring astonishing changes in our world. But what kinds of changes? And what kind of a world are we heading into? Of course, religionists like those of the Armstrongite offshoots have their own views. But today there are also many bright and educated secular thinkers who offer us insights that go beyond mere religious speculation. During the past year, we surveyed more than two hundred books on the subject and have found about a dozen that are particularly relevant to the question of where we are going. Ironically, while not biblically based, all of them actually contain much that is relevant to both the prophetic literature of scripture and some of the prophetic theories of the Armstrongites:

The Ten

With the collapse of the Armstrong Empire, not only have most Worldwidiers turned their backs on the old Armstrong prophecy teachings, but even Armstrongites are increasingly questioning Armstrong's old notions about "the end time." One part of those old Armstrong doctrines was the prediction that we would see in our lifetime a ten-nation world-ruling empire. Now with the plan for a European Union having gone beyond a ten-nation Common Market, more and more ex-Worldwidiers are making adjustments to their prophetic scenarios and are looking elsewhere for "the ten." Many are leaning toward a world view that very much comports with today's "conventional wisdom" that we are going to see a world united by telecommunications and global capitalism. Many Armstrongites have even swallowed the Pat Robertson idea that we are on the verge of a "New World Order" where a world dictator will be leading us into a world where there will be only one government and only one allowable, and mandatory, Satanic religion.

While to some ex-Worldwidiers that idea is thought to be esoteric to their own religious tradition, one can find quite a few thinkers, even some with very secular views of the world, who believe we are quickly heading toward at least some type of a one-world situation. For instance, William Greider in One World, Ready or Not: The Manic Logic of Global Capitalism (Simon & Schuster, 1997) argues that we are pretty much already there. While he does not write about universal Satan worship, his view of where the world is now and where it is heading is almost as sinister.

But while Greider and others write of a global capitalism, is a truly united world-civilization really possible? One leading scholar who argues that it is not is Samuel P. Huntington, the distinguished Harvard University professor and the author of The Clash of Civilizations (Simon & Schuster, 1997). Huntington writes:

Little or no evidence exists... to support the assumption that the emergence of pervasive global communications is producing significant convergence in attitudes and beliefs around the world. Indeed, this Western hegemony encourages populist politicians in non-Western societies to denounce Western cultural imperialism and to rally their constituents to preserve their indigenous cultures.... The central elements of any civilization are language and religion. If a universal civilization is emerging, there should be signs of a universal language and a universal religion developing. Nothing of the sort is occurring.

While Huntington does not see the world heading toward union, he does view the world as coalescing into cultural or regional blocs framed by religion, history, and language. Looked at that way, Huntington points out how the world is already divided into about ten major geographical regions or civilizations:

1. Sinic - the Chinese
2. Japanese
3. Hindu
4. Islamic
5. Buddhist
6. Western - Western Christianity and its progeny
7. Latin American
8. Orthodox-Eastern Christianity and its progeny
9. African
10. Modern Indian - a mix of Hindu and Islamic

Actually, Huntington adds an eleventh group - the civilization of the Philippines, which he refers to as the Sinic/Western. But when one considers Filipino culture alongside the other ten, one has to suspect that Huntington was attempting to have his civilization chart come out to some number other than ten. Whatever the case, it is interesting that in some ways Huntington's view of the near future, like HWA's, involves a world divided, both geographically and spiritually/culturally, into ten, or about ten, parts.

One final comment about Samuel Huntington. In the 1960s Huntington co-authored The Crisis of Democracy, a research paper that in essence argued there was too much democracy in the United States. That paper was the first one produced by and for the Trilateral Commission.

The Tribes

Huntington is not the only scholar who is dividing up the world in anticipation of the new millennium. In Tribes (Random House, 1992), author Joel Kotkin predicts, somewhat like Huntington, that "race, religion, and identity determine success in the new global economy." But, somewhat different from Huntington, Kotkin, who has been a business trends analyst for Fox Television, a senior fellow with the Center for the New West and the Progressive Policy Institute in Washington, D.C., as well as an international fellow at the Pepperdine University School of Business, is convinced our global economy will increasingly be run by cross-border networks of ethnic-and-religion-based groups who will be ever more tribal and clannish.

Kotkin begins his analysis with the international Jewish community as the prototypical international clan that has a leg up in the business world because of an entrenched network based on shared history and values. Kotkin then goes on to analyze what he sees as the other four leading international networks that will dominate the new global economy: the British (with Anglo-American), the Japanese, the Chinese, and the east Indian. Oddly, while acknowledging that the British, and their Anglo progeny in North America, still control the largest accumulation of foreign investment and most of the world's largest corporations, Kotkin does not envision a never-ending American, or even European, hegemony.

Perhaps one weakness in Kotkin's analysis is that at least two more huge international groups should probably have been added as being predictable economic powers of the near future. For example, the Spaniards within the Spanish-speaking world now wield increasing influence. Regarding Spain, Larry Rohter in The New York Times (2/15/98) wrote:

The explosion of the battleship Maine in Havana harbor 100 years ago Sunday set the stage for Spain's retreat from the last remnants of its empire in the New World, and for the emergence of the United States as a global power. Yet as the American Century draws to a close, a resurgent Spain is once again flexing its muscles in Latin America and pushing aside any lingering memories of "El Disastre" as the Spanish-American War is often called there. If it was the cross and the sword that inspired Spain's initial foray into the Americas 500 years ago, it is the checkbook and the satellite dish that are leading what one Colombian magazine calls "the second Spanish conquest."

Rohter, much in line with Kotkin's thinking, points out that a common language and culture - not to mention membership in the European Community and a prospering Spanish economy - give Spain an advantage in Latin America not shared by those countries' big brother to the north.

A second powerful international network that could have been added to Kotkin's group of five is international organized crime. In Thieves' World: The Threat of the New Global Network of Organized Crime (Simon & Schuster, 1994), distinguished journalist Claire Sterling shows:

No one has benefited more from the political changes of the 1990s than international organized crime. Within the space of just three or four years, the world's great crime syndicates have joined in a planet-wide criminal consortium unlike any in history. A Pax Mafiosa has emerged - an agreement to avoid conflict, devise common strategy, and exploit the planet peaceably together - linking the American and Sicilian mafias, Russian organized crime, the Chinese Triads, the Japanese Yakuza, and Columbia's cocaine cartels. It threatens the liberty, security, and political integrity of the U.S.,

Europe, and all free societies.

For these giants of the underworld, the creation of the European Community in Western Europe and the collapse of the Soviet Empire in the east have erased borders and made the commerce of crime easier than ever....

The drug traffic alone, exceeding half a trillion dollars a year now, is the world's second biggest money-maker, after the arms traffic; and these syndicates engage in both. The interest they have accumulated from investment of drug profits in the last decade is approaching a trillion dollars, according to a European Community estimate.... That doesn't count customary pursuits such as theft, fraud, extortion, gambling, loan-sharking, forgery, pornography, money laundering, and contract killing.

While many governments engage in the same kinds of activities, there are only a handful of national governments that can claim that amount of income and such financial resources. And as Sterling explains it, international organized crime appears to be more organized than many governments. That being the case, it would rank behind only a handful of nations in international power. While not given a chapter in Kotkin's Tribes, the international organized crime network is surely one of the powerful tribes to be reckoned with now.

Kotkin's book is not a perfect crystal ball into the future, but what makes his ideas still interesting from our ex-WCG perspective is that in spite of his academic credentials, his approach to the global economy is quite similar to the way many Armstrongite leaders have looked at the world all along. He sees the world as propelled far less by rational thinking, and far more by tribal, almost "conspiracy-driven," networks which in the coming millennium will certainly make "who you know" more important than ever.

This is not the way many of us remember business school. Nevertheless, Kotkin's book is usually found in the business sections of larger bookstores.

The Beast

Fascism played an important part in the prophetic scenarios taught by Herbert W. Armstrong. For decades, the WCG's founder unflinchingly taught that a revitalized fascism would one day reawaken in Europe and would come to dominate not just that continent, but the world. With the decline of the WCG, not only have Worldwidens ceased believing such ideas, but even many of the Armstrongites that remain seem to have put aside that anticipation.

Now, however, an important book makes the startling claim that some, like Armstrong, who taught a future resurgence of fascism, may have been right all along. In The Beast Reawakens (Little, Brown and Company, 1997), author Martin A. Lee shows that not only is fascism alive and well, it is right now being resurrected at alarming speed not only in Europe, but throughout the world. Lee does not simply rehash what we have already known - that after 1945 many Nazis fled to Latin America - but he makes the startling claim that:

Shortly after World War II, both the United States and the Soviet Union recruited Nazis and fascist collaborators for the upcoming Cold War - but these Third Reich veterans pursued their own agenda, even while working for Eastern and Western secret services. By playing the superpowers off each other, these unrepentant extremists paved the way for an eventual revival of fascism.

While most of Hitler's Nazis are now dead, Lee claims that they left behind a whole new generation of fascist fanatics that are now rearing up in Western Europe, Latin America, and especially in Eastern Europe. Lee even shows that fascism is reawakening in the United States.

Ironically, some of the American organizations that Lee associates with fascism are among the very groups toward which some ex-Worldwidiers have gravitated in recent years. There is a reason for the connection. Most of the neo-fascist groups in North America have a strong affinity with white-supremacist, or at least white-separatist, sentiments, and in this century there was no writer more influential in spreading the idea of a racially superior, or at least racially distinct, Anglo-American race than Herbert Armstrong. Even though his book The United States and Britain in Prophecy is now rejected by the Tkachites, it still finds favor with many white supremacists such as those affiliated with the Aryan Nations. In Millennium Rage: Survivalists, White Supremacists, and the Doomsday Prophecy (Plenum Press, 1996), author Philip Lamy, a recognized authority on paramilitary groups and apocalyptic cults, gives Herbert Armstrong credit for having "helped popularize British Israelism among the millions of Americans who read his books" and in so doing having cultivated the soil in which others planted more insidious racist seeds. Thus, unwittingly, HWA may have helped to bring about the very reawakening of fascism that he prophesied.

The Great King

One of the linchpins of Herbert Armstrong's prophecies was his prediction that a European king would rise up and bring about the unification of Europe. Armstrong had various ideas who that leader would be. For instance, for many years he thought Bavarian politician Franz Joseph Strauss would be the man. But, toward the end of his life with Strauss having passed away, Armstrong started to suspect that Otto von Hapsburg would fulfill the prophecy. It may have been that suspicion that led HWA into developing a close friendship with old Otto.

With monarchies on the decline in Europe and with Otto past the age of eighty, many scoffed at Armstrong's speculations about the Hapsburgs. Now, however, some wonder if HWA was not on to something. For while Otto is up in age, advocates of monarchy are increasingly heard from in Europe. And, of all the royal families on the Continent, the one that is increasing the most in prestige and influence are the Hapsburgs, and especially those of Otto's line.

In the Los Angeles Times (3/27/98), Mary Williams Walsh and Deane E. Murphy reported how Otto von Hapsburg's seven grown children are increasingly active in European politics:

From Scandinavia to the southernmost reaches of the changing and unsettled continent that is post-Cold War Europe, Hapsburgs are turning up in interesting places, positing the idea that their family's imperial history holds answers to some of the most pressing questions of modern times. Hapsburgs are keeping up the age-old family tradition of strategic marriage, tantalizing monarchical revivalists and striving through electoral politics to shape the development of the continent, which is inching toward unification.

"My brother is doing the same that I am doing," Gyorgy [von Hapsburg] said, referring to Karl Hapsburg-Lothringen, 37, who represents Austria in the European Parliament. "My sister [Walburga] is doing the same in Sweden. If everything goes right, she will be elected to the European Parliament. My sister in Spain [Monica] is very much interested in local politics."

Gyorgy von Hapsburg, 33, is a business executive who lives in Budapest, Hungary. Prime Minister Gyula Horn, a former Communist, appointed Gyorgy "ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary," and charged him with ensuring early membership for Hungary in the European Union as it expands into the former East Bloc. So popular is Gyorgy, that his arrivals at public functions are often met with cheers of "Hail the King!" Then there is Otto, who but for the intervention of a couple of world wars and a few revolutions, would have today, at age 85, been Emperor of a realm once called the Austro-Hungarian Empire. Instead, he is merely the representative of the German state of Bavaria in the European Parliament. There he sits next to his eldest son Karl and tells the people of Europe, "Why not take advantage of the wisdom the Hapsburgs and their thousand-year family can offer?"

Those who would like to learn more about the Hapsburgs (also spelled Habsburgs) should check out The Habsburgs: Embodying Empire by Andrew Wheatcroft (Penguin USA, 1997). An even more interesting book is The Last Descendant of Aeneas: The Hapsburgs and the Mythic Image of Emperor by Marie Tanner (Yale University Press, 1993). Some of the intriguing chapter titles are: "Mythic Genealogy," "The Legend of the Last Emperor," "The Order of the Golden Fleece," "Fidecrucem: The Hapsburg Veneration of the Cross," and "The Hapsburg Cult of the Eucharist." Yes, this crazy family really does take itself that seriously.

The New World Order

One of the notions that has swept through ex-WCG circles in recent years is the idea that world conspirators are bringing about a "New World Order." That ancient phrase was brought to modern public consciousness by former president George Bush during the Gulf War, and ever since it has been the subject of much speculation by conspiracy theorists. Anyone not familiar with the "NWO" theory can get an excellent overview of its general dimensions from chapter 34 of The Sixty Greatest Conspiracies of All Time by Jonathan Vankin and John Whalen (Citadel Press, 1996). In their entertaining and informative book, Vankin and Whalen are quite adept at poking big holes in many of today's popular conspiracy theories. Nevertheless, regarding the NWO, they write:

Lest we dismiss such concerns as the ranting of survivalist kooks, it's important to note that the New World Order is an equal opportunity conspiracy theory. Left-wingers were just as exercised by Bush's words, although progressives tended to see the preppy president more as a champion of capitalism run amok than as a creepy commie.

In fact, right-wing or left, suspicions about the New World Order are actually quite rational. The champions of the "NWO" are indeed a cadre of powerful industrialists, bankers, academics, and politicians who for three quarters of a century have been a gray eminence behind the governance of Britain and America. More to the point, perhaps, they are the governors of the Western world. Call them what you will, they are the "Establishment."

There is a lot of religious writing that deals with the "New World Order." Nevertheless, some of the most valuable books on the subject are not religious. Here are two:

The New World Order: Whether It Is Attainable, How It Can Be Attained, and What Sort of a World a World at Peace Will Have to Be by Herbert George Wells (Alfred A. Knopf, 1940). While most people recognize H. G. Wells as one of the preeminent science-fiction writers of all time, many are not aware that he was also a highly influential political thinker and an advocate of world government. While not an admirer of Marx or an advocate of violent revolution, in some of his political writings, Wells actually promoted the idea of "an open conspiracy" to bring about a politically united socialist world - pretty much the kind of thing some right-wing pundits fear could happen. Furthermore, Wells envisioned a strong United Nations. In fact, Wells "became the leading spirit behind the Sankey Declaration of the Rights of Man, which influenced the setting up of the United Nations" (Brian W. Aldiss, Introduction to War of the Worlds, Oxford World's Classics). For those reasons alone, one would think that his New World Order would not only be much read today for clues to where we could be heading, but much quoted by those of the Bircher mold. Surprisingly, not only is that not the case, the Wells book is currently out of print. Why, we have no idea. But those interested in the subject may be able to find a copy, as we did, in a public library or in a bookstore specializing in old or rare books.

Finally, a most important book on the "NWO" is World Orders Old and New by Noam Chomsky (Columbia University Press, 1996). Chomsky, the political activist and MIT professor of linguistics who has been called "the eighth most-cited person in the history of the world and the most-often-cited living human being," is an extremely prolific author who writes in at least two different styles. First, there is the very accessible style of his writings for the general public. A good example is the so-called "Chomsky Trilogy" consisting of his short books What Uncle Sam Really Wants, The Prosperous Few and the Restless Many, and Secrets, Lies and Democracy, all of which give a very concise and readable overview of the state of the world and Chomsky's own political ideas. But another kind of Chomsky book is distinctly in the scholarly style with copious notes and voluminous and detailed references to obscure declassified (and maybe classified) documents from major think tanks, the United States government, and foreign powers. World Orders Old and New is that type of book.

Chomsky's insights into U.S. policy in the Gulf are extraordinary and his analysis of the Middle East peace process has been described as incendiary. For even though raised in a Jewish home and the son of a Hebrew scholar, there have been few intellectuals more scathing of what he sees as the undemocratic, brutally oppressive, and monumentally hypocritical Middle-East policies of both the United States and the state of Israel. But it is in his analysis of our present and evolving "World Order" that Chomsky brings insights that are not just penetrating, but often very unsettling. In chapter two, section six, "The Contours of the New World Order," Chomsky writes (pp. 178- 179):

Structures of governance tend to coalesce around domestic power, in the last few centuries, economic power. The process continues. In the Financial Times, BBC economics correspondent James Morgan describes the "de facto world government" that is taking shape: the IMF, World Bank, G-7, GATT, and other structures designed to serve the interests of TNCs [Transnational Corporations], banks, and investment firms in a "new imperial age." At the other end of the bludgeon, the South Commission [a Third World group of intellectuals] observes that "the most powerful countries in the North have become a de facto board of management for the world economy, protecting their interests and imposing their will on the South," where governments "are then left to face the wrath, even the violence, of their own people, whose standards of living are being depressed for the sake of the world economy" - that is, the present structure of wealth and power. A particularly valuable feature of the rising de facto governing institutions is their immunity from popular influence, even awareness. They operate in secret, creating a world subordinated to the needs of investors, with the public "put in its place," the threat of democracy reduced....

One may imagine what classical liberals would have thought of this new form of unaccountable, absolutist power, with its extraordinary scale; Thomas Jefferson, for example, with his scorn for a "single and splendid government for an aristocracy, founded on banking institutions and moneyed incorporations," through which the few would be "riding and ruling over the plundered ploughman and beggared yeomanry" - a nightmare realized beyond anything he might have dreamed.

World Orders Old and New should be assigned reading for the many Armstrongites who are waiting for the evil New World Order to arrive. Because if Chomsky is right, it is already here.

Where Are They Now?

Just after our last issue came out, we were pleased to be paid a visit by our long-time friend Gary De Jager (AC-BW 1970) who was on his way from business meetings in New York back to Sydney, Australia where he lives with his wife Roberta (nee Mitchell, AC-BW 1972) and their three teenage girls. Since their WCG days, Roberta has earned an advanced degree in foreign languages and teaches Japanese and French. Gary has earned a Ph.D in mathematics and currently works as a derivatives specialist for Chase.

Many will remember Dr. Robert L. Kuhn (AC-Pasadena 1969) who was Garner Ted Armstrong's executive assistant in the early 1970s. After that era, Kuhn, who already had a Ph.D. from UCLA, went on to get an MBA from MIT. In the years that followed he wrote and/or edited more than 30 books on business and finance. He is currently president of The Geneva Companies, a group specializing in the arranging of mediumsize corporate mergers. In addition, Kuhn is also chairman of the Original Bible Project.

While many are aware of Dr. Kuhn's accomplishments, many may be surprised to learn that his wife, Dora Serviarian-Kuhn, is a respected concert pianist who performs with major orchestras around the world. Her recent recording of the Khachaturian Piano Concerto on the ASV label has been hailed by a number of critics as the finest since

William Kapell's legendary recording of fifty years ago. The Kuhns are scheduled this month to be in China where Dr. Kuhn is working on a series of TV documentaries about the new Chinese economy and where Dora Serviarian-Kuhn will be performing with the China National Symphony.

Another well-known concert artist is pianist John Khouri (AC-BW 1967) who for a time served in the WCG ministry and then went on to head Ambassador's music department at Bricket Wood. Khouri, who is based in Vacaville, California, specializes in performing early nineteenth century music written for the fortepiano, the historic predecessor to the modern piano. Khouri owns five restored fortepianos from that era and tours so frequently he no longer has time for teaching. He also performs in duo-forte piano concerts with Janine Johnson. Khouri records for the Entr'acte label and his Web site is: <<http://www.best.com/~jbartram/khouri.html>>.

Books, Pamphlets, Tapes

We regularly get letters from readers skeptical of the many reports over the years that Herbert Armstrong had had a long-time incestuous relationship with at least one of his daughters. People want proof. Well, unfortunately, or fortunately perhaps, video tapes of those acts do not exist. And, as the GTA massage parlor case suggests, even if we had video tape evidence many would still discount the evidence. That does not mean, however, that there is no evidence. For instance, in the recent Ron Russell article, the author mentions how he interviewed HWA's grandson, Richard Armstrong (see AR67), and how Richard corroborated that HWA's daughter, Dorothy Mattson, had on numerous occasions told family members about the incestuous abuse. (In fact, during her years as a Pasadena-area business woman, Mrs. Mattson had also told many others.) For those who may be interested in seeing the entire Ron Russell article that appeared in New Times Los Angeles, it is on-line at: <<http://www.newtimesla.com>>.

Anyone wanting to hear all of Larry Mantle's interview of Joe Tkach on KPCC can obtain a cassette recording of the one-hour program for $15 by writing to: KPCC Radio, 1570 E. Colorado Blvd. Pasadena, CA 91106. Be sure to give the date of the program (Dec. 4, 1997) and the subject (Joseph Tkach and the Worldwide Church of God) along with your address and phone number.

In our last issue we reviewed Joseph Tkach's new book Transformed by Truth. Those who would like to read another John Trechak review of the Tkach book can see it at the online bookstore Amazon.com. Just go to that site and type in the title of the book. Besides the critical review of the book, you will also see another, this one a rave review, by a David Rowell of Montana. We e-mailed Mr. Rowell and suggested he might discover a different, more realistic, perspective of Tkach and his book if he were to read a few copies of Ambassador Report which we would be glad to send him free of charge. He replied:

Who are you to tell anyone the truth about a book you didn't write, about a journey that you didn't complete? Were you privy to all the things the author experienced? Have you been a loyal member of the WCG for 26 years as I have? I've never heard of you so I'm sure you weren't in any way intimately involved. If you were a disloyal former member, which splinter group did you join? I don't recommend you send me your analysis. You wouldn't enjoy my response because it would expose any false accusations and assumptions you have surely made in writing it.

Discovering the Plain Truth: How the Worldwide Church of God Embraced the Gospel of Grace by George Mather and Larry Nichols (Intervarsity Press, 1997). The long title pretty much tells you what this book is all about. The authors never once contacted AR for our perspective. They did buy the WCG's version of events, however. For an excellent review of the book, see David Covington's Ministry of Healing Web page: <<http://members.aol.com/coving1d>> or <<http://members.aol.com/exwgcg>>.

The Prophetic Significance of New York City by Gary Arvidson. Sometimes we get a little tired of former Worldwidiers and their Bible prophecy notions. After all, while usually still retaining Herbert Armstrong's Darbyite premillennial dispensationalism, there are now hundreds of variations on the original theme. So many, in fact, we are finding it difficult just keeping up with the new theories. This new paper by Arvidson, however, did get our attention. Years of research have gone into it and many of his conclusions actually make sense. The 24-page paper is available for $5 by writing to: Prophecy Report, P.O. Box 442, Dallas, NC 28034.

We have commented many times on the writings of Dr. Ernest L. Martin. But many readers will be interested to learn of a new book Martin has written: The Temples That Jerusalem Forgot. Of this book Martin has said: "It will show that our Jewish friends who now gather to worship God at their Western (Wailing) Wall are worshipping at the wall of the Roman fortress of Antonia (named after Mark Anthony) and that wall has nothing to do with their former Temple." A number who are aware of Martin's decades of biblical and archaeological research on the subject tell us they expect Martin's book to cause shockwaves in the world of religion and even among politicians. For more information, contact: Associates for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97298-0990, Web site: <<http://www.askelm.com>>.

We have mentioned The Original Bible Project in past issues. Recently Bob Ellsworth sent us a Translation Sample of parts of the Bible that Dr. James Tabor and his team of scholars have already translated. We were extremely impressed not only with the care that has been applied in the translating, but also with the unique and practical format that the project has adopted. We have had letters from a few readers who believe that more translations of the Bible are not needed. But having seen some of what has been done on the project so far, we think this new translation will prove to be an important contribution to biblical scholarship. Those wanting to get more information or a copy of the Translation Sample should contact: Robert Ellsworth, The Original Bible Project, 408 South Pasadena Ave., Suite 1, Pasadena, CA 91105.

Back in 1995 (in AR60), we reviewed the book Why Waco? which was co-authored by James Tabor. At the time, we were somewhat critical because the book struck us as overly sympathetic to the Koresh cult. That, however, was before we saw the new documentary movie Waco: The Rules of Engagement which got an Academy Award nomination this year. When we contacted Tabor recently, he commented: "I am not convinced that the FBI actually shot people - but the rest of the film, as far as I can tell, is accurate." We agree. What is quite disturbing about the film is not just big government's willingness to use overwhelming force (even against elderly people and children) in order to protect its image of invincibility, but also its willingness to bend the Constitution out of shape and then unabashedly deceive the public about it. Perhaps almost as disappointing is the abysmally poor job the major media did in covering the whole story. We understand that copies of Waco: The Rules of Engagement are already available in some video rental stores. A copy can also be obtained for $25 by calling (800) 771-2147 (ext. 19).

Letters

On Sabbath we were told that the terrible attacks on President Clinton have now yielded fruit. The true Gospel of the Great Warning Commission is now being preached to him. Because of his troubles with the press, we were told, he called a famous preacher for guidance on what to say. Mr. Garner Ted, of course. And that is how it happened. So whatever Mr. Armstrong did, God was behind it for us to do the Great Commission. We were also told that Mr. Rader is behind the Paula Jones lawsuit against our President and that he is now her lawyer.

-Texas

Editor: Paula Jones' lawyer is Robert Rader Jr., no relation to the Rader of WCG fame. As for God inspiring preachers to commit adultery so that "the great commission" can be accomplished, we don't see any such idea in scripture. According to press reports we have seen, the "famous preacher" Clinton called was Rev. Jesse Jackson. Nevertheless, if President Clinton were to actually call GTA for advice on how to handle a sex scandal, he would certainly be calling an expert.

My sister is a follower of the new Garner Ted Armstrong Intercontinental Church and she has shown us a printing of his new church seal. She thought it was an improvement over the one International had. However, her husband, who is not religious anymore, pointed out to us that the new Intercontinental seal is almost identical to the official seal of what he calls the "OWK." That stands for the "Other World Kingdom" which is an international network of expensive, jet-setting prostitutes who specialize in deviant, pagan sex rituals. He is a programmer and he showed us their Web site. I could only stand to look for a few seconds but, yes, the "OWK" seal is very similar. I hope there is no connection, but I fear the worst.

-Texas

Yesterday, I was in a "Christian book store" when I came upon a new book titled Difficult Scriptures. "Let's see what those might be," I thought. So I peeked in and was not surprised to see that the author chose to attack the Ten Commandments, the law of unclean meats, and Sabbath keeping. What really surprised me, however, was the author's name. It was Dr. David Albert. I seem to recall that there was a David Albert in Worldwide years ago. If this is the same man, he must have changed. Can you tell me anything about him?

-Washington

Editor: Yes, it is the same man. In some ways he has changed, but maybe in other ways he has not. A lovely lady that I know tells of how, as an Ambassador student who worked in the church's television production facilities many years ago, she became convicted in her heart and went to Mr. Albert, as he was then called, for ministerial counseling about baptism. The matter was very serious to her and she expected the minister to discuss the Bible, sin, repentance and other spiritual matters. But to her surprise, he completely ignored those subjects. Instead, he questioned her about the political situation inside the WCGs television production facilities, about the inside scoop on GTA, about who was having affairs, about who was on the way up or on the way down, and other completely worldly matters. Albert then okayed her for baptism. About ten days later, feeling no different after baptism than she had before, she thought back on the counseling session and the whole process. She then concluded it was all a farce. Twenty-five years later she has yet to return to any Christian denomination. As for Dr. Albert's new Christian ministry, let us hope it has improved a bit since the old days.

Dear Brother Trechak, Grace be unto you from Yahweh, our Father, and from the Savior Yahshua the Messiah.... In your newsletter of December 1997, page 9, you talk about the House of Yahweh and the Two Witnesses. The second Witness was Yisrayl Hawkins' own blood brother Jacob (or Jaaqob) Hawkins who died on March 22 of 1991.

Just a day after I read of the Worldwide member who killed his wife probably over a religion difference, I discovered that the son of Don Schroeder, the famous Plain Truth editor, committed suicide by hanging himself. I feel so sad for the families. And I wonder where the Holy Spirit is in all this.

-California

I'm not sure if anyone noticed - or perhaps I should be asking if anyone really should care - but the WCG Web site has removed the blank "Accountability" page from its "Administrative Leadership" homepage. It is replaced with a "Statement of Financial Stewardship" at <http://www.wcg.org/PastorGeneral/FinSteward.html>.

Among other things, it tells us, "The practice of tithing, while not mandated, is encouraged as a minimum standard of Christian financial stewardship." But apparently accountability about exactly how much money the holy hierarchs pay themselves - their total compensation packages, detailed, by name - is not included in the WCG's minimum standard of Christian financial stewardship.

Nevertheless, we are assured, "The Worldwide Church of God, together with its affiliated entities, takes seriously the matter of financial stewardship and strives to abide by the highest of fiscal integrity." Hmmm. Is there something wrong with this picture?

I have some info to share with you. First, Shorty and Patty Sue Fuessel are still living in Amarillo, Texas. He is unemployed after more than two and a half decades with WCG as a loyal minister.

There are quite a number who fall in this category. None get unemployment checks; they did not have social security for all that time of employment with WCG. They have been cast aside; all this under a cloak of "Christianity." Charity obviously doesn't begin at home for HQ leaders. And there are currently meetings going on in Pasadena with the regional directors who are going to lay off more pastors and field ministers.

Phyllis Duke is employed as a secretary to evangelist Greg Albrecht at Plain Truth Ministries. Politics? Her husband, Russell Duke, the last President of Ambassador University, is now only teaching an English composition class at Azusa Pacific University. It is a floating class shifted from department to department every year. He is NOT teaching any theology classes. This could be due to the fact that he has a non-traditional (mail-order, write your own program) degree. Academicians may be snobs, but they do have higher standards. And Russell is not fully accepted by the other Azusa faculty because he is not really needed and they know he "bought his way in" by getting Tkach to put AU funds into APU hands.

There are still nine families living on the Big Sandy campus, while we are still living with the harsh consequences of the decisions made by Joe Tkach and Russell Duke. Neither of them turned out to be the men we thought they were.

When I lived in Los Angeles and used to read the Los Angeles Times, I was always pleased when I read Mr. Trechak's letters to the editor. I was glad to see that he took on the evils of big business and big government with the same relish and sardonic wit as he takes on organized religion. You can imagine my surprise then when shortly after moving to Philadelphia I noticed in The Philadelphia Inquirer a John Trechak opinion piece in which he took on our corrupt court system. There are some very evil things going on in this country and I am glad a few still have the guts to speak out.

- Pennsylvania

Editor: My comments in The Philadelphia Inquirer appeared in the Opinion section on January 8. They concern the infamous Lisa Lambert case in which the defendant, convicted of murder, on appeal was found not just technically innocent, but "actually innocent" by U.S. District Judge Stewart Dalzell. He released the defendant with statements to the effect that it was obvious she could not get a fair trial in the state of Pennsylvania. The state appealed his ruling and won. Pennsylvania then reimprisoned Lambert and, at first, made the astonishing claim that the situation required no retrial on the facts (which included many new ones showing Lambert could not possibly have committed the crime). Now, as we go to press, I have discovered that the state has been pressured into retrying the case. Unfortunately, the case has gone back to the original judge who seems to be corroborating Judge Dalzell's views about the Pennsylvania court system. It is not even possible for the public to find out how the new trial is going as the judge has issued so many gag orders so as to make the trial virtually a secret one. The Philadelphia Inquirer, in an angry March 14 editorial, has quite properly referred to this new secret style of adjudication as akin to a star chamber.

I was very glad to see that you recognize that our history books are teaching many lies to our children. I have just read Lies My Teacher Told Me by Dr. James W. Loewen. He did a long study of history books used in our school systems and found that the majority contain many major errors that are intended to deceive our children into a stupidity about what this country is all about. I now see why the author wrote, "Indeed history is the only field in which the more courses students take, (in High School) the stupider they become." I am also reminded of a folk song someone once did about how God always backs up our country's side, no matter what we do. It just isn't so.

I would like to also mention one criticism of the AR. I think you are a little soft on criticizing the Catholic Church, the Lutherans, and the Buddhists. I am sending you a cassette tape of a lecture, "The Political Uses of Religion" by philosopher Michael Parenti ($5 from People's Video, P.O. Box 99514, Seattle, WA 98199). I'm sending you a free copy. Listen to it! I am also sending you tapes of his lectures "Inventing Reality: The Politics of News Media," "Democracy and U.S. Intervention," "Human Nature and Politics," and "Conspiracy and Class Power." Let me know what you think of them.

-Georgia

Editor: I don't usually have time to listen to the many tapes that are mailed to me, but I did start listening to the religion one you sent. Then, after I got over Parenti's New York accent and his Woody Allenish humor, I found myself hooked. Dr. Parenti's strong criticisms of the Catholic Church, Martin Luther, and the Buddhists are most thought-provoking. However, I do hope you noticed that the professor's politics are rather left-wing. I noticed at one Pasadena bookstore that Parenti has published a book titled Land of Idols: Political Mythology in America. I thought it was interesting that at the very beginning of that book, Parenti, who I am sure is an atheist, quotes Isaiah 2:7-8 with the implication being that the United States fits that description. I thought it was an apt allusion and recall that it is one Herbert Armstrong, himself, used to make.

As for being soft on Catholicism, I hope that by running your letter you can see that I am not. Nevertheless, that denomination does constitute a very large percentage of Christendom and I don't think it should be ignored. They have big problems, yet not everything that they teach or stand for is wrong, as the Armstrongites seem to think.

As for inaccurate history books, that problem is not confined to the United States. Historical inaccuracies abound in textbooks around the world. In a February 14 editorial, The New York Times pointed out that after the fall of the Berlin Wall, Eastern European textbooks at first replaced praise of communism with blind acceptance of capitalism. Yet those same history books still perpetuate distortions about the Soviet Union's participation in World War II. Another country where textbooks are changing is France where until recently textbooks ignored France's collaboration with its Nazi occupiers during the war. And in Japan there is an overt national policy of down-playing the Japanese military aggressions of the late thirties and forties and the Japanese war crimes of that era.

Even in Israel, there is now a debate over the accuracy of the accepted history of that country's founding fifty years ago. A number of Israeli scholars and a recent television documentary challenge the traditional Zionist tale of heroic return and nation-building in an empty, desolate homeland and draw unsettling parallels between early Israeli "freedom fighters" and modern Palestinian terrorists (The New York Times, 4/10/98).

So the problem of historical accuracy and revisionism is a global one. By the way, I think the song you refer to is "With God on Our Side" by Bob Dylan.

A few issues ago, you reported on a group of researchers who are convinced that the real Mount Sinai is located not where it is generally claimed, but in Saudi Arabia. When I first read your article I thought, "Who are these AR folks to think they know anything about something so profound?" Well, I take it back. Last night (Sunday, April 5) we caught the TV program Dateline NBC. They showed the mountain you wrote about and at its top there was clearly visible evidence of massive fire or radiation damage which suggests to us that the "pillar of fire" (YHVH), mentioned in the OT, had once been on that mountain. They interviewed the researchers and they seemed very reasonable, level-headed and learned fellows - not religious fanatics of any kind. The program showed the massive rocks at the bottom of the valley which were obviously set up in ancient times as a giant altar. And right nearby are ancient petroglyphs depicting calves or young bulls. They also showed the military base and security precautions that surround the area. Obviously, the Saudis do not want the Jews to take back through military force the real Mount Sinai! Again, thanks for bringing this amazing story to our attention.

I was sorry to learn of the Report having financial troubles. You deserve better. Here are three suggestions: First, ask each of your readers to do what I have been doing: Occasionally I will call old WCG friends and tell them about your work. I might loan them one copy, but if they like it, I tell them to subscribe themselves and to send in a contribution. If each AR reader would do that I am sure your subscribers would increase in number and it would make a big difference. You might even be able to publish more often. Second, don't promote so many other people's crummy writings in your publication. Each dollar sent to other groups means the Report will not be getting it. Finally, have you ever thought about putting a subscription price on the AR?

-Florida

Editor: Yes, we have thought about it and the reasons for not doing so are explained in a form letter we occasionally send out. If any readers would like a copy, just ask. As for mentioning other publications, yes, we probably hurt ourselves by doing it. And most of the organizations we plug don't even send us a contribution. Nevertheless, giving our readers other sources of information is an important part of what we do in fighting destructive cults and public ignorance. Lastly, we really do like your suggestion about asking readers to try to get others to subscribe. We wish many more readers would do that. It would certainly help to ease some of the financial strain we are under.

Late News

We have just learned that the revolt within the United Church of God is spreading. Bill Bradford, a UCG minister in San Francisco, told his congregation, "Support the ruling Council or you can go elsewhere!" About 130 decided to leave and go elsewhere.

Joining them in the revolt are Hulmite ministers and lay members in Tulsa, Oklahoma; Oakland, California; Boise, Idaho; Louisiana; South Dakota; and New Jersey. Departing ministers include Cliff Veal, Waldo Armstrong, and Mike Regan. Marc Masterson has been put on suspension. Estimates of how many people are splitting from UCG range from a low of only 350 to a high of over 1,000 - so far. Already a P.O. Box is said to have been established for the all-important task of collecting tithes.

In UCG's largest congregation, the Eagle Rock church near Pasadena, California, Pastor Brian Orchard has decided to leave the UCG's employ. In addition, every last one of the elders and deacons in Eagle Rock apparently has decided not to participate in the UCG's Passover services. Instead, they are going to keep it with a new group split off from United.

The central doctrines of the Hulmites have been described as "right-wing independent-hierarcialist." And the ring leaders of the new sect are reported to be David Hulme and Steven Andrews who some are calling "the next Two Witnesses." That may refer to the book of Revelation. On the other hand, it could be referring to possible litigation between the many factions of the United Church of God.

The excitement never ends. More next time.

---

July 1998 (AR69)

WCG Leaders Admit: It's All About Money!

The Worldwide Church of God (WCG), the religious empire that church founder Herbert W. Armstrong left to the Tkach family, continues to deteriorate amid the drift of ever changing doctrines and ever-stranger policies.

Along with cosmetic adjustments such as changing the church's official seal from a lion-and-lamb design to a cross over globe-like frame, changing the title of the Pastor General's Report to Crossroad, downsizing the Worldwide News, and eliminating the ministerial ranking system, there have also been new battles over more substantive matters. For example, the ongoing propaganda campaign to transform the sabbatarian denomination into a Sunday-keeping one continues. In the July Worldwide News (WN) there was an article titled, "Should we meet on Sundays?" While the article restated the now-established WCG position that a local church can have weekly meetings on any day of the week, it also showed that the number of WCG believers in Sunday-keeping is growing:

If a congregation wants to move its worship service to Sunday, that is fine. We have quite a few Sunday congregations, and many more considering the switch.

But the article then went on to suggest open congregation discussions about what day to keep and the taking of surveys about when to meet:

If only a few feel they must either stay with Saturday or move to Sunday, perhaps a house church or other worship opportunity could be provided for the minority.

If the congregation has two roughly equal portions desiring different days, several approaches can be taken: 1) create two congregations (some have done this, but hall rental and other expenses must be taken into account), or 2) give it more time, more discussion and, later, another survey to see if desires have shifted one way or the other.

So a local WCG congregation can now be a Saturday-keeping church, or a Sunday-keeping church, or it can be a Saturday-and-Sunday-keeping church. For that matter, it could also be a Wednesday-keeping church, or it could be a Wednesday-and-Saturday-keeping church or a Wednesday-and-Sunday-keeping church or even a Wednesday-and-Saturday-and-Sunday-keeping church. You see, it all depends on the results of the latest survey.

Now, as you can imagine, the local WCG ministers who used to have just one Sabbath day to worry about, now may have to give sermons on both Saturday and Sunday, and maybe on some other days, as well. Plus they are being kept pretty busy just taking surveys. That means less time for the golf course or for moonlighting at another job. Not surprisingly, such ministers have gotten upset with the new heavy workload. So at a late June ministerial conference in Pasadena, many voiced their dislike of the new system of choosing worship days. Church treasurer Bernie Schnippert, however, told them why the new system was necessary. According to a report from one of activist Bill Ferguson's insiders:

The U.S. and international Regional Pastors were meeting in Pasadena this week. Bernie Schnippert spoke to them.... He went on to stir up a stink with several of the ministers. Bernie said he wanted to make clear that he did not believe in the Sabbath or the Holy Days. However, he told the ministers that IF they wanted to make sure that they received retirement, then they MUST continue to meet on the Sabbath and continue to meet on all Holy Days.

He said the name of the game is MONEY! That is his only priority at the moment. The Holy Days are the money-making days for the church. If any of the ministers had any plans of doing away with meeting on these days, he would MAKE SURE that they did not receive retirement and would be terminated.

The ministers were also warned that they were not to do away with meeting on Saturdays, even if they started meeting on Sundays. There are too many in the church still holding on to the Old Covenant, and if they were not able to meet on Saturday then they would go to some other church and the money would go with them.

Schnippert then went on to say that it would be them losing their retirement and not him, as he WILL receive his retirement no matter what actions they decided to take.

The thing that precipitated this state of affairs is quite simple. Once the Tkach team convinced a large percentage of their followers that it was not only permissible, but also better, to keep Sunday, most of those members left to join churches which they now perceive as spiritually superior for having kept Sunday all along. That left the Sunday-believing WCG ministry with the choice of accommodating the Saturday crowd or not having any church left to command. So with money as the main goal, the official WCG policy on Sabbath-keeping is now: Take surveys and do whatever the parishioners want.

Pope to Get Ambassador Campus?

Attempts at selling off the old Pasadena, California and Big Sandy, Texas campuses of Ambassador University continue unabated. Already a part of the Pasadena properties has been sold. After much haggling because of structural defects and zoning problems, the old mail-processing office facilities building, located across the freeway from the main Ambassador campus in Pasadena, has been sold to an unnamed Alhambra, California company. While no deal has yet been consummated for the bulk of the two campuses containing over 250 structures, insiders say many potential buyers have been looking at both campus properties.

For almost a year, it was thought that the Texas campus was going to be sold to a mysterious group that wanted to establish something called The Southern Military Institute (SMI). The American South has a venerable military tradition as exemplified in such institutions as The Citadel and the Virginia Military Academy, so we didn't think that there was anything unusual in SMI being a potential buyer. But that was before a California businessman tipped us off that there was something very unusual about the proposed sale. He told us:

I just checked out a site at www.dixienet.org. You'll find this interesting. The site includes a plea for funds to help purchase a college campus for SMI, to be located at Big Sandy, Texas. They don't mention who the present owner is. Now, get this. The whole site is dedicated to restoring the old antebellum South through a group called "The League of the South." They even refer to the Civil War as "The War for Southern Independence," and "The War of Northern Aggression."

Our curiosity aroused, we immediately checked out the site and discovered that our tipster was right. The group really behind the proposed military training facility was indeed the so-called League of the South. And their site does make it amply clear what their intentions are:

The League of the South's goal is good government for the Southern people. We believe secession is the best way to restore good government to the South. Since 1861 the republican system of government established by the Founders has been steadily eroded. Today that government has become the cruel master rather than the obedient servant of the citizens of the several states. We see no way of reforming the corruption within the present system; therefore, The League of the South shall seek to spread acceptance of the idea of secession among the people of the South....

If the thirteen states of the old Confederacy were a nation, its GNP would place it among the top five or six nations of the world. Its laws would better reflect the natural conservatism and Christian roots of the Southern people. Our laws on gun control, abortion, school prayer, and immigration would without question be different. We could establish a confederation of states and make the provisions of the Tenth Amendment a reality. We could follow George Washington's sage advice about "entangling alliances." We could leave the United Nations and oppose the Bush-Clinton New World Order....

The League seeks to protect the historic Anglo-Celtic core culture of the South because the Scots, Irish, Welsh, and English have given Dixie its unique institutions and civilization.

When people think of old Dixie, the unique institution most think of is slavery. Is the freedom to own slaves one of the rights that the League wants returned to Anglo-Celtic Southerners? The League doesn't say, but they inform us that "the League of the South disavows a spirit of malice toward any group...." And just in case anyone fears a return to the institution of slavery, they publish Southern Slavery As It Was by Wilkins and Wilson who intimate that slavery wasn't really all that bad. Obviously, should the League continue to promote its ideas and gain a following, at some point secession from the Union might require a bit of military muscle and that would require military leadership. Hence should SMI ever get going it could fill a role as the West Point of the South. Extreme? Perhaps. But Peter Appelbome writing in The New York Times (3/7/98) says the League is no joke.

It is difficult to believe that the Tkach company was not aware of the real nature of the League's intentions when they were negotiating with the would-be rebels. But, whatever the case, WCG officials now say that they will not be selling the Texas campus for use as a war college because the rebel group has not been able to raise the necessary funds. (Confederate greenbacks were not acceptable, either.) Instead, church treasurer Bernie Schnippert told a gathering of ministers in Pasadena in late June that the buyer of the campus, paid for by the tithes of members who were once thoroughly anti-Catholic, will likely be a Roman Catholic organization! So once again Tkach and his associates have shown that they do not care about the obvious theological or ethical implications of what they are doing.

United Fragments Again

Since our last issue, when we reported on the troubles within the United Church of God, rebel evangelist David Hulme has announced that his new church, at this time called simply The Church of God, will be based in Monrovia, California, a town known for its soaring summer temperatures and for its Aztec Hotel, an ornate landmark along historic Route 66. The official address for the Hulmites is: P.O. Box 150, Monrovia, CA 91017. Their web site is at www.church-of-god.org. And Ricky don't lose that number. It's the only one where you can go daily for Hulme's inspirational "Thought for the Day."

In addition to the rebel Hulmites that we reported on last issue, virtually the entire UCG affiliate church in Britain, the UCGUK led by Peter Nathan, has split from the United Church of God, an International Association, or UCGIA (as the main UCG is now acronymed in order to distinguish it from the other split-off Uniteds). As we go to press, one of our informants within UCGIA tells us that the Hulme-led exodus has slowed to a trickle and that the Hulmites now number no more than about 1,200 with about 13 elders.

In the meantime, back at UCGIA headquarters in Arcadia, California there was a whole lot of packing going on as the entire home office, or what's left of it, was moved to a new facility in Cincinnati. The UCGIA's official address is now a catchy P.O. Box 541027, Cincinnati, OH 45254-1027.

After the Hulmite insurgency petered out, a lot of UCGIA members were hoping things would quiet down in their denomination, but it was not to be. In a pre-Passover video sermon viewed by almost all UCGIA congregations, President McCullough threw down the gauntlet to those who thought they had left the WCG. As one of our readers told us after hearing McCullough's sermon:

My wife asked me, "Did you get the most important point of his sermon?" "I think so," I said, "but what do you think it was?" She then confirmed my own thoughts: "UCG congregations will have NO local autonomy."

It was not long before this policy would prove disastrous to the UCGIA. Within weeks, McCullough and his board decided to apply old fashioned strong-arm methods to their largest local congregation, the one at Big Sandy, Texas. The Home Office simply informed David Havir, the popular pastor of the congregation, that he was being transferred and that the Home Office would just appoint someone else to replace him.

McCullough's high-handedness outraged members of the Big Sandy congregation, telephone lines began to glow in the heat of angry church chatter, secret meetings were held, hate mail was sent, incensed e-mail whizzed through cyberspace, and the UCGIA Home Office boys started to realize they had stirred up a hornets' nest. Nevertheless, they would not flinch. No, "the H.O." had decreed as though by the law of the Medes and the Persians. Even when angry members asked the H.O. to explain what it was that their beloved pastor had done wrong to be treated so, no real answer was given. And, actually, no answer showing reasonableness could have been given, for the transfer was only being done to establish precedent: The UCGIA is to be run like any other religious cult. There must be obedience in quiet submission by ministers of lower rank, and there must be blind obedience by the common sheep. In other words, "You VILL OBEY!!!"

But this was not WCG 1968; this was UCG 1998. And the members in Big Sandy have learned a few things from the decades of church scandals and ecumenical in-fighting. So when the smoke finally cleared after weeks of turmoil, the biggest United Church of God congregation found itself broken up into two separate churches. Today, in that part of Texas there is a shrinking UCGIA congregation pastored by Roy Holladay who takes his orders from his pay masters in Cincinnati. And there is a slightly smaller, but more vibrant and growing, congregation pastored by Dave Havir who, while no doubt trying to take his orders from a source higher than Cincinnati, has shown a remarkable willingness to cooperate with his flock on matters of congregational organization and governance.

In the last two months the members of the congregation, together with Pastor Havir in consultation with George Crow, an able Houston attorney, have worked to amend their church's articles of incorporation and by-laws so as to embrace a congregational form of self-government. This may not be the first time something like this has happened within a WCG breakoff group, but it is the first time we have heard of a sabbatarian Armstrongite congregation doing such a thing almost spontaneously, and with enthusiasm, no less. The congregation's official name is now: United Church of God, Big Sandy and Pastor Havarir can be e-mailed at dphavir@aol.com.

As for UCGIA, the loss of the Hulmites and half of its largest congregation have inspired many more to drift away. Just a year ago, it was claimed that UCGIA had over 20,000 members. Today some within that group say its total membership is down to about 12,500 and falling. Whereas its paid ministry numbered about 100 prior to the Hulmite exodus, with the latest crisis, 29 ministers had to be put on half salary, nine resigned, and four were laid off or voluntarily quit. As a result of the reshufflings, about 19 church circuits have added an additional congregation or two with more work for ministers. Then, in the move from Arcadia to Cincinnati, the Home Office went from a staff of 30 down to only 12. Reductions in salaries were reported at 5%-15% and allowable ministerial expenses for travel, phone, etc. were dropped to an absolute maximum of $200 per month. Seeing the writing on the wall, some prominent pastors seem to be planning for their own future exits. Dennis Luker of Seattle and veteran evangelist C. Wayne Cole are among those rumored to be unhappy with the Cincinnati Home Office.

And what are the UCGIA members thinking in the midst of all this madness? According to a number of sources who still attend, most of the members that remain are apathetic. The remaining ministry, in turn, has gone back to, as one tired member put it, "emphasizing doom and gloom in the hopes that the simple will believe that the world is going to hell in a handbasket and that the UCGIA makes handbaskets."

Many more United members are sure to leave in the near future. Just weeks ago, in the June edition of Norm Edwards' Servants' News, in an article titled "More Corporate Doublespeak from UCGIA," United member Tim McCaulley revealed that the way United's founders had quietly set up their organization was that under its charter the only legal members of the UCGIA are its ministers. Recall that in WCG, the situation is even more outlandish in that even being a WCG minister in good standing does not qualify you to be a church corporation member. Nevertheless, the UCGIA has been set up similarly. According to McCaulley, the United Church corporate entity promotes an "us versus them" mentality whereby those controlling the corporation, almost like a private club, function as:

...a modern day Sanhedrin and created this "wall of separation" (Eph. 2:14) within the Church. It is complete with its own talmud of constitution and bylaws that, when expedient, ignores the counsel of scripture in the way it isolates the shepherds from their flocks and instead encourages them to be hirelings of the corporation.

McCaulley accuses the UCGIA's controllers of using doublespeak to deceive the tithe-paying church-goers as to the true nature of the organization to which they are paying their tithes. The picture painted by McCaulley is that corporately the UCGIA is virtually a private club, almost a secret society if you will, that treats church attenders as paying customers who are manipulated by the hiring pastors all for the personal benefit of the "members" of the corporation, mainly the ruling inner circle, the original conspirators who set up the system.

If that is indeed the case, and we have every reason to believe McCaulley's view is accurate, then the church organizational structure that the UCG-Big Sandy congregation has developed may be the only ethical way for all the Armstrongite groups to rearrange themselves. Of course, if the tithe-paying members remain apathetic as to what goes on in their own denomination and local congregation, it will make no difference. The blind will continue to lead the blind. As consumer advocate Ralph Nader says, "If you don't turn on to politics, politics will turn on you."

HWA taught his followers to shun politics, while he, himself, was a master politician. Armstrong's false teaching is a major cause of the apathy we see in so many who have come through "the WCG experience." They have been duped into thinking that it is godly to be a submissive, non-questioning, non-thinking, non-political patsy. Armstrong's false teaching is also a major cause of the chaos that we have seen, and continue to see, in the WCG and all its offshoots. Nevertheless, as the Big Sandy story demonstrates, it doesn't have to be that way. Things can change.

Flurry Now Laodicean

Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Church of God (PCG) has been one of the more successful WCG spinoff groups. With its Key of David telecast and slick Philadelphia Trumpet magazine leading the way, it has continued to experience steady growth since its inception in 1989. Now, however, the Flurry organization is beginning to experience the same kinds of troubles that have beset virtually all the other major WCG offshoots.

Within just the last few months, PCG ministers Ron Roth, Mike Okamura, and Randy Schafer have parted company with Flurry taking with them tithe-paying PCG members in a number of states. The three have made numerous accusations about the PCG. They say Flurry's organization is authoritarian and that its ministers are encouraged to spy on members and behave like army officers whose commands are never to be questioned. They say that Flurry now improperly claims to be a prophet, and that the place of safety doctrine is emphasized in order to make the saving of the flesh the principal focus of attention for PCG members. All this is done, they say, because the PCG hierarchy is less driven by a desire for righteousness than by an overwhelming desire for money. Sound familiar?

Schafer also doubts Flurry's claim that his book Malachi's Message was personally delivered to him by a great angel and that it was intended to be a part of the Book of Revelation. If that is the case, says Schafer, why then has Flurry revised the book a number of times since the angel originally gave it to him? Mike Okamura additionally points out that in Malachi's Message Flurry claims that WCG Pastor General Joseph Tkach Sr. is the prophetic "Joshua," but that "Joshua" is supposed to be alive at the second coming of Jesus Christ, while Tkach Sr. has been dead now for almost three years.

Roth is now distributing an open letter to Flurry which invokes the Armstrongite theory of church eras to show that, among other things, Flurry does not really head the Philadelphia era of the church as he claims, but that Flurry actually heads the final Laodicean era. In his letter, Roth quotes II Thes. 2:11 which talks about God causing his people to believe a lie. Writes Roth:

WHAT IS THE LIE? The lie is that the leader of the PCG is telling his members that through their support of his church they will receive salvation. Malachi's Message, on page 144 epitomizes the lukewarm attitude by saying, "Backing and supporting this message is your ticket to a place of safety and a magnificent reward. This is how God makes up His jewels!" Here you are promising a place of safety to those who support the work of the PCG. It is the development of our character that God measures when He makes up His jewels, not the supporting of any work.

Roth is now convinced that "the Philadelphia era was located in Pasadena; the Laodicean era, the seventh and final era, is located in Edmond, OK." Roth says he is only waiting now for the Two Witnesses. For copies of the complete letter, write to Ron Roth, The Church of God, P.O. Box 406, Hustisford, WI 53034; or call Ron at (920) 349- 3674.

Global Clarifies Position on War

In recent years, the theological concerns of most of the WCG offshoots have centered on church governance issues: ministerial credentialing, church organization, calendar determinations, etc. However, with no fanfare or press coverage that we are aware of, last year one Armstrongite group got away from such debates and started focusing on more important ethical and theological issues. The Global Church of God (GCG), headed by Roderick C. Meredith, has now unequivocally reasserted the traditional Armstrong position concerning Christian participation in warfare. Beginning with the article "Violence, War and Christianity" by GCG minister John H. Ogwyn, writing in the June-July 1997 issue of Global Church News, the GCG has taken the position that true Christians who submit in obedience to an authority higher than that of human governments cannot in good conscience join military organizations or participate in the wars of this world.

The GCG position reasserts a fundamental teaching of Herbert W. Armstrong, but it runs contrary to the liberalized modifications of that teaching that were brought into the WCG by the Tkach administrations and which some of the offshoots have similarly accepted. What makes the GCG position so interesting, however, is that it is one that can logically be defended from the perspective of biblical theology, normative ethics, and early church history. For instance, while the GCG position is not in harmony with that of the modern Roman Catholic Church, most Catholic scholars would readily agree with Meredith that his church has indeed held fast to the position of the early church. For an eye-opening theological essay proving that such is the case, see the Tony Korec article "The Early Church on War" which appeared in the June-July issue of The Catholic Worker. To obtain a copy of this important article, send a contribution if possible to cover postage and perhaps photocopying (we suggest $1) and write: The Catholic Worker, 36 East First Street, New York, NY 10003; tel. (212) 777-9617.

European Unity Update

In our last issue we reviewed a number of books that present secular and scholarly views about important geopolitical world trends. While there are many possibilities as to what the future might hold, we should not be too quick to think that a very powerful United Europe, something Herbert Armstrong predicted, is impossible. In fact, many today think that such a union is inevitable. Almost every week there are articles in leading newspapers reporting how Europe is moving quickly in that direction. For instance, on July 7 The New York Times reported:

In the clearest sign yet that national boundaries are disappearing within European financial markets, the stock exchanges of London and Frankfurt announced a broad alliance Tuesday aimed at creating a pan-European trading system. The alliance between Europe's two biggest stock exchanges comes as financial institutions across the continent are preparing for the debut of the euro as a new European currency in January.

An April 28 headline in the same paper read, "Euro Could Eventually Rival the Dollar." However, a far more startling headline appeared in The New York Times on April 12: "U.S. Frets Over Closer German-French-Russian Ties." Here is how that article began:

The problem with labelling yourself the world's "indispensable nation," as Secretary of State Madeline Albright is fond of calling the United States, is that you become hypersensitive if other nations, less convinced or more uneasy, start meeting without you. Late last month in Moscow, the French, Germans and Russians had their very first summit meeting, and Washington did not take the prospect calmly. Senior U.S. officials like Deputy Secretary of State Strobe Talbott were feverishly interrogating their French and German counterparts about what such a meeting might encompass and what it might mean. The United States regards the new Russia as something of a pet project, if not exactly a client. Helping Russia to feel part of a wider Europe, as NATO enlarges, is fine as far as it goes. But the Americans want to be sure that any special Franco-German understandings with Russia won't undercut an already fraying U.S.-Russia relationship.

The article went on to point out that with another such summit scheduled for next year, and with both the United States and Britain not invited, leaders in both Washington and London are concerned that a new alliance may be on the horizon - an awesome one over which they would have no control.

Back in the early eighties, on a trip to the Pasadena area, author David Robinson was the guest of honor at a dinner hosted by Len and Margaret Zola of Ambassador Report. As we sat around the long dining table of their hilltop home, talking politics after dinner, Robinson casually commented that not only did he envision Europe uniting within the next few decades, but that he was certain all of Russia would be part of that union. "But," asked one of the startled guests, "what about communism?" "Well," said Robinson, "it's not a natural system, it's alien to the spirit of the Russian people, and eventually the Soviet system will revert back to what is historically most natural for them." Robinson, a lifetime student of European history, went on to say he thought resentment of United States power and corruption would eventually push the Europeans to unite, and that Russia with its vast resources and centuries of Christian tradition would fall naturally into that alliance. When he said this, there was noticeable silence among his listeners who included a number with significant academic credentials. "Well," said Robinson, "I'm just a country boy," and with that he changed the subject. More than 15 years later, with the Soviet empire in ruins and Russia being courted by a uniting Europe, some who laughed at Robinson's prediction are no longer laughing.

The Secret Church of Conspiracy

Part I

by John Trechak

Editor: I don't often add my by-line to AR articles, but there is a reason why I do so this time. This article reflects only my own views, and not necessarily those of anyone else associated with this publication.

By all accounts, Armstrongism is not just a non-mainstream religious movement, it is also a movement that has generated other newer religious movements that in many cases are even more nonconventional than that of "the Armstrong tradition." In the last few years, we at AR have noticed a rather strange and growing body of religious ideas that seem to be forming into yet one more bizarre Armstrongism-related religious system. This new belief system is still not formalized, yet it is very real and very influential in the lives of thousands of former Worldwide Church members.

This new belief system revolves around what can loosely be called "conspiracy theories." These theories, however, are not your garden variety of "Who really killed JFK, RFK, or Martin Luther King." No, these new theories incorporate and integrate Bible prophecies, the year 2000, the "Y2K computer problem," "The One True Church," the Roman Catholic Church, the Jesuit Order, the Pope, Freemasonry, the Jews, the Communist Party of Russia, President Clinton, the FBI, the CIA, the Wackenhut corporation, the late Herbert W. Armstrong, the late Franz Joseph Strauss, evangelist Roderick C. Meredith, former WCG lawyer Stanley Rader, Henry Kissinger, David Rockefeller, virtually all key leaders of the proposed United Europe, powerful figures in finance and politics, and thousands, if not millions, of other individuals and entities.

According to some conspiracy theorists, a number of WCG offshoots are now completely under the domination of mysterious Jesuit infiltrators. Other offshoots, like the UCGIA, supposedly are controlled by a ministry made up almost entirely of members of "Worldwide Masonry" who take their orders from the Grand Lodge of Texas at Waco. We at AR have even had a few anonymous letters warning us that Dixon Cartwright of The Journal, a popular sabbatarian newspaper, is a Mason infiltrator who is part of "The Conspiracy." (I am sure he is not.) And in a phone call last year, Dixon laughingly told me that he had seen a document which claimed that I, in turn, was a Jesuit agent hand-picked by European powers to act as a Fifth Column operative against "the Churches of God," again, as part of "The Conspiracy." (The idea is so preposterous it should require no comment.) Undoubtedly, some will eventually bring UFOs into this new theological mix. While to most rational people such notions will seem quite laughable, there are now hundreds, if not thousands, of people who are not just fascinated by these new conspiracy theories, but who, as a result, are being caught up in a new wave of Armstrongite hysteria.

An Introduction to "Conspiracy"

More than ten years ago, after an evening class in property law, I attended an informal after-class reception hosted by the professor who wanted to get to know his students a little better. In those days, like a lot of former Worldwidors, I had been reading the right-wing Spotlight newspaper and other periodicals that today would probably be classified as in the conspiracy genre. While I lacked the intellectual means then to adequately analyze the merits of the claims made in such publications, I did recognize that their approach to world news was radically different from the mainstream press. I thought it might be fun to hear a law professor's comments on the subject so, just as the smiling law professor with wine glass in one hand and an hors d'oeuvre in the other strolled about and approached me with a smile, I blurted out, "Do you believe in conspiracy theories?"

The question was ill-framed and not well-timed. But the answer I got was instructive. The distinguished legal scholar bluntly replied, "Well, of course! There are conspiracies in operation all about this country and around this world even as we speak. You don't think you are getting all the truth just from reading the newspapers, do you?" He was patient with me but, I think, somewhat surprised at my naiveté. I mention this story because I now frequently get asked that same question by ex-WCG and current Armstrongite readers of this publication. And my answer today is about the same as the law professor's. Additionally, however, I usually point out that our prisons are full of people who have been tried and convicted of participating in conspiracies of various types. And even the Bible itself uses the words "conspired" and "conspiracy" many times; just check any Bible concordance. Most of us lived through "the Watergate" years, and we should recall that both the initial break-in and the later cover-up were conspiracies. Robert McNamara's book about Vietnam should tell us that the whole Vietnam debacle was a kind of conspiracy against the American people. And then there was Iran-Contra, the BCCI scandal, and the savings-and-loan scandal which Justice Department officials described as "a thousand conspiracies of fraud, theft, and bribery." And on it goes.

The word conspiracy to most people connotes a small group of men in a smoke-filled room talking in quiet tones. Conspiracies, however, don't have to be composed of small groups. They can be quite vast in scope. Cosa Nostra, the crime syndicate, is a conspiracy. The Colombian drug cartel is a conspiracy. The Russian Mafia is a conspiracy. All three involve thousands of operatives and many billions of dollars.

Conspiracies can also lead to monumental historical events. For example, the 1917 takeover of Russia by the Bolsheviks involved a conspiracy. So did the Nazi takeover of Germany in 1932 and the German invasion of Austria in 1938. Indeed, the signers of the U.S. Declaration of Independence would certainly have been declared conspirators by King George III had their efforts not proved successful. And some have even pointed to the secretive meetings leading to the signing of the U.S. Constitution in 1781 as having been a conspiracy. Certainly, some in our country's anti-Federalist faction thought that was the case. If that is news to you, read Charles Beard's highly-regarded historical study An Economic Analysis of the Constitution of the United States. But before we continue on and get ourselves into some very murky waters - particularly regarding the WCG - it will prove helpful if we first clarify a few terms.

What Do You Mean, "Conspiracy"?

We live in a time when interest in so-called conspiracy theories is very pronounced. Even ten years ago, for example, a television series such as The X-Files would have been unthinkable. Yet today, we not only have The X-Files, a successful television series, we now have The X-Files, the feature film and with sequels possibly to follow. And in most metropolitan-area bookstores, one can find not just a few books on famous conspiracies, but whole store sections devoted to the conspiracy genre. For a time, there was even a monthly magazine devoted exclusively to "CT." It was appropriately titled Paranoia, which perhaps explains why it is no longer being published. Nevertheless, while conspiracy theories have become an accepted part of popular culture, when people talk about conspiracies they are often talking about not just a wide variety of specific theories, they are often using the term "conspiracy" in a variety of ways. The way a criminal prosecutor would use the term is usually different from the somewhat looser way an historian might use it, and the ways they both might use the term might well be different from the way some students of Bible prophecy would use it. All three, in turn, would probably be using the term differently from the young X-Files fan who very likely would use it to describe not just government cover-ups, but also as a synonym for "unexplained mysteries" or "the paranormal."

We have noticed that among our own readership and among those we report on, the term "conspiracy" is being used in perhaps a dozen different ways. Just so we have some idea of what we are dealing with, let's first look at some of the contexts and situations in which the term is being used:

(1) Conspiracy as the law sees it. In the legal world, conspiracy has a very limited and very precise meaning. In the Anglo-American legal system, when a charge of conspiracy is brought, the prosecution must prove the three elements of the crime: There must be (a) an agreement between two or more persons (b) made with an intent to enter into that unlawful agreement and (c) made with an intent to achieve the unlawful object of the agreement. Examples of such a legally defined conspiracy would be when two gangsters agree that later in the day they will rob a convenience store, or when businessmen at an association meeting quietly decide not to compete against each other, but to set prices artificially high. To judges, the illegal agreement is the conspiracy and it is separate from the performance of the target crime. Once the agreement is made, the conspiracy has come about, even if the conspirators later abort their plan for some reason.

It should be pointed out in passing that, even though this basic definition of conspiracy in the law is fairly simple, situations where there are many members in the conspiracy can be quite complicated. That is so, for instance, (a) where there is a so-called chain conspiracy or (b) where there are complicated conspiratorial "hub-and-spoke" relationships within other conspiratorial "hub-and-spoke" relationships. In both conspiracy sub-sets, someone distant from the first conspirators may not know who set the conspiracy in motion, but once they have agreed to perform the illegal acts, they are part of the overall conspiracy.

Notice that when the word conspiracy is used in the legal system it means a very specific thing. But in popular parlance the definition, while not altogether unrelated, can fall well short of the legal definition or be something somewhat different but far more complicated. Notice the differences in the following non-legal usages of the term.

(2) Political parties and open alliances. People with similar views may join together formally to work toward similar goals. Republicans and Democrats are not normally thought of as being members of a conspiracy. However, it is not unusual for the politically overzealous to label political opponents as being part of a conspiracy. Upon questioning, one finds that they are usually not suggesting that a prosecutor would be able to make out some sort of criminal case against their opponents. But the word has a certain dastardly ring to it, and it is often rhetorically effective.

At the start of the Cold War, there were tens of thousands of individuals in America who were members of various Socialist, Socialist Workers, or Communist parties. When the Red scare began, Senator Joseph McCarthy talked of them as "a conspiracy so vast...." Yet, while many thousands had their careers destroyed because of the innuendo of such conspiracy talk, relatively few leftists in those years were actually charged with, let alone convicted of, conspiracy (a few super-sensational cases notwithstanding). Even the Los Angeles Times recently admitted in an editorial (4/18/98) that newly released government files reveal that during the Cold War the domestic threat of Communism was "grossly overblown."

(3) Informal groups of individuals with similar political or religious views. Unfortunately, sometimes it takes nothing more than holding the same view as another to be labeled a conspirator today. Just a few weeks ago, Mrs. Clinton, a lawyer no less, made the claim that there was a right-wing conspiracy out to get her husband. She has yet to provide prosecutors with evidence that would allow charges of anything to be brought against anyone. While there are obviously wealthy and powerful individuals who are quite determined in their efforts to discredit the President, many pundits, even very liberal ones such as Sam Smith of the Progressive Review, believe the First Lady seriously mis-spoke herself when she used the term "conspiracy." Nevertheless, the fact is that just because a group of people have the same views and may even network and actively work toward similar goals, that of itself does not really constitute a conspiracy, at least in the legal sense.

(4) Secret societies. In April, the University Art Museum of the University of California at Long Beach presented a unique art show. Titled "Theatre of the Fraternity: Staging the Ritual Space of the Scottish Rite of Freemasonry, 1896-1929," the show displayed theater set designs and other historical artifacts from an era in American history of which few today are even vaguely aware. The program notes of the show began with a quote from Albert Stevens, Cyclopedia of Fraternities (1907):

The probable extent of the influence of secret life may be inferred from the fact that more than 6,000,000 Americans are members of 300 such organizations, which confer about 1,000,000 degrees on 200,000 novitiates annually, aided, in instances, by a wealth of paraphernalia and dramatic ceremonials which rivals modern stage effects.

The stage effects in the show included rather sophisticated "smoke and mirrors" depictions of supernatural events, historical figures, and even scenes of Hades aflame in which choreographed troupes of dancers would cavort. But even more amazing were some of the facts discussed in the Museum's presentation. Few Americans today, for instance, know that a hundred years ago fraternal organizations frequently provided their members with a whole lifestyle that included a distinct social life, important insurance programs, and a life philosophy that was intended to prepare members for the inevitability of death. The fraternities also were a major political force in many states and at least four - The Knights Templar of Freemasonry, The Independent Order of Odd Fellows, The Knights of Pythias, and The Knights of Columbus - had their own well-armed militias.

Today, a smaller percentage of the population are members of fraternal organizations than was the case a hundred years ago. However, the York Rite and Scottish Rite branches of Freemasonry are still with us, as are many other fraternal organizations. And because such fraternal organizations frequently maintain a fair amount of confidentiality as to their membership and private activities, many such groups get labeled as "secret societies."

But does being a member of one of these so-called secret societies constitute being a part of a conspiracy? Unless its members have agreed to violate some law, most courts would not think so. After all, doesn't everyone have a right of association and a right to privacy? Nevertheless, the perceived secrecy of some societies encourages many Christians to view Masonic lodges and other fraternal organizations as hotbeds of intrigue. And ex-Worldwidiers especially almost always tend to view Masons as being part of something sinister.

As extreme as that may seem, however, it is not just Armstrongites or evangelical Christians who tend to view the Masons with great suspicion. Just this past spring The New York Times (3/29/98) reported that the British government was investigating the membership of the London-based United Grand Lodge, the premier institution of world Freemasonry, for possible improper influence on the judicial system because so many important judges and police officers are suspected of being members. And even within the Roman Catholic Church there have been published allegations since the 1980s that the organization known as P2, Italy's highly secretive crypto-fascist Masonic Lodge, was composed of members of the Mafia, Italy's intelligence service, and certain high-ranking Vatican clergy as well as top executives of the Vatican Bank.

The A&E cable television channel has produced a documentary titled Secret Societies which paints the Masons as rather conspiratorial by nature. There are also many books on the market which portray Freemasonry as a vast cabal. Two such books that are very popular in Armstrongite circles are The Temple and the Lodge by Michael Baigent and Richard Leigh (Arcade Publishing, 1989) and The Brotherhood: The Secret World of the Masons by Stephen Knight (Stein & Day, 1985). So it should not be surprising that among ex-Worldwidiers and Armstrongites in general that the slightest hint at Masonic connections tends to bring suspicion that there is a conspiracy afoot. (More on the Masons later.)

(5) Religious orders. It is not uncommon for members of religious orders to be summarily labeled as being part of a conspiracy. The Jesuits, members of the Roman Catholic Church's Society of Jesus, are frequently painted as being conspiratorial. In my own experience I have noticed two groups who seem obsessively concerned about the Jesuits. First there are Protestant Christians who know of the order's sordid historical record of participation in the Inquisition and assume that the order has not changed in the last hundred years. Second there are Catholic conservatives who know full well that the order has changed, and radically in the last hundred years, but who feel that the order has been tainted by the ideas of Marx, Tyrrell, Teilhard, Pope John VI, and "the Theology of Liberation" of Gustavo Gutierrez.

A good example of a conservative Catholic thinker who greatly distrusts the Jesuits is

Malachi Martin, himself a former Jesuit and professor at the Vatican's Pontifical Biblical Institute. In his 1987 best-seller, The Jesuits: The Society of Jesus and the Betrayal of the Roman Catholic Church, Martin portrayed "the new worldwide Society of Jesus" as being less loyal to the Pope than to their own views of a liberating Jesus. (More on the Jesuits and Armstrongite churches later.)

(6) Economic class. "The C-Word" is one Americans do not like to use. After all, we are supposed to be a classless society. Here we are in one big boat, so to speak - you, me, the Rockefellers, our neighbors down the street, Bill Gates, the supermarket checkout lady - and all of us are going through life together, all rowing together in this big boat we call America. But a lot of people increasingly suspect that that kind of view is an illusion. If America is one big boat, it is becoming increasingly clear that some people are putting in a lot more time at the oars than others. But even if the profound gap between the rich and the poor is getting ever wider in America today, is "class" a form of conspiracy? Many today don't think so.

Take for instance Noam Chomsky's recent book Class Warfare: Discussions with David Barsamian. There Chomsky puts forth the idea that in America today there is a major class struggle going on. Not one where the poor are trying to throw off the chains of oppression laid on them by the rich, but a struggle by the rich - and a very successful one at that - to lay ever greater burdens on laboring people, to cut back welfare benefits to the down-and-out, to cut back social security, to give greater tax benefits to the wealthy, and generally to make life much tougher on the great majority of Americans. Chomsky refuses to attribute what is happening to any kind of a grand conspiracy. Nevertheless, as the title of his book indicates, he clearly sees the dynamics of class as being of great importance in understanding the modern world.

In the Business section of The New York Times on just one day (June 23) there were three articles that made a joint statement about class. The first reported that Congressional leaders have again decided to effectively cut the capital gains tax. For tax purposes, income from investments is considered to be different from income from labor, and now Congress feels that those living off of the profits made on capital investments need even more of a tax break than they have already been given in the last few years. The tab for the tax break will, of course, be picked up by the rest of American taxpayers. The second article was about a mistake that had been written into the new tax code by which those dying and leaving behind an estate of over $17 million dollars will be saved more than $200,000. The mistake was brought to the attention of Rep. Bill Archer who heads the Ways and Means Committee responsible for oversight of the tax measure. He refuses to correct the error and this "tax break for the rich," as the Times describes it, will cost American taxpayers about $880 million. Again, the tax benefit going to a wealthy few will be paid for by their less-wealthy fellow Americans. The third article in the same edition of the Times concerns a Congressional proposal to slash $2.2 billion from a President-backed education initiative and the annual financing for home heating for the poor.

Taken as a whole, the three articles remind me of that old saw, "The rich get richer, and the poor get poorer." Well, is such a trend the result of a conspiracy? Again, Chomsky would say no. His way of doing class analysis, like that of many intellectuals today, is to view the world "systemically."

On the other hand, Dr. Michael Parenti, while often on the same side of the political aisle as Chomsky, ridicules the notion that there are no great conspiracies afoot. In his famous lecture "Conspiracy and Class Power," Parenti says that it is ludicrous to believe that the rich and powerful do not talk to each other about matters of mutual concern, and that it is equally ludicrous to believe that those with power are not willing and able to act in a rational and concerted way to protect and enhance their own self-interests.

Some are hesitant to think of "conspiracies" fearing they will be ridiculed as "conspiracy theorists." Such individuals often prefer to think that the world is the way it is because... well, "bad things just happen." Others will not allow themselves to think in class conscious ways fearing that they will be branded as "Marxists." But it is an indisputable fact that Marx was not the first, nor the last, thinker to consider class significant in political and economic analysis. For instance, Adam Smith, the great advocate of market-based economics, in his monumental work The Wealth of Nations did a very pointed kind of class analysis in Book One, Chapter Eight, titled "Of the Wages of Labour." There he succinctly showed that the self-interests of the laboring class are at odds with the self-interests of the capital- controlling class. Obviously, workers want to make as much as possible in wages while owners and their managers want to pay as little as possible. But Smith does not just show class interest. He points out that both groups, in order to maximize their own bargaining strength against the other class, unite together in "combinations." Today we usually call combinations composed of workers "unions," and those composed of the controllers of capital "associations."

But Smith goes even further. He points out that while the laborers will band together as best they can, the capital- controlling class, with its greater wealth and better organization due to its smaller numbers, uses its influence to pass laws that put the laborers at a disadvantage in their relationship with their "masters." Furthermore, Smith points out that these "combinations" of the wealthy (or wealthier) are quite willing to rigorously enforce discipline on their own members and frequently operate in secret. While Smith does not actually use the word, isn't this type of secret collusion what many people refer to by the word "conspiracy"? In fact, before the New Deal, strikes by unions were often condemned by courts as "conspiracies in restraint of trade," and under various anti-trust laws today, courts have condemned certain arrangements by associations as being conspiratorial.

While Smith's class analysis is lucid and well worth studying carefully, it was neither the first such analysis done in Britain, nor the most pointed. Perhaps the most trenchant occurred in a 1516 book that is frequently described as one of the greatest treasures of the English speaking peoples. The book is Utopia by Thomas More, the lawyer, Greek scholar, and theologian who became Speaker of the House of Commons and then during the reign of Henry VIII the first layman Lord Chancellor of England (today the title would be Prime Minister). After his execution for refusing to acknowledge Henry as head of the Church, he was declared a Saint, a story depicted in the popular 1966 film A Man For All Seasons. Utopia was written in Latin and most who read it today do so in the 1551 English translation of Ralph Robinson. A more accessible translation, however, is the one by Paul Turner (Penguin Classics, 1965) from which we take the following extraordinary passage:

And the climax of ingratitude comes when [the working class are] old and ill and completely destitute. Having taken advantage of them throughout the best years of their lives, society now forgets all the sleepless hours they've spent in its service, and repays them for all the vital work they've done, by letting them die in misery. What's more, the wretched earnings of the poor are daily whittled away by the rich, not only through private dishonesty, but through public legislation. As if it weren't unjust enough already that the man who contributes most to society should get the least in return, they make it even worse, and then arrange for injustice to be legally described as justice.

In fact, when I consider any social system that prevails in the modern world, I can't, so help me God, see it as anything but a conspiracy of the rich to advance their own interests under the pretext of organizing society. They think up all sorts of tricks and dodges, first for keeping safe their ill-gotten gains, and then for exploiting the poor by their labour as cheaply as possible. Once the rich have decided that these tricks and dodges shall be officially recognized by society - which includes the poor as well as the rich - they acquire the force of law. Thus an unscrupulous minority is led by insatiable greed to monopolize what would have been enough to supply the needs of the whole population.

The idea that there is a rich Ruling Class that acts in concert as a conspiracy has been around a long time. But it is a view that is still held by many sociologists today (for instance, see William G. Domhoff's book Who Rules America?). But even if there is not a huge conspiracy here in the legal sense, in what other way could one more-vividly describe the dynamics that bring about the economic results that we see all about us?

Some, like Chomsky and Adam Smith, see the result as having come about from the unconscious operations of the system. This is pretty much also the view of those of the Austrian School of Economics who cling to the "Hidden Hand" or "Spontaneous Order" theory which holds that the effects of everyone simply working to advance their own self-interests brings about the economic order we behold. If you like that order, you might infer that such an order comes from God and you might then reason as did some 18th century European philosophers and theologians who said we live "in the best of all possible worlds." On the other hand, if, like Voltaire who ridiculed the idea in Candide, you do not think that this is the best of all possible worlds, you might conclude that although there is an "order" to this world, it might result from some kind of a "collective unconscious" as Jung may have put it, or from the Zeitgeist or from some kind of guiding world spirit. But then the question becomes, "What kind of a spirit is that world spirit?" Let's put that question aside for now.

It is true that "conspiracy" may not be the most appropriate word to use in describing what sociologists refer to as systems, processes, struggles, or even wars, whose opposing parties have been delineated by economic class. Nevertheless, when Armstrongites, Worldwidiers, and ex-members talk about conspiracies on a grand scale, even though their definitions may be a bit foggy at times, they still share some fundamental insights with some of the greatest economic and political philosophers of historical and modern times.

(7) The establishment news media. It is rare to meet a former WCG member who does not view the established, mainstream news media with distrust. Often that distrust borders on outright hostility. There are a number of reasons for this. One is that many former WCG members know what it is like to be burned badly by having put too much trust in authority figures. Another is that many Armstrongites as Bible fundamentalists view the people that bring them the news as "worldly" and therefore as having a general view of the world that is not relevant to their own.

But there is, I believe, another more significant reason that so much of the news media is not trusted, not just by Armstrongites, but by others, as well. It is because most news disseminated to the public today is so terribly slanted, overedited, filtered, homogenized, sensationalized or sanitized, and otherwise processed that most people have at least a vague idea that what they are reading, hearing, and watching as "news" somehow does not match the world they experience first-hand. When confronted by "extremists" who claim the news media is part of a "conspiracy," the defenders of the system will admit that the news media is not perfect. For instance, in an editorial in The New York Times on July 3, there appeared this interesting admission:

The pre-launch publicity for a new Time-CNN collaboration called "NewsStand" made its first piece sound like the daring international scoop of every journalists dream. But yesterday, less than a month after CNN and Time jointly charged that America secretly used gas on a mission designed to kill defectors during the Vietnam War, they took it back....

In some ways, this has been a season for media embarrassments. The Boston Globe, owned by The New York Times Company, recently dismissed a columnist after editors learned she had been inventing people and eloquent quotes. The New Republic dismissed a reporter who fabricated a political underworld that seemed, and was, too outrageous to be true. And The Cincinnati Enquirer this week paid Chiquita International Brands an astonishing $10 million, retracted a series about the fruit company and dismissed the reporter in charge.

Nevertheless, while the major media will admit that mistakes happen, its defenders will repeatedly point to the fact that because of the U.S. Constitution's First Amendment protections, we have an extremely wide variety of news sources available and that here in the United States there is no totalitarian government that ever censors the news.

There is technical truth in that defense. In fact, if one has an advanced degree in history, economics, law, sociology, or some other field in which one has been trained to analyze the news, and if one spends a couple of hours a day reading a few of the finer newspapers such as The Wall Street Journal, The New York Times, or The Times of London, and then if one supplements those sources with a number of insightful academic and professional journals and publications from "the alternative media," and one adds to that a bit of on-line cross-referenced study, and if one then also has a bit of time for contemplation and discussion with others who are similarly studying current affairs, it is possible to get some kind of fairly accurate idea of what is really going on in the world.

The reality is, however, most people are too untrained, too uneducated, too hard pressed for time, and too drained from a hard day's work to make that kind of an effort to stay informed. The great majority of Americans who follow the news, if they care to follow the news at all, get most of their current affairs information from the evening TV news (which in a typical broadcast is about 75% celebrity gossip, sports, and lifestyle pablum), from a few minutes of radio reportage in drive time (much of which today consists of talk shows where completely uninformed and oftentimes weird individuals are given air time to vent their outlandish views), and perhaps from a few minutes of reading the local hometown newspaper after supper or The National Enquirer while standing at the supermarket checkout stand. None of those sources will be all that concerned with substantive economic or national, let alone international, news. And real analysis in such media today is virtually nonexistent. Then, because of the fact that all major media companies are controlled by a handful of corporations who in turn are dependant for advertising revenues on a not-very-large group of corporate advertisers, what we get from these sources is a very limited coverage done in a superficially colorful, but substantively uninformative, way. The end result is that we are increasingly a public that is not just uninformed, but one that is very misinformed.

That, of course, is just my opinion. But it also happens to be the opinion of many leading experts who make a career of analyzing the news media and the state of the nation. For instance, consumer advocate Ralph Nader, speaking at the University of Colorado in March, commented how the state of public awareness has now sunk to such a low point that when many people are asked what the difference is between ignorance and apathy, the answer is likely to be, "We don't know and we don't care!" (Incidentally, Nader's insight-filled speech "The Diversion of Discontent" is one of the most powerful I have heard in years and his passing comments on the relevance of scripture are rather profound. For information on ordering transcripts or cassette copies write to the other "AR": Alternative Radio, P.O. Box 551. Boulder, CO 80306.)

Nader is just one of many important figures who laments the current state of public unawareness. Many authorities have actually analyzed and thoroughly documented how the dumbing down, desensitization, and brainwashing of the American public (and I suspect the populations of many other countries) is being accomplished.

For example, in Fooling America: How Washington Insiders Twist the Truth and Manufacture the Conventional Wisdom (William Morrow & Company, 1992), Robert Parry, a former AP and Newsweek reporter, documents how until it was too late, the Washington press corps ignored virtually every major scandal of the 1980s, including the Iran-Contra scandal and the S&L scandal. (The latter, by the way, is considered the greatest financial crime in human history and one American taxpayers will be paying for - to the tune of over a half trillion dollars - until at least the year 2010.) Parry explains at least two important media realities: First, he says, what Washington insiders mean by "conventional wisdom" are those viewpoints that do not stray too far from the acceptable middle ground, viewpoints that really never challenge "the system" or the privileges of the corporate elite, and viewpoints that never suggest that America is anything less than the world's standard bearer for truth and justice. Second, Parry writes that in order for reporters to have a job in journalism, they must have access to public figures and sources. If they report the truth boldly, their sources begin to wither away and they will increasingly find themselves denied access to public figures. When that happens their employers no longer find them useful as reporters and they find themselves out of a job. In fact, that is what happened to Parry when he finally broke the Iran-Contra story. Today he writes only for the alternative press.

Noam Chomsky, in such books as Necessary Illusions: Thought Control in Democratic Societies, has written extensively about propaganda in the modern world. In Manufacturing Consent (Pantheon, 1988), co-author Edward S. Herman and Chomsky provide a brilliant and thoroughly referenced analysis of how and why the major news organizations distort and even misreport the news so often. Many of the key contentions of this book can be found in the video Manufacturing Consent: Noam Chomsky which not only summarizes the book very well, but also provides an excellent introduction into the life and work of this important scholar.

Finally, for those who doubt that the media's flaws are as serious as I believe they are, let me suggest Censored 1998: The News that Didn't Make the News by Peter Phillips and Project Censored. This work details the top 25 censored news stories of 1997. A few, like "Little Known Federal Law Paves the Way for National Identity Card" are now beginning to get some notice in the alternative press, but most of these blockbuster stories - even "Secret Power: Exposing the Global Surveillance System" which appeared only in CovertAction Quarterly - have been completely ignored by the mainstream press. However, what is perhaps most disturbing about this book is not just its claims, but the fact that they are so well documented and have been put together by an outstanding team of scholars. The host institution for Project Censored is Sonoma State University in Rohnert Park, California and the book is published by Seven Stories Press of New York.

Do the claims of such media critics as Nader, Parry, Chomsky, and Project Censored provide a justification for the use of the word "conspiracy" when talking about the news media? In the legal sense, of course not. And even in the hallowed halls of academia, using the word that way will raise eyebrows. But, that doesn't mean that when Armstrongites talk about the news media as being part of a conspiracy that they are total fools. In fact, they are probably much closer to the truth of the matter than those who simply believe that Dan Rather, Ted Koppel, and other reporters of that corporate ilk are incapable of telling lies.

(8) The government as a conspiracy. It may seem odd to some that in a democracy (or at least a republic) some citizens would think of their own government as being a conspiracy directed against them. Sadly, however, many Americans feel that way. And among former Worldwidiers the number who express such ideas is quite high. The reasons for such strong anti-government sentiments are many. But at the root is a feeling that many express in letters to this publication. They see their U.S. government as one controlled by powerful interests who use the institutions of government as a means of enriching themselves while they and the government they control oppress the weak and the poor. Such people therefore see the government itself as a conspiracy or as part of an even larger one.

Such feelings tend to run higher among former Worldwidiers than among the general public because former Worldwidiers, having already been severely burned by the WCG, are perhaps more sensitive to further propagandizing and exploitation. While no judge is going to accept their definition of conspiracy, when such folks use the term, they have a pretty clear idea of what they mean.

(9) The world as conspiracy. To perhaps a majority of Americans, such an idea is absurd. But there are folks who do not simply look at their national government as a conspiracy against them, but view all the governments of the world as a united conspiracy. It's not just church folks who believe this. For instance, intellectual Chomsky, even though he eschews conspiracy theories, sometimes sounds like he believes the whole world has already been organized globally to the detriment of the majority of humanity. In fact, in his book World Orders New and Old, Chomsky quotes Churchill after WWII as having used the term "the world government" as though Churchill considered such a thing an already existing reality. Of course, Chomsky is not suggesting that a world totalitarian state already exists, but the similarity of his language to the fears of some ex-Worldwidiers is striking.

Of course, in this category of usage, there are also those who believe the United Nations is stronger than it really is, and so such folks also sometimes use the word conspiracy when talking about the UN or about the internationalists who favor it as a model for future world governance.

(10) The cosmos as conspiracy. Not just Armstrongites, but most other Bible fundamentalists take seriously those scriptures that describe Satan and his hordes. While not all Christians believe in a literal Satan - there are those who view Satan as a personification of the collective "dark side" of the human species - nevertheless, it is not just Christians who believe in the idea that there is some kind of Satan-led demonic force loose in the universe. There are millions of people in some of the world's other major religions - Hindus, Moslems, Zoroastrians, for example - who believe something very similar. In fact, there are even some sophisticated Jungian psychologists who think such a notion makes sense. So when Armstrongites talk about a universal conspiracy led by Satan, perhaps we should not be too quick to sit in the seat of the scornful.

With the above overview to provide a way of discussing this difficult but important topic, we can move on to a discussion of some of the very bizarre new religious notions that are sweeping the world of Armstrongism. But, because of space limitations in this issue, that discussion will have to wait until Part II.

[To be continued in AR70]

The Real Year 2000

As we race toward the year 2000, billions of people around the world seem to be caught up in anticipation that the arrival of the new millennium will have transcendent meaning. Few, however, seem to realize that the way Western civilization dates its calendar begins with an erroneous assumption as to when Jesus of Nazareth was actually born. Many Christians still actually believe that Jesus was born on December 25 and that the year was 1 A.D. Of course, virtually everyone who has studied the matter even cursorily knows that such a simplistic notion does not match with many historical facts. And, indeed, today most historians and religious scholars are convinced that the historical Jesus was born within the first decade B.C.

One religious historian who has spent decades researching and writing on the subject is Dr. Ernest L. Martin of the Associates for Scriptural Knowledge. And in recent years, many of his conclusions regarding the dating of the birth of Herod, the appearance of "the star" of Bethlehem, and other known events surrounding the birth of Jesus have been gaining support worldwide from many scholars in various disciplines.

For some time now, Martin has taught that Jesus was actually born in 3 B.C. on Rosh Hashannah, or the Feast of Trumpets, which in 3 B.C. began at sundown Sept. 11. If Martin is correct, then that would mean that 1999 years and about 10 months have passed since that momentous event (recall that there is no year zero). It would further mean that by Jewish modes of reckoning, this coming Rosh Hashannah, which this year will begin at sunset Sept. 20, would actually mark the 2,000th anniversary of the birth of Jesus. Martin is not one who is big on birthdays, especially as religious holidays. Nevertheless, many of his students are of the opinion that on or about September 20-21 we may see some type of significant occurrence that will be a cosmic benchmark of "the end times." One such student is Ken Nagele who publishes The Elean Files: A Guide to Understanding the End-Times. At his promotional web site, www.elean.com, Nagele writes, "If you thought Year 2000 was important, wait until you see what's going to happen in 1998!"

In our last issue we mentioned Dr. Ernest Martin's upcoming book The Temples that Jerusalem Forgot. Since then, we received from his office an "A.S.K. Geographical Report" titled "Illustrations of the Temple Mount and Fort Antonia" which graphically details some of the essential ideas of his thesis. After carefully reviewing the data, we are convinced that it is not a baseless claim that Martin's theory may eventually prove to be, as one university scholar told us, one of the most important theological and archaeological discoveries of all time. Those who may be skeptical of such a flamboyant assertion may wish to order a copy of the short article before ordering the book. The report, No. A 102, with illustration and diagram, is available for $2 by writing to Associates for Scriptural Knowledge, P.O. Box 25000, Portland, OR 97298. The complete temple book is still not published. But we are told it will be off the press at about the same time as the initial printing of the Original Bible Project translation which is scheduled for release some time in September.

Roman Catholicism in Transition

On June 25, the Vatican announced that it has made a decision to resolve an issue that has split the Western Christian world for over 500 years. The Vatican announced it will sign a declaration with most of the world's Lutherans affirming that Roman Catholics and Lutherans share a basic understanding of how human beings receive God's forgiveness and salvation. The document, approved by the Lutheran World Federation, declares that both denominations have discovered common ground on the issue of "justification." As reported on The New York Times (6/26/98):

The Reformation leader Martin Luther held that justification comes solely through faith in God, while the Catholic church taught that a person's good works play a role. Now, through the declaration, Catholics and Lutherans agree that divine forgiveness comes only through God's grace and that good works flow from that.

Conceivably, the resolution of this theological issue will help make progress toward European unity a little smoother on the Continent where the Lutheran denomination is second in size only to the Roman Catholic Church.

It is remarkable that the Catholic-Lutheran theological debate that raged on for over 500 years is virtually identical to the central theological debate that raged among WCG intellectuals from about 1970 until the ascendancy of Joe Tkach Jr. It is also interesting that both debates ended with the same viewpoint prevailing, at least officially.

Sabbath Debate Continues

Some theological debates, it seems, never end. The debate over the sabbath question, for instance. On the question of whether the weekly sabbath should be observed, in recent years there have been two different viewpoints circulating in WCG circles with each viewpoint being thoroughly propounded in a popular book. Strongly in favor of the maintenance of seventh-day Sabbath observance is the book From Sabbath to Sunday by our friend Dr. Samuele Bacchiocchi, an SDA professor at Andrews University. And strongly contra is the book The Sabbath in Crisis by former SDA minister Dale Ratzlaff.

Some weeks ago, Christian radio station KJSL in St. Louis invited both Ratzlaff and Bacchiocchi to debate the sabbath issue live on the air. They agreed and the hour-long debate took place on June 15 beginning at 9 a.m. central time. Not surprisingly, opinions as to who won the debate vary according to the sabbath views of the ones who heard the program. In a way, Bacchiocchi continues the debate by posting a synopsis and updated commentary on the Internet. For details, write him at samuele@andrews.edu or at his surface address: 4990 Appian Way, Berrien Springs, MI 49103. Ratzlaff, on the other hand, has responded by making cassette tape copies of the radio debate available for $4. Write to Life Assurance Ministries, 19109 North 71st Drive, Glendale, AZ 85308.

The British Bands

We have not reported much on the Armstrongite churches in Britain of late, but be assured many are still active in that country. All of the largest WCG offshoots have some ministerial representation in the U.K. In addition, there are a number of Britain-based WCG offshoots that have publishing ministries:

New Horizons is published by the Churches of God Outreach Ministries, an association of independent churches formerly with the Garner Ted Armstrong group. Their main address is: P.O. Box 2525, Lincoln, LN5 7PF, United Kingdom; e-mail: coguk@aol.com. In the U.S. subscription requests can be sent to P.O. Box 54621, Tulsa, OK 74155-0621. Incidentally, New Horizons is edited by James McBride who in the late sixties was AR editor Trechak's first journalism instructor at Ambassador-Bricket Wood. So all letters critical of Trechak's writing in Ambassador Report should be sent directly to Mr. McBride (Just kidding - ed.).

The Countdown is a small magazine specializing in biblical esoterica. It is put out by Editor Alex Cain, a 30-year veteran of the WCG who also works as an organic chemist and polymer researcher for the British Defense Department. The address to write to is: The Church of God, P.O. Box 53, Farnborough, Hants. GU14 OYZ, United Kingdom; web site: www.cableol.net/alexcain.

Servants of Yahweh, P.O. Box 942, Harrow, Middlesex, HA3 9XY, United Kingdom.

Sabbatarian publisher Isaac Aluochier, not affiliated with any other sacred-name group, is a former WCG member whose article "Herbert W. Armstrong - A Scriptural Analysis" is published on-line at www.ServeYahweh.org/Articles/Armstrong.htm.

Awake! Awake! is a monthly magazine published by Midnight Ministries, P.O. Box 29, Aylesbury, HP17 8TL, United Kingdom. Controversial editor Malcolm B. Heap has been mentioned in our pages before because of some of his more radical pronouncements, his promotion of the ministry of Benny Hinn, and his reliance on the predictions of certain individuals who might be called prophetic channelers. Many observers, such as editor Kerin Webb of Potentia International (26 Bramshaw Gardens, Bournemouth, Dorset, BH8 OBS, United Kingdom) thought Heap's ministry would never survive even a year when it started. Yet today Midnight Ministries appears to be the most successful of the WCG spinoffs based in Britain. At least it is the one offering the most printed material. An integral part of Heap's ministry is his regular, biting attacks on the WCG. He has not flinched from proclaiming, "The WCG is not led by the Holy Spirit, but by demon spirits!" charge that has unsettled a number of evangelical groups attempting to join in ecumenical fellowship with the Worldwidars of Britain.

Letters

There is always someone looking to find fault with God's ministers no matter what. The Seal [of the Church of God, International] is the Coat of Armor that HWA gave to Garner Ted Armstrong years ago and I have the article about that in my files. There is nothing wrong with it. How stupid could anyone get to find fault with that. The men who took over CGI stole everything, all Garner Ted's possessions from him, and are now using that Seal.

Some people will have to stand before God and answer for all they say and for finding fault. They forget God has used GTA for over 40 years to bring us all into a knowledge of the truth. Satan is alive and well and is doing all he can to turn people off of the truth.

It would be good if you left out letters such as that one about the Seal. Who needs it? Garner Ted has not changed anything of the truth and none of us are perfect. We are all sinners.

-Emily Young
Canada

In AR68 you reported, as I had informed you, that before being chosen to head UCG, Leslie McCullough was buying a home in the Cincinnati area. Now he is saying, "I would like to know the address! I don't have a home there yet." He may be technically right. He may have only been LOOKING for a home in the Cincinnati area - and doing so with UCG Home Office relocation funds.

-"No State"

I would like to respond to the letter writer who "peeked" into Difficult Scriptures by David Albert. First, it is remarkable that a book can be fairly judged by just "peeking" into it. Perhaps the writer has developed a new method of speed reading and comprehension - "Solitary Peeking In The Book Store." It could also be known as "SPIT-BS" because that is what happens when conclusions are based on incomplete data.

Second, my own reading of Dr. Albert's book, in its entirety, did not lead me to conclude that anything was being "attacked." "Attack" implies hostile intent, and his book has none. My critique is this: Difficult Scriptures is a comparison of the sacred day and food laws as taught by HWA with opposing views from both Scripture and Christian scholarship with the conclusion that the former lack validity for today's Christian.

Third, I do not believe Dr. Albert's alleged lack of baptismal counseling skills changes the value of his book. I have no use for the WCG or any of its spin-off groups. After 27 years of them I am "church-free." But this book has helped release me from mental and spiritual bondage and I would recommend it to anyone who is not afraid of information that might change their mind about Armstrong theology.

-John Gill
Texas

I am now fully convinced that the Armstrong-Tkach religious empire was built on intentionally making merchandise of people as opposed to innocent error - deliberate lies rather than well-intentioned mistakes. This makes quite a bit of difference in how the WCG is viewed!

-Mrs. Wayne Becker
Galena, Ohio

Your review of "European Unity," "The New World Order," etc. was educational. But you failed to include one of the pieces of the puzzle: the redistribution of the world's population.

As you know, some of the more prosperous nations are being inundated with foreigners. The United States is being invaded with immigrants, legal and illegal, mostly Asian and Hispanic. The American heartland is now smothered with this problem, which formerly afflicted only the coastal and border states. In addition to the legislated integration, there is the incessant bombardment of the "diversity" hype and the "multiculture" hype.

When the economic boom fades into recession or depression, will all these immigrants contribute to a structured society? Or will they become an ungovernable mob? Will anarchy create the opening for which the Beast has long awaited? (See II Thes. 2:7 in Living Bible.) Is the immigration of these masses of people an accident? Or is it a part of the grand design?

-George Holt
Tennessee

Editor: I don't know if I would call it part of a "grand design," but United States immigration policy is certainly no accident. When I made a study of U.S. immigration policy in an immigration law course some nine years ago, I was astounded at how high Congress had set immigration quotas when compared to the much lower levels of all other nations. (And not only have U.S. levels continued to rise, but there is now a move in Congress to make them even higher) At the time, I asked a number of immigration lawyers and immigration policy experts what was behind the high U.S. quotas and they answered uniformly that U.S. immigration levels are kept high in order to keep the wages of American workers low.

Our law makers are not unaware of the fact that high immigration plays a major role in rapid population increase, puts a strain on the environment, and contributes to inner-city ethnic tensions. But they are also aware that by flooding the country with workers (some unskilled, but many skilled and educated) they are helping industry to find more laborers or desired labor replacements without having to spend more on retraining American workers or by competitively hiking up wage levels to lure American workers from competing firms. It is a simple supply and demand problem with Congress behaving with a clear anti-labor, pro-business bias. With American corporations now contributing to political campaigns at a level more than ten times that of organized labor, and with big bucks a prerequisite for political campaigning, the politicians know who they must heed if they want to stay in office.

It is further remarkable that while the immigration-level issue is one that is vital to working Americans, it is hardly discussed in the corporate-owned American media or, if it is, it is discussed with no mention of the underlying economic agenda. That, I believe, is an indication of just how weak our democratic institutions have become.

The Sierra Club recently had an election in which members were asked whether the Club should take a position on the subject of immigration as regards resulting population increases and environmental strains. I was part of a Club faction that said we should. I publicly took that position based on only two considerations: the economic one regarding American wages and the environmental argument. When I did so, however, a number attacked me as being xenophobic and racist. I am neither. Before the Club vote, the media generally seemed to side with the anti-initiative people and the initiative (which was merely an advisory one, with no legal effect) went down to defeat.

In the near future, there will be another attempt to bring this important issue to the Club's, and the public's, attention. Any readers who would like more information about this subject may write to Sierrans for U.S. Population Stabilization, P.O. Box 2399, Berkeley, CA 94702.

Normally I would not mention a stupid TV program. But if you ever have a chance to catch the episode "The Temple of Haefestus and the Vestal Virgins" on Xena, Warrior Princess you will be glad you watched. The story is about a temple and how the bad guys have by stealth and trickery taken over "The One True Church." When they got to the part where the High Priestess was leading a group of temple prostitutes in "Onward, Vestal Virgins" sung to the tune of "Onward, Christian Soldiers" we almost died from laughing. Other COG members who saw it have said the same thing.

Then, on the TV show Babylon 5 none of us missed the obvious parallels to what went on in the WCG, what with the Vorlon and the Shadows, the fight between good and evil. In the end, they all went off together - the struggle was pointless, except that the fight became irrelevant when the main characters took ownership of their own destiny and would not submit to either side!

Of course, there have been other TV shows with WCG-related themes. We all remember that wonderful episode of Quincy, M.E. with the cult leader, Mr. Osbourne, whose lawyer was a right-on hilarious Stanley Rader look-a-like who also looked and sounded like somebody who had just met on camera with Mike Wallace. Years ago at the Feast of Tabernacles in Hawaii, [WCG lawyer] Ralph Helge explained to us that the WCG had considered suing over it!

-Douglas Becker
Washington

Editor: Besides the programs that you mentioned, we have seen at least three other TV shows with episodes that obviously drew on Worldwide's history for inspiration. When our large 1977 issue first appeared, the owners of a Pasadena bookstore where copies were being sold told us that a number of Hollywood production company executives immediately sent over couriers to purchase copies. A few even showed up personally in limos. And since then a number of Hollywood writers have subscribed to AR. We would not be too surprised if one day the whole WCG story is turned into a television mini-series. But whether it would be a tragedy, a crime show, or a comedy is hard to say.

Incidentally, Mr. Becker's humor-filled Web site is at: www.all2true.com.

BIZARRO By Dan Piraro

WAIT! IT'S ALL COMING BACK TO ME NOW!
I DON'T HAVE AMNESIA — I NEVER HAVE KNOWN WHO I AM!

This weekend the Dallas WCG hosted a seminar for their women, titled "Women Who Live for the Lord." About 600 women attended. My husband, a WCG member, has put in many hours working for the meetings, so I've heard a little bit about the seminar. Joe and Tammy were there, of course, along with some of the usual entourage from Pasadena.

I asked my husband what they were using the projectors for, was it just to project the words of the songs being sung, or was it for something else? He said - and this blows my mind - that they showed digitized slides of Mrs. Herbert [Loma] Armstrong. When I asked why, he said they talked about her as an example of a fine Christian woman.

I've read enough and seen enough documentation that I truly believe the incestuous relationship between HWA and a daughter did occur, and that it probably went on for about ten years, as has been written. I can't believe that Mrs. Armstrong did not know or suspect what was going on. And what kind of a mother would allow her husband to do that to her daughter?

Besides not protecting her daughter and getting her away from that pervert, Loma publicly supported her lying, thieving husband in his false church up to the day she died, knowing what kind of a person he really was. That is not Christian.

Furthermore, by holding up Mrs. Armstrong as a fine example, WCG is implying that HWA also was a fine example. They don't even have to say it. If she is a great example then, of course, her husband, the founder of the church they are in, must also be a great example.

This is unbelievable in one way, but then why should I be surprised? I'm not saying Loma was an evil person, but there are so many other women that could have been used as truly fine examples. So why did they pick her? Psychology, psychology, psychology. I think it was very carefully thought out. They please the old line WCGers, and, besides, what New Covenant-believing woman or man would dare to have dissenting thoughts about this? That wouldn't be Christian, would it?

Brinsmead is Back!

In the early 1980s, the writings of theologian Robert D. Brinsmead began circulating in some WCG circles and in the years that followed they made a significant impact on the lives of thousands of Worldwidiers. Brinsmead, who was never a WCG member himself, had been a devoted member of the Seventh Day Adventist Church. At some point in the 1970s, however, Brinsmead came to believe that strict seventh-day Sabbath observance was not a requirement for salvation and he became an eloquent critic of many SDA doctrines. In 1981, Brinsmead, a thorough researcher and a persuasive writer, came to the attention of Ambassador Report when one of our readers introduced us to his scholarly, yet very readable, publication Verdict: An International Journal of Theology.

We mentioned Verdict a number of times in years past, but at some point in the early nineties, we lost touch with Brinsmead. When we tried to find out what ever became of him, we received wildly conflicting reports. Some said he had died, others said he was living in an exotic fruit grove in Australia where he had become an old and embittered atheist or, at least, an agnostic who had lost all interest in God.

A few months ago, however, we discovered that Brinsmead's writings of old were still being made available to the public. We also discovered that although it was true that Brinsmead was managing an exotic fruit plantation in Australia besides being active in politics, he was not embittered, was still of an optimistic and lively temperament, and still took a great interest in theological matters.

Now, however, the Brinsmead saga grows more complicated. A few weeks ago the news got out that Brinsmead has returned to writing about religion and that some of his new ideas would soon be on the Internet and in print. Among many former SDAs and former Worldwidiers for whom the charismatic Brinsmead is a genuine folk hero, there was much excitement. But when some advance copies of Brinsmead's latest writings actually started circulating, many old fans were genuinely shocked. In the many years that had elapsed since his last publications, in addition to having renounced the sabbath and all religious "legalism," Brinsmead apparently had also started to question a number of "orthodox"

Christian doctrines, as well. At this juncture, many former Brinsmead followers seem so confused about their hero's new views that they are simply letting time pass before they will comment further.

Meanwhile, Brinsmead's writings can still be obtained from ongoing Verdict Publishing, P.O. Box 1311, Fallbrook, CA 92029-0904 and from a related group, Worldview Publications, P.O. Box 2770, Fallbrook, CA 92088. Those wanting to read his most famous pieces on-line can visit the Bill Ferguson collection of "Brinsmead's Key Writings" at www.quango.net/brinsmead or the Rodney O. Lain collection at <http://members.macconnet.com/users/r/rodneyo/brinsmead.htm>. If you have any trouble getting through, it may be because a number of Brinsmead's former churchmen consider him such a dangerous infidel that some on occasion have successfully hacked those sites.

As for Brinsmead, himself, he is still ensconced at Tropical Fruit World in Duranbah, New South Wales. He is healthy and tanned, and even as you are reading this he is probably reclining in a hammock, sipping a chilled glass of exotic fruit nectar, and perhaps again writing a letter "to a long-absent friend" as he did on February 14 when he penned this confession:

I am through and through an anti-authoritarian, anti-orthodox, and anti-establishment rebel. But am all that in the spirit of fun and laughter. I was not an angry young man then, nor am I a bitter old man now, because the one who is my inspiration is the one who lampooned the world, the religious/social establishment with outrageous stories - but he did it with a big smile on his face; he did it in the context of the eating/drinking man: "Then were our mouths filled with laughter and our tongues with singing."

He (Jesus) started the revolution of being truly human and the pulling down of all traditions, customs, laws, authorities, and structures that forced people to be inhuman.

With gusto and fun, I've made war on Adventism, Protestant orthodoxy, Christian orthodoxy, Biblicism. And it should not be forgotten that whenever my own cause became its own establishment, I made war on that, too, and poked fun at my own orthodoxy as much as that of others.

Editor: On that intriguing quote I will end this issue. My special thanks to all of you regular contributors who are helping to keep Ambassador Report alive.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

October 1998 (AR70)

Nuns Capture Big Sandy: Ambassador to be Catholic College

Under the direction of Pastor General Joseph W. Tkach Jr., the religious-business empire built by Worldwide Church of God (WCG) founder Herbert W. Armstrong continues to shrink. In September, the WCG's Worldwide News (WN) announced that the Tkach team has entered into a contract to sell Worldwide's Ambassador University (AU) campus in Texas to Pittsburgh-based La Roche College. While the agreement contains a provision whereby La Roche has a feasibility period in which to ascertain that the campus will suit its needs, those knowledgeable about the situation say there should be no real obstacle for the completion of the property transfer within a few months.

La Roche will be getting a huge piece of real estate. The AU property includes more than 200 structures and three quarters of a million square feet of building improvements. There are classroom buildings, office buildings, dormitories, a large university library building, private residences, a convention center, a field house, athletic and recreational facilities, a nine-hole golf course, two lakes, campgrounds with bath house, an FM radio station, an airstrip that is almost one mile long, on-site water and wastewater treatment facilities, and in addition to the core 228 acres of campus, the surrounding 2,000 acres of farm and timberland. Also part of the deal are all of the university's personal property including farm equipment and all of the library's collection.

In explaining the deal to its members, the WCG's leaders have described La Roche College as "a coeducational, private college with a campus in Pittsburgh." The WN article announcing the sale did not mention that according to La Roche's Web site:

La Roche is a Catholic, coeducational, private college that was founded by the Sisters of Divine Providence in 1963.... The Congregation of the Sisters of Divine Providence... is an international religious community confounded [sic] in Germany by Wilhelm Emmanuel von Kettler, social reformer and Bishop of Mainz, and Stephanie Starkenfels de la Roche, a French noblewoman, known in [the] community as Mother Marie de la Roche.... The Sisters of Divine Providence, St. Peter Province, Pittsburgh... have been the sponsors and supporters of the college from its inception.

Not generally known among WCG members is the fact that La Roche has generously offered to reemploy many of Ambassador's former faculty members at the new La Roche campus. It is not known if any accepting such an offer will convert to Catholicism. But such a development would not be surprising considering how used to doctrinal shifts former Armstrongites have become. Another fact not disclosed to the WCG's members are the financial arrangements of the land deal. One former WCG member wrote:

A close friend who lives in the Big Sandy metroplex area and who works as a reporter on a local paper has been in contact with both sides in the impending sale of the AU property. His last report to me was that the purchase price was confidential. My request to him was to find out who made that decision.

A few months ago, when the Office Facilities Building in Pasadena was sold, there was enough room in the WN to report an entire page of details regarding the efforts which went into the sale. But there was no mention of the sale price. I thought that that item would have been the most important item in the entire issue, given the WCG's perpetual need for money. I have not yet seen any announcement of the sale price. So, it remains to be seen if they follow the same pattern of behavior with the sale of AU.

So far the WCG has stuck by its pattern of secrecy. Apparently its leaders do not feel that anyone whose tithes helped build AU has a right to know how much is being paid for that prized church asset or where that money will eventually wind up.

Strange Land Deals

The sale of the Texas campus is not the only strange WCG land deal that we have reported on. In AR55 we wrote about the sale of the Mt. Pocono feast site "for one dollar..." and in AR62 we reported on the sale of the Wisconsin Dells feast site to a mysterious group. Since then one of our readers sent us a clipping from the Milwaukee Journal Sentinel (3/27/97, p.1) which provides more detail as to what became of that beautiful Wisconsin property. Under the headline "Miracles Happen Here: Dells Center Aims to Heal Body, Soul," writer Jo Sandin reported how that property has been turned into a New Age healing center. Endeavor Academy, which also distributes Out of Time and A Course in Miracles, two New Age books, makes the claim that people coming to their healing center have been healed of everything from tumors to depression to arthritis:

"Miracles happen here," says Australian-born Rae Visser, 37, who with her husband, Michael, and two other pastors keep the Miracles Healing Center open 24 hours a day....

Basically, the message is this: Pain, suffering, disease, discord and death aren't real. These delusions disappear for those who learn to see themselves as they really are - perfect expressions of eternal life. "We're already in Heaven," says Rae. "We never left."

Another interesting land deal done by the Tkach team was the sale earlier this year of the WCG's Mail Processing Center in Pasadena. Located across the freeway from the old Ambassador campus, the building was apparently considered unneeded as the Tkach team's proselytizing efforts are producing ever less fruit. Again, as with previous land deals and the latest in Texas, important details about the sale were not made known to WCG members. With the Mail Processing Center sale, the WN only said that the buyer was an Alhambra, California-based company. But why not give the company's name?

Our suspicions raised, over the next few weeks the Report made a number of visits to the area of the old Mail Processing Center and observed in the parking lot a large number of police-type vehicles. But these were not city or county police cars, but late-model cars with mounted police-style lights. What was odd, however, was that on the days we visited there were no uniformed officers or uniformed security people to be seen. The few employees outside taking smoke breaks all wore suits and ties and appeared to be the kind of employees that spend most of their time at computer terminals.

The building, although it has many very large windows, remains shrouded in secrecy as all the windows are now highly tinted. The locked reception area appears to be well-monitored with automation but has no receptionist. On one of the strange patrol cars we noticed the name "Inter-Com." And thinking that the new company, Inter-Com Security Services formerly of Alhambra, might perhaps be some type of community patrol operation, we phoned the number listed in the phone book under that name and asked what they did. "Was this a community patrol company?" we inquired. After much hesitation, the unidentified voice on the phone quietly answered, "No." "Well, what exactly does Inter-Com do?", we shot back. Long pause, then, "security." "What kind of security?" Very long pause, then, "corporate." "Can you send us some printed information about your company, what it does, what services it provides?" An even longer pause was followed by another quiet, "No." "Can you give us any other information?" Click.

In an age when virtually every mid-size company has some kind of Web site, this company has none. In fact, a search of the Web did not find the company mentioned anywhere. Virtually no Pasadenans that we talked to knew anything about the company. And experts in the field say that "Corporate security" today could mean anything from physically guarding corporate properties to electronically spying on employees, outside electronic surveillance, or hacking into the computer files of competitors. One of our readers, a former Worldwide executive, told us:

The MPC building was built for data processing of mail and for handling thousands of phone calls. There were conduits of data cables and telephone lines that ran into the Publishing/Accounting/CIS building across the street. You can see outlines of the conduit trenches in the parking lot of Publishing where they diamond-sawed the pavement. There are also conduits that run inside the Green Street bridge to the other side of the campus from CIS. None of this is secret information. All the WATS lines terminated in the MPC building. All of this makes it a great structure for any firm handling lots of data or telephone traffic.

Again, the Tkach team has yet to reveal how much was paid for this valuable church asset or what entities got the proceeds.

Attorney General Handcuffed

The strange WCG land deals of the last few years have prompted more than one former WCG member to contact government officials to ask for an investigation. But earlier this year when one individual wrote California Attorney General Dan Lungren about the matter, Robert M. Raymer, a representative of the Attorney General sent this reply:

Thank you for your recent letter to Attorney General Dan Lungren... regarding your request for the Attorney General's intervention in overseeing the Worldwide Church of God. Unfortunately we must respectfully decline your request because we lack authority to act.

In 1981, California law was changed to restrict the Attorney General's charitable oversight role with respect to religious corporations. The Attorney General's Office does not have the same investigative or enforcement powers over religious corporations that it has over public benefit corporations and charitable trusts.

The Attorney General's enforcement powers may be used only if the directors of a religious corporation engage in criminal activity or conduct a public, fraudulent solicitation for "secular" purposes. As to other harmful actions by directors of religious corporations, including self-dealing, improper distribution of a religious corporation's assets, and gross mismanagement, the Attorney General does not have the legal authority to file a derivative civil action on behalf of the religious corporation. Only the directors of the religious corporation, or, in some cases, the corporation's statutory voting members, may file a civil action to correct these types of abuses.

We regret that we could not be of further assistance to you, but hope that the information we have provided clarifies our restrictions in regard to your request.

Long-time readers of the Report will recall that the Attorney General of California once had the authority to investigate churches in cases where church leaders were perceived as self-dealing. But as a result of the Petris Bill - which with much lobbying by the WCG's leadership was passed into law after the State of California versus Worldwide lawsuit of 1979 - the Attorney General has lost that power. Ironically, many Worldwidiers who marched, demonstrated, and wrote to legislators to get that law passed are the very ones who now would like the State of California to intervene on their behalf.

We had hoped to get a comment on the situation directly from Attorney General Lungren, but when we phoned his office in Sacramento, we were told, "Sorry, Attorney General Lungren is out of town, campaigning to become our next governor."

Tkach's Church Marketing Strategy

Former WCG members who subscribe to the Report and who are following the transformed WCG as led by Joseph Tkach Jr. often comment to us that their impression of the WCG leadership is one of chaotic mismanagement. Many tell us that they cannot see any pattern to what Tkach is doing other than that of a confused religionist. While that may be the impression that is given to those not familiar with the world of religion marketing, our impression is that Tkach does have a game plan that has been thought out, even if it is not playing out as successfully as he had hoped.

In "Religion Journal: New Christian Groups Gain Members," which appeared in The New York Times on January 3, Gustav Niebuhr wrote:

Since the late 1960s, many mainline Protestant denominations have reported losing hundreds of thousands of members, while Roman Catholics' attendance at Mass also declined from an earlier peak before leveling off. Yet nationwide polls over that period have reported that the proportion of Americans' who say they regularly attend church has remained unchanged - at or slightly above 40 percent. If one assumes those people are being truthful, the question is where have some of them gone to worship?

In a recently published book, Donald Miller, a professor of religion at the University of Southern California, says that part of the answer lies in the growth of three new Christian movements, all formed since the 1960s, directed at people younger than 50, and made up largely of independent congregations unaffiliated with older mainline and evangelical Protestant denominations.

The three are the Calvary Chapel, Vineyard, and Hope Chapel movements, whose histories, leadership and constituencies Miller describes in his book, Reinventing American Protestantism, (University of California, 1997). He calls them examples of "new paradigm" churches, noting that their sanctuaries are typically devoid of religious ornamentation, that pastors and congregants alike favor informal attire, that music is contemporary (often electric guitars and pop-style "praise choruses" in place of organs and hymnals), that sermons center on Bible teaching, and that some degree of openness exists to such "gifts of the Spirit" as speaking in tongues.

All three movements began in Southern California, but have become national. Calvary Chapel and Vineyard are loose associations of independent congregations, while the smaller Hope Chapel movement is affiliated with the International Church of the Foursquare Gospel, a 75-year-old Pentecostal denomination founded by evangelist Aimee Semple McPherson.

Niebuhr goes on to show the movements' connections to Bill McCartney and Promise Keepers, the "Jesus Movement," and Rev. Chuck Smith of Calvary Chapel in Costa Mesa, California. While Tkach has not been a slavish follower of any of these individuals and movements, he has adopted enough of their ways and has either mentioned them outright or alluded to them sufficiently to indicate he has studied their ideas. Unfortunately for Tkach, the adoption of such new forms of worship and such self-conscious religion-marketing methods has not produced the growth that was anticipated. One of our readers recently passed on the following insight from a former WCG member:

I was just looking at the current WN and noticed something interesting. In the past the WCG Treasurer's Report was for the Church only, and as I understood it, the income for Plain Truth Ministries [PTM] was kept separate. This WN issue says "WCG and PTM income and expenses." If they weren't adding PTM's income to that of the Church in the past, the income has dropped more than they want you to notice at first glance! In past issues, daily averages for the WCG alone were around $100,000. Now, for this past month, the daily average for both WCG and PTM combined was only $97,894. What a difference! If my calculation is correct, the WCG is again covering all the expenses of PTM, not just the one million of Church funds that they said would go into it. Mail-in income [of the Church] is apparently being commingled and, I assume, the other income would be advertising sales in the new Plain Truth.

Strange Days

The failure of the Tkach game plan to bring in the kind of financial growth that he anticipated has forced Tkach to slow down somewhat the frantic pace of doctrinal change that he had maintained previously. As we reported last issue, even though the WCG's leadership is in favor of making the WCG a denomination keeping neither the seventh-day Sabbath nor Old Testament Holy Days, fear of losing old-time Sabbath-keepers and Holy Day-keepers has slowed the rate of doctrinal change a little bit. Nevertheless, some doctrinal evolution continues.

The latest oddity resulting from the spirit of creeping Protestantism, as some Armstrongites refer to it, was the WCG's keeping of the Old Testament Holy Days recently on dates at variance with the traditional Jewish calculations. The leadership of the WCG previously announced that it planned on observing the annual Holy Days on the nearest convenient weekend. Because the Feast of Trumpets this year fell on Sept. 21-22, a weekday, if members were to keep the feast day as the Jews do, it would require many to take off time from work. To Tkach, this was inconvenient. So the suggestion went forth that should a congregation still desire to keep the feast day (this can be determined by survey, remember), but found the actual day inconvenient, then the congregation could reschedule the Holy Day to the nearest weekend.

So, this year after all the surveys were completed, a number of WCG congregations moved the Feast of Trumpets and the Day of Atonement to new dates. We have heard reports of WCG congregations around the country scheduling Trumpets services on Saturday, September 19 and Day of Atonement services on Saturday, September 26. At least one WCG congregation, showing even greater innovation, scheduled Trumpets for a Sunday night. While all this calendar juggling was going on, some WCG congregations continued to meet on the traditional Jewish dates. We have yet to find out if the latter churches are Saturday-keeping churches or Sunday-keeping churches or Saturday-and-Sunday-keeping churches. As one of our WCG readers told us, "It is getting really very confusing." But, another humorously told us, "We should rename the church The Worldwide Church of Convenience."

GTA Pays Masseur

According to papers filed in the county court in Tyler, Texas, the civil suit brought by masseuse Suerae Robertson against evangelist Garner Ted Armstrong has concluded with an out-of-court settlement. Court records do not indicate the amount that was paid to the masseuse to drop her claim that the famous evangelist had sexually assaulted her at her massage parlor in the summer of 1995. By settling out of court, Armstrong was able to avoid an embarrassing trial that would likely have included a replay of the famous hidden camera video of his cavorting naked in a massage parlor. Tyler was also spared a trial that likely would have included testimony from an assortment of Texas masseuses and madams who have claimed that Armstrong has also been an abusive customer in their own establishments.

While Garner Ted has dubbed his latest church venture The Intercontinental Church of God (ICG), his followers appear to be mainly in the states of Texas, New Mexico, Louisiana, Missouri, Michigan, and West Virginia, with total weekly church attendance reportedly now well under a thousand.

Dart on the Air

While the ministry of Garner Ted Armstrong still survives, it is small and limp now. But one vibrant fellowship whose numbers are swelling is Christian Education Ministries (CEM) headed by Ronald L. Dart, formerly Garner Ted's right-hand man. Dart's Born to Win radio broadcast can now be heard on more than 120 radio stations.

During his lifetime, author David Robinson on a number of occasions commented to this publication that he believed that of all ministers to have come through the Armstrongism experience, Dart was in his opinion the most informed and the best teacher. A good example of Dart's intelligence and frankness can be seen in a recent Dart article that has been widely circulated on the Internet. In "Understanding Deception" Dart expounds upon many types of deception and the ways in which they are used. Here is an excerpt:

Almost every religious deception known to man has been introduced by warning its audience against deception. I have seen a lot of strange religious ideas, and most of them cite, somewhere in the text, Revelation 12:9 which identifies the Arch-Deceiver as: "that old serpent, called the Devil, and Satan, which deceiveth the whole world." The premise is that you, brother, have been deceived and I am here to ease your pain, to rescue you from deception, to lead you to the light. Problem is, the old Arch-Deceiver himself might show up on my doorstep with exactly the same message....

Deception loves to quote scripture (see Matthew 4:6). Any deceiver who cannot find some scriptures that say what he wants them to say isn't worth his salt. For deception, the more scripture the better. When I see a long list of scriptures in an argument, I ignore the list. To me it is a sign of someone who has nothing to say. (I told you not to read this far if you were feeling sensitive.) People who take proof texts out of context and string them together to make a point are immediately suspects. I prefer to read my scriptures in a leather binding and in context.

Dart's Christian Educational Ministries is at P.O. Box 560, Whitehouse, TX 75791; phone: 903-509-2999; Web site: www.cemnetwork.com.

More United Disunity

The so-called United Churches of God continue to embarrass themselves. In July the Cincinnati-based United (the UCGIA) announced that as a result of budget cuts and ongoing internecine squabbles 13 elders were terminated or resigned, and another 29 were put on half-salary.

The breakaway United Church of God (Monrovia) led by David Hulme, and which we will acronym the UCGM, has stabilized at about 2,300 members and a whopping 60 elders. As one UCGIA elder has pointed out, "With that kind of an elder to member ratio, if one wants to be thoroughly ruled with a rod of iron, then Hulme's bunch is the church for you." The Hulmites plan to put out a quarterly magazine beginning in January with UK elder John Meakin, an old Bricket Wood classmate and tennis friend of ours, to serve as managing editor.

Even within UCGIA there are more splits. For example, some weeks ago the Tulsa, Oklahoma UCGIA congregation split in two with one of the factions now aligning itself with the United group of Big Sandy, Texas (the UCGBS) which a few months ago itself broke off from the Cincinnati-based United organization. So while everyone in these groups loves the designation "United," there appears to be very little spirit of unity within any of these groups.

Philadelphians Fight Over HWA Writings

Another Armstrongite group that has been having problems of late is Gerald Flurry's Philadelphia Church of God (PCG). In recent months we have learned that such prominent PCG figures as Don Tiger, Don Roth, Jim Mortensen, Charles Bishop, and Arlen Berkey have left the PCG, are critical of Gerald Flurry, and are putting out their own set of the almost-complete writings of Herbert W. Armstrong. You may recall that back in AR65 we reported how the WCG had sued Flurry in federal court in an attempt to stop his PCG from distributing the writings of Herbert W. Armstrong. That lawsuit has yet to be concluded. In the meantime Flurry's group continues to distribute Armstrong's Mystery of the Ages and a few other Armstrong writings. Now, however, the PCG breakaway group has begun distributing many of HWA's writings for free in CD-ROM format and, of all things, Flurry, has threatened them with a lawsuit for doing pretty much the same thing that he, himself, claims he has a right to do. In other words, Flurry would like to have a monopoly on the writings of Herbert W. Armstrong.

Mr. Tiger and associates consider many of the writings of HWA to be inspired, not in the sense of scripture, but more in the sense of being a type of Talmud. For that reason they would like to see all the writings of HWA made available to the public. Ironically, although Flurry wishes to have monopoly control over all of HWA's writings, Tiger is convinced that Flurry, himself, does not want all of HWA's writings to be read by the public. Mr. Tiger of the breakaway group has written a fine legal brief of their position and they are offering it free to the public. Those who would like to obtain free copies of the writings of HWA on CD-ROM or who would like to learn more about the positions of Don Tiger and his associates should contact: Don Tiger, 1163 E. Ogden, #705-261, Naperville, IL 60563; tel. 630-235-9845. The group also has a helpful Web site for HWA's writings: www.herbertwarmstrong.org and a helpful legal materials site at: www.tcog.org.

Global May Take Lead

Until the last few months, it appeared that the UCGIA, the largest of the Armstrongite denominations, would be the leading Armstrongite church organization as we enter the new millennium. Just a few months ago their membership was over 20,000 and growing. Insiders tell us, however, that following the recent Hulmite split (see AR68) UCGIA membership is down to about 12,000 and falling.

Now, with the Philadelphians, Uniteds, Garner Ted groups, and other Armstrongites being diminished by splintering, there remains the Global Church of God (GCG) headquartered in San Diego, California as quite possibly the strongest Armstrongite organization. While getting accurate figures on the membership sizes of the Armstrongite groups is not easy, the latest reports on Global indicate that it has about 8,000 members meeting each week in about 275 congregations and video groups. With their message being proclaimed on their program The World Ahead, now seen and heard on almost a hundred television and radio stations, its membership is reported to be growing. It is quite likely that the GCG will find itself the leading Armstrongite group in the next millennium. And although rumors persist that evangelist Roderick Meredith may some day be replaced as the head of that group, our sources in San Diego tell us that for the time being he remains firmly in charge of that organization.

Lon Lacey's New Mexico Church

Lon Lacey (AC/Pasadena, 1970) is now pastoring an Armstrongite group called The New Mexico Region Church of God. Lacey, who was ordained a WCG elder in 1992, began the new church in 1995. He has about 50 members in regular attendance plus a taped ministry that reaches another 1,000 and a quarterly magazine called The Logos Journal: Understanding Our Times. Those interested in subscribing should write: Lon Lacey, P.O. Box 20457, Albuquerque, NM 87111.

The Secret Church of Conspiracy

Part II

by John Trechak

In the first part of this extended article, I showed how the word "conspiracy" is used today in a wide variety of ways. The examples I gave, however, do not constitute an exhaustive list of active usages. Just since our last issue, for instance, I discovered a number of additional ways that the term is currently being used. For instance, in the recently published book The Divine Conspiracy, Christian author Dallas Willard describes God's true followers as being part of a conspiracy. While I'm not sure I would have called the working of the Holy Spirit a conspiracy, Willard's use of the term demonstrates just how popular the term has become. Suffice it to say, unless we make some attempt to define what we mean by it, using the word "conspiracy" can lead to confusion.

Just as conspiracy talk comes up frequently in popular culture, ridicule of all conspiracy theories seems today almost de rigueur. In fact, one can find many instances in the press where any suggestion of conspiracy is thought to be immediate grounds for disparaging the theorist as a kook. Underlying this approach seems to be the notion that the mainstream press does such a thorough job of ferreting out truth that if we just trust their reporting, we can then go ahead and reject all other views.

Nevertheless, sometimes criticisms not just of individual theories, but of conspiracy theory approaches to understanding current events are justified or, at least, reach a certain level of intelligence.

The Paranoid Style

Perhaps the most famous critique of conspiracy theory thinking ever published is Richard Hofstadter's essay "The Paranoid Style in American Politics" which came out first in the early 1960s and then in 1965 in a collection published by Knopf under the same title. The book is now out of print but can still be found in many U.S. libraries. All who are fascinated by the conspiracy theory phenomenon will find this short work of inestimable value.

While Hofstadter's lucid work is filled with page after page of relevant insights, I will point out just a few that relate most especially to the Armstrongites. Hofstadter correctly points out that conspiracy thinking can be found in the cultures of many nations, but that such thinking is particularly widespread in the United States. Hofstadter writes that he uses the phrase "paranoid style":

simply because no other word adequately evokes the qualities of heated exaggeration, suspiciousness, and conspiratorial fantasy that I have in mind. In using the expression "paranoid style," I am not speaking in a clinical sense, but borrowing a clinical term for other purposes.... It is the use of paranoid modes of expression by more or less normal people that makes the phenomenon significant.... the clinical paranoid sees the hostile and conspiratorial world in which he feels himself to be living as directed specifically against him; whereas the spokesman of the paranoid style finds it directed against a nation, a culture, a way of life whose fate affects not himself alone but millions of others.

Hofstadter then points out that while conspiracy theories can be found at both the political left and the political right, at the time he wrote, conspiracy theories in the United States seemed to Hofstadter to be most strongly held by those on the right who feared "a further attempt by a subversive power to make us part of one world socialist government." He then went on to describe some of the most popular conspiracy theories in American history. They included theories centered on purported secret cabals of an international gold ring, slaveholders, European monarchs, munitions makers, the Pope, the Masons, and international bankers.

Hofstadter paid particular attention to conspiracy theories involving the Bavarian Illuminati who were accused of tampering in American politics as far back as during the administration of Thomas Jefferson. Ironically, Hofstadter, in what is almost a premonition of latter-day Armstrongite fantasies, points out that in years past, the astonishing theory developed that the Illuminati cabal had, itself, been infiltrated by another cabal - that of the Jesuits. Along the same lines, one famous book of the late 18th century talked of a "triple conspiracy" composed of anti-Christians, Freemasons, and Illuminati, all coordinatedly working to destroy true religion and social order.

Hofstadter's essay is must reading for anyone interested in conspiracy theories and United States history. But it should be pointed out that for all its worth, it is rather polemical. The essay makes no mention, for instance, that the underlying justification of our own American Revolution was a widely held conspiracy theory, namely that the King of England was working to gradually usurp the natural rights of Americans. Jefferson, himself, argued that such a conspiracy was underfoot and made that his central justification for revolt against the British. You can read about that conspiracy theory in a document called The Declaration of Independence.

Some scholars have pointed out that Jefferson's conspiracy theory, itself, hearkens back to an even earlier one in England. There in the mid-1600s, the suspicion arose that the Stuart kings were conspiring to make Catholicism the state religion of the British Isles. Some scholars, pointing to the fact that the British Isles had a Catholic population of only about five percent, scoff at the theory. But other scholars point to the fact that Charles II did indeed convert to Catholicism as did his brother and successor James II, and that the latter in making appointments, particularly to military leadership positions, had exhibited a strong preference for Catholics. It was widespread fears of just such a Stuart-Popish conspiracy that led to the Glorious Revolution of 1688 and to the ascent of William of Orange to the throne of England. In fact, it was John Locke's writings during that turbulent era about those anti-liberal conspiratorial movements that inspired much of Jefferson's own liberal views, and his fears of the King's conspiracy as detailed in the Declaration of Independence.

Thus while Hofstadter makes some excellent observations about the limitations of conspiracy thinking, not all such theories should be ridiculed. Many have played an important role in history. In fact, Hofstadter, himself, admits that many of the better conspiracy theories contain more than a little truth. Nevertheless, he does make a strong case that many who get caught up in conspiracy theories tend to exhibit irrational and almost paranoid modes of reasoning.

The Armstrongite Variety

But what about some of the unique conspiracy theories that have engulfed the Worldwide Church of God and the Armstrongite churches? To understand where some of those have come from it is necessary to review a bit of WCG history.

Because, as Hofstadter so competently demonstrates, conspiracy theory thinking has been so prominent in American history, it should not surprise us that such thinking has been lurking in the WCG as far back as any church old-timers can recall. Herbert W. Armstrong, himself, subscribed to and actively taught a number of conspiracy theories. For example, Armstrong taught that top German militarists and financiers were actively working behind the scenes to bring about a united Germany that was to control a United Europe which, in turn, was to become an enemy of Britain and the United States. Armstrong also taught that the Catholic Church was actively working behind the scenes to extend the influence of the Roman Church to such an extent that a Pope-dominated Catholicism would eventually be reestablished as the state religion of all Europe and beyond. While Armstrong described such notions as prophecies, they were, in fact, conspiracy theories on a very grand scale.

While Armstrong's prophecies/theories were quite colorful (and not always lacking in a certain insight), anyone who makes a study of the varieties of American fundamentalist belief will discover that they were not all that unique. Similarly colorful interpretations of Bible prophecy combined with grand conspiracy theories can be found in many American religious groups. In fact, Hofstadter makes the interesting observation that conspiracy theories go hand-in-hand with almost all Bible-based apocalyptic thinking.

Jewish Conspiracies

In all fairness to HWA, it should also be pointed out, that in stark contrast to some of the modern-day Armstrongites, HWA, himself, did not ascribe to many, let alone all, conspiracy theories. One popular theory that he not only did not ascribe to, but which he criticized, is the so-called Jewish conspiracy.

Conspiracy theories centering on Jews have been around for a long time and they come in many varieties. The most mild of the variants makes a little sense in that we all know that most people are prejudiced in favor of others who have philosophical, religious, or political views, or a personal history akin to their own. That being the case, it is not foolish to think that people in business and personal dealings tend to give a preference, even if only unconsciously, to others of their own race, religion, ethnicity, or political persuasion.

In Tribes (New York: Random House, 1992) a book primarily about international business networking, author Joel Kotkin does not talk of the Jews being a conspiracy, but he does point to the Jews as being the prototypical international business network based on ethnicity and shared values and experience. He also says there are other racial and ethnic groups that behave similarly in the business world. But when most Armstrongites talk about a "Jewish Conspiracy," they are not talking about something so prosaic. Most seem to be engulfed in a Jewish conspiracy theory going back at least to 19th century Russia where resentment toward Jews led to infamous pogroms. In that version of Jewish conspiracy theory, the Jews were viewed as a homogenous racial group, organized beyond that of any military organization and bent on world conquest. Prominent in that theory is the so-called Protocols of the Elders of Zion, an odd writing purported to be written by leading Jews who were supposedly outlining their plans for world conquest a hundred years ago, but who were not smart enough to avoid leaving a paper trail.

For decades now, the Protocols have been considered by reputable historians as unauthentic writings put together by anti-Semites bent on inciting pogroms and in expelling Jews from Russia. Because The Protocols play such an important part in Jewish conspiracy thinking, are so widely cited by Armstrongite conspiracy theorists, and because they offer such valuable lessons in conspiracies and conspiracy hoaxes, at this juncture I am presenting a short essay that is available at a number of Web sites dealing with anti-Semitism. On the Web the following essay is attributed to Dr. Daniel Keren who, nevertheless, informs us that it was actually written by Prof. Saul Wallach of Bar-Ilan University in Israel.

The Protocols of the Elders of Zion, the most notorious and most successful work of modern anti-Semitism, draws on popular anti-Semitic notions which have their roots in medieval Europe from the time of the Crusades. The libels that the Jews used blood of Christian children for the Feast of Passover, poisoned the wells and spread the plague were pretexts for the wholesale destruction of Jewish communities throughout Europe. Tales were circulated among the masses of secret rabbinical conferences whose aim was to subjugate and exterminate the Christians, and motifs like these are found in early anti-Semitic literature.

The conceptual inspiration for the Protocols can be traced back to the time of the French Revolution at the end of the 18th century. At that time, a French Jesuit named Abbe Barruel, representing reactionary elements opposed to the Revolution, published in 1797 a treatise blaming the Revolution on a secret conspiracy operating through the Order of Freemasons. Barruel's idea was nonsense, since the French nobility at the time was heavily Masonic, but he was influenced by a Scottish mathematician named Robison who was opposed to the Masons. In his treatise, Barruel did not himself blame the Jews, who were emancipated as a result of the Revolution. However, in 1806, Barruel circulated a forged letter, probably sent to him by members of the state police opposed to Napoleon Bonaparte's liberal policy toward the Jews, calling attention to the alleged part of the Jews in the conspiracy he had earlier attributed to the Masons. This myth of an international Jewish conspiracy reappeared later on in 19th century Europe in places such as Germany and Poland.

The direct predecessor of the Protocols can be found in the pamphlet Dialogues in Hell Between Machiavelli and Montesque, published by the non-Jewish French satirist Maurice Joly in 1864. In his Dialogues, which make no mention of the Jews, Joly attacked the political ambitions of the emperor Napoleon III using the imagery of a diabolical plot in Hell. The Dialogues were caught by French authorities soon after their publication and Joly was tried and sentenced to prison for his pamphlet.

Joly's Dialogues, while intended as a political satire, soon fell into the hands of a German anti-Semite named Hermann Goedsche writing under the name of Sir John Retcliffe. Goedsche was a postal clerk and a spy for the Prussian secret police. He had been forced to leave the postal work due to his part in forging evidence in the prosecution against the Democratic leader Benedict Waldeck in 1849. Goedsche adapted Joly's Dialogues into a mythical tale of a Jewish conspiracy as part of a series of novels entitled Biarritz which appeared in 1868. In a chapter called "The Jewish Cemetery in Prague and the Council of Representatives of the Twelve Tribes of Israel," he spins the fantasy of a secret centennial rabbinical conference which meets at midnight and whose purpose is to review the past hundred years and to make plans for the next century.

Goedsche's plagiarism of Joly's Dialogues soon found its way to Russia. It was translated into Russian in 1872, and a consolidation of the "Council of Representatives" [chapter] under the name "Rabbi's Speech" appeared in Russian in 1891. These works no doubt furnished the Russian secret police (Okhrana) with a means with which to strengthen the position of the weak Czar Nicholas II and discredit the reforms of the liberals who sympathized with the Jews. During the Dreyfus case of 1893-1895, agents of the Okhrana in Paris redacted the earlier works of Joly and Goedsche into a new edition which they called the Protocols of the Elders of Zion. The manuscript of the Protocols was brought to Russia in 1895 and was printed privately in 1897.

The Protocols did not become public until 1905, when Russia's defeat in the Russo-Japanese War was followed by the revolution in the same year, leading to the promulgation of a constitution and institution of the Duma. In the wake of these events, the reactionary "Union of the Russian Nation" or "Black Hundreds" organization sought to incite popular feeling against the Jews, who they blamed for the revolution and the Constitution. To this end they used the Protocols, which was first published in a public edition by the mystic priest Sergius Nilus in 1905. The Protocols were part of a propaganda campaign which accompanied the pogroms of 1905 inspired by the Okhrana. A variant text of the Protocols was published by George Butmi in 1906 and again in 1907. The edition of 1906 was found among the Czar's collection, even though he had already recognized the work as a forgery. In his later editions, Nilus claimed that the Protocols had been read secretly at the First Zionist Congress at Basel in 1897, while Butmi in his edition wrote that they had no connection with the new Zionist movement, but rather were part of the Masonic conspiracy.

In the civil war following the Bolshevik Revolution of 1917, the reactionary White Armies made extensive use of the Protocols to incite widespread slaughters of Jews. At the same time, Russian emigrants brought the Protocols to Western Europe, where the Nilus edition served as the basis for many translations, starting in 1920. Just after its appearance in London in 1920, Lucien Wolf exposed the Protocols as a plagiarism of the earlier work of Joly and Goedsche, in a pamphlet of the Jewish Board of Deputies. The following year, in 1921, the story of the forgery was published in a series of articles in the London Times by Philip Grave, the paper's correspondent in Constantinople. A whole book documenting the forgery was also published in the same year in America by Herman Bernstein. Nevertheless, the Protocols continued to circulate widely. They were even sponsored by Henry Ford in the United States until 1927 and formed an important part of the Nazi's justification of genocide of the Jews in World War II.

In addition to the astonishing Jewish conspiracy alleged in the Protocols, another variant of Jewish conspiracy theory is the Jewish bankers theory. This variant became more popular after World War II when the death of millions of Jews in concentration camps made it obvious to many, even to some Nazi troops who had been weaned on the Protocols by Hitler, that as a group the Jews, rather than being a highly organized and massive conspiracy, sixty years ago at least were, in fact, quite disorganized and rather helpless. But as for Jewish bankers, many feel that is a different story. And to some extent that may once have been true. The Rothschilds, the famous family of Jewish bankers, were most certainly an important factor in European politics during the 18th and 19th centuries. Unfortunately for the Jewish-bankers-as-world-controllers theory, while still around, the Rothschilds have nowhere near the power and influence they had two hundred, or even one hundred, years ago. In fact, if one wishes to find banker or financier conspiracies today, one should be looking at the great banking and financial establishments: the Federal Reserve, the International Monetary Fund, the World Trade Organization, etc. This is not the place to get into conspiracy theories regarding such financial leviathans. Those interested in such topics will find a huge amount of valuable information in libraries and on the Internet. Suffice it to say, a bit of research will produce much about those organizations, but precious little of worth about any Jewish banker group secretly running the entire world today.

Enter/Exit Stanley Rader

With all of the above as historical backdrop, we now come to some of the most colorful and virulent of Armstrongite conspiracy theories, those centering on Stanley R. Rader. From about 1967 to about 1980, Rader, a CPA and attorney, was WCG founder Herbert Armstrong's chief advisor and most influential confidant. In the late seventies, especially after the ouster of Armstrong's wayward son, Garner Ted, Rader's influence on the Armstrong organization was immense. In fact, for a time, it was well known that Rader's executive secretary, Virginia Kineston, was authorized by Rader to single-handedly run the Worldwide Church operation while Armstrong and Rader flew to distant lands to meet with world leaders or bask in the sun at their Tucson, Arizona hideaways.

Rader's immense power within the Armstrong organization was no secret. In the late seventies, some in the Armstrong organization actually feared that once their church patriarch went to his reward, Rader would be the one who would inherit the Armstrong religious and financial empire. Even the Pasadena Star-News (10/12/78) in a front-page headline about Rader said, "Ex-Jewish Convert May Inherit Church's Wealth." Others who were more astute, however, realized that such an event was not likely to occur. Why? Because Rader was perceived as still being Jewish. While we are not aware that Rader was ever any kind of a practicing Jew, he was, nevertheless, from a Jewish family. And as such, in the culture of the Armstrongites, no matter that he had been baptized in a Hong Kong bathtub by Herbert Armstrong who soon thereafter elevated Rader to the rank of evangelist. To the vast majority of Armstrongites, Rader was still a Jew. And not only that, to many Armstrongites he was the most suspicious of Jews for he was trained in the ways of finance and the law, and he was even from that most Jewish of states - New York!

To Armstrongites steeped in conspiracy theories there was only one conclusion that could be drawn from such facts. Rader, many believed, was surely part of the great Jewish conspiracy. With such an albatross hung around his neck, the reality was Rader would never have been able to gain the full confidence and loyalty of a ministry and membership that did not consider him one of their own. But that reality did not matter much to Rader's enemies, especially those loyal to Garner Ted Armstrong, and the theory that Rader was part of a Jewish conspiracy was promulgated widely and became an entrenched part of Armstrongite folklore.

The Rader myth was spread by many conspiracy theorists. In a tape widely distributed in WCG circles, Bryce Clark of the WCG breakoff Church of God Eternal hinted at Rader being a part of "The Conspiracy." Ex-Worldwider Larry Gilbert Johnson, founder of the Laodicean Church of God, and later a resident of the Arizona prison system, taught that Rader was a part of "The Conspiracy." And in handmade leaflets distributed on car windshields in Pasadena in 1978, so, did world chess champion Bobby Fischer (see AR4) who went so far as to call Rader "satanic."

Today, with Rader having been out of the WCG limelight for well over a decade and a half, one would have thought that his name would hardly be remembered by the current generation of Armstrongites. That, however, is not the case. We regularly receive letters asking for news about Rader. A few times each year, it seems, someone even writes asking where they may obtain copies of Rader's book Against the Gates of Hell. And some folks actually admit that they are devoted fans of Rader. One such admirer recently wrote:

In UCGIA we have been told that Mr. Rader is in league with some of the most powerful men in the world. He has been mentioned as being a part of The Conspiracy, a member of the Bilderberg group, a consultant to world leaders, and an advisor to kings. But I for one do not care. As one who was in the Worldwide Church of God during its most wonderful era, I recall the way Mr. Herbert Armstrong spoke of Mr. Rader. Certainly, it was because of Mr. Rader's love of the Church, his wisdom, and his courage, that Mr. Armstrong's message was able to be spread as it once was.

I for one think that the Church's real troubles and decline began when Mr. Rader was retired. And I wish there was a way for him to be brought back into the Churches of God to help straighten things out. Instead, we are hearing such stupid theories I often think some of the people have been taking stupid pills.

There is plenty of evidence that since Rader's official retirement from WCG in the early 1980s he has had some dealings with leaders in the WCG. That is nothing unusual, local attorneys tell us. Top corporate executives, and particularly lawyers and CPAs with expertise in arcane matters, we are told, are frequently retained by a corporation long after leaving full-time duties because of the value of their expertise (and also as a way to guarantee their silence, no doubt). But does Rader actually control all decisions that are now being made in the WCG? We have seen no evidence of that. Nor have we seen any evidence that Rader is the secret owner of Ambassador Auditorium, as some are claiming. We have made searches of county records and we have not found that Rader is actually owner of any properties believed to be owned by the WCG. Nor have we seen any evidence that Rader is controlling any of the WCG spinoff groups, let alone all of them, as some theorists are insisting. Furthermore, when often seen about town at less-than-exotic watering holes, at discount book stores browsing through novels, or driving his dated sport-utility vehicle to his monthly dental hygiene appointments, Rader today is hardly the image of one of Pasadena's elite, let alone one of the planet's most powerful oligarchs.

Nevertheless, the stupid rumors persist, and even continue to coalesce into the developing mythology of the Secret Church of Conspiracy. We will debunk more of those myths in a future issue. But for now, for those who want to learn more about the true origins of the Protocols of the Elders of Zion, we suggest checking out the data at: <http://www.igc.apc.org/ddickerson/protocols.html>.

Caligula, Clinton, and Modern Rome

The Clinton sex scandal has, of course, inspired more great journalism than we could even allude to in these pages. But one conservative journalist's comments caught our eye as likely to be of particular interest to ex-WCG readers. The journalist is Eric Margolis, an internationally syndicated columnist and broadcaster who also puts out Foreign Correspondent, an online news service. In his 9/20/98 release, there was this intriguing analysis:

Watching President Clinton both humiliate himself and torture the nation has made me think a great deal about the Roman Republic. So have others. This week the Wall Street Journal titled a slashing column about Clinton "American Caligula." A nifty headline, but not really accurate. Roman Emperor Caligula was a demented monster whose grotesque sexual depravities knew no bounds. Clinton is merely an artful liar, and a very clever knave. Exposure of his clumsy, college dorm sexual antics befouled the White House and brought shame on the presidency. But to compare Clinton's small-time smut to the towering infamies of gloriously wicked Caligula is to gravely defame the ignobelist Roman of them all.

Still, remembering Rome at this time of constitutional and moral crisis is certainly apropos. The American Constitution is the greatest political achievement in mankind's history. Its issue, the American Republic, is the freest, most democratic, and successful nation ever created.

America's founding fathers patterned their majestic creation upon the ancient Roman Republic. The United States was to be the New Rome, wherein citizens of upstanding civic, moral and intellectual virtue would guide the nation's course. That is why the coat of arms of the Roman Republic hangs proudly on the wall of the U.S. Senate, and why Washington is a city of neo-classical buildings with doric columns and Latin inscriptions.

And that brings me to Regulus. As Clinton continues to spew lies and evasions, we should recall not Caligula, but Marcus Atilius Regulus. During the Roman Republic, the Senate would elect a man of the highest ability, character, dignity and respect to be consul, a position that combined military and political leadership. The American presidency is directly based on the Roman consular office.

During the First Punic War, a Roman army, led by Consul Regulus, was forced to surrender in 255 B.C. by superior Carthaginian forces. They temporarily freed Regulus to return to Rome in hopes he would negotiate a peace favorable to Carthage. If he failed, the Carthaginians warned, he would be tortured to death. Regulus gave his word he would return. Upon reaching Rome, Regulus advised the Senate not to make peace with Carthage, but to pursue the war with vigor. Then, heedless of the pleas of the Senate and his family, he returned to the cruel Carthaginians. A Roman's word was his bond, said Regulus, and must not be violated, His honor, and that of the Republic, said Regulus, required him to keep the pledge. Regulus was tortured to death.

Following his praise of Regulus, Margolis goes on to quote his no-nonsense superior Patricia Kinnaird who said, "If the Pope were caught in the Vatican with a nun, he'd have to resign immediately. End of story."

While some of us are not so sure the Vatican would be found to have such lofty principles or that Clinton should be looking to the Pope, or to Roman consuls, as his standard bearer, Margolis is, nevertheless, an interesting writer. ## Book Notes

In our last issue we mentioned the writings of Robert D. Brinsmead. Since that edition appeared, we have learned that the two California addresses we gave are no longer operational. Those wanting to subscribe to Brinsmead's Verdict should write directly to him at: Verdict, R.D. Brinsmead, Duranbah Road, Duranbah, NSW 2487, Australia. Those wanting to read his latest writings about the historical Jesus and the religious implications of those discoveries may do so on the Internet at: <http://home.istar.ca/~wkrossa>.

The Late, Great Hal Lindsey, the latest book by Dave MacPherson, documents how televangelist Hal Lindsey was influenced by occult beliefs including pyramidology and astrology and how a number of Christian writers have accused him of plagiarism. For information, contact: POST, Inc., P.O. Box 1226, Monticello, Utah 84535.

Anti-Semitism: A Disease of the Mind by Theodore Isaac Rubin, M.D. (New York: Continuum Books, 1990). This easy-to-read 146-page study is one of the best that we have seen on the psychology of anti-Semitism. Dr. Rubin makes many observations we have noticed ourselves in our own experiences with Armstrongites. For instance, Dr. Rubin points out, "The anti-Semite's most buried and unconscious secret - from himself and others - is the desire to be a Jew." We think this may explain why there are so many fervent anti-Semites among church groups that from a Protestant perspective are quite "Jewish" in their keeping of OT sabbaths and holy days, their observance of OT dietary laws, etc. Those who are interested in anti-Semitism or who wonder about its hidden psychology, will probably find this book as instructive as we did.

A fair number of AR readers have written us asking for an opinion piece on The Bible Code, the popular book by journalist Michael Drosnin and published by Simon & Schuster. We have decided not to do an article on it simply because there is so much critical information about it already available both in printed form and particularly on the Internet. We should, however, mention one outstanding article on the subject. In "The Bible Code - Divine Pattern or Preposterous Chimera?" published in the Summer 1998 issue of United Israel Bulletin, Prof. James D. Tabor succinctly analyzes the problems of Drosnin's thesis and concludes with this intriguing statement:

The mathematical debate will go on and perhaps reach definitive resolution by the scientist. My own conclusion is that the verdict is still out on the final question: Has some author/s or Author/s inserted patterned messages into the text of the Hebrew Bible, or can all the patterns, so far discovered, be accounted for by statistical factors of chance?

For over 50 years the editor of the United Israel Bulletin has written and spoken about another "Code" found in the text of the Hebrew Bible. This patterned code has nothing to do with ELS skips or anything esoteric or technically mathematical. It has to do with a peculiar coded style that Horowitz maintains was used by all the writers of the Hebrew Bible and duplicated by no one else or in any other book. Editor Horowitz learned of this from his teacher Moses Guibbory whom he encountered in old Palestine in the 1920s and 30s. Horowitz has subsequently devoted his life's study to this particular phenomenon and its implications for understanding the message of Moses and the Prophets. In a future article I will offer an exposition of this "other Code" of the Hebrew Bible.

The address for United Israel Bulletin is 1123 Broadway, New York, NY 10010. A subscription is $10 per year.

The Bible Code was not Simon & Schuster's first book in the decoded-prophecy-in-hidden-text genre. In 1991 they published Nostradamus: The End of the Millennium (Prophecies: 1992 to 2001) by V.J. Hewitt and Peter Lorie. This beautifully done volume, rich in full-color illustrations, detailed text, and numerous charts, is no longer available through regular bookstores. However, two of our readers, Joe and Denise Nazarini of Ohio, found a copy in a used-book store and purchased it as a Christmas present for AR. The book is instructive. According to its dust jacket, author V. J. Hewitt "spent more than a decade developing a precise numerical decoding system that she has applied to the famous quatrains from Nostradamus's The Centuries. This extraordinary code, when applied, permits an accuracy that has never before been achieved, providing us with precise dates and locations out of the sometimes confusing texts." And now, seven years after the appearance of this earlier Simon & Schuster code book, how well have the prophecies of this code matched up with reality? Here are some of the prophecies contained in the 1991 book:

- 1992: "George Bush Re-elected"
- 1993: "The California Earthquake"
- 1993: "San Diego Disappears Beneath the Sea"
- 1993: "Sound-Waves Kill Cancer"
- 1993-95: "America Burns"
- 1993-96: "A New Hole in the Ozone Layer"
- 1995: "Black Holes Explained"
- 1995-98: "Israel Defeated by her Arab Neighbors"
- 1996: "Margaret Thatcher Reelected"
- 1996: "Medicine Reverses the Aging Process"
- 1997: "Russian Spacecraft Crashes to Earth"
- 1998: "Outerspace Aliens Televised"
- 2000: "A New World Religion"
- 2000: "Mission to Mars"

It is easy to see why Simon & Schuster is no longer distributing this decoded Nostradamus prophecy book. And we wonder if in a few years the new Drosnin code book will likewise be quietly removed from bookstore shelves.

Sex, Politics and the End of Morality, by J. Gordon Muir, MD, FFPM, seems to have arrived at a most appropriate time in our history. In a previous book, Kinsey, Sex and Fraud: The Indoctrination of a People, Co-author Muir showed how the so-called sexual revolution of the 1960s had been greatly aided by the famous 1948 and 1953 Kinsey Reports, but that those reports had really been elaborate and carefully crafted scientific frauds designed to legitimize profligate and deviant sexual behavior. In his latest book, Muir builds upon his earlier revelations about Kinsey and shows how the sexual revolution that Kinsey helped spawn has produced a Pandora's box of societal ills: new venereal diseases, further erosion of family structures, the trivialization of sex, and now, the Washington sex circus. For many on the religious right, the Muir book will have arrived not a minute too soon.

In advertising the book, the publisher has teased the public with "Why Zippergate is no big deal" and "Why Republicans have less spunk than the neutered First Dog." But for many, Muir's most important contribution will be seen in his revelation that so-called "scientific" data, particularly when about human behaviors, can be seriously flawed due to both inappropriate research methods used in obtaining the data and then by inappropriate applications of the flawed data. Of Muir's new book, author and sexual researcher Edward W. Eicher has written, "This book describes the successful reengineering of society in a sexually pathological direction."

Some Ambassador alumni will remember Dr. Muir from his days at Bricket Wood (class of 1971) and later Quest magazine. Today, besides being a writer, Dr. Muir is President of Lochinvar Inc., a medical research and information organization based in North Carolina. Sex, Politics and the End of Morality can be found in larger book stores but those who prefer to order the 315-page book directly ($17.95 plus $3.50 shipping) should write to Lochinvar Inc., 1381 Kildaire Farm Rd., Suite 123, Cary, NC 27511. ## Brenda Denzler Awarded Doctorate

We are very happy to report that Brenda Denzler, a longtime reader and occasional contributor to these pages, received her Ph.D. in Religious Studies from Duke University this past May. A former Worldwider who attended AC-Big Sandy from 1971 through 1974, Denzler (nee Reser) decided to go back to college in order to earn an accredited degree in religion after she was disfellowshipped in 1982 for doubting that one needed to keep a seventh-day sabbath in order to be saved. In 1987 she graduated summa cum laude, with honors, from Wichita State University in Kansas. As a recipient of a Mellon Fellowship, one of the country's most prestigious awards for humanities scholars, Denzler matriculated at Duke University in the fall of 1987, where she was also awarded the Gurney Harris Kearns Fellowship (from Duke's Graduate Religion program) and several other fellowships from various honors societies.

Denzler attributes her professional focus on religious studies to her prior fifteen years of involvement in the Worldwide Church of God. "In Worldwide we were taught that the WCG was recapturing the true Christian religion, as it was set up in the time of Christ," she recently recalled. "I began my professional career by learning more about the New Testament period. It was a very illuminating experience - one that I would recommend for all those who are trapped in the narrow anti-intellectual thought-world that fundamentalist religious associations tend to foster. In graduate school I expanded my field of study to encompass the early and medieval periods, and wound up my studies by exploring facets of the contemporary American religious scene."

Brenda's 475-page dissertation was titled, "The Lure of the Edge: Science, Religion and the Alien Abduction Movement" and deals with the ways in which the UFO community, particularly abductees, uses science and religion as frameworks for trying to understand the UFO phenomenon and abductions. The dissertation is currently in the hands of a large university press that has expressed an interest in publishing it. Those interested in studying her thesis now, however, can purchase a copy by writing to: UMI, 300 N. Zeeb Rd., P.O. Box 1346, Ann Arbor, MI 48106-1346 and requesting publication no. 9839451, Duke University.

Along with her sons Todd and Graham, two dogs, two cats, and two boa constrictors, Brenda currently resides in Chapel Hill, North Carolina where, besides looking for a university teaching position, she works as a writer and editor. She is also pursuing further research on the UFO phenomenon and tells us, "This is an ongoing story and one that I think will increase in significance as we begin the new millennium." Brenda says she would enjoy hearing from AR readers who may have had UFO or abduction experiences. You may write to Brenda Denzler at P.O. Box 995, Carrboro, NC 27510.

Letters

Tonight, as I write, it is Rosh Hashanah, Jewish New Year, the Feast of Trumpets. Every year on Rosh Hashanah I put a sign out in front of my house. It reads, "The end of the world has been postponed (again) due to a lack of trained trumpeters." People passing by just stare at it - then keep their distance.

-Ohio

It is true that the WCG and its offshoots have had their doctrinal errors. But I hope you don't think that churches who are "orthodox" by Bible Belt standards have all the answers. Just reading the local papers in our part of the country one should be able to figure out that in spite of what evangelical preachers tell the public, many of the Bible Belt's respected churches are not being blessed. In fact, I really doubt that the religious values of the Bible Belt as taught in so-called "orthodox" churches have really contributed much to the well-being of our part of the country. I sometimes think there is more sin here and more resulting heartache, than in parts of the nation usually pictured as more worldly. And when natural disasters strike, they strike just as hard here, if not harder - almost as though God has turned his back on much of the Bible Belt.

-Alabama

Editor: I would not want to venture a guess as to what parts of our nation are more sinful or why that might be. But a number of readers have made comments along the lines of the above. For example, David Whitaker of Oklahoma has pointed out to us that many statistics suggest that the Bible Belt has a higher percentage of adultery, incest, rape, and other sex sins than other parts of the country. He recently sent us an article from the Enid News & Eagle (Enid, Oklahoma; April 26, 1998; p. A-2) which began with this sad observation:

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)-Oklahomans pride themselves on family values. Statistics show they marry young. Unfortunately, they marry often.

Although it is in the buckle of the Bible Belt, conservative Oklahoma with its population of 3 million, has a divorce rate more than twice as high as New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania and other populous states. Only neighboring Arkansas has a higher divorce rate, if you discount Nevada where "quickie" divorces are big business.

As for whether or not God is blessing or protecting certain churches more than others, I would not want to venture an opinion. However, Mr. Durward Boyles of Alabama wrote us that he thought many churches in his part of the country were, at the least, not being supernaturally protected by God. Along with his comments he included a shocking clipping from the Religion section of the May 8 edition of the Birmingham News. In an article titled "Deadly tornado tests strength of congregations' spiritual foundations," the paper described how on April 8 a tornado swept through parts of Jefferson County, Alabama taking 34 lives and a surprisingly high toll on local church buildings.

In a huge side bar, the paper listed some of the more than 20 churches that suffered major damage or had been totally destroyed: Bethel Baptist Church, Cathedral of Deliverance, Chapel Hill Baptist Church, Ernest Chapel Cumberland Presbyterian Church, Edgewater Baptist Church, Edgewater United Methodist Church, Faith Temple Missionary Baptist Church, First Baptist Church-Gary in Ensley, First Baptist Church-Sylvan Springs, First Baptist Church-West Ensley, Ford Chapel CME Church, Fountain Chapel AME Church, House of Deliverance Holiness Church, Lily Grove Baptist Church, McDonald Chapel United Methodist Church, Oak Grove First Baptist Church, Open Door Church, Rock Creek Church of God, Union Hill Baptist Church in Rock Creek, and West Concord Church of Christ.

Oddly, when asked about the massive destruction to church buildings in the area, most ministers there said it was "a miracle" that more churches were not destroyed or lives lost.

I was surprised to read in AR68 that there are other AR readers besides myself who take an interest in the writings of Michael Parenti. But I was shocked by your comment that he is an atheist. I read his book Dirty Truths and I was not just impressed with his powerful writing, but in his condemnation of our evil society he struck me as being akin to an Old Testament prophet giving out the warning message to a sinful Israel. He is much stronger and focused in his message than even Garner Ted Armstrong was in his heyday.

Assuming you are telling the truth about his religious convictions, or lack thereof, from whence do you think he gets his zeal and righteous indignation? I wish I could understand how such things can be.

-Washington

Editor: You are probably one of only about a half dozen AR readers who have ever read Parenti. While he does not make it clear in his writings, in his taped lecture "The Political Uses of Religion" Parenti makes it very clear that he is an atheist.

Most people who come from a Christian background tend to equate atheism with unrighteousness and tend to equate a professed belief in Christ with righteousness. That has been my own bias for most of my life. But in looking back over more than thirty years of involvement with Armstrongism and organized religion, I must admit that along with having known some very fine Christians along the way, I have also known quite a few who, while professing to know Jesus and even claiming to be doing the work of God, were still some of the most morally deficient human beings I have ever known. Author David Robinson once pointed out to me how famed Christian psychiatrist M. Scott Peck in his book People of the Lie makes the startling claim that some of the most evil people on earth are lurking in Christian churches. Peck wrote that that is so because true evil recognizes itself as such and then attempts to hide the terrible reality from all by resorting to churches as hideaways. I think Peck may be overstating things somewhat but, then again, there are some ex-WCG preachers who say, based on their years in the Armstrong churches, that such is indeed the case.

Conversely, while all of us can think of some professing atheists who lack moral qualities, I have known a fair number of atheists who were very upstanding and highly principled individuals. For instance, I recall an instructor I had many years ago at UCLA who, besides teaching and working as a composer and executive for CBS, had given years of his life to the peace movement. War, to him, was an abomination and he spent many years of his life donating his time and money toward, as he saw it, keeping our country's youth from being used as cannon fodder in foreign lands. One day after class we were having a private chat and, because he knew of my work with this publication and my religious training, he started to tell me about his own religious views. I will never forget how tears actually welled up in his eyes when he said, "I wish I could have religious faith, but I just can't." Here was a man who wanted to have faith, but for some reason could not, yet he was quite a dedicated and sensitive moralist who sacrificed many years of his life and much of his wealth in the furtherance of humanitarian causes.

I can think of many other such examples. Author Jack London is another such individual that comes to mind. I recently commented to a friend how I thought London's book The People of the Abyss, a study of the working conditions of turn-of-the century Englishmen, may well be one of the most Christian-spirited books written in this century. Yet, London was not a believer in the reality of the spirit world and his philosophy contained a large dose of what most would call agnosticism or even atheism. In spite of all that, London not only considered Jesus of Nazareth probably his greatest literary hero, he studied the Bible quite carefully throughout his entire life and incorporated many of its metaphors and teachings into his own writings.

Of course, you are already aware of the Bible teaching that faith is a gift from God (Eph. 2:8) and it is not something individuals can just will up. If you would like to do a study of that doctrine, I know both Ernest Martin at A.S.K. and Jim Coram at Concordant Publishing have done some excellent writing on that subject. David Whitaker (710 E. Chestnut Ave., Enid, OK 73701) has also written an eye-opening paper on how the Bible actually views atheists somewhat differently than many of us have been taught.

Finally, you might want to consider what Jesus said in Luke 6:46 regarding calling him Lord while not doing the things that he taught. I have to wonder if there is not a corollary to that idea as regards people who profess atheism, but who actually do many of the things Jesus taught. I certainly am not advocating atheism, but I must admit I would rather have as neighbors folks who professed atheism but who lived by the Golden Rule, as opposed to people who professed Christ but ignored the Golden Rule. If you think that is a radical idea, compare Matt. 7:21-23 with Matt. 21:28-31 and give it some thought.

John, I am in contact now with an international group called The Freedom From Religion Foundation, with Editor Annie Laurie Gaylor and her husband ex-street-preacher Dan Barker. They publish a magazine called Freethought Today, and it often features articles exposing priests and ministers who molest their parishioners. They would like to learn more about the history of the WCG....

I am finally getting on my feet after 137 days in the nut house where I was because of Post Traumatic Stress Disorder. While in that institution I met a gal whose four-year-old daughter was run over by a pickup truck. The mother was messed up mentally over that. But we got to know each other and now we are together and we are getting married. I am 47 and going to get married, like my Dad did, at the same age!

Anyway, The Freedom From Religion group carried me for over nine months when I was broke because my relatives ran up $2,700 in bills on me while I was in the hospital. This atheist foundation was more Christ-like than most of the Christian magazines I subscribed to. Their address is: Freedom From Religion Foundation, P.O. Box 750, Madison, WI 53701. I tried to send them your last issue, but I sent it back to you by mistake. The meds I was on were pretty strong.

-Nebraska

Editor: The Freedom From Religion Foundation Web site is: www.infidels.com. Incidentally, newer AR readers who are not familiar with Post Traumatic Stress Disorder and how it relates to the WCG-Armstrongism experience should read Brenda Denzler's excellent article on that subject in AR33, our Oct. 1985 issue.

As a former WCG tithe-payer, I have written to Mr. Tkach Jr. and Mr. Albrecht asking for the return of my money. I have not had a Christian reply from either. The devilish teachings of the %$#@* WCG have cost me dearly and caused much suffering to my disabled mother and to my father who is now dead. Now I badly need my money returned but the WCG leaders don't give a damn.

-Paul Brown
England

Editor: We have known of hundreds of former members who, once they realized they had been duped, kindly asked the WCG for their tithes to be returned. The standard answer that the WCGs lawyers have instructed them to give is, "The tithes you contributed have already been spent, so there is nothing to give back." Of course, what they are really saying smugly is, "Get lost, we stole your money fair and square." As far as we know, the only exceptions to such stonewalling have occurred when WCG leaders have been confronted with physical violence coupled with the genuine likelihood of greatly escalated future violence. Of course, we don't suggest such a course of action as it would most certainly not be a Christian approach to the problem.

I am not a WCG member, but a former member, and I was angry and bitter for a long time after leaving. But with God's help, I have learned to forgive them, even though the scars will always be there. I have seen such a change in the members up here. They seem so much happier and more loving than before. I truly believe the Holy Spirit and their increased knowledge of Jesus Christ and his love for all of us has brought this change about.

-Mrs. Dorothy McCullough
Canada

I have been subscribing to the publications of Mr. Bill Dankenbring, Mr. Norman Edwards, and many other WCG offshoots. I can't believe how much they are into vicious Clinton bashing. I remember when Mr. Herbert W. Armstrong was alive how he taught that we were to have respect for our leaders in government even though they were unconverted and made mistakes. Wow, have things changed, even among those who say they are following in Mr. Armstrong's footsteps.

-Oregon

More than twenty years ago, when you folks came out with the "In Bed With Garner Ted" story, you really shocked some of us. At first we felt that even if what you wrote was true, such things should not have been put in print. But once we came to see that what you wrote was true and that we had been duped by the Armstrongs, we started to look at the world without the rose-colored lenses we wore previously. I guess it was a kind of "loss of innocence" or a kind of "coming of age." Whatever it was, you folks did all of us a service. No more would we assume that religious leaders, or leaders of any kind, were simply what they seemed on the surface. You helped us greatly to be more questioning and skeptical of authority figures.

I guess that is why I am so surprised at the public's reaction to the Clinton scandal. Can people really be so naive as to think that politicians are always all they pretend? Once the Gennifer Flowers story came out, I always assumed that our President had a weakness for young flesh. But now so many act so shocked that our young President has human frailties.

As for our self-righteous Congress, I think it was utterly disgusting that they entered the Internet porno business. What's more, did you notice how they decided to do so for the first time in history on the Feast of Trumpets? Why could they not have kept the lewd details of the Lewinsky matter secret at least until they decided if there was an impeachable offense? Isn't it all too obvious that their actions were based only on a desire for more political power, not on any genuine concern for the good of the country, its morals, or its image abroad?

But even more disgusting than the low comedy of the White House and the slash-and-burn politics of the Republicans are the antics of the preachers of the Christian Coalition. The television condemnations of Clinton from preachers like Jerry Falwell and Pat Robertson appall me. First of all, how can they be sure that Clinton's professed repentance is not real? I don't have any way of knowing. Do you? And if Mrs. Clinton can forgive her husband for being made a fool of by a shrewd seductress like that Monica woman, why should we as a country be interfering? Not only that, have you noticed how even Mrs. Clinton has gotten criticism for somehow causing the scandal? I have yet to hear even one Christian commentator praise her for taking her marriage vows seriously and for standing by her man under such humiliating circumstances.

Yes, he tried to cover it up. But I, for one, am convinced that there are times when some matters should be covered up (Prov. 10: 12, Prov. 12:16). And unlike the foolish TV commentators that think Clinton would somehow benefit his family or the country if he would just blab in public about every detail of his sins, I think that when he "threaded the needle" in his depositions, he was being "as wise as a serpent" in not revealing too much (Prov. 29:11) and in answering his accusers according to their own folly (Prov. 26:4-5). I had not intended to give you editors a Bible study. But it seems to me that we have too many in this country who don't understand that when you rush to judgment, you often make a fool of yourself (Prov. 18:13).

From sad personal experience I know what it is like to be in a family where adultery has occurred. Maybe for that reason, I wish that our Congress would have approached this immoral and sad situation with more sobriety and understanding, rather than using a family tragedy for political gain. But it angers me even more to see supposed preachers of the Gospel who are so ignorant of scripture and who behave on television just as abominably as the scribes and pharisees of Jesus' day.

-Washington

Editor: I never voted for Clinton and have not been one of his fans. Furthermore, I would not agree that the President had any kind of a duty to cover up his sins. Nevertheless, your comments are thought-provoking. I did see both Pat Robertson and Jerry Falwell on television lambasting the President and demanding that he resign. I noticed that at no time did they seem to be aware of some of the most fundamental of Bible teachings on the subject of how Christians should relate to civil government.

While it is true that the Bible teaches that false prophets should be exposed (Eph. 5:11-12, RSV) and there are plenty of examples of that being done in the Bible (Matt. 23:13-33), as far as I can see there really is a different scriptural standard regarding civil leaders. Jesus taught that the Kingdom of God is not of this world (John 18:36). Moses taught that the people were not to speak evil of the ruler of the people (Ex. 20:28, cited in Acts 23:5). Paul taught that Christians should render all due respect and obedience toward civil rulers (Rom. 13:1-7) and pray for their well-being (I Tim. 2:1-2). Peter even went so far as to warn of those who "are not afraid to speak evil of dignities" and he compared those who did to "brute beasts" (II Pet. 2:10, 12). I suppose that if they have been given a commission directly by God to warn a national leader it might be different. But it is hard for me to see Falwell or Robertson as being a modern-day Elijah or John the Baptist because if they were, they would be going to Clinton privately and would be applying the principles of Matt. 18:15-17.

Of course, I am not suggesting that in a democracy such as ours, preachers have no right to participate in the political process. But I do agree that if preachers such as Falwell and Robertson would spend less time embroiled in worldly politics and more time in study and reflection, their public pronouncements might be less unseemly and more in line with what scripture plainly says.

There is a prophetic battle going on today for the nation of Israel. The ultra Orthodox Jewish political parties in Israel are doing everything in their power to outlaw Messianic Judaism - the growing group of Jewish people who believe that Yeshua (Jesus) is the true Messiah.

If passed, one new bill, submitted to the Knesset by Mr. Pinchasi of the Orthodox, would impose a THREE YEAR JAIL SENTENCE AND A $15,000 FINE ON ANYONE SHARING THEIR FAITH.

This law might even apply to you should you happen to be touring the Holy Land - three years in jail if you share your faith in Yeshua (Jesus)! The actual law reads:

Anyone who preaches with the purpose of causing another person to change his religion is liable to three years imprisonment or a fine of NIS 50,000 new Israeli shekels.

Moreover, there's already a law on the books that denies Israeli citizenship to Jews who believe Yeshua (Jesus) is the Messiah! They accept Jews who are Muslim, Bahai, or atheist, but not those who believe in Yeshua!

You see, since 1967 more than one million Jewish people around the world have accepted Yeshua (Jesus) as their Savior. These people have discovered that He actually is the Messiah. Never since the time of Yeshua and His disciples has there been such a revival!

Why would the ultra Orthodox want to place a ban on sharing the Good News? Because they are frightened! And they are justifiably worried. Because biblical prophecy predicts that just prior to the Messiah's second coming His Spirit will pour out upon the Jewish people. There will be a spiritual revival among them resulting in the eventual salvation of the nation of Israel. And Satan is doing everything in his power to keep that from happening. He's attacking from the inside out by using Jews to attack other Jews. He doesn't want Yeshua to return to Jerusalem as foretold by the prophets. That's why it is imperative that we defend the freedom of religion in Israel.

I just read the intriguing Damascus Gate by Robert Stone (Houghton Mifflin Co., 1998). It centers around an American journalist living in Jerusalem who finds Jerusalem filled with religious fanatics suffering from "the Jerusalem Syndrome," a documented type of mental illness. In the book it moves one group to try to blow up the Temple Mount.

A big thank you for giving the Internet address of Robert Brinsmead. I read his writings on "Sabbatarianism Re-examined" (chapters 4 and 12) and a lot of things started to fall in place regarding the Old Covenant Sabbath day commandment. It looks back to God's rest (Gen. 2:2-3) and forward to our rest in Christ (Heb. 4). You know this, of course, but I did not, until now. There really is freedom in Christ and I say this with thanks.

It's been 15 years since I left WCG, but my seven-year experience there still has a big impact on my life. It wasn't all bad. I became a Christian there, read the Bible cover-to-cover, and learned a lot. The Southern Baptist Church I now attend has many of the same doctrines, without the greed and wackiness. My thanks to AR for helping me see WCG for what it was: a money-making personality cult that taught some truth but exploited naive people. I've now successfully moved on to a more responsible church.

-Bill Smith

Isn't it strange, Mr. Trechak, people want the truth but are not willing to go that "extra mile" to keep it alive and well. After all that some may learn about the origin of the WCG, they still, when the truth is known, can't seem to find that extra bit of money to help you to help others break free of this world's string of so-called purveyors of the Bible. Jesus said, "The truth will set you free." Well, I am sending you what I can afford and I shall pray for you so you can continue dispersing that AR to help others get out from under the yoke of lying evangelists.

It is getting very exhausting, this Church of God. We have been through Herbert Armstrongism and Joe Tkachism, through Garner Ted Armstrongism and Gerald Flurryism and now the Uniteds. And we are still searching for the answers to prophecy. We know it's coming and soon, but how? There are now so many Bible prophecy theories among God's Sabbath-keeping people! Where are all these ideas coming from?

We read a paper about how Mikhail Gorbachev is secretly the Beast and is setting up world headquarters now in San Francisco. We then heard a tape about how there are Russian troops already hiding in caves in Louisiana. We were then given a book called The Gods of Eden by William Bramley that many members are reading. It's about how space aliens (demons) on the moon have sent messages to earth and that those messages are the symbols of the Masons. One religious tape said the Jews were going to build a temple in Jerusalem and it would be a Masonic temple. Then just last week a friend in Pasadena told us that NASA is secretly planning to buy the Worldwide Church's Pasadena properties as a location to greet space aliens. There are so many ideas being spread around and lots of proof, but also many contradictions. We hope you will report on some of these prophecies and about why there are so many of them now in all of the Churches of God groups. Some of these new ideas are interesting but many of them are upsetting.

"Proving" Your Favorite Prophecy

The closer we get to the year 2000, the more it seems that people everywhere are becoming preoccupied with Bible prophecies. The amount of information being published on the subject is absolutely astonishing. We know, because rarely does a day go by that our mail box does not contain some missive from another cleric or group offering "prophetic understanding."

Even more so than among mainstream and evangelical Christians, among Worldwidiers and the Armstrongite offshoots there is an astronomical number of new, and frequently outlandish, notions floating around. This may be due to the stress of the ongoing disintegration of the Armstrong movement, to corrupt ministers looking for new religion marketing devices, to the growth of the Internet, or to all of these factors. Clearly, many of these new theories are being pushed by people who in times past would not have been allowed any writing tool sharper than a crayon, but who now have access to photocopy machines and the World Wide Web.

We will try to report on some of the new theories in future issues. But just keeping up with all the new teachings is difficult because there are so many wild tapes and writings in circulation, particularly on the subject of prophecy.

Such writings frequently contain a variety of biblical, historical, philosophical, and common-sensical errors. But there is one misinformation technique so commonly used by "experts" of the Armstrongite type that we are amazed how often ex-Worldwidiers are falling for it. The method used is quite simple. For whatever premise, no matter how outlandish or even impossible, the prophecy "expert" simply scours all available news reports and surveys them for possible connections to his premise. Then all those reports not fitting into the predetermined scenario are discarded and ignored. All those fitting the predetermined scenario are then amalgamated, quoted, and cited as absolute "proof" that the prophecy is certain. And, of course, there is then the implication that the writer is "inspired by God" and you therefore need to send the prophet your money. This is the exact way Herbert W. Armstrong and his Plain Truth news department used to work. It is also the way so many of his spiritual offspring work today.

Therefore, a suggestion to those who are attracted to the latest wave of prophecy experts. Rather than simply accepting their "proofs," go to your local library and get additional data. Don't just look for data that fits the pet theories. Look also for data that presents contrary views, data that might lead a reasonable person to different conclusions. Admit what you, and the experts, don't know or even can't possibly know. Separate facts from theories. Try to distinguish the self-evident, the demonstrable, the incontrovertible, the probable, the possible, the improbable, and the impossible. In other words, weigh all the evidence.

Above all, try to remember how many times in the past such prophecy "experts" have been wrong!

In future issues we will report on some of the new prophecy teachings as well as the teachings of the growing Secret Church of Conspiracy. Until next time, my thanks to all of you who are helping to make this publication possible.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

P. O. BOX 60068, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA 91116

January 21, 1999

Dear AR Reader:

This letter is to let you know that AR71 will be delayed because John Trechak has been in the hospital for over a week. An injury on his foot led to a massive infection. Ultimately, it entered the bone, resulting in his hospitalization. The doctors were hoping that large doses of antibiotics would reverse the infection, but the damage was already too great in his right, big toe, and John has had to have it amputated. He is now facing weeks of recovery and rehabilitation. (He is still on large doses of antibiotics to try to prevent a recurrence and spread of the infection, and will have to return to the hospital every few days for awhile so that the doctors can keep an eye on the situation.)

John was very close to finishing the next AR when he became ill. (But his medical problems have sapped his physical energy and having to undergo an amputation was a real psychological shock, too.) We are hoping and praying that his recovery will be speedy and that he will be able to finish AR71 soon - especially with the most current news regarding the sale of the Ambassador College campus in Pasadena. Tkach has found a group of developers who are willing to buy the campus and develop it into apartments, a hotel, new offices, a conference center, and senior housing. The sale is pending approval of the City of Pasadena. What is to become of the millions of dollars Tkach and company are making by selling off all of the WCGs assets is of vital interest to those of us who contributed thousands of our own hard-earned dollars to make the WCG what it was.

If you have not renewed your subscription to Ambassador Report recently, now would be a good time to do so. The need for a publication like the AR has not diminished with the years. Indeed, the behind-the-scenes financial finagling of Tkach and company - not to mention the political wrangling, the power plays, and the doctrinal disputes within the WCG and its offshoots - make it all the more important that the AR be able to continue its mission to shed light on the Armstrong empire.

I want to thank all of you for your help and support in and ask that all of you keep John in your thoughts and prayers as he struggles to regain his health.

Sincerely yours,
Mary E. Jones

AMBASSADOR REPORT

February 1999 (AR71)

Pasadena Campus to Be Sold

The Worldwide Church of God (WCG) has announced that it has found a buyer for its 48 acres of headquarters property, formerly the flagship campus of Ambassador College, in Pasadena, California. The buyer is Legacy Partners, an Orange County development company which has projects in many parts of the country. According to the Pasadena Star-News (1/16/99, p. A1), neither party would divulge the amount of the purchase price. But according to the Los Angeles Times (1/16/99, p. C2), Legacy has agreed to pay more than $100 million for the property.

According to the Times article:

Legacy hopes to develop a mixed-use "urban village" on the property that would blend upscale apartments, ground-floor retail space, housing for seniors and a hotel and conference center with the handful of historic mansions and large concert hall on the site....

"We want to take what they have done and build upon that heritage," said Legacy partner Bill Shubin. "We'll take the best part of what they have done and then take the buildings that don't have any commercial value and figure out how to redevelop them."

He anticipates razing most of the college buildings, but preserving Ambassador Auditorium; four mansions, including the 28-room Tudor showplace Mayfair, and a handful of other significant structures.

Among the buildings likely to be demolished are the college's gymnasium and maintenance buildings. Because of the size and complexity of the transaction, church officials say escrow could take one or two years. According to church treasurer Bernard Schnippert, quoted in the Star-News, the WCG will eventually no longer have a presence in Pasadena, and it has begun looking for smaller-scale headquarters elsewhere in Southern California.

Christmas Adds to WCG Income

In beginning each issue of Ambassador Report, we usually try to mention Worldwide Church of God (WCG) founder Herbert W. Armstrong in order that newer readers have some perspective as to what they are reading about. However, with the passage of time and all the changes instituted since the founder's death in 1986, Herbert W. Armstrong is becoming more and more irrelevant to the members of the church he founded.

A good case in point is the WCG's total embrace of Christmas. While HWA pointed out accurately that Christ was not born on or near December 25, today's WCG, in its rush to be part of evangelical Christianity, seems hardly to care about that fact anymore. Instead the Christmas holiday, turned holy day, has become one more money maker for the Tkach regime. In his December co-worker letter to the WCG, Tkach wrote:

During this time of year people's minds across America are directed toward the birth of Jesus - in the secular world as well as among Christians. For some people, sadly, the Christmas season is nothing more than a secular holiday, complete with immoral partying and overdrinking, while for others it is a special time of thanksgiving for God's grace through Jesus Christ.

Over the past year, many of our members have told us that they would like to give an offering as an act of worshipping during this time of year. In response to this request, we are making the enclosed offering envelope available....

If you choose to give a special offering during the Christmas season this year, please use the enclosed envelope.

WCG Members Cry Out for Democracy!

Some months ago, when Pastor General Joseph Tkach allowed local congregations to take surveys to determine which days they wished to keep, he probably had no idea where the survey suggestion would lead. Where it has led is that some congregations now wonder why surveys cannot be taken on other matters of doctrine and church administration. One such congregation is the WCG's Greenville, South Carolina congregation. They first wrote Tkach asking that WCG-wide referendums be used to clarify more church positions. When they received an inadequate reply, they responded:

We as members want to work together with HQ in all major areas, not only in finances! Therefore we are sending this second request to have our primary question answered. It was the only point in our [previous] letter which was in caps, in bold, and underlined. We repeat it here as a direct quote from our previous letter:

"Therefore, for the sake of stability and trust in the church, we strongly request that such major decisions be put to a CHURCH-WIDE REFERENDUM, that is that people be allowed to have a say in it. After all, we the members collectively are the church. If not, we would once again have to conclude that the true feelings of our church do not matter to you."

In your response you did not address this request.

This only underscores our perception of a lack of good stewardship in this area. We are sorry to have to say this; however, we feel that we are not being taken seriously. This is what prompted our original letter in the first place. Therefore

A) The referendums ought to have member-generated questions and be handled by a member committee so that conclusive results may be arrived at.

B) Further, the use of a referendum should become corporate policy, i.e. the means by which all major future issues of church doctrines and practices are resolved.

We admit that what we are posing is a very direct and tough question. But sir, for us members it also has been, and still is, very tough. So, let us indeed go through this "together," strong and united, instead of fractured and dwindled. Fact: in early 1997, there were 81,000 members remaining (WN, 1/97, "History"). We thought then that the worst attrition was over. Yet today, the church's website lists 50,000. That is a drop of 38% since then - and the losses are continuing.

Such terrible and sad attrition needs to be stopped. We plead that now is the time to "reason together."

Sincerely,

Signed by 52 members of the WCG's Greenville, SC congregation.

There is still no indication as to how the Tkach administration will deal with this new way of thinking. But certainly this cry for democracy is something new in the WCG!

Meredith Downsized

It was only in our last issue that we predicted that with the shrinkage of the United Church of God, it was likely that the Global Church of God (GCG), headed by evangelist Roderick C. Meredith, would soon emerge as the world's leading Armstrongite organization. But how quickly the winds of fate change direction! Just weeks after mailing our last issue we learned that the board of the GCG, in effect, downsized evangelist Meredith.

But Meredith had no intention of obeying the orders of the church board. While publicly teaching loyalty to "duly-constituted authority," Meredith has always been one to keep an eye out for his own interests. And so, true to form, he lashed back at GCG board member Larry Salyer and the rest of the board of GCG and is apparently on his way to starting yet one more breakaway Armstrongite group. Here, in a letter dated November 21, is the way Meredith explained and excused his actions to his followers:

Greetings from San Diego! This is a special emergency letter, so read it very carefully. You will want to go over this letter and pray and FAST about it. For SATAN is now striking directly at the Global Church of God and at me personally!

First of all, thank you again for your kind expressions of love and loyalty to me during and since the Feast. The outpouring of enthusiasm for "doing the Work" - and for my leadership - was most encouraging and inspiring. I know that the large majority of you brethren are "Philadelphians" (Rev. 3:7-8). Your heart is in doing a real Work. Your heart is in preserving and teaching the full Truth. And you do believe in God's form of Church Government which was explained to us so carefully by Herbert W. Armstrong.

As most of you know, the Global Church of God was founded - under Christ's leadership - essentially by me and my wife, Sheryl, assisted by Mr. Don Davis. In the last two weeks of December 1992, others began to come with us. We had an informal Sabbath service in my home on December 26, with 19 present, including children. Then, on January 2, 1993, we conducted our first official Sabbath service in the recreation room of a large condominium complex managed by Don Davis. We only had 42 people in attendance. For approximately the first two months no other full time ministers had yet joined us in this effort. So, at age 62, I had to "step out in faith" to start the Global Church of God.

As many of you know, the living Jesus Christ guided circumstances so that I was literally "pushed" to start this Work. After learning of the increasingly apostate movement in our former association, I had been praying fervently and fasting twice a month for God to make it absolutely clear to me what He wanted me to do. Finally, in December 1992, Christ did reveal it very clearly to me. I was told that I was going to be forcibly retired whether I wanted to be or not. And it was made clear that in retirement I was to do "nothing" - not even visit or anoint the sick (which I had requested to do) or write an occasional article.

Brethren, the timing of all this was very significant. Yet it was out of my control, for I was certainly not "trying" to get retired. This assault on my ministry came exactly 40 years after my ordination as an Evangelist in December 1952. And strikingly, the official beginning of Global at our first service was seven years to the month from Mr. Armstrong's death in 1986! Most of you know the significance of those numbers, so I won't elaborate further on that except to say that I am positive that all of this was done with Christ's Divine guidance and blessing.

For about the first three years, Global grew and grew in size and in the impact of the Work. We all rejoiced in God's blessing and guidance. But other ministers came with us and were being added to the Board of the Church and to the Council of Elders. As time went along, some of the Board and Council members began to talk of cutting back on doing the Work of God. As I resisted this, they became more and more presumptuous over the last year. Threats and insinuations made it obvious that if I did not "go along" with them that they would try to remove me from the Board or Council. In fact, in our September Board meeting, they even - over my objections - removed my wife, Sheryl, from the Board and changed the By-Laws so that they can REMOVE ME not only from the Board or Council, but actually disfellowship me from the Church! This makes it VERY CLEAR where they are headed!

You might ask how could they do all of this? It all goes back to a serious, though innocent, mistake I made at the founding of Global. We had to have an outside attorney draw up the By-Laws governing the Church so that we could operate legally, receive tithes and offerings, and so that you brethren would be able to deduct your contributions from your taxable income. Those By-Laws contained the expression that "the Board" was to make all decisions regarding hiring, firing and other administrative and business affairs of the corporation. Frankly, brethren, in the midst of hectic day and night telephone calls from many of you who came early on, with the need to get new booklets out, get our radio program going, etc., I was so busy that I didn't realize the danger of the way those By-Laws were worded. And, besides, the original Board consisted of the most trusted individuals I knew at that time - my wife and me and Mr. Davis.

But, other men came on the Board and the Council - men I have now come to realize had a great deal of personal ambition and a completely different view of how we should conduct the Work of God. So trouble began to brew. For over the last year or two, some of these men have tried to "push" me into going completely off WGN - our ONLY major television outlet in the United States! They have directly pushed for a completely different approach to doing the Work - planning to concentrate our efforts on turning inward - NOT striving first of all to go through the "open doors" that Christ shows Philadelphians will do. I can tell you very definitely, brethren, that this approach would DESTROY the Work of God as we have known it, and would slowly but surely turn us into a kind of "social club," thinking only of ourselves.

Now, these misguided, but very political individuals are beginning to follow the pattern of those dissidents who tried to unseat Mr. Herbert W. Armstrong back in 1979. Rather than trusting that the Living Christ would guide the one He is using to do His Work (and NOT one advocating direct heresy!), these men are using the new By-Laws which they have devised to try to pressure me to do their will or to "oust" me if I don't! You would have to experience the atmosphere of profound disrespect, envy, jealousy and open HOSTILITY displayed in some of our Council and Board meetings to really grasp the impact of what I am talking about.

Dear brethren, we are being trained at this time to learn and later to administer GOD'S form of government. And as Herbert W. Armstrong explained clearly over and over again, God has virtually ALWAYS worked primarily through one man in leading or guiding any particular phase of His Work down through the ages. All the way from Moses, Samuel, David to Nehemiah, that pattern is clearly shown in the Old Testament. Then, in the New Testament, the overwhelming weight of evidence shows that Christ used Peter, NOT as a "Pope" - but, as the definite "Leader" of the original 12 apostles. Then after Acts 15, Peter left the scene and apparently went to the "lost 10 tribes" of Israel in Northwest Europe and the British Isles.

Paul became the obvious and primary leader of the Work to the Gentiles. God even inspired Paul to put this into the very Word of God: "But on the contrary, when they saw that the Gospel for the uncircumcised had been committed to me, as the Gospel to the circumcised was to Peter..." (Gal. 2:7). Notice that Paul does NOT say that the Gospel to the circumcised was committed "equally" to all 12 of the original apostles, but rather to Peter! And, again, Paul did NOT write that the Gospel to the Gentiles was given to him and Barnabas, but rather to Paul himself! Certainly, these dedicated men - Peter and Paul - used and supported the others working with them. But NO TIME did they have a human "board" of men LACKING FAITH in Christ's leadership to constantly "second guess" them, thwart their decision to preach the Gospel and even threaten them with dismissal if they didn't cooperate!

Frankly, brethren, throughout the Bible, whenever you see a man being used of God - whether by appointment or through circumstances - to raise up or lead a phase of God's Work, that man is "God's anointed" in that particular function and must be respected as such. Even King Saul of ancient Israel - unrighteous though he was, even to the point of attempting to murder David (I Sam. 19:10) - was respected as God's "anointed." So even when David had already been anointed by Samuel as the next King of Israel, he DARED NOT try to harm or overthrow Saul! When David had a perfect opportunity to destroy Saul he told his warriors "The Lord forbid that I should do this thing to my master, the LORD'S anointed, to stretch out my hand against him, seeing he is the anointed of the LORD" (I Sam. 24:6).

These men who have made these threatening political moves and comments toward me seem to have NO FAITH in the Living Christ to lead His Church and remove me if that were ever necessary. Rather, they have decided to use human, carnal political means to get their way and to thwart the one Christ guided to raise up and lead the Global Church of God. This attitude and approach, if it is allowed to continue, will spread like a CANCER through the body of Christ! Increasingly, our meetings have become more like a debating society. Each "side" has to divide up their constituents and propagandize them before a "vote" is taken on key issues. That is worldly. That is DAMNABLE! We will NEVER learn to faithfully practice God's form of Government if this continues! Frankly, brethren, since I was "out voted" anyway, I tried for a while to cooperate and go along with this system for the sake of UNITY in God's Church. Now I see that I was WRONG. I should NOT have gone along with this "democratic" approach even for the sake of unity. This "political" approach to government is NEVER advocated in the Bible. It is NOT working because it is not God's way, and it breeds CHAOS and confusion. I have not wanted to fight. But now, I am being FORCED to fight for the Truth - for God's form of Church Government and for us to have the ZEAL to finish the Work! Some of these men on the Board want to "politicize" this Church and make it like the human governments of this world.

Brethren, these carnal practices must CEASE within the body of Christ! Now, even since I started this letter, a Board meeting was held yesterday, November 20. Although it had been intimated that these men might be willing to put at least one friendly face on the Board, instead they chose to REMOVE Mr. Carl McNair and put in his place a lawyer! I was ASTOUNDED at the effrontery of this most obvious political move! For Carl McNair is one of the most dedicated, balanced and experienced ministers I have ever known.

Next, this small cadre of men on the Board voted to remove me from having any authority over the preaching schedule and who is to speak on our headquarters sermon tapes to the Churches and video groups all around the world. Obviously, if they had their way, you would be hearing less and less from the one Christ has used to raise up and lead the Global Church of God. Next, I was told by Larry Salyer that I would not be speaking the next Sabbath, November 21, even though I was already scheduled to speak.

Then, they began to call in, one by one, a number of leading employees here - known to be loyal to me - and proceeded to lecture, frighten and/or intimidate them. Has another "reign of terror" begun? In addition to the above matter, I have learned - on very good authority - that several "secret" contacts have been made behind my back with another church fellowship. I find that - though I am still Presiding Evangelist of the Church - I have been intentionally left out and even misled about some of these contacts! This is blatant rebellion and even DISLOYALTY against the Founder and President of the Global Church of God!

I could go on with many more details, dear brethren, but I think you get the picture. Therefore, until these disloyal and deceived men back down, or leave, I am asking all of you faithful brethren to send all of your tithes and offerings in care of me to Post Office Box 501394, San Diego, CA 92150-1304. Just put my name "Roderick C. Meredith" on the check....

In closing, I want to assure you that most of the ministry stand fully behind me.... The majority of the Council of Elders backs my leadership. And all of the Regional Pastors save one stand firmly behind me in this effort to "rescue" the Global Church of God from this small band of rebels on the Board. I know that most of you, dear brethren, back my leadership. But in all honesty, we must now stand and FIGHT to preserve the Global Church of God! With the majority of the ministry and of you faithful brethren standing with us, surely this puny band of politicians will not be allowed to prevail....

But prevail they did and the result was -

Meredith Disfellowshipped!

The board of the GCG was quick to respond to Dr. Meredith's throwing down of the gauntlet. Almost immediately, evangelist Larry Salyer, the director of the GCG's ministry, wrote to the GCG ministry with the approval of board members Raymond F. McNair, J. Edwin Pope, and Norbert Link. A second letter, covering most of the same issues, was written jointly by the four men and directed to the entire GCG membership. In the letter to the GCG ministry, Salyer wrote:

This is a very difficult message to write, and I know that many of you have somehow come to believe such accusations and rumors about me that you may not even care to read what I write. Nevertheless, it is my duty to write, and I will.

This message is from the Board.

I am truly sad to say that after a full day of discussion and guts-out "negotiation," Dr. Meredith has separated himself from the Global Church of God, and as a consequence the Board had no choice but to terminate his employment with the Church. In spite of the rancor apparent in the letter Dr. Meredith mailed to all members on Monday [23 Nov.], today's meeting ended amicably, with handshakes and hugs. We bear Dr. Meredith no ill will, and told him we would continue to pray for him. He hoped we could have friendly contact in the future.

We, the remaining Board members, must respectfully but categorically deny the long list of charges and accusations contained in Dr. Meredith's letter. We consider the letter extremely libelous. Particularly alarming is the fact that Dr. Meredith revealed in his letter that he was already setting up a competing corporation and that he was asking members to send all their tithes and offerings to his personal address, while still in the employ of Global and drawing his paycheck from Global. In addition, we consider this to be a breach of his fiduciary duties as an officer of the corporation.

It should be understood by all that the aforementioned letter was written and mailed during an interim period in our discussions, which we had agreed to so we could all pray about these decisions. Let me amplify that. We held 8 hours of Board meetings on last Thursday and Friday [19 and 20 Nov.] without reaching a successful reconciliation. Both "sides" had proposed certain actions and neither was able to bend enough to solve the conflict.

Dr. Meredith had posed the possibility that he would "leave Global," which he had also mentioned during our recent Council meeting. We recessed the meeting until Tuesday [24 Nov.], at Dr. Meredith's request, so that he could have time to pray about it. We asked him directly if he would "try to stir up the Church this weekend." He said "No, I won't do anything this weekend." Nevertheless, during the weekend we heard that he made many phone calls to field ministers asking for ministers to "stand with him."

Then, late Monday afternoon [23 Nov.], in what could have only been miraculous intervention, we learned that more than a quarter of a million dollars had suddenly been drained from Global's bank account, through the use of unauthorized checks, signed by Dr. Meredith and another individual who had no power to sign any checks. Further, one six-figure check was payable to the very person who signed it without authority. Thankfully, this miraculous intervention allowed us to stop payment of those unauthorized checks. But we learned that fully one half million dollars was moved from our investment account to the operating account to cover the checks. The only conclusion we can draw from this even larger unauthorized transfer of funds is that even more unauthorized checks were planned to be written later. A logical conclusion considering that all of this was done in secrecy!

By the way, these actions were justified by saying that the money was being used to pay back loans to individuals. Maybe so, but that process always involves authorization and is done according to strict agreements and payback schedules agreed to by all parties. In this case, the loans were not due and payable, and the checks were hand-written, apparently outside office hours, and not through the person who is responsible for such checks. The immediate effect would have been to put the Global Church of God in financial jeopardy and on the verge of bankruptcy. When pointed out that this action, in our opinion, might potentially constitute criminal activity, Dr. Meredith suggested that we could just tell the bank that the signer was a 68-year-old man who didn't quite know what he was doing.

Incredible!

Meanwhile, rumors of a letter being mailed from outside the office gave us reason to be suspicious of the "prayer" interval. By Tuesday morning [24 Nov.], several of us, including Dr. Meredith, had received phone calls from concerned ministers and others, pleading with us to do everything possible to avoid a "split." We all agreed that this was urgent and important and went into the meeting with that in mind. Dr. Meredith mentioned it right up front, but had concluded that a recommended "third-party" consultant would not understand our problems and that our relationship had deteriorated too far for this to be practical.

Generally speaking, all agreed, though all parties still wanted to reach a settlement. Shortly after the meeting began, Dr. Meredith produced copies of his 4-page letter and told us that he had had it mailed to the members on Monday [23 Nov., the day before]. This, of course, not only contrary to rules regarding the use of the mailing list, but was also done during the previous agreed upon "prayer period."

Reading the letter at the meeting, we were appalled at the distortion of facts, imaginary incidents, and the invective with which they were presented. All four additional men on the Board had been accused of everything from rebellion to conspiracy, and even a cancerous attitude.

We all stated our sincere desire to come to an amicable solution to our problems. But Dr. Meredith's opening suggestion was that we resign, receive generous severance and/or retirement, and go wherever we wanted to.

After meeting from 10:00 am till 2:30 pm, we took a two hour break and reconvened. We insisted that since the well had been poisoned so badly by the unauthorized letter to all members, there would be no way to go forward unless Dr. Meredith would recant what he had written and acknowledge that it was a terribly divisive act to send the letter out.

Eventually, after much discussion, he went so far as to say that he would be willing to write a letter that would mollify what he had said. Nevertheless, Dr. Meredith would not retract the basic, libelous content of the letter.

We asked if he still felt that he would have to leave. He said yes. We then told him that we had to consider his actions over the last few days and the content of the letter as a decision already made by him to leave this organization. Therefore, to fulfill our ministerial and Board responsibilities, we had no choice but to formalize the dismissal of Dr. Meredith.

As stated earlier, the meeting ended on a friendly note. [Huh?] We are fully aware that this tragic situation will make life difficult for you as well as us. We can only ask that you carefully and prayerfully seek God's will. We hope you all choose to get the facts and make a right judgment about how you will serve God's people at this time. We intend to call a ministerial conference of all full-time men within the next few weeks to clear the air on all these accusations and to rebuild the infrastructure of the Church so that we might go forward. It is the full intent of those of us here in San Diego to continue to do the Work of God as He opens doors for us.

We are prepared to work with any of you to sort out concerns about meeting halls, fleet cars and other matters of mutual interest. We do not have any desire to be antagonistic or unreasonable. If the new corporation is interested in purchasing some of our assets, we will certainly consider the request....

One final thought: Please remember the hurts and offenses that occurred among us when we left WCG and when UCG started, etc. Many people said and did things they now regret. Why don't we try to avoid such pitfalls this time around?....

Tacked on to Salyer's letter was a letter he had previously written. Although chronologically the tacked-on portion would have made more sense as a prelude to the main body, it, nonetheless, contained numerous insights into the mind of Meredith and GCG's troubles. Here are a few excerpts from that addendum:

What Dr. Meredith perceives as a power struggle probably began during the November '97 Council of Elders meeting, and really heated up during the February meeting, when we unanimously confirmed that we would practice government by consensus of the Council. It broke into the open during the latest Council meeting a couple of weeks ago, when Dr. Meredith made it abundantly clear that he had no intention of abiding by the unanimous agreements of the council of Elders and the Board of Directors concerning the subject of "Church government," which had been discussed for endless hours over the last 5 meetings.

During and after this most recent Council meeting, Dr. Meredith repeated his previous threat that he might have to "pull a David Hulme." He has since told us in no uncertain terms that he will have to make a decision of whether to leave Global.

Yes, the real issue IS Church government!! But, even more than that, it is the integrity of the Church, the ministry, the Council, the Board, and our doctrinal positions and processes that are at stake here. There are many and varied reasons why the Board has recently had to take a stand on principle, and they had nothing whatever to do with "taking over."

Volumes could be written about our discussions and the various writings, sermons, and actions that have flowed from them. Because how we all do our jobs and operate every day is a function of Church government. And this whole "debate" originated with Dr. Meredith's booklet, "When Should You Follow Church Government?" Many of the ministers and members who came to Global in the early years had read and accepted the statements made in that booklet. In fact, it was WHY many came to Global at that time! Our bylaws, the Council, the Board, and our Articles of Incorporation as a non-profit, tax-exempt organization were all based on the concepts and teachings contained in that booklet and in sermons and conversations about this subject. Personally, I had several such conversations with Dr. Meredith at the time I was deciding whether to come to Global. I expect that some of you had similar conversations and concerns. Even when the subject was thoroughly reviewed by the Council in February, Dr. Meredith added his voice to the unanimous decision to continue to preach and proclaim that form of government, based on "multitude of counsel." This government structure also contained a system of checks and balances to prevent one person from leading the Church off course, with provision to correct doctrinal, administrative or personal problems.

Amazingly, even after sending a letter to the entire membership confirming this structure, on June 11, 1998, Dr. Meredith continued to contradict the decisions of the Council of Elders, both in private conversations and in sermons and in meetings. Additionally, he has said several times, including in the initial Council meetings on the subject, something like this: "Well, I wrote the booklet on government to help people come out of WCG, but I never believed it was the way the Church should be governed." What?

In fact, when Mr. Raymond McNair recently asked Dr. Meredith whether he believed God had guided the Council, after we had opened the meetings with prayer and fervently requested God's inspiration and blessing, the reply shocked us all. He said, "Well those are just words. Don't you think the Catholics pray before their meetings?"

I use these examples only to give you the tiniest bit of flavor of what we have been dealing with for some time. We did not share these things with you because we honestly believed they could be worked out and that Dr. Meredith would come to see where he was wrong.

A lot of members, and perhaps a lot of you, don't care much about government structure. However, the more obvious spiritual problem we are dealing with arises out of this conflict. The way Dr. Meredith began to deal with this issue was to say that some of the men at headquarters were trying to tie his hands, and take over the Church. These "accusations" began to surface in the field, and the rumor mill took over. Frankly, it was some time before those of us on the Board knew where they were originating. Nevertheless, a lot of discord was sown. This is ugly and I know it, but I must put this in a little more context for you.

While most of you don't give a hang about how the Board works, or why, let me tell you that it is the focal point of all business and legal liability of the Church. In addition, the Board members can in some cases be held individually and collectively liable for debts of, or judgments against the corporation. We are also responsible to state and federal governments for the way the Church conducts its affairs. The fact that some of you know about this is clear from the immediate call today for repayment of large loans some ministers and brethren have made to the Church during our financial crisis a couple of years ago. They are being used as leverage to pressure the Board to yield to Dr. Meredith's persistent claim to be in sole authority and make unilateral decisions, while the Board bears the liability. This of course could possibly bankrupt the Church, which would serve no one's purpose. I have to liken it to a "scorched earth" policy in battle.

Dr. Meredith has previously threatened that he would "take it over your heads to the lay members of the Church." (Doesn't this sound like democracy?) What is the Church saying now? Don't I recall that you were angry with senior ministers in WCG who never stood up to repeated wrongdoing, even chiding me personally for not having done more? And now am I to understand that the ministry and members are saying, "We are comfortable and happy. Tell us smooth things"? Men who believe they have a duty to God and His people to stand up for the Truth cannot do that. There is much more detail and many different aspects to the current situation, but I see no need to cover it now.

Fellow ministers and brethren, we are in a colossal crisis in the Church.... Let us as members of the Body of Christ set aside the Sabbath of December 5, 1998, to fast together and draw close to God.... I will greatly appreciate your prayers, because praying is the most valuable thing any of us can do.

Thanks for listening.
Larry

In the seventies Pastor General Herbert Armstrong at one point removed Meredith from the active ministry and forbade him to preach (that time has been called Meredith's "Hawaiian imprisonment" because during that time he was sent to live in Hawaii).

Then in the eighties Pastor General Joe Tkach Sr. at one point found it necessary to ban Meredith from the WCG's pulpits, as well. So now, with the GCG Board's banishment of Meredith from the pulpits of Global, Meredith has gotten his third strike, and some are saying he should be permanently banned from preaching - anywhere.

Has Meredith Lost It?

Oddly, it was just weeks before the Meredith crisis, that in a letter to the Sabbatarian Journal, Meredith wrote:

The bylaws of the Global Church of God, which govern our administrative processes, clearly state that the council of elders has final authority in the church in all major doctrinal as well as administrative matters. The board of directors is charged with conducting the business of the church, including hiring or terminating personnel, establishing their duties and setting their compensation. While both the board and the council have confirmed my leading role in the church, all final decisions are made by consensus - usually after much discussion and prayers.

In spite of such expressed "collegiality," on November 27, the entire GCG Board (Raymond McNair, Larry Salyer, Edwin Pope, and Norbert Link) sent out a letter explaining the leadership crisis to the church's lay members. Space does not permit us to quote more than a portion of it, but in addition to much of the information contained in Salyer's letter to the ministry, the Board's letter contained these interesting tidbits:

This letter is very difficult to write because we are forced to acknowledge that Satan has struck another master blow to the unity of God's people. The small flock of which we all have been a part is once again being scattered.... the Board of Directors formalized [Dr. Meredith's] departure by terminating his employment following his refusal to resign. Some of his reasons are known only to him and to God, but it is apparent to us that the primary reason is a compelling need to be preeminent in every way above the brethren and the rest of the ministry....

Certainly, both the members and the ministry have looked to Dr. Meredith for leadership, and have given him the benefit of the doubt whenever he fell short. And during the first few years of Global, when he was little in his own eyes, Dr. Meredith was able to receive and use the counsel - and even gentle correction - given by his fellow ministers as well as some of the brethren he knew well (cf. I Sam. 15:17). But in the last two years or so there has been an increasing pride and unwillingness to acknowledge transgressions pointed out to him by his fellow ministers and employees. Perhaps it was this resistance to guidance and exhortation that caused him to talk more and more about who is "in charge," of the "human leader," and use other such phrases and words of self-aggrandizement. He prided himself on God having used him to start Global because he had been pushed out of the Worldwide Church of God - whereas, in fact, he only left that Church after his request to at least work as a writer, local older or a youth coordinator was rejected. Dr. Meredith, then, would presumably have stayed in Worldwide while the Work collapsed if he had been allowed to work with young people in one local congregation. Thus, there might never have been a Global Church of God!

Such self-promotion was not even challenged too much at first. But when the fruits of that kind of thinking became obvious in the form of hardheaded, unilateral decisions - often against the counsel of the other experienced ministers - many of us began to be concerned and told him so. Finally, the subject of Church government was addressed by the Council of Elders.

We went back and studied the booklet on the subject written by Dr. Meredith himself when Global was founded (originally titled Church Government and Church Unity and later slightly expanded and retitled When Should You Follow Church Government?).

We reexamined the scriptures he used and found that he had rightly presented the case against one-man, autocratic rule. This was obvious since there is no longer an apostle on the scene!

Further, our bylaws had been written to provide for some separation of powers to guarantee certain checks and balances in our governmental structure. Many members had come to Global comforted that we had not installed a "dictatorship." We had represented this more "collegial" form of government to various individuals who had asked. Yet, during these past few years we have strayed from our stated structure.

Dr. Meredith assumed authority and preeminence that was contradictory to what we all had believed, taught and directly stated to the general public. This also represented a danger to the Church, in that we were saying one thing in our writings and doing quite another. We were not even abiding by our bylaws.

Some pointed out that this could even jeopardize our tax-exempt status and, if this status were to be forfeited, could make our faithful donors and tithe payers potentially liable for back taxes on their donations.

Also, an increased willingness on Dr. Meredith's part to speak derogatorily about others was observed, opening ourselves up to defamation lawsuits. In the past, the Worldwide Church of God was sued and found liable for 1.26 million dollars because of, in part, defamatory comments made by Dr. Meredith....

Repeated misstatements and contradictions were frequently brought to Dr. Meredith's attention, yet he refused to recognize and correct the problems. Faced with what he saw as undue criticism from his associates and staff, Dr. Meredith's attention became increasingly defensive and suspicious. He wanted us to show him "more respect," and defer to him even when we felt that doing so would compromise our integrity. The record now shows that he began to seek sympathetic ears among the field ministry and the brethren and to engage in character assassination of the most appalling nature. Headquarters ministers were painted as power-hungry. No one could be trusted. People were part of a conspiracy to investigate his every action and to remove him from his office....

In reality, of course, he was receiving a great deal of support behind the scenes. Several of his major booklets were at most only half-written by him - receiving their depth and substance from other editors and writers. In fact, it became increasingly difficult for the Editorial Department staff to "rework" his material....

Rumor and gossip became commonplace. The Director of Church Administration was referred to as "Absalom," who through political actions, would try to steal the Church....

He dropped casual comments that so-and-so "should be fired." He referred to them by disparaging names. Again discord was sown and people's lives were terribly damaged.... Things came to a head during the Council of Elders meeting of November 10, 1998. He conducted an "inquisition" against a field pastor and Council member in a manner that could only be described as "malicious." Dr. Meredith came in prepared to take a stand as "sole leader" of the Church. He boldly demanded that the Board members, all of whom are on the Council, immediately assure him that we would appoint some of his men (he actually called them "my men") to the Board. When we declined to do so, he recessed the meeting for 15 minutes, saying, "I've got a big decision to make. I am going to take 'my men' into my office and counsel with my friends and advisors." This move was especially significant, since earlier that week Dr. Meredith had told a group of five men meeting in his office that if the Board continued to tie his hands, he would have to leave Global and that he thought the great majority of the brethren would go with him.... a meeting was called for Thursday, November 19. When Dr. Meredith came into the meeting, he started with a lecture and told us we needed to repent of our attitudes toward him. He said, "I am going to play hardball."....

The Global Church of God was in jeopardy. When the meeting reconvened on Friday morning - with reason to believe that Dr. Meredith and certain other staff members were prepared to jump ship - the Board approved a motion stating that all membership lists, mailing lists and files were declared to be the sole property of the Global Church of God and that use of these lists by any individual, without written consent of the Executive Committee, was strictly prohibited. (The Executive Committee, of which Dr. Meredith was Chairman, acts on behalf of the Board to take care of daily routine business.)

Dr. Meredith had objected to the motion and, to our dismay, so had Carl McNair. Dr. Meredith argued, "This is MY Church! These are MY people!" (But isn't it GOD'S Church? Aren't these GOD'S people?) Still, the motion to protect our files was adopted by the Board. It was pointed out to those present that unauthorized use of our private subscriber files would constitute illegal behavior. Next we moved to secure the bank accounts, removing the signature of one man, not on the Board, and whose position on these matters was unknown.... To bring the Board back to five ministers as required in the bylaws, and to strengthen the protection of the corporation, Norbert Link, who is both an ordained minister and an attorney who had already been fully involved in Board meetings and business, was then added to the Board....

In Christian love,

Members of the Board of Directors,
Raymond F. McNair, Larry R. Salyer, J. Edwin Pope, Norbert Link

The quotes from the Meredith letter and the GCG Board's response were rather long, but we have included lengthy excerpts because we think they very clearly reveal what kind of a spirit motivates Roderick Meredith. We'll leave it to our readers to ponder whether finding the magical numbers 2, 3, 7, 12, 19, 40, 42 (7X6), or 62 somewhere in one's past really constitutes ample proof of one's divine calling. We will not get into an argument as to whether Peter, and not James (Acts 15:13-19), was the leading apostle or whether, in fact, all twelve apostles were of equal "rank" (Matt. 20:25-27). We will also not belabor the point that Dr. Meredith has distorted somewhat what Paul actually said in Galatians (see Gal. 2:9 where Paul mentions the gospel being preached, not just by himself, but also by James, Cephas, and Barnabas, among others who Paul mentions elsewhere).

As to Meredith's recollections of the founding of Global, those who are concerned about such issues may wish to get an opinion from one who was there at the start - Norman Edwards of Servant's News, P.O. Box 220, Charlotte, Mich, 48813-0220. Those who would like to read in their entirety Larry Salyer's November letter or the GCG Board's excellent letter to its membership explaining the GCG crisis should write to the Global Church of God in San Diego.

Where all of this will lead for the people of Global is anyone's guess. There have been discussions between the leaders of Global and the leaders of the United Church of God. One has to wonder if at some point Global will not melt into United.

Sadly, Meredith, who in the early years of the WCG considered himself "Number Five" in the universe after God, the Father and Son, and the Armstrongs, father and son, now appears to rank himself as Number Three in the universe and Number One on this planet. While Meredith has many admirers, there have been many over the years who have questioned Meredith's mental balance. And many recall that he was actually head of the WCG's Church Administration Department during the days when the WCG ministry was its most authoritarian and abusive. Now, however, some of those same critics of Meredith fear that 68-year-old's personality problems are being worsened by age. Undoubtedly, Meredith will draw a following. As for us, however, we will not be too quick in sending our tithes to Dr. Meredith.

As we go to press, we have learned that with the smoke clearing somewhat with the Meredith scandal, it appears that approximately 60 percent of the membership of Global has gone to the Meredith camp with the remaining 40 percent staying with the Raymond McNair-Larry Salyer leadership. The Global Church of God remains at P.O. Box 501111, San Diego, CA, 92150-1111.

Split in Church of God the Eternal

One of the earliest splitoffs from the WCG was that of prominent ministers Raymond Cole and Bryce Clark leaving in 1975 to form the Church of God the Eternal. Now, Clark has disassociated himself from the CGE and plans to start yet one more Church of God organization. The reasons behind the latest split are still not clear.

Exotic New Churches

Whatever else one might think of Herbert Armstrong, we have to admit he understood religion as a business. And one of the principles of the religion business that he understood and practiced was to have a unique product and therefore a kind of monopoly. Not so with most of the WCG breakoffs. Most cling to the basic Armstrongite teachings and to the name "Church of God" and therefore they each market themselves as just one more of the many "churches of God." Recently, however, we discovered that at least two of the breakoffs have deviated from that copycat formula.

One is former WCG minister Dallas James who has started "The Mountain Club" subtitled "Founding Chapter of the Association for Biblical Christianity." His address is 2442 NW Market St., #40, Seattle, WA 98107-4177. He offers online books, breaking news, new biblical research, a first century Christian forum, and links. His web site URL reveals a little about what he thinks of himself. It is www.bibleprophet.com. There, you can enter "The Tabernacle" and you can read "Elijah News" and about "Dallas James - House of Aaron" and the "Renewed Levitical Priesthood."

The second former WCG minister who has started what we think is an exotic ministry is Robert J. Petry who after his name tacks on the letters "C.L." (we have no idea what they stand for). Petry has not started a church. Instead, he runs "The Embassy of YHWH." His web site explains it this way:

The EMBASSY of YHWH is commissioned by its government as an Embassy to present information and aid to the Citizens of YHWH's Government/Kingdom/Empire. The Embassy is to help prepare Citizens for events to happen in the next 30-32 years. If you consider yourself one of the Citizens of the Kingdom of YHWH mentioned in the ancient Hebrew and Greek Scriptures, then you should visit this site often for up-to-date information. The Final Countdown is about to begin!

The Embassy's site is at:

Scandals in Other Denominations

If one were to read only Ambassador Report (we hope no one would be so short-sighted), one might get the impression that the Armstrongite group of churches is the most scandalplagued in the country. This, however, is not so. A perusal of just a few of the nation's newspapers often reveals church scandals far worse than those of the WCG and its offspring. Note the following two excerpts from the Los Angeles Times (11/16/98 and 11/19/98):

PITTSBURGH - Father Benz was sick in bed, his brain infected by a lethal virus, his body washed by leukemia, his soul tainted by sin. A pastor at two parishes for 26 years, Benz had just confessed to something unholy: skimming the collection plate of $1.35 million.

That wasn't all. Parishioners learned that the Roman Catholic priest had been living lavishly with a lady friend and amassing six-figure gambling losses at Atlantic City. He had rooms at the rectory, of course, but also a house in the suburbs, a condo in Florida, a cache of precious coins and a Cadillac. He had a collection of 27 handguns, most still in the box. He had stylish Japanese furniture and a statue of Buddha.

Now he was trapped in a purgatory of catastrophic illness and impending criminal prosecution. The more the law closed in, the more his health seemed to fade. By the time he began admitting his transgressions, viral fever had addled his brain to the point where he was showering with his clothes on and forgetting how to feed himself. And on the day authorities showed up at his sickbed to arraign him, Father Benz slipped deep into a coma.

Nine days later, somebody crept into his room at a Catholic nursing home and plucked the oxygen tube catheter from his nose and the IV needle from his arm. The Rev. Walter J. Benz, 72, died two hours later, moving on to a judgment day in the hereafter, while avoiding one here in suburban Pittsburgh.

He left behind a confession that implicated his female companion, a former church secretary, and a series of riddles. Who did it? Why kill a dying man? Vengeance? Or mercy? Dr. Cyril Wecht, the Allegheny County coroner, thinks the latter motive is the more logical.

Or, how about this story:

ARCATA, Calif - Andy Lowery thought he had seen the type before when Wayne Adam Ford first walked into his Christian book and music shop a couple of years ago. "People who have problems come to see the Christian people," Lowery says.

Ford said his marriage had busted up, he was losing touch with the toddler son he adored, his life was adrift. Lowery tried to help, selling Ford evangelical tracts and a Bible on tape to listen to on his trucking routes. He even took Ford to the men's Bible study group.

Through it all, only one thing made Ford seem different from other lost souls who dropped by the store. "He said he was concerned," Lowery says, "that he didn't have a conscience."

On Nov. 3, Ford has told investigators, he found his conscience. After a night of heavy drinking and a tearful session with his brother in a threadbare hotel room, the two paid an early-morning visit to the sheriff's station in Eureka. Ford carried his Bible and a woman's severed breast stuffed into a plastic bag. He confessed, investigators say, to strangling four women and dumping their sometimes dismembered bodies in different parts of the state.

Those interested in reading the two stories in their entirety, may purchase them online from the archives section of the Los Angeles Times at latimes.com.

The Rev. Moon-George Bush Connection

On Sunday, September 20, Mike Wallace and his Sixty Minutes team again exposed one more crazy cult to the glare of his cameras. While it is no secret that Rev. Sun Myung Moon of the Unification Church is the leader of one of the world's largest and most outlandish cults, the full extent of his hypocrisy was quite evident on that recent Sixty Minutes which put special emphasis on Moon's own family problems. Specially highlighted were the cocaine tantrums of Moon's son, who seems to be the heir-apparent to Moon's religious empire.

Surprisingly, however, the Sixty Minutes program, while very good, failed to mention one of the most interesting aspects of the Moon story - the connection between Moon and former U.S. President George Bush.

For a number of years now Bush has been the featured guest speaker at conventions sponsored by Moon. (Gerald Ford has also been a guest speaker.) While the conventions have ostensibly been aimed at fostering "family values," critics of Bush have pointed out that by speaking at such events, Bush has been in a way giving his endorsement to Moon. The critics further point out that Moon "calls himself the Messiah and claims he is the second coming of Christ, with a special calling to unite all people, all nations and all religions to create a world centered on God and true love." (Los Angeles Times, 9/10/96, p. E1.) It is difficult to believe that Bush is not aware of the outrageous and blasphemous claims made by Moon, claims believed by thousands of Moon's fanatical and brainwashed followers.

But Bush has not just been speaking at Moon conventions espousing family values. Notice this excerpt from The New York Times (8/11/97):

BUENOS AIRES, Argentina - Long before the first copies of Tiempos del Mundo ever hit the newsstand last year, the flashy, Spanish-language newspaper that is linked to the Rev. Sun Myung Moon's Unification Church was making headlines of its own.

At the newspaper's gala inauguration, former President George Bush called Moon a "visionary" for creating Tiempos del Mundo, or Times of the World, an 80-page tabloid that its backers said would be distributed by satellite to almost every country in North and South America.

But critics strongly denounced Tiempos del Mundo as just another vehicle for the Unification Church to proselytize Latin America where the Korean-based sect has invested hundreds of millions of dollars in real estate, hotels, banks and other businesses....

"Tiempos del Mundo is insignificant as far as the newspaper market is concerned here in Buenos Aires," said Pepe Eliashev, one of Argentina's most respected journalists. "It's very clear to everyone that this paper is a Moony outlet, and no one here has forgotten that in the name of anti-Communism, his church supported the military dictatorships of 1980s.".... critics have expressed concern that the church's connection with big business will give the church undue influence in Latin America.

Concerned critics might point to the success of the Moon-backed Washington Times, a paper now respected and popular with many conservative Christians.

Why Bush has decided to support Moon so openly is anyone's guess. Some point out that he has already received more than one million dollars in speaking fees from Moon and that only a small portion of this amount has gone to charity as claimed. But there is another intriguing angle to this story. In their book The 60 Greatest Conspiracies of All Time, authors Jonathan Vankin and John Whalen (at p. 397) point out that the "Moonie" Unification Church is by some accounts an arm of the South Korean CIA and that the KCIA was founded-in large part by the U.S.'s CIA back in 1961. One has to wonder if George Bush, a former director of the CIA, is not through Moon in a sense getting paid back for the CIA's assistance to the KCIA over the years.

Jerusalemitis

Among Armstrongites, one of the most prevalent obsessions is with the city of Jerusalem. Because so many believe that the return of Christ will take place, if not around the year 2000, then at least in our lifetime, many are caught up in watching events in the nation of Israel. Others still believe that their ultimate physical salvation will include a flight to the Middle East, if not to Petra in Jordan, then to some other location nearby.

It may come as a surprise to some, but such obsessions are not unique to Armstrongites. Notice this excerpt from a James Brooke article that appeared in the November 22 edition of The New York Times:

DENVER - Denver did not disappear in an apocalyptic earthquake on Oct. 10, as predicted by a Christian sect leader. But now he has disappeared with about 75 followers and their children.

Leading up to Denver's date with destiny, members of the sect, Concerned Christians, sold their cars, furniture and houses. They told relatives of vague plans to travel abroad, probably to Israel, with their leader, Monte Kim Miller.

About 10 of the followers were found this week in Israel, said Brig. Gen Hezi Leder, the police attache at the Israeli Embassy in Washington, on Friday evening. The list of located Americans did not include Miller, who has prophesied that he will be killed in the streets of Jerusalem in December 1999, setting off an apocalyptic end to the millennium.

"We are very concerned about people worried about the end of the millennium coming to Israel and trying to do something," Leder said. "If there is any evidence that they intend to commit a crime, we intend to prevent them from coming into Israel."

Already about 100 American Christians, none of them related to Miller's group, have moved this year to the Mount of Olives section of Jerusalem to await the end of the millennium, said one expert on the phenomenon, Brenda Brasher, a religion professor at Mount Union College in Ohio.

Referring to the Concerned Christian group, she said, "I would be very surprised if this is the only one that takes such an act - dropping out, severing all ties and heading to Israel."

Religious people who become obsessed with Jerusalem to the point that they actually feel compelled to move there are so common that there is actually a whole mental hospital in Jerusalem that is dedicated to treating those afflicted with the syndrome. Many of the inmates imagine themselves to be the reincarnation of Elijah or some other famous Bible personage. The Jerusalem syndrome and the special hospital are discussed in Robert Stone's new book Damascus Gate.

Germany in Transition

The following is an excerpt from "Schroeder's Germany Grows Bolder, Irritating Allies" by Roger Cohen which appeared in the 12/11/98 edition of The New York Times. Those who recall HWA's prophecies of a reborn Germany will find it of interest.

BERLIN - After assuring its allies that it represents continuity, the new government of Chancellor Gerhard Schroeder is using a bold, often challenging directness that is a radical departure from other postwar German administrations.

Gone are the unquestioning solidarity with a European Union seen as at he guarantor of German stability, the reluctance to challenge NATO on basic points of doctrine and the deference to the United States that reflected both a historic debt and an enduring sense of vulnerability.

In their place Schroeder has bitterly attacked what he called Germany's unfairly high contributions to a wasteful European Union budget. Foreign Minister Joschka Fischer has suggested that NATO change its nuclear policies. And Finance Minister Oskar Lafontaine has made clear that American-style global capitalism is not to his taste.

"Strange sounds can be heard from Germany these days," the influential Munich newspaper Suddeutsche Zeitung said on its editorial page this week. "Where is Fischer's humility toward our big American ally? Where are Schroeder and Lafontaine's consideration and sensitivity toward their European partners? Where, in fact, is the feeling for history?"

The answer, perhaps, is that Germany's feeling for history has shifted with the arrival in power of a new generation that, as Schroeder has said, believes that the country should show "the self-confidence of a nation that has come of age."

ACD Has Moved

The Association for Christian Development (ACD), one of the more balanced groups to have come out of the Worldwide experience, has a new address. It is: P.O. Box 8058, Federal Way, WA 98003-0058; phone: 253-852-3269.

Obituaries

We were very saddened to learn of the January death from cancer of Robin Hulme (nee Sutcliff, Ambassador-BW 1971), wife of David Hulme, head of the Church of God (Monrovia).

We were saddened to learn of the passing of Dr. Louis J. West in early January, from cancer. He was 74. A member of the faculty of UCLA, Dr. Louis Jolyon "Jolly" West was an internationally known psychiatrist, civil rights activist, and expert on drug abuse. He was also one of the world's leading authorities on cults and the psychological dynamics of cult programming. Among the many awards he received in his lifetime was the Leo J. Ryan Award from the National Cult Awareness Network.

Letters

This year [1998] for the first time in the WCG Christmas services will be held in the Ambassador Auditorium in Pasadena, and no doubt in other congregations. In the December '98 Worldwide News Joe Tkach Jr. discusses guidelines concerning Christmas observance ("A Call to Unity," p. 9). He states that "Every pastor must provide meaningful worship opportunities during the Advent season for members who desire to celebrate the Incarnation of the Son of God." Is there to be reciprocity in requiring that pastors also provide meaningful worship opportunities for those desiring to observe the feast days? A directive from Joe Tkach Jr. in the September 1998 Worldwide News (p. 7) indicates that pastors are to "support and encourage those who wish to meet on any of those days (biblical and extra biblical), and will lead in such a way that Christ is honored, preached and taught." The box at the bottom of the above cited article also indicates that this is WCG policy: "Our goal with festivals as a denomination is to provide spiritual leadership while allowing members to observe festivals from two traditions.... However, these statements do not necessarily mandate meaningful worship opportunities in the sense that meat in due season is provided to feastgoers. For several years now appropriate feast days messages have not been provided in some locations notably at WCG headquarters in Pasadena. Other than Pentecost, worship services in these locations on feast days and festival seasons has been very general with little or no recognition of the biblical or traditional meanings of these days! The fact that Christ is to be honored, preached and taught is as it should be, but this should be a part of every message. Inasmuch as these general non-feast-specific messages are routinely preached at WCG headquarters, it is evident that it is official WCG policy that the significance of the biblical feast days be omitted or at least severely minimized.

Dale Ratzlaff, former SDA pastor (4th generation SDA married to a 4th generation SDA) has a book titled Sabbath in Crisis. Many of you may be familiar with it. On pages 307-308 he states that after first leaving the SDA church and studying the sabbath in relation to the covenants, he, too, believed Sabbatarians and non-Sabbatarians could co-exist, but quickly realized... this can not be. I quote from his book (he is speaking directly to SDAs here):

Many years ago when I conducted a seven-month study of the Sabbath I felt no compulsion to persuade any of you to change your beliefs concerning the Sabbath. Nor did I feel that way when I started to write this book. However, as I have studied this subject in greater depth, especially in light of the covenants, and have, in the intervening years, received hundreds of phone calls and letters from current and former Sabbath keepers, I now feel I must share with you my deep concern. Prayerfully consider the following....

He goes on to quote many New Testament verses which show, for example, Paul's frustration with the Galatians who were seemingly trying to put themselves back under the Law rather than Grace.

In theory I suppose that if a person, fellowship, or denomination could observe the 7th-day Sabbath in a nonlegalistic way (not feeling superior to all other Christians, not making it a salvation issue, etc.) then the Sabbath might bless that person and help them grow in their relationship with the Lord. IN PRACTICE, however, you will be hard pressed to find an example of this actually happening. Instead all the Sabbatarian groups always seem to revert back to legalism and teaching they alone are true Christians, etc. The Lord has not blessed 7th-day Sabbath observance in any tangible way since the cross. In Christ,

-Bill. Thompson (former SDA)

I attended the Feast of Tabernacles at WCG headquarters in Pasadena, California this year. The location was secondary to the principal feast site for the area at Palm Springs, and all observances except for the Eighth Day were on a weekend, making it more suitable for those unable to take the entire time off from work. The correct time period was observed, with a service on the eve of the First Day on Sunday night, Oct. 4. All services were held in the larger of the two lecture halls in the Science Building. More than 400 feastgoers quickly filled the hall with the overflow hearing the messages in the smaller lecture hall (S112). I don't know how many in WCG attended part-time festivals like this one, but Ronald Kelley reported that the total attendance for the eight-day festival sites was over 10,000.

Gone were most trappings suggestive of the Feast of Tabernacles. No large banner welcoming feastgoers, and the booth of palm fronds that once was erected in the walkway west of the Auditorium was absent. The Feast was barely suggested by the brochure that was distributed. "Come Celebrate Christ!" appeared in big letters on the cover with "Festival 98" in smaller letters below. I did not attend all the services, but there was little I could disagree with in the sermons I did hear. In fact they were quite good even though they were very general with no mention of the Feast of Tabernacles nor its symbolism. The four speakers and their topics were: "Come Celebrate Christ" by Bermie Dizon; "True Celebration" by Dee Bulante; "Jesus the Lamb of God" by a guest speaker from the Jews for Jesus Ministry, Rob Wertheim; and "Let the Living Waters Flow" by Michael Morrison. Lively renditions of gospel music were presented at each service by a choir in spite of very limited space in the lecture hall. Concurrent Spanish language services were held in the Recital Hall. "Love" offerings were taken up on the Holy Days although there was no appeal from the Old Testament concerning not coming before the Lord empty during the three festival seasons.

On October 4, there was but one reference made to the feast, and that was after services were over. It was a sad climax to this first day of the Feast of Tabernacles. After the "amen" following the closing prayer the speaker furtively uttered under his breath, "Have a good Feast." From the back row I yelled back at him, "You have a good Feast too!"

On sabbath afternoon on October 10, five workshops plus a festival video message by Joseph Tkach were scheduled in two different time slots. As far as I was concerned these were the high point of the Feast. The video message, though having little if any content pertaining directly to the Feast, was actually very good. Mr. Tkach surveyed some of the different worship styles used by various congregations in the WCG today. Worship styles can differ, but unity is based on the fact that we worship the one Creator, and that same Creator resides in each one of us through the Spirit of God. Reflecting on the old days when there was a stifling uniformity of sometimes boring worship in Worldwide I noted that we should take some lessons on praise and worship from some of those congregations, especially those from third world nations! In the second time slot I attended a workshop by Michael Morrison called "Shadow of Christ in the Festivals." A brief review by Mr. Morrison on his research on the meanings of the feast days was followed by a lively discussion of the feast days by the participants. Possible solutions concerning some perplexing aspects of the meanings of the feast days for Christians today emerged from the discussion. This workshop was the only event of which I am aware at the Feast in Pasadena which could be called "meat in due season."

Other workshops presented included: "Spiritual Restoration" by Larry Omasta; "Communication, Key to Your Marriage" by Dexter and Shirley Faulkner; and "Diversity: The Beauty of God's Creation" by Leigh Sniffen.

I talked with a number of Feast participants. Many of the "old timers" I knew in the 60s and 70s had reservations about the new direction of the WCG, though most agreed with the correction of some past abuses. Some were very dissatisfied, while a few were reluctant to express how they felt about the church. On the other hand some old timers were very pleased with the church's new direction. I chatted with one couple I had known as Ambassador students in the 60s. I left them with the perhaps overused wish "Have a good Feast!" The lady answered very coldly, "Thank you." I was reminded of the dozens of times I had answered in the same manner someone wishing me a "merry Christmas"! I reflected that I should have at least replied to those well-intentioned folks in a friendlier way.

For 20 years I had seen the need for many of the changes we now see in the WCG. To no avail I tried to point out some of these shortcomings. But amidst the changes for the good it is distressing that many things of value are being discarded. From the ignoring of the feast days to the active promotion of the "traditional" Christian days, it looks like the values we saw in feast day observance are among those things being relegated by the WCG to the trash heap.

To me the festivals mark important milestones in how God has dealt with his people and illustrate the elegance and majesty of how God will carry out His plan in the future. I grieve that the knowledge of these days which point to the redemptive role of Jesus Christ may be lost to many. In spite of this major deficiency in the current mode of observance of the Feast of Tabernacles by the WCG, there was much that was good: the praise and worship of our Lord Jesus Christ in word and song, the prayer service, the fellowship, the catered meal, the potluck, the picnic, the family night, and at times the experience of unity in Christ!

I recently went to the Feast of Tabernacles in Llandudno, Wales. I visited both the Hulmite faction of the UCG(UK) and the Jewellite faction of the UCG(UK). The latter is led by minister John Jewell and is still affiliated with the UCGIA. The two UCG(UK) groups met within four miles of each other. Up to a few months ago they had been "all brethren together." Now, because of the ministers' egos, 420 "brethren" of the Hulmite faction are no longer speaking to 120 "brethren" of the Jewellite faction except for one or two isolated cases. And this even includes members of families who have split to different factions. So the same old human carnal process continues.

It is very hard to get to the mentality of the people bound in these captive organizations. They really think they are "free," and that you are on the "outside," and probably spiritually "inferior." It is very sad. No doubt, these factions will split further, as I don't believe God is much interested in these organizations anymore and is probably working more through individuals scattered hither and thither. Meanwhile, the people in the groups go on paying and occasionally praying. It's the jam for the ministers: Nice work if you can get it. But the pie is shrinking and shrinking and shrinking.

The August issue of The Journal quotes Rod Meredith as stating that the GCG Council and Board members can remove him only by a 90% or more vote should he be found to have committed gross immorality or advocated heresy.

Rod added: "Not one slip, but continuing in gross immorality. You know, commit adultery a number of times or get drunk over and over or rob banks...." Millions of American men never commit adultery once, never get drunk once, and never robbed one dollar from anyone. It is a shame that a person who has so little confidence in his ability to not do any of those acts once, still thinks he has been commissioned to administer "God's government."

Editor: There are still those who ridicule the notion of "global warming. " But the evidence keeps piling up that it is real. The New York Times (12/10/98) reported how the gradual heating up of the earth has been going on since at least 1949. This has led not just to warmer winters and summers, but to many climactic changes, some of them severe (more hurricanes and tornados, for example). You are not just imagining the changing weather conditions.

Our daughter and family now belong to the United Church of God.... I, myself, am Catholic and I get a chuckle whenever there is a mention of our faith in your newsletter by you or anyone else. I am not offended in any way. Our faith has been around for a long time and can withstand any comments made about it. Especially after all the errors we have made ourselves. What I cannot understand is someone believing in a religion begun in the 1930s. I still remember HWA writing about God coming to him in a dream (with fireworks no less) and telling him he was chosen. Give me a break!

I found the comments of newspaper columnist Eric Margolis very eye-opening. Armstrongites just love to think of our country as "modern Israel" when, in fact, we are modern Rome. Margolis made that very clear. But, I hope you noticed his foolish self-righteousness in holding up Roman consul Regulus as an example to be followed. What I got out of his preachy lesson was this: Regulus was a self-righteous fool who got himself tortured to death. Clinton, on the other hand, may be flawed, but he is no fool and, as a result, he lives - physically and politically, at least for now. I wonder if you and columnist Margolis noticed that fact.

This is why Ambassador College did not work. Students were the called and chosen of HWA, not God. Ambassador was a work for God, but it was not a work of God. We set out to show God what we could do for Him. And he "scattered" us (Isa. 42:24, Psa. 68:1).

It is interesting that while HWA shunned 20th century conspiracy theories, he actually promoted the idea of a first century conspiracy - that of Simon Magus!

I can't wait to read your analysis of the false prophets of the Church of God in your next issues. I know you won't spare them because they deserve no mercy.

I expect no mercy, either. I am the source of the "Gorbachev is the Beast" belief. Since my belief was directly referred to in the last letter of the last Ambassador Report, I believe I have a right to present it for your readers in its authentic form. It will be very entertaining for your readers and it will give both you and me an opportunity to shame plagiarists - those who lifted my research without giving credit to me.

Evidently, there are wolves in the Church who, not having a close relationship with God and not having the gift of prophecy, have stolen my material to make a name for themselves and make money on sales of the material. Please let me be vindicated.

In the articles I published in 1991 regarding Gorbachev and the events of the end-time, I claimed to be doing the work of the Two Witnesses. It's shameful that some in the Church of God believe everything in my articles except the part about the Two Witnesses. They want the information but not the prophets. No one contacted me. I guess they figured what they had was sufficient for their shameful purposes.

Fortunately, I saved plenty of copies of the papers my articles appeared in. No one can produce an authentic publication with the Gorbachev belief that predates my original articles. My claim is very important because to a great extent the messenger is the message. If people acknowledge my identity as a Witness, they will trust further prophecies that require important decisions in their lives.

Not only did I write the articles concerning prophecies of Gorbachev, I prophesied in church concerning short-term events about political figures - and people were astonished that unlikely prophecies came to pass. When Clinton was an unknown contender in the Democratic primary, I stated in full confidence that he would be the next President. The congregation was stunned when my prophecy came to pass. The minister insisted I only "predicted" successfully. He suffers from the same affliction as those who are not looking for the Two Witnesses or Jesus Christ....

People have been deeply offended by my unerring prophecies.... I don't claim to have been spoken to by God or angels. However, I can understand what the prophets have written. They prophesy through my body....

In light of the ongoing crisis in the Global Church, I believe it would be very helpful to read the October, 1984 issue of Ambassador Report \(AR29\) which covers Leona McNair's successful lawsuit against Roderick Meredith and Raymond McNair for libel.... I have never heard a rebuttal by Rod Meredith or Raymond McNair of the shocking evidence presented in the AR article. It has continually amazed me that sometimes, the only source of complete information on activities of the Church comes from those who oppose the doctrinal teachings of the Church. John Trechak and I are on opposite poles on many Bible teachings. However, I respect his integrity and his desire to report the whole Truth, even if it hurts. In the Church today, I am looking most of all, not just for a minister preaching the Truth, but for one telling the Truth.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

---

Tkach Plans Retirement Fund

With the two major properties of the Worldwide Church of God (WCG) on their way to being transferred to other corporations, many WCG members have wondered what will become of the monies the WCG acquires from the sale of its Big Sandy, Texas and Pasadena, California properties. In his March 1999 letter to the church, Pastor General Joseph Tkach, Jr. shed some light on the matter:

Because our church has reached a point at which large properties are no longer necessary for our mission, we are very thankful that God has blessed us with potential buyers for the Big Sandy and Pasadena campuses. As you can imagine, however, the sales of these properties involves a complex process, one that takes a good deal of time. We are praying for a successful close of escrow on the Big Sandy property in the next several weeks. However, no transaction of this nature is assured until the day that it is actually final and complete.

The process of selling the Pasadena property is not nearly so far advanced. However, God has blessed us with potential buyer, and we are in negotiations for a purchase and sale agreement. When that agreement is signed, hopefully in the next several weeks, escrow (of probably 12 to 18 months duration) will open. The potential buyer, Legacy Partners, has already begun the detailed technical study, and both we and they are optimistic about the progress of the sale process. Still, the process is complex and time-consuming, and such transactions often hit unexpected snags. Our collective prayers are definitely a vital part of a successful sale.

These assets in Pasadena and Big Sandy have been accumulating over the decades into something that can now help our church move into the future in a responsible way. While only about 6 percent of church income through the years has been spent on property (some 89 percent was spent on media proclamation, congregational and member expenses and the colleges, and the other 5 percent on the Foundation), the total value of the property assets today is significant.

Along with the growing asset we have also had growing obligations through the years to our faithful church employees and ministers who have given their lives in full-time service and are now elderly or disabled. No provision, other than a discretionary assistance taken directly from cash flow, was ever made by past administrations for these faithful employees' declining years. It is now our responsibility to move this moral obligation out of daily cash flow while continuing to meet it, so that it will no longer have to come directly out of donations, and so that it will no longer be so uncertain for these faithful servants.

We will meet that responsibility with the proceeds from the sales. [emphasis added - ed.] But that is not all. We will use the assets God provides to ensure and strengthen the integrity of our future as a denomination....

Underground Church Talks Class Action

While Tkach hopes that the sale of the Pasadena properties will go through without a hitch (but "such transactions often hit unexpected snags"), not all former WCG members wish him success with his plans. A group called the "Underground Church of God" has widely distributed an e-mail announcement indicating that they intend to block the property transfer. Here is what they wrote:

Greetings to the Scattered Brethren of God:

Many of you are aware of the recent announced sale of the Ambassador College campus and facilities located in Pasadena, California to a real estate development firm for a sale price quoted to be in excess of 100 million dollars.

These facilities were purchased with monies donated and sacrificed by several thousands of hard working individuals like yourselves for the expressed and announced purpose of a college campus, auditorium and grounds dedicated to the "Great God." To use these facilities for any other purpose is tantamount to fraud and misuse of the funds reverently donated and given for this purpose. As is quoted in Malachi: "Will a man rob God? Yet, ye have robbed me. But ye say, wherein have we robbed thee? In tithes and offerings."

In response to these events, several have been working privately behind the scenes to either block, or at least delay, this unethical and evil transfer of assets to the indiscriminate use of a select few such as Tkach and his cohorts. These individuals were never involved in the solicitation nor dedicated named use of the offerings of the people of God for the Pasadena facilities. A growing group of brethren known privately as the "Underground Church of God" is composed of non-ordained brethren of nearly every current known Church of God group including Worldwide, United, Global, Philadelphia, Living, Hulme, Great God and other corporate groups, as well as many from the independent and Living Room groups.

A leading Los Angeles area law firm has been hired on retainer, and will soon announce a "Lis Pendens" - a legal maneuver to temporarily block the impending sale by proclaiming a "cloud" on the title of the properties pending future legal outcome. In addition, a class action lawsuit will be initiated against the organization proclaiming that the Worldwide Church of God solicited these funds for the named dedicated use for brethren of the Church of God and not for private commercial real estate development or the private financial benefit of a few corporate officers such as Tkach. All brethren who have donated to the Worldwide Church of God in the past will be invited to be participants of the soon coming class action lawsuit seeking remedy and financial restitution.

In addition a "sit in" similar to that which occurred in January 1979 is being organized. Possibly to coordinate in the year 2000 with the same anniversary as the original "sit in." Brethren by the thousands will attend Pasadena Church services occupying the auditorium and other facilities and continuing in unbroken 24 hour "Religious Services" exempt from criminal trespass laws and legal authority. Several "Underground Church of God" associates have expressed their desire to handcuff themselves to the church facilities and to be removed only by force of law.

In addition to this proposed Pasadena "sit in" all brethren in the Churches of God across the world will be asked to organize and participate by attending peaceably and in mass, as a sign of support, at their local Worldwide Church of God services. This massive flood of attendance of current and past dislocated former members attending their local Worldwide Church of God services in a onetime silent and peaceful gesture will surely send a message to Pasadena and possibly create legal doubt and the withdrawal of any purchase offers for the campus.

Several local and national news services have been contacted and have assured us of giving full media exposure to these events as they unfold, allowing once again for the excesses and abuses of the financial structure of the Worldwide Church of God to be well known.

You can help currently by forwarding this e-mail to as many as possible on your current Church of God mailing list, and asking them to do the same. In addition, post this e-mail on any Church of God Internet forums and Web sites that you are aware of. This will insure that the leadership of Pasadena will be well aware that the brethren of God are not going to take this fraudulent and thieving action from them without a resistance.

While the Underground Church letter has had wide distribution, it is at this time not exactly clear who the author of the letter really is. Some have even thought the letter might be a hoax. Time will tell whether such ambitious resistance plans by the "Underground Church" will be able to accomplish anything or if time will prove this "resistance" to be just so much hot air.

AU to Be Pacem in Terris University

As we reported in AR70, ownership of Ambassador University at Big Sandy, Texas is about to be transferred to LaRoche College, a Catholic institution based in Pittsburgh and run by the Sisters of Divine Providence. Since then, LaRoche has indicated that it intends to rename Ambassador "Pacem in Terris University." "Pacem in Terris" is Latin for "peace on earth," the title of an encyclical issued by Pope John XXIII in 1963, the year that La Roche College was founded.

While neither the WCG nor LaRoche officials have yet indicated publicly how much the sale price was for the huge Big Sandy campus, sources in the real estate field in Texas have stated that the campus sold for approximately $30 million. If that is indeed the case, LaRoche got an extraordinarily good deal.

Worldwide Minister Assists Pope

The pastor of the WCG's St. Louis congregation recently assisted with Pope John Paul II's visit to that city. According to Bill Stough writing in the January 31 issue of The Journal, Pastor James Lee is a member of The Interfaith Fellowship Partnership of Greater St. Louis which assisted the Catholic Church in the pope's visit to that city in late January. According to the Journal article:

Announcements at WCG church services in St. Louis July 16 gave information on which organizations to contact if WCG members would like to volunteer in the many ways needed to make the pope feel welcome and assist in events the pope would be involved in.

Mr. Lee said before the event that he would like to meet the pope.

"That would be a great honor, but I don't expect to be able to. He is a man of strong character, high principles, and one who has accomplished so much in his life. He has worked to build unity among all Christians and all people of whatever religion they might be. I am very impressed with the wonderful things the pope has done."

Obviously, the WCG's position toward the Roman Catholic Church has changed markedly from the days of HWA when the Roman Church was called the "Great Whore" of Revelation.

Meredith's Living Church

As we reported in our last issue, evangelist Roderick C. Meredith has broken from the Global Church of God. He has now formed a new organization called the Living Church of God (LCG). Meredith was able to draw away approximately 75 percent of the ministry of Global. Among the prominent GCG ministers to go with Meredith's offshoot are Dr. Lynn Torrance, Jonathan McNair, Richard Ames, Dave Hall, David Crockett, and John Ogwyn. The address of the new offshoot is Living Church of God, P.O. Box 501304, San Diego, CA 92150. Ironically, the new Living Church headquarters is housed in the same San Diego building as its parent church, the Global Church of God, which still has the mailing address P.O. Box 501111, San Diego, CA 92150.

Bryce Clark's COG

As we reported in our last issue, minister Bryce Clark has broken from the Church of God the Eternal, which itself was an early breakaway from the WCG. He has now formed a new organization called the Bethel Church of God. Essentially, Clark left CGE because he saw it as straying from the purity of truth that the CGE supposedly began with when it split from the WCG in 1975. He also saw evangelist Raymond Cole as autocratic. But according to one CGE reader:

I understand Mr. Clark had asked to make Mother's Day, Father's Day, and Thanksgiving Day part of church doctrine. Since these are national holidays and not God's Holy Days, there was no agreement. It is up to each individual as to whether they choose to celebrate these days or not. But not as church doctrine. As to what Mr. Cole's teachings are: He is holding to all that was revealed to HWA at the first. The later changes on D&R, Pentecost, and many other minor changes came as a result of doctrinal committees, scholars, and other ministerial judgements. These changes were not revealed to Mr. HWA at the first. Only revealed revelations are accepted by Mr. Cole.

Whether or not doctrinal matters were really at the heart of the split is hard to say. A few months ago, someone in the northwest anonymously mailed us photocopies of what were claimed to be love letters from Raymond Cole to a former secretary. Of course, without being able to interview the claimed recipient, we have no way of knowing their authenticity. But it is interesting that some are on a campaign to discredit Cole.

The address for Clark's new organization is: Bethel Church of God, P.O. Box 25345, Eugene, OR 97402. The Church of God the Eternal remains at P.O. Box 775, Eugene, OR 97440; www.cogte.org.

Clinton in Prophecy?

Among Armstrongites steeped in apocalyptic theories and believing we live in the "end times," it has long been a favorite pastime to prognosticate who in the modern world will turn out to be the Beast of Revelation. In the past Hitler, Tito, and Franz Joseph Strauss were popular targets. Now, along comes William Dankenbring of Triumph Prophetic Ministries and says it might turn out to be President Bill Clinton. In the January/February issue of Dankenbring's Prophecy Flash! magazine the main lead articles focused on "The Devil and William J. Clinton." In his lead article, "Clinton's Family Tree," Dankenbring wrote:

Amazing but true, recent research provides the most astounding evidence of a direct genealogical link between one of history's most wicked and sadistic monsters - Emperor Nero of Rome - and President William Jefferson Clinton. Read here of the most astonishing pedigree, and the "Nero Connection" to America's beleaguered President, impeached in the House and tried in the Senate for "high crimes and misdemeanors."

Dankenbring then went on to quote J. R. Church of Prophecy in the News magazine who wrote:

Bill Clinton was born William Jefferson Blythe, but took his stepfather's name as a teenager. Clinton's ancestry can be traced back, on his mother's side, to King Henry III who ruled England from 1227 to 1272. He is descended from King Robert I of France.

Furthermore, he is related to every Scottish monarch to the current British royal family. Clinton's royal roots include several medieval monarchs and Simon de Montford, a statesman and soldier under King Henry III. Through de Montford, Clinton is related to every ancient aristocratic family in Britain today....

Bill Clinton's family goes back to William Henry Harrison and Benjamin Harrison, making him related to Gerald Ford and Jimmy Carter. His kinship to Ford makes him "near kin" to Richard Nixon and George Bush. Small world isn't it?

Dankenbring then goes on to quote Church who claims to know a boyhood friend of Clinton who is also supposedly a member of the Rothschild banking family. This unnamed source makes the astonishing claim that in his youth, Clinton at times wore a Jewish skullcap and that Clinton attended Rothschild family functions because he supposedly is a Rothschild descendant. But that is not all. Supposedly, according to Church, the Rothschilds are descended from Emperor Nero! As Dankenbring exclaims, "From the villainous Nero to Clinton - what a legacy!"

To put the final nails in Clinton's coffin, Dankenbring points out how using Aramaic numerology the name Nero Caesar has a total numerical value of 666. Dankenbring then goes on to apply Hebrew gematria and concludes that the name William Jefferson Clinton has a total numerical value of 666. Not only that, writes Dankenbring, so does the name Hillary Rodham!

In a second article, "A New Look at the Devil and Bill Clinton," Dankenbring writes:

History reveals Emperor Nero of Rome to have been a slick, seductive, emotional, popular, much loved Emperor - but a man who craved power, and became one of the greatest tyrants and blood-thirsty demagogues in all human history. What will the record of history have to say about William Jefferson Clinton, America's 42nd President?

Dankenbring then goes on to paint Clinton as a demagogue similar to Nero. The article's subheadings tell the story: "Bimbo Eruptions," "Drugs, Suicides and Murder," "Fundraising Scandals and Treason," "The Clinton Body Count," "Scandals Galore and Prophecy," "Clinton: First Sociopath in the Oval Office?", "Foretold in Biblical Prophecy?", and "The Beast of Revelation."

Dankenbring then concludes with a prophetic interpretation that is increasingly gaining supporters in religious circles both abroad and in the United States, itself:

At this point in history, the United States with its allies IS the end-time "Roman Empire." Our government is patterned after that of ancient Rome. Our constitution is based on many Roman principles. We have a Senate like the ancient Roman Senate. We now speak of "Pax Americana," of the "American Peace," and the "American Age."

Speaking of the "End-Time Babylon," the book of Revelation points out that it will be both a mighty military power and a world commercial empire (Rev. 13 and Rev. 18). The whole world, for a time, will "worship" this end-time amalgam of nations and western powers - who control world trade and who patrol the world's "hot spots." At the head of this amalgam of nations today is the United States of America!

America is the world's last and only remaining "Superpower"!

As the head of this end-time "Babylonian" empire, the United States President could be looked upon as the "king" of Babylon. And, as the end-time "Tyre," the modern counterpart of the ancient world's leading trading commercial metropolis, and nation-state, America be could considered the end-time fulfillment of the "prince Tyre."...

This prophesied end-time world leader [of Ezek. 28:2-5] will sit at the helm of nations - and manage the "New World Order." He is described as "wiser than Daniel." Who can but marvel at the amazing political dexterity cunning and of William "Slick" Clinton, in his ability to conjure up political "witchcraft" to remove himself from political danger? It has been reported that he has an I.Q. of 165 - well into the "genius" level - and he is certainly a "genius" when it comes to politics!

Will Bill Clinton turn out to be the prophesied "Beast" or "Antichrist"? Time will tell! We will know very soon now!

The Secret Church of Conspiracy

Part III

by John Trechak

In Part II of this series, I covered the Jewish conspiracy theory, but neglected to mention one important point. Just as we might say "the Catholics" or "the French" and thus lump all members of those groups into one homogeneous whole, we often say "the Jews" without giving much thought to what we are talking about. The fact is, just as the Catholics are divided on many issues, and as are the French, the Jews are similarly not a monolithic, homogenous group in many ways. There are Reformed Jews, Conservative Jews, Orthodox Jews (ultra conservative), secular Jews (those that are non-religious, even atheist), and now, Messianic Jews (those that believe Jesus of Nazareth was/is the Messiah). There is even debate among Jews as to who is really a Jew. Some groups emphasize race, others ethnicity, and others religious purity. And all these groups have significant differences of opinion on many philosophical and doctrinal points.

For example, recently, some of the differences between the Orthodox branch (which predominates in Israel) and the Reformed branch (which predominates in the United States) have flared up in Israel to where demonstrations between the two groups have been quite vociferous, almost violent. In a New York Times article last year, one Israeli authority was quoted as saying that the differences between the various factions in Israel was now so great, he would not be surprised to see open violence flare up between the factions at some point in the near future. Indeed, in Prime Minister Rabin's assassination we may have already seen the precursor of such hostilities. So when we talk about "the Jews," let us keep in mind that they are not the homogeneous, united kind of entity that some suppose.

Masons and the WCG

This will be a short section, as there really is virtually no substantial connection between Freemasonry and the WCG. A few years ago there circulated in church circles anonymous letters claiming that all the ministers in the WCG were actually secretly Freemasons. We have investigated this for some time and have found absolutely no evidence that this is the case. We know of only one former WCG executive who is currently a Mason - Marion J. McNair, author of the 1977 exposé book Armstrongism: Religion or Rip-off? McNair is a 32nd degree Mason and proud of it. And in conversations with the Report he denied that the fraternity was in any way behind the WCG and he had nothing but good to say about Masonry.

We asked long-ago WCG minister Paul Royer, now head of the Church of God, Sonoma (4343 Wallace Road, Santa Rosa, CA 95404), if he knew of any connection between Masonry and the founders of Armstrongism and this is what he wrote us:

I heard the matter discussed briefly in the WCG on an occasion or two by Jack Elliot [a WCG executive many years ago] who as I remember was once a Mason [before joining Worldwide]. As I recall Garner Ted and HWA were around when Jack made the comments, all unfavorable. I personally did not see any evidence of Freemasonry in the church.

Perhaps one reason some WCG members have wondered about a WCG secret connection to Freemasonry is because the WCG, for many years not wanting to buy church buildings and refusing to rent space from other church denominations, found itself renting space from Masonic temples for use for services. And with more than 2.5 million Masons in the United States alone (according to World Book Encyclopedia), there are many Masonic halls available for rental. One reader wrote us:

Right from the start, HWA's very first office in Eugene was on the second floor of an old Masonic building [we have not verified this - ed.]. And through the years many of the churches rented Masonic halls for their activities.

This latter statement is true, but it is also true that in many communities where there were Masonic halls available, local pastors rented other facilities. Price and other factors seem to have been the main considerations. But some will prefer to believe otherwise. One funny church story in this regard relates to the old Reseda, California WCG congregation. It used to meet in the Masonic lodge in that city and the lodge's number just happened to be 666. You can imagine the rumors that that fact inspired!

Those looking for a seamier side to Masonry can find it easily in numerous books on the market that purport to expose Masonry. Among the popular exposés are: The Brotherhood: The Explosive Exposé of the Secret World of the Freemasons by Stephen Knight (1985), Inside the Brotherhood: Explosive Secrets of the Freemasons by Martin Short (1989), The Temple and the Lodge by Michael Baigent and Richard Leigh (1989), and in the Freemason literature published by Religion Analysis Service, P.O. Box 22098, Robbinsdale, MN 55422-0098. Another valuable, and perhaps more balanced, source of esoteric information on Freemasonry is the No. 44 issue of Gnosis magazine (P.O. Box 14217, San Francisco, CA 94114-0217).

It is interesting that someone critical of the symbolic basis of Masonic ritual is Wellesley College Professor Mary Lefkowitz, a respected classics scholar. According to the Los Angeles Times (7/3/96, p. E4):

No myth is more widespread, says Lefkowitz, than the mystical picture of ancient Egypt incorporated in the lore of Freemasonry.... The symbolism and numerology of Freemasonry tends to be looked on as gospel by the strongest adherents of Afrocentrism. But it has little or no foundation, Lefkowitz says, in the vast literature that Egyptologists have uncovered since they began reading hieroglyphics in the last century.

The real source of the Masonic portrait of Egypt, she says, is a three-volume French novel, Sethos, published in 1713 by the Abbe Jean Terrasson, who thought hieroglyphics were mystic symbols. Terrasson's novel was widely read during the 18th century, and was so influential that it became the source for the libretto of Mozart's opera, The Magic Flute.

While there are many critics of Masonry with their ideas in print, those wanting to read Masonic defenses to the charges against them will find an excellent source at the pro-Masonry site: www.freemasonry.bcy.ca/anti-masonry/anti-masonry\_faq.html, the site of the Grand Lodge of British Columbia.

Again, whatever one thinks of Masonry, we have found no evidence that the ministry of the WCG or any of its offshoots have Masons in their ranks.

WCG and Jesuits

Just as goofy as the theory that the Masons somehow control the WCG and/or its offshoots is the theory that somehow Jesuits have infiltrated the WCG and/or some of its offshoots. This theory has had two major sources.

One source has been claims made by Dr. Alberto Rivera, a mysterious individual who claimed to have once been a Jesuit before finding Christ. (Rivera died in 1997 after supposedly being poisoned by Jesuits, according to his widow's Web site http://members.tripod.com/~zine\_damascus/reflections/alberto). Rivera's adventures have been depicted in comic books published by Jack T. Chick, who for over 25 years has been a major figure in anti-Catholicism in the United States. His small comic book tracts are simultaneously the funniest and the scariest anti-Catholic literature to be found today. And they have been popular with many Worldwidars. Besides selling his comic book tracts, in recent years Chick has expanded his outreach onto the Internet. He is at P.O. Box 3500, Ontario, CA 91761-1100; www.chick.com. (Anti-Chick sites can be found at www.revolting.com/1.2/chick/chick.html and www.his.com/~panda/paulb/chick.html.)

Rivera's allegations are an important part of Chick's anti-Catholic crusade. Rivera makes the claim that the Roman Catholic Church is actively attempting to thwart mainstream Protestant and Evangelical churches by sending in undercover Jesuit agents to sow discord in such churches. The theory is that Jesuit intellectuals infiltrate into the high echelons of such churches, pretending to be true believers, but then introduce heretical teachings to bring about the destruction of the Protestant churches.

In the 1970s Rivera was contacted by a number of members of the WCG who had been reading Chick publications. They asked him if WCG attorney Stanley Rader was such a Jesuit agent. Rivera's reply was that Rader was such an agent. How did he know? Rivera never revealed his sources of information. Apparently, the fact that Rader had advanced degrees was adequate proof to Rivera that Rader was a Jesuit agent.

But how reliable was Rivera? Numerous Christian anti-cult organizations, still anxious to find Rivera truthful, have had to concede that they have been unable to verify many of his central claims. Indeed, there is some doubt that he, himself, was ever really a Jesuit, as he claimed. Watchman Fellowship, the evangelical cult-fighting organization, has specifically warned us not to place trust in Rivera's pronouncements. Another group, an anti-Catholic one, Opus Dei Awareness Network (ODAN), specifically warns against quoting Rivera, as he has repeatedly proven so unreliable as to be self-defeating to ODAN's anti-Catholic mission.

Incidentally, both Opus Dei and ODAN are interesting groups worth being aware of. The Catholic Opus Dei is at 99 Overlook Circle, New Rochelle, NY, 10804; www.opusdei.org. And the Opus Dei Awareness Network, Inc. (ODAN) is at P.O. Box 4333, Pittsfield, MA 01202-4333; www.odan.org.

The second source of rumor that the Armstrongites have been infiltrated by Jesuits is a Seventh Day Adventist-related group that distributes a set of video tapes titled Catholic Charismatic Attack on God's SDA Church. It is put out by its producer Pastor Jan Marcussen, P.O. Box 68, Thompsonville, IL 62890. (It has also been distributed by the WCG spinoff group The Cincinnati Brethren, P.O. Box 75021, Ft. Thomas, KY 41075.) In the series Marcussen adopts Alberto Rivera's premise that the Catholic Church has been sending Jesuit agents into Protestant churches to cause chaos. If that is not enough, Marcussen goes on to make the startling claims that Jesuits are behind all pharmaceutical companies, that communism was a Jesuit-hatched plot, that Hitler was a Jesuit, and that even rock and roll was developed by Jesuits. But where the tape steps on the toes of Armstrongites is in naming Dr. Samuele Bacchiocchi as a Jesuit infiltrator. Bacchiocchi, in recent years, has been a popular author (From Sabbath to Sunday) and lecturer in Armstrongite circles. Bacchiocchi, a Seventh Day Adventist minister, promotes the seventh-day sabbath, yet because he did some of his education at a Catholic institution in Rome, they are convinced Bacchiocchi is a Jesuit infiltrator. We wrote Dr. Sam about the allegation and his thoughtful reply was:

The "Jesuit Conspiracy" mentality has plagued our SDA church for many years. The truth of the matter is that the Catholic Church has so many problems of its own that it has no time to cause problems in other churches. Please note that less than three percent of Catholics go to church in Italy. They have plenty of work to do to salvage their own church.

Not only is Bacchiocchi a very pro-Sabbath preacher, he is also an astute critical observer of the Vatican. Notice an 8/28/98 comment he made to his Special Sabbath Updates readers:

[My lecture will discuss] Pope John Paul II's Pastoral Letter Dies Domini where he makes a passionate plea for revival of Sunday observance, by urging, among other things, the passing of Sunday Rest legislation to facilitate Sunday worship. This historical document is significant for two major reasons. First, Pope John Paul II grounds Sunday observance in the Sabbath commandment itself, by making Sunday keeping the continuation and embodiment of the theology and practice of the Sabbath. This explanation runs contrary to Catholic tradition that has viewed Sunday observance as an ecclesiastical institution independent of the Sabbath commandment. Second, the Pope appeals to the "providential" origin of the Sunday rest legislation at the time of Constantine, and to its survival through the centuries, to urge Christians "to ensure that civil legislation respects their duty to keep Sunday holy. The November issues of Liberty Ministry and Signs of the Times... carry my analysis of the Pope's Pastoral Letter.

As illogical as it is to see Dr. Bacchiocchi as a Jesuit infiltrator, many, nevertheless, have. A few years ago, an invitation by the Global Church of God for Bacchiocchi to speak led to scores of GCG members leaving the organization in the belief that it had been taken over by Jesuit infiltrators. Some even accused evangelist Roderick Meredith of being a Jesuit. And since then we have heard of many other Armstrongites who have left their denominations because their pastors have looked favorably on Bacchiocchi's work. Is there any evidence that Bacchiocchi is a Jesuit? Of course not. The fact that he so strongly promotes the seventh-day sabbath should be proof enough that such theories are nonsense. Yet, some continue to prefer weird conspiracy theories to what should be self-evident.

Weirder Yet

Not only have some Armstrongites and former members seen Jewish Conspiracy, Masonic, and Jesuit connections to the WCG and Armstrongite offshoots, there have even been some who have brought into their theories the Illuminate, the Bilderbergers, the Trilateral Commission, Satanists, and even outer space aliens. Most of these theories are too weird even to get into. Suffice it to say, some Armstrongite members and ex-members are prone toward accepting such strange notions, no matter how contrary to common sense.

Of course, there is a positive side to all of this. Many of those fascinated by conspiracy theories realize that many of them contain grains of truth, and to such people there is merit in attempting to coordinate all the theories into some kind of logical framework. Among former Worldwidiers who have had this approach are author Des Griffin of Emissary Publications (9205 SE Clackamas Rd., #1776, Clackamas, OR 97015, 503-824-2050; www.midnight-emissary.com) and Ken Nagele, author of The Elean Files: A Guide to Understanding Life in the End Times (1442 E. Lincoln Ave., Ste. 373, Orange, CA 92865; www.elegan.com).

But can one go too far with conspiracy theory coordination? Can one get to where conspiracy theories become an obsession that leads to an abandonment of reason? That this is indeed possible can be seen in the ministry of former advertising man and former Worldwider David J. Smith who heads The Church of God Evangelistic Association, has a radio program, and puts out Newswatch Magazine (1420 West Ross, Waxahachie, Texas 75165; 972-937-2227). To Smith, it seems, there was never a conspiracy theory that was not 100 percent true. His ministry appears to incorporate all of them: the Jewish Conspiracy, the Illuminate, the Masons, the Trilateral Commission, the Bilderbergers, the Communists, Gorbachev, etc., etc., etc.

Smith has hundreds of tapes available that cover just about every conspiracy theory known to modern man. Unfortunately, many of his ideas are so ludicrous it is difficult to believe people actually pay money to listen to them. On one tape, for instance, Smith makes the astonishing claim that not only are the Russians still planning an attack on the United States, but that tens of thousands of Russian troops have already landed secretly in Louisiana and are in hiding there in caves.

The hysterical tone of Smith's ministry can be seen in most of his utterances. For example on 7/31/98, as the U.S. was in the midst of a heat wave, Smith wrote his followers:

Extremely low frequency magnetic wave generators were working by the Soviet Union and the United States [in the 1980s]. Now listen very carefully to TV weather people. They don't know WHY rain is everywhere except in a circle of about 100 miles with Dallas/Waxahachie, Texas as the central focus of this intense heat. If people only knew the spiritual battles going on invisibly, then it would make sense....

In the Bible it is recorded that demons said to some unconverted Jews who were trying to cast them out, "Jesus we know, Paul we know, but who are you?" (paraphrased). In other words Satan knows God is working in the earth through certain human beings and will stop at nothing to thwart their plans and activities. God has called for "an ingathering of saints from a Western state" under my leadership. NO MAGGIE, THERE IS NO CHAPTER AND VERSE PROPHECYING THIS, ONLY GOD'S VISION AND DIRECT THOUGHTS PUT INTO MY MIND AND THOUSANDS OF OTHER PEOPLE WHO HEARD IT STATED ON WORLDWIDE SHORTWAVE RADIO TEN DAYS BEFORE GOD EVER STIRRED ME UP TO GO WHERE THE INGATHERING WOULD BE!!! THEN HE SENT SIX DREAMS AND VISIONS TO OTHER CHURCH MEMBERS UNKNOWN TO EACH OTHER TO CONFIRM THAT I WAS NOT MAKING UP SOMETHING OR HAD SOME BAD PIZZA!

Colorful stuff, but it is in his pronouncements on conspiracies that Smith outdoes just about everyone. In that network of former WCG members who are enthralled with conspiracy theories of every type - those I think of as "The Secret Church of Conspiracy" - there is no more fanatic preacher than David J. Smith. Smith's preoccupation seems to be a Unified Field Grand Conspiracy Theory - one that integrates virtually all conspiracy theories into a unified whole. And perhaps among all his conspiracy lectures there is no more fanatical one than the infamous Tape Number 801.

On this tape - passed around frequently within the conspiracy buff network - Smith purports to explain how it was that the Pope was actually behind the downsizing of the WCG. According to Smith, Stanley Rader is not just a Jew, but a 33rd degree Mason, tied to both the Illuminate and the CIA and in addition is an agent of the Pope. And, according to Smith, it was Rader who supposedly recruited John Trechak (the author of this piece) to Ambassador College in the 1960s specifically to start Ambassador Report in the late 70s as a means of bringing down the WCG. This, according to Smith, was accomplished by a secret Rome meeting in 1968 between Trechak and Rader's boss Pope Paul VI and through secret contacts, at a German opera house no less, between Trechak and West German politician Franz Joseph Strauss in the late sixties. (Needless to say, all these claims are totally hallucinatory.) To Smith, Bible translator Dr. James Tabor is supposedly actually working toward establishing a Masonic Temple in Jerusalem, and former WCG executive turned author Dr. Robert Kuhn is supposedly writing mind-control books for the New World Order. The WCG, the UCG, and Roderick Meredith have supposedly all come under the control of the Vatican through Jesuit agents. The Grand Conspirators supposedly want "the New World Order" (the rule of the Beast) to be in place by the year 2000.

And where does Smith get his information? One source is "Joseph Tkach's right hand man." (Ask yourself: should someone from Tkach be trusted as a reliable source about the UCG, GCG, or Ambassador Report?) This "right hand man" supposedly provided Smith with a Wackenhut Corporation printout that verified much of his allegations (likely a practical joke hoax). An additional source of Smith's inspiration is a strange little visitor named Bill Youngblood who appears at Smith's back door with messages supposedly from God. Smith speculates that Youngblood is an angel. Another source of inspiration are Bibles that magically appear in mid-air in front of him. Additionally the Holy Spirit whispers into his ear when he visits the Fort Worth stock yards. Dreams and visions play an important part in Smith's ministry. And yet, in spite of all the tell-tale signs of mental instability (he even kids on the tape that many think he is certifiable), there are some who look to David J. Smith for guidance in their lives through conspiracy theories. Of such is the Secret Church of Conspiracy.

WCG Gays on the Net

Gay and lesbian members of the WCG and its offshoots now have at least three Web pages dedicated to gay Sabbatarians. One Pasadena, California-based page is titled "Called Out." According to the introduction to the site:

We are a web page dedicated to gay and lesbian members and former members, ordained and lay members, of the various Churches of God (Worldwide Church of God/WCG, United Church of God/UCG, Global Church of God/GCG, Philadelphia Church of God/PCG, and its many other fellowships). We also welcome our Jewish sisters and brothers and gay and lesbian Christians from any other religious organization that are looking for a haven of rest from angry, hateful, religious extremists.

We also want you to know that you are not alone, whether you are still in the church or no longer a member. We want you to know that God HAS NOT forsaken you, rejected you nor abandoned you. YOU ARE NOT LOST! YOU ARE NOT CONDEMNED TO THE LAKE OF FIRE! YOU ARE NOT GOING TO HELL! You are a precious Child of God, who has a loving and merciful Father in heaven. We also want you to know that there are a lot of us out here right along side you, ready to lift you up and help carry the burden you have shouldered too long by yourself!... We may not have all the answers, but we can point you in the right directions!

The site provides numerous articles concerning being gay/lesbian and still being a member of one of the Churches of God. There are also listings of books on the subject of being a gay Christian as well as numerous references to other organizations, complete with addresses and Internet links. The Called Out site is at <http://home.pacbell.net/tofr>.

A second site is the "Called Out & 7th Day Gay Club." This site is said to be "for 7th Day Sabbatarians, who happen to be gay." It is located at <http://clubs.yahoo.com/clubs/calledoutand7thdaygay>.

A third site is called the "Rainbow 7th Day Sabbatarians." Among other things, this site promotes a Feast of Tabernacles for gay members in the Dallas, Texas area. The site is at www.geocities.com/Athens/Delphi/2345.

Bobby Fischer's Terrors

Former world chess champion Bobby Fischer is perhaps the most famous person ever to have been a WCG "co-worker." An interview with him was featured in our 1977 issue \(AR2\). Since then, a number of readers have asked for information about what has become of Fischer. On February 2, All Things Considered on National Public Radio had this update:

ROBERT SIEGEL, host: A book and movie about chess a few years ago was called Searching for Bobby Fischer. Well, the latest sightings of the reclusive chess great would have to make even a die-hard chess fan wonder if the search is worth finding the one-time great prodigy in his current condition. Fischer stays away from the United States, where he's wanted for violating the sanctions against Yugoslavia. He went there to play a match against Boris Spassky in 1992. At age 55, Fischer now lives in Budapest. And over the past two weeks, he has made a series of telephone appearances on radio shows, in which he has ranted against Jews. Fischer, whose own mother was Jewish, screams about a decision to sell off his belongings and memorabilia, which were in storage in Pasadena. He claims that was the work of a Jewish conspiracy.

Last week, he spent an hour on a Filipino radio station spewing anti-Semitic insults, vulgarities, and charges of Jewish persecution. Here's one sanitized excerpt.

(Excerpt from Filipino interview)

PABLO: Bobby - hello, Bob...

Mr. BOBBY FISCHER (Chess Champion): It was all orchestrated by the Jewish world government.

PABLO: OK. Bobby, I'm sorry to say, but we've consumed 30 minutes already with the program. Newscast is about to come in right now.

Mr. FISCHER: Oh, I thought it was, like, five minutes.

PABLO: Yes. No, it's 30 minutes already. And we'll talk with you again one time, alright?

Mr. FISCHER: Sure, sure.

PABLO: We'll call you up again.

Mr. FISCHER: I want to thank you, you know. This is free speech. These Jews - they want to know the most rotten things, but they don't want their enemies to have the opportunity to answer back.

PABLO: Well, this is your opportunity. And we've been giving - we've given you two chances already. We'll call you again.

Mr. FISCHER: Thank you, Pablo.

PABLO: I'll call you again, alright?

Mr. FISCHER: I want to tell you Jews out there this is just the beginning.

PABLO: OK, Bobby. OK.

Mr. FISCHER: This is just the beginning. I'm not afraid of you. You can all drop dead.

PABLO: All right, Bobby. Thank you very much.

(End of excerpt)

SIEGEL: That was actually Fischer's second appearance on the Filipino radio station. Two weeks ago, he gave an interview to that station and also to Radio Calypso in Budapest. His interviewer on the Hungarian station, Daniel Molnar, whose English is limited, had a Hungarian interpreter on hand for what he says began as a straight-forward discussion.

Mr. DANIEL MOLNAR (Radio Calypso): In the first five minutes, it was very interesting and he explained why didn't he return to the United States after the match against Spassky. And after five minutes, he began to cry that his life became destroyed by Jewish people.

SIEGEL: I mean, he was screaming this into the telephone, shouting?

Mr. MOLNAR: Yes.

SIEGEL: You tried to ask him about other things, but he just wanted to shout about...

Mr. MOLNAR: Yeah, I asked how do you remember Boris Spassky in Reykjavik and you met Boris Spassky... (unintelligible) in Yugoslavia and do you have a friendship with Boris Spassky and...

SIEGEL: And did he answer these questions?

Mr. MOLNAR: No, nothing. Nothing. He didn't answer any questions. He only told, "No, no, no. I don't want to answer your questions. I don't want to answer your second question. Don't try to answer your third question." And began to say his original facts.

SIEGEL: Daniel Molnar says that when he asked Fischer to square his anti-Semitism with his own Jewish ancestry, Fischer said, "Let's go to the little boy's room where we'll all see who's Jewish." Molnar said the interpreter toned down Fischer's language when he rendered the chess player's answers into Hungarian. But after several minutes of Fischer refusing to talk about anything but his belief that he's being persecuted by Jews, the station in Budapest cut him off.

Editor: To fill in some of the gaps of this story, we quote an article that appeared in the San Gabriel Valley section of the Los Angeles Times (2/19/99):

Chess Champ Livid at Reported Property Sale

by Jim Walters

PASADENA-It seemed like a simple procedure. The renter at A American Self-Storage hadn't paid his bill in six months so the contents were sold in a lien sale to cover back rent.

It didn't seem the makings of international intrigue. But then it wasn't common knowledge that the man was an apparent friend of former world chess champion Bobby Fischer, and that the unit, which rents for $80 a month, allegedly contained some of Fischer's prized possessions.

While the friend could not be reached for comment at his home or office, another longtime Fischer acquaintance - Olympic coach Harry Sneider - said he was very familiar with the items that Fischer had held in storage since his recluse days in Pasadena, following his 1972 world title win over Russian Boris Spassky.

Sneider, a former physical education teacher and weightlifting coach at Ambassador College in Pasadena and now an Arcadia resident, said he met Fischer in 1972 when the chess champion came looking for conditioning help. The two forged a friendship that has lasted 27 years.

"There was a chess set from that world championship, two file cabinets full of game notes and personal diaries, a letter from Richard Nixon, two 3,000-pound safes," said Sneider describing the items he recalled being stored in the rental unit.

"He (Fischer) said all of the stuff lost is worth $100 million. I think several million is more like it. We've been able to recover some of the things."

Some of the items were consigned for sale to Dreyer's Auction Inc. of Irvine, which publicized the availability of Bobby Fischer memorabilia on the Internet for its Jan. 10 auction.

"There wasn't much. The entire gross was about $8,500," said Dreyer's co-owner, Chuck Dreyer. "There were no chess sets. Just miscellaneous letters, books, correspondence, a bronze bust of Fischer."

It was unclear what might have happened to the other items that Fischer and Sneider claimed were stowed away in the storage unit.

During the past five weeks, Fischer, from his home in Budapest, Hungary, has railed over the sales during broadcasts on Bomba Radyo in the Philippines and over the Internet.

In interviews posted on the Internet, the 56-year-old Fischer said the "confiscated items" - as he described them - included a famous statue of three horses that he won in a 1970 tournament in Yugoslavia, a bronze bust he sat for in 1961, a bag of 50 to 100 rare silver dollars, hundreds of chess books, thousands of racy Mexican comic books, and Japanese posters from a Los Angeles movie theater that gave them to him when it closed down. Other items were 600 to 1,000 unpublished games - from simultaneous games played in exhibitions, following his win over Tigran Petrosian for the right to play Spassky in '72.

A spokesperson for A American, which bought the storage building from Bekins Storage in January 1998, said no one was aware of the contents when the lien sale took place.

"We called someone down from the corporate office, they took pictures of the contents we could see from outside the door," Leatherwood said. "There was no inventory. We had no knowledge of what was in there."

Harry Sneider Sets World Record

Former Ambassador College weightlifting coach Harry Sneider, now a professional weightlifting coach, set a world record in the bench press at the U.S. Powerlifting World Championships in Las Vegas in January. Harry bench pressed 402.5 pounds to set the world record in the 220 to 242 pound class in the age 55-60 category.

How Soon They Forget

A recent article in the Los Angeles Times stated that the founder and long-time president of Ambassador College had been Herbert W. Murphy.

Andrew McCooey's Mission

Andrew McCooey of England graduated from Ambassador, Bricket Wood in 1973. Since then, he has clearly lived one of the most remarkable lives of any Ambassador graduate ever. The following article about him appeared in the 3 May 1997 issue of the British publication The Tablet.

Mr. McCooey's Lifeline

by Sue Gaisford

A number of people have reason to bless the name of Freedom Now. The lawyer who founded it talked to Sue Gaisford about the values which inspire his work. He is a small solicitor with a large mission.

In 1988 Tara Terry telephoned home from the United States to Surrey. Expecting to hear a cheerful holiday report, her father was appalled to learn that his 18-year-old daughter had been arrested and charged with homicide.

Tara had left Camberley to go traveling around America with her boyfriend. In Miami the cheap hotel they were in caught fire: several people were killed in the blaze. Tara was accused of arson: It was alleged that she had started the fire to punish her boyfriend after a row. Now, if found guilty, she faced the electric chair.

Mr. Terry phoned a solicitor he knew from church, Andrew McCooey, and asked for his help. Mr. McCooey practices criminal law from a small office in Sittingbourne, Kent, but he had never encountered a problem like this: he promised to do what he could.

While he was wondering how to tackle it, Clive Uneman, a young motorbiker, turned up at his office. He had read about the case and offered his assistance. McCooey wondered what a Hell's Angel could do against the might of Miami's legal system but, as he now laughs to recall, angels come in many guises. Mr. Uneman had just inherited five properties from his father. He wasn't interested in wealth and handed all the deeds to McCooey, telling him to do as he liked with them.

Thus armed, McCooey set off for Florida. He managed to get bail for Tara, and then hired a forensic scientist from New York, who was able to prove conclusively that the fire had been caused by faulty wiring. It had suited the hotel's owners to blame a young tourist, to avoid the huge claims for damages that eventually followed. Tara was free.

From this incident was born Freedom Now, the organization which McCooey runs. Its purpose is to support deserving people who face serious miscarriage of justice abroad. Tara's case taught him that, without this kind of help, any Briton is on his own if he runs into trouble abroad. McCooey's conversation is punctuated by stories like Tara's. There are dozens of them. A soft-spoken, gentle, respectable man in his forties, he is particularly moved by the plight of imprisoned girls, having three daughters himself. His practice is almost entirely funded by legal aid work. Didn't he have any paying clients? He laughed - well, the best by far has been Myra, whose fees had all been paid by David Astor. It took me a moment to realize he was talking about Myra Hindley, the Moors murderer.

He was Hindley's solicitor for seven years. In the end, she was moved from Maidstone to Durham at about the time he was running out of strength to deal with her case. But that had not been Hindley's fault. He is the first to insist that her crimes were heinous, but he feels that she had been enslaved by Ian Brady, that she is now a completely reformed character and that she has been punished enough.

In her time, she has seen several people who had murdered children come into gaol [jail], serve their time and leave, but her notoriety is such that the media interest in her will probably keep her in forever. She has been informed, indeed, that she will never be released. McCooey remarks, bitterly, that the chief crime reporter of the Sun had told him that Myra Hindley's name sold more copies than the Princess of Wales's. Any story, however absurd, was fair game. Seven days a week he was pestered by reporters: once, he was telephoned at midnight to be asked his opinion of her forthcoming marriage. Oh yes, he had agreed with weary irony, sure she was getting married: after all, she had so many suitable husbands to choose from, locked inside a women's prison.

When asked to take on Hindley as a client, he consulted his wife, Margaret, who immediately responded that if he thought he should do it she would agree. Mrs. McCooey is a legal executive, and the only other practitioner in the firm. She mainly deals with cases of domestic violence and child protection. She is a pretty, competent Scots woman, to whom he has been married for more than 20 years. They met during an extraordinary episode in their lives that has clearly had a considerable influence on them both.

As a little boy, the son of Irish Catholic immigrants, McCooey had wanted to be a priest. By the time he was 16 he had decided to train as a lawyer. His career was interrupted by an encounter with Herbert Armstrong, founder of the Worldwide Church of God. Looking back on it now, he describes this organization as a cult, but at the time it seemed important. It took him to the Ambassador College in St. Albans, Hertfordshire, where he spent four years gaining a degree in theology - "for what it's worth." And what was it worth? Well, in the United States it might count as a degree but not in Britain, and he wouldn't claim much for it.

Herbert Armstrong was the father of Garner Ted Armstrong, who used Radio Luxembourg to advertise church activities. Their "Church" was strong on the Old Testament, not a conspicuous feature of a conventional Catholic education. At Ambassador College the rules were very strict. Students observed all the laws of Leviticus, avoiding unclean meat and shellfish, for example, and being careful never even to kiss a member of the opposite sex on pain of immediate expulsion.

Andrew McCooey was selected to become a minister. He met Margaret on the course and, when it finished, they married. It was while they were on their honeymoon that he received the news that his job (and therefore his house) was no longer available. The college had been closed and the Church was reeling under a succession of scandals. The slogan "In bed with Garner Ted" described the son's activities but the father was worse. In his eighties, he had decided to marry a divorcee in her thirties and was publicly raving about the glories of sex. "It was just as if someone told you your mother was a prostitute," says McCooey now.

Yet he doesn't regret those years. For a start, he would never have met Margaret without the Armstrongs - and he speaks of her with much admiration and affection. And then, he learned so much. Having survived a cult, he has a wary wisdom of any organization that claims an exclusive right to the truth, along with a certainty that people - "anybody, including me" - can be seduced into doing or believing almost anything by bogus security offered by such groups.

He is a Catholic again now thanks partly to the benign influence of Lord Longford, whose grandson by marriage, Edward Fitzgerald QC, is a valuable asset to Freedom Now. He speaks quietly of the colossal power of prayer. In Greece, facing a hostile court, he prayed desperately for Lucy, a girl about to be convicted of smuggling the largest load of pure heroin ever captured. He was certain that she was innocent, but never had anyone been acquitted in the face of such evidence. She was acquitted.

While the jury was out on the case of Stephen Owen, a Kent man accused of murder, he did the same. Owen had shot the hit-and-run lorry-driver who had killed his son: there was no doubt about it. And the jury, driven by compassion, pronounced him innocent. "I know now," McCooey says, that there is a real living God who comes to people in their hour of need."

At the moment he is helping several prisoners in Belize, who have the right of appeal to English courts thanks to their colonial history. Last time he was there, he was shown the hangman's rope: so far, he has saved seven innocent lives from its embrace.

He relies on several benefactors to fund these trips, but he worries about it: "I'd like to put Freedom Now on a proper footing: it's pretty amateurish - and I'm hopeless at raising money." He has never taken a penny out of it for himself, but it makes heavy demands on his time and energy and, of course, he has a duty to work at his home practice, not least to provide for his growing family. He did apply for charitable status but, incredibly, was refused. It seems an odd system that allows, say, Glyndebourne [opera festival] to be a registered charity and not this remarkable and courageous endeavor.

Yet in spite of it all, Andrew McCooey is a happy man. He clearly dotes on his children and loves such jaunts as taking the little one to funfairs. And the work, whilst demanding, is immensely worthwhile. "There is nothing more rewarding," he says, "than to take a person whom you genuinely believe to be innocent, to bring them away from a foreign gaol and to deliver them home."

Editor: In a letter to Ambassador Report, Margaret McCooey (nee Bond, AC-BW 1970) wrote us the following:

Andrew should really tell you all his adventures in the WCG himself so I will not go into that, save that on ministerial visits as "second man" (alias Invisible Man) he was so bored that he unconsciously untied then tied together minister Mark Elliott's shoe laces whilst deep spiritual advice was being given to some unhappy soul by the master himself!

On our honeymoon, as you probably know, Andrew was "made redundant," i.e. we were told there would be no job, house, or car in Bristol for us and we moved into the Page's spare room at Working Surrey for the alarming start to married life. Not what we planned. But God was kind, and several months later, Andrew returned to law, and became a law student at Guildford College of Law (he had left a job in law to come to college). Instead of marrying a "rich" minister, I had a poor law student on my hands - but we did say "for better or worse" and actually it was the best thing that could have happened to us and put us on a much better path. We hung on in the church, looked on as black sheep by the Godalming Church under David House, for six more years unfortunately - Andrew would have left much sooner, but I was a "true believer" and kept thinking things would change and get better.

Since going into law it took five years for Andrew to qualify - I also did some studies and am what you would call in the USA a paralegal. We managed to start our own law firm in our livingroom in 1987 and have now been going some 10 years. (We now have offices, by the way.)...

I do family law and have come to specialize in helping women who suffer from domestic violence. It gives endless scope to help and encourage women who have no voice and no power. I also do childcare cases, helping parents with care proceedings and adoption. I run a Survivors Group for women who have been sexually or physically abused in childhood and we have been running for three years. It is not something I am trained for, save having a diploma from London University in Child Protection, but I get the women together and they help themselves. I also organize trips for them to do things they have never done, e.g. go to Albert Hall to hear a classical concert, start driving lessons, get counselling. I find many women come to us through the work our law firm does.

Andrew is 50 and I am 51 and just now, I am trying to rest more. We have a little daughter Christabel of eight. Our others, Juliet and Caroline, are 17 and 20. We have kept and strengthened our Christian faith. Andrew attends the local Catholic Church (his childhood faith) and I attend a United Reformed Church (mixture of Presbyterian and Methodist). God is more real and more important than ever and faith is simple, not complicated now. Because of our experiences in the WCG we have been able to help neighbors not become Jehovah's Witnesses and brought them to Christ instead, and I have attended Mormon missionary meetings and piped up with all the arguments people need to hear why joining a cult is a bad idea. The biblical knowledge we got from the WCG has been invaluable, of course.

We were rebaptized in 1983 by a wonderful Baptist minister Arthur Neil when we lived in Devon, and he knew much about spiritual warfare and helped us turn "right side up" again.

We have had masses of obstacles and battles in life, but we are still fighting on - wounded but not wiped out. We keep in touch with those who left who were our friends, but those still in the church are still too wary of us to return our friendship.

Another thing we do is visit people in prison, as our legal work has taken us into most prisons in Britain. It is good for the soul. Andrew specially speaks on TV and radio against the death penalty, particularly in the USA. He is currently campaigning for Kenny Ritchie, a Scotsman facing the executioner in Ohio, I think, but we lost the media battle to prevent Nick Ingram being executed in Georgia....

It is particularly ironic that Andrew has found such a field of activity as a lawyer, as he was told at Ambassador College that he could never be a lawyer and didn't have what it takes! His friend and classmate, Adrian Smith, was told the same story, but after a very successful career in selling, he has just graduated from London University with a law degree, which he studied for by distance learning from his farm in Canada. So much for all the labelling and typecasting Ambassador College loved to do.

Did Sunday Worship Come From Paganism?

Editor: The above question is the intriguing title of the February newsletter of evangelist Ralph Woodrow. Many readers will probably find the following excerpt as eye opening as we did:

There are many Christians - not only those who meet on Saturday, but many who attend church on Sunday - who assume that Sunday observance originally came from paganism. The basic idea is this: Sunday was the established day of rest, the weekly holiday in the pagan world. On this day each week, the Romans, Greeks, and other pagans gathered in temples to worship their pagan gods, particularly the Sun-god - hence the term Sun-day. Later, when these pagans professed Christianity, they gradually brought the overwhelming popular practice of meeting on Sunday into the "Church."

The teaching that Sunday worship "came from paganism" has been so often repeated, it may come as a surprise when I tell you this teaching has no basis in fact. It is misinformation. If I can show you - and I believe I can - that Sunday was not a day of rest and worship among pagans, then it should be quite clear that the practice of Christians meeting on Sunday, the first day of the week, did not come from this source.

In the New Testament, "the first day of the week" is mentioned eight times. These references do not give any information about whether or not the first day of the week - Sunday - was a day of rest and worship among pagans. For this we will need to look into history. In doing so, suppose we were to contact highly qualified historians - at great centers of learning like the British Museum, the Smithsonian Institute, and Harvard University - and ask them if Sunday was a weekly holiday in the pagan world. Surely their answers would be weighty.

Well, this has already been done - by D. M. Canright, a Seventh-Day minister. He sincerely believed Sunday worship came from paganism - this teaching had been passed on to him by equally sincere people. But when he began to look into the subject more fully, he came to a different conclusion. It was at this time - back in 1913-1914 - that he contacted these great centers of learning we have mentioned. He carefully avoided giving any idea of his own views or purpose in writing, so as not to influence answers in any way. The responses he received (which I have abridged slightly because of space limitations) are as follows:

From the world renowned British Museum in London, England, Department of Greek and Roman Antiquities:

Sir:

I am commanded by the Assistant Keeper of Greek and Roman Antiquities to reply as follows to your questions on the ancient week:

Question 1: Did the pagan Romans and Greeks ever have any regular weekly day of rest from secular work?

Answer: No.

Question 2: Did they have any regular weekly festival day?

Answer: No.

Question 3: Did they have any regular weekly day when they assembled for pagan worship?

Answer: No.

Question 4: Did they have any special day of the week when individuals went to the temples to pray or make offerings?

Answer: No; both for Greeks and Romans the month was the unit and not the week. The Greek calendar varied in different states but the month was generally divided into three periods of ten days. The Romans reckoned from three fixed points in the month, the Kalends or first, the Nones fifth or seventh, the Ides thirteenth or fifteenth. These subdivisions in themselves had no religious significance. Also in the Roman calendars were nundinal, or market days, at periods of eight days. On these days farm work, etc., stopped and citizens flocked into the town markets. To some extent this may be a regular stoppage of secular work, but it had no religious significance.

Question 5: As Sunday was sacred to the Sun, Monday to the Moon, Saturday to Saturn, etc., were those supposed deities worshipped on their own particular days more than on any other days?

Answer: No; the old worship of the gods was disappearing when the seven-day week came about. The significance of the deities' names was astrological, not religious, e.g., if a person were born on Monday, the moon would influence his horoscope, but the moon was never an object of common worship.

Question 6: When was our week of seven days first introduced into the Roman calendar?

Answer: There are traces in the literature of the late republic (first century B.C.) that the Romans used the week of seven days for astrological purposes, in connecting with the many Eastern superstitions of the period. It was probably the third century, A.D. before the seven dayweek came into common use.

Question 7: From whom did the Romans learn the week of seven days?

Answer: From the Jews, alternately the Assyrians and Babylonians; the names were probably fixed by Hellenistic Greeks.

Question 8: Did the pagan Greeks ever adopt in common life, or in their calendar, the week of seven days?

Answer: No.

Question 9: Did Apollo, the Sun-god, either among the Romans or Greeks, have any special day on which he was worshipped with prayers or offerings more than on any other day?

Answer: There were certain set festivals at various temples; these were annual, not weekly.

Question 10: Did the pagan reverence for Sunday have anything to do in influencing Christians to select that day as their rest day?

Answer: No; it can hardly be said that there was any special reverence for Sunday in pagan times (see answer to Number 5).

- I am, sir, Your obedient servant, F.N Pryce.

Letters

Since both campuses of AC have now been sold, wouldn't it be great if all students who attended or graduated from AC received a refund of our college tuition and fees. After all, we were all lied to about accreditation and have worthless degrees. I would love to be a part of a class action lawsuit against AC and WCG. Now that they are multimillionaires and have had true conversion they should finally do the right thing for once. Wishful thinking on my part?

-Randall G. Shelby
Kentucky

You can't help but wonder if that bozo Tkach Jr. is just parting the church and college out - just like professional thieves do to an ultra-expensive Mercedes Benz or Jaguar automobile. The parts do add up to more money than the whole in these cases. It would be interesting to see how much of the church funds end up in secret Swiss or Cayman Island bank accounts. The sheep will never know about these transactions!

-Marc D. Tollefson
Washington

It's finally settling into my mind, as bizarre as it all was/ is, that "The Church" was/is run by people who would be classed as white-collar criminals in non-religious business. They stole my youth, that of my wife, and, in a curiously toxic fashion, set up my family for deeply felt stresses!

-Kevin Benefield
North Carolina

I hear that for all the big, fancy buildings that are being sold the money is to be put into a fund for the ministers' retirement. I can't believe how much gall these people have.

-Josephine Mayle
West Virginia

Editor: The setting up of a retirement plan for the WCG ministers that remain is a top priority of the Tkach administration. You can be sure that those near the top of the church hierarchy will be well provided for. But how much of the proceeds from the sale of the Texas and Pasadena campuses will be used for that purpose we do not know.

My reading of I Cor. 12 is this: Now there are diversities of gifts, but the same mailing address for money. And there are differences of administrations, but the same Pastor General. And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same guilt-trip which works all in all. But the manifestation of the guilt given to every man is to profit WCG Inc.

-Richard

I noticed in the book store that Mr. Tkach's book Transformed by Truth sells for $19.99. And I recalled how among Satanists symbols are often read upside down. Applying that to the price of the book we get the "666 one." Just a coincidence, I suppose.

-California

A while ago you wrote me in response to a letter I sent you. In that letter you asked me what my profession was and what I had found that convinced me that early Gentile Christians did not keep the Sabbath. My apologies for taking so long to get back to you. In this letter I will explain why it has taken so long. To answer your first question, I am a post-doctoral research associate at the University of Illinois where I do research on corn genetics. My Ph.D. is in plant pathology (study of plant diseases), but I consider myself a plant pathologist/plant breeder. The reason it took so long to write you, aside from the fact that I have limited time to do research on the Sabbath/Sunday controversy, is the tremendous amount of material that has been written on the subject. Needless to say, I have not read all of it, but what I have read so far has not changed my view of things after I became aware that under the New Covenant Sabbath keeping is probably not required. That view is that Sabbath observation was not considered a requirement by early Christians, but that Jewish Christians continued to observe it. And that Sabbath keeping by Jewish Christians was considered OK by the Church. When I first began to think about this letter my thoughts automatically led me to think about a complete explanation of my position on the Sabbath. I started to formulate and accumulate thoughts that would be put together in this letter. I was researching various ideas on the Sabbath mainly through the Internet. As I read more and more, I realized that to do justice to this issue would take years of research and a book. I don't have time to do this, so I'll answer your question with a few thoughts.

As I explained in my first letter, I had followed the teachings of the WCG for some time with the intention of joining it when I had completed my degree. My crisis of faith, if you could call it that, occurred when I first saw Gerald Flurry on TV and realized that there had been a split in the church. (This seems comical in retrospect since church splits seem to be one of the main facets of WCG history, but I didn't know that then.) The question at that point was not only who to follow but whether either church had it right. To make a long story short, I ended up researching the Sabbath question (and of course this led to the Mosaic law question) because more than any thing this was the crucial issue to me. It became plain that if the Sabbath (and the rest of the Mosaic law) were replaced by the law of love then neither church had a monopoly on truth. I read through all of the epistles in the Bible hoping I would find something there. This leads me to my first point: There is no Sabbath epistle. Despite all of the numerous articles, booklets, etc. written by the WCG on the subject, it didn't warrant any specific discussions or teachings on the subject in the letters of the apostles. Given the centrality of the Sabbath to Jewish and early Jewish Christian life one would think that the apostles would have seen the need to address the meaning of the Sabbath and its benefits to the Gentile converts and how it was meant for them and not just the Jews. Also, one would expect a discussion of how to celebrate the Sabbath in light of Christ's example and point out how not to get trapped in the rut that the Pharisees were stuck in. Instead, we get an explanation of how the Sabbath foreshadows the rest of God [s plan] in Hebrews chapter four and admonition to strive to enter the rest and that if Joshua had given them rest he would not speak of another day. The point I'm trying to make is this, despite all of the praise given to the Sabbath in both its meaning and its practice in WCG literature and that of other Sabbath-keeping churches, we don't have that in the epistles. This opened my mind to the possibility that Sabbath observance may not be required.

The fact that we lack any specific teachings on the observance of the Sabbath in the epistles is probably the main reason why this question continues. However, we face another issue, the epistles and their treatment of the law. The law has clearly been changed as stated in the book of Hebrews. Yet if only part of it has been changed, as is argued by Sabbatarians, rather than supplanted by the law of love, then we inevitably end up in arguments over which parts are required and which parts are not. Which brings me to my second point, if we discount the idea that the law of Moses has been supplanted by the law of love, we have no code of Christian law. What I mean is this, the old covenant had fairly specific instructions on what was required of the Israelites. Christians, however, have no such list of instructions. If the law has been changed, but not superseded by the law of love, one would expect reasonably specific instructions on which parts of the law were still binding, which parts were fulfilled in Christ's sacrifice and therefore no longer required, the ways in which Christians were expected to obey the remaining laws in light of the fact that Christ extended the meanings of some beyond the letter of the Mosaic law (i.e., if you are angry with your brother then you are guilty of murder, lust equals adultery, etc.), and any appropriate modifications to the observation of the Sabbaths, Holy Days, and other laws in light of Christ's fulfillment of the law. Not only do we lack this, but amazingly we don't even have any detailed instructions on how to conduct the communion service, the only ceremonial addition made by Christ. This situation combined with Paul's treatment of the law, discussion of Christian liberty, and statements made by the other apostles concerning the law, increased my doubts that the observance of the Sabbath is required by Christians.

This brings us to the next place to look, which is the early Church writings made by others besides the apostles. Part of the problem here is there aren't very many of them (what we would call in statistics a sampling problem) so we don't necessarily know how widespread the practices described in them were. I don't want to get into a detailed discussion of them here as I have not read enough on them to satisfy myself that I have looked at them from all angles. I have not read Samuele Bacchiocchi's book From Sabbath to Sunday, but from what I have read at his Web site I don't think it would change my view point. I find his idea that there were one hundred years of universal Sabbath keeping in Christianity, followed by a decision to change the Sabbath to Sunday by the Roman church, and then everybody else just went along with it, very difficult to believe. But I would like to read it before I would discuss the Sabbath issue too deeply. Although, I will say that two early church documents that challenge this idea are the Didache and the letter of Ignatious of Antioch to the Magnesians. Both of these letters are available on the Internet at various sites and both of these are estimated to predate Bacchiocchi's time period of the Sabbath to Sunday change. I want to see how he handles these two documents in his book before I would want to discuss them any further. For your readers, one interesting paper I have read is Gordon Shigley's The Sabbath Option. The view of this paper is that Sunday was never observed as a Sabbath until around the eighth century. Up until this point, Sunday was a day of worship and Sabbath keeping was simply not required of Christians, although Jewish Christians continued to observe it. Consequently his view is that Sabbath observation is optional. This paper is available at Mark Tabladillo's website [www.quango.net/Tabladillo/wcgweb3.html]....

I also would like to make a few comments on past issues of the AR. In your Dec. 1997 issue you mention the writings of Darrell Conder [who discounts virtually the entire New Testament]. I have not yet accessed his Web site, but your description of his ideas makes me wonder if legalism and striving for purity in one's life through actions is really one very slippery slope. But it is his conspiracy theory about the Catholic Church that really makes me wonder. It seems from past ARs that WCGers and exWCGers really go for conspiracy theories, and your House of Yahweh article seems to indicate that some will believe just about anything if it is packaged right. It seems to me that WCGers and exWCGers need a healthy dose of skepticism. Recently I began receiving the Skeptical Inquirer magazine. I don't recall if you have mentioned it in the AR or not. It is published by the Committee for the Scientific Investigation of Claims of the Paranormal [Box 703, Amherst, NY 14226; tel. 716-636-1425]. They subject claims of the paranormal to the rigors of the scientific method. Not surprisingly, such claims usually come up short. I have enclosed the most recent issue for you in case you are unfamiliar with them. This issue has an interesting article titled "200% Probability and Beyond" that shows that an idea is more believable to people when alternative explanations are absent.

And finally, I'd like to say thank you for all your effort. The AR has been very helpful to me in understanding the phenomenon of the WCG.

As you might expect, a number of books have been helpful in my recovery. Particularly in this regard have been the writings of Ayn Rand and her supporters. Another exiter suggested I read Rand's novelette Anthem (1946). It reminded me of Huxley's Brave New World and Orwell's 1984. I think all of these should be read by those who have been in captivity as we were. Much could be said on this. Another great book is The True Believer by Eric Hoffer.

Anyway, shortly after reading Anthem, and learning of the philosophy of Objectivism from the publisher's blurb, I came upon an interesting 20-volume LP set of lectures on Objectivism by Nathaniel Branden published in the 60s. I was able to save this set from being trashed. I eventually listened to the lectures which I found fascinating.

I was telling another exiter friend about the Branden lecture. She had been actively involved in the Objectivist movement in the 60s before being sucked into the cult. She loaned me her copy of the Rand biography entitled, The Passion of Ayn Rand by Barbara Branden, Nathaniel's exwife. This book is absolutely captivating! The personality of Ayn is just stunning to me.

From Barbara's book I then went on to acquire Nathaniel's side of the story of his life in the Objectivist movement from his book Judgment Day. Again, wonderful! Since then I've been buying the collections of Rand's essays. She has given me so much to think about. Her essay "Faith and Force: The Destroyers of the Modern World" is most enlightening. One of her students, Harry Binswanger, published a most helpful guide to Objectivism with his release of The Ayn Rand Lexicon.

Of course, Objectivism doesn't answer all the questions of life but I am glad I have found a graspable philosophy which works personally for me as far as I understand it. As I write I am wondering what you think of Rand's philosophy. Care to comment?

I have read Rand's Atlas Shrugged and a number of Rand essays. I am not a big fan of her "radical individualism." However, I do think her essay "The Virtue of Selfishness" is worth reading and is particularly valuable for cult members who have the courage to read it. Rand is virtually never mentioned by the WCG, but her writings have played a big part in helping many to extricate themselves from the cult mentality. Back in the sixties and seventies her writings were very popular among Ambassador students disillusioned with AC and on their way out of the WCG.

As you mentioned, many people are expecting Christ to return around the coming year 2000 A.D. Apparently, they have totally failed to learn the lesson we were taught back in 1975, when the prediction of Herbert W. Armstrong about Christ's return completely flopped. Some ranchers here in Oklahoma, such as the Woodbury family in western Oklahoma, sold their ranch[es] and other possessions and gave the entire proceeds from the sale to headquarters in Pasadena to help with the final thrust of God's Work so the Church could have the Work finished by 1975 when, according to HWA, Christ was scheduled to return!

Occasionally people paraphrase William Shakespeare with their ideas and actions: people are like idiots, making a lot of noise - signifying nothing! Will these people ever learn: To out-predict the Father about when He decides to send back Christ into the world would totally destroy a person. Such a person would by nature boast for all eternity about having known in advance when the most important event in human history was to occur. Compare this thought to I Corinthians 1:29.

I am trying to locate a copy of Herbert Armstrong's Tangled Web by David Robinson, but am having no luck. Do you know of any distributor who may still have copies available?

Editor: We understand that the original publisher still has a few copies available for sale at $20 per copy, including update notes. Write to John Hadden Publisher, P.O. Box 35982, Tulsa, OK 74135.

I would like to help you keep AR going. AR is the only sanity that ever came out of WCG for me. I see it as a virtual "ministry." ...somehow I feel I have a connection with other AR readers who have come to their senses and given up WCG and all the other crazy offshoots and religions. Christ said many would be deceived by false prophets. How true.

I may have a scar but am healed and would like to communicate with others who can identify and relate to that. I am age 41 and attended services in Springfield and Kansas City, MO regularly from 1961 to 1974.

You and I corresponded in the mid to late 80s when I was pulling out of the WCG. Since I last wrote to you - perhaps nine to 10 years now - I have earned both a BA and an MA. (I just received my MA in Teaching English to Speakers of Other Languages.) Anyway, life outside the WCG has been far more rewarding, productive, and sane than life inside "the Church." I have accomplished so much spiritually, emotionally, and professionally in the more than 10 years I've been away from the control and deceit. My only regret is that I didn't leave earlier.

Editor's Note

Ambassador Report remains a valuable and unique source of information for thousands trying to understand the "Armstrongism experience." We hope that readers will remember to support our efforts as we continue to report on the many developments in the WCG and its offshoots. Contributions to AR in the past year have fallen to an all-time low. So my thanks to all of you who are still continuing in that support.

AMBASSADOR REPORT

October 7, 1999

Dear Friends:

I am sorry to announce that John Trechak died Sept. 2 from a massive heart attack. John had suffered from many health problems this year and was, in fact, in the hospital at the time of his death.

I know that John would have liked to thank his long time Ambassador Report subscribers for their support and his friends for their friendship over the years.

John devoted 24 years of his life to exposing the Worldwide Church of God's hypocrisy, misuse of funds, and intimidation techniques. An Oct. 26, 1977 article in the Los Angeles Times called the Ambassador Report "the first concerted attempt to document many of the accusations of a playboy-style living by the Armstrongs," the mishandling of tithes, and the sexual misconduct of Garner Ted Armstrong.

Over the years, John's writing and efforts to expose the cult of Armstrongism helped many people to leave the WCG, and certainly saved thousands of people millions of dollars in tithe money. While the WCG worked to split up families, wasted hundreds of millions of dollars in tithe money, and literally destroyed many people's lives, John worked to help people rebuild their lives and their families, and saved many people the heartbreak of ever joining the WCG.

Although the WCG occupied many hours of John's life, his friends remember him as a fine musician. Even at the age of four he was playing the accordion and entering national contests. At the ripe old age of eight, John switched to the piano which he played until his death. Before being diverted at 18 into the WCG and going to Ambassador College, John took several classes at Juillard and was interested in conducting and composing music. Music was an important part of John's entire life.

One of John's proudest accomplishments was obtaining his J.D. in Law at Loyola Law School. While he never practiced law, his degree enriched his writing and his life.

In addition to being a fine musician and writer, John was active in the Green Party, supported the Sierra Club, and Amnesty International. He belonged to the Jack London Society and participated in their bi-yearly conferences and their e-mail discussion group. John was also an avid weight lifter since high school and broke several records during his years as a student at Ambassador College.

John will be missed by many people, but most of all by his mother Helen Trechak, his brother Andrew Trechak Jr., and his nephews and niece Julie, Gregory and David. John was born in New Jersey and his mother still resides in that state. If any of you would like to send his family a card or perhaps a remembrance of how John touched your life, please send it to: Helen Trechak, c/o Mary E. Jones, P.O. Box 60452, Pasadena, CA 91116.

The former publishers of Ambassador Report feel that our lives have been enriched by our friendship with John. And his death has greatly affected all of us. We will never forget him and our hope is that John's early death will teach us to live life more fully with the understanding that our moments on earth are very short and very precious.

Since John's subscribers, friends, and relatives are scattered around the world, we would like to ask that everyone take some time on Nov. 6, 1999 to go outside, watch the sunset, and remember how John touched your life and appreciate the man that he was. In this small token of friendship and love of John we can all share his memory together.

Sincerely,

Mary E. Jones with the former Publishers and staff of Ambassador Report

The following letters are from two former Publishers of AR:

I've just finished moving the last of John's AR office and personal possessions out of his home and into storage. The organizing and packing of all AR-related research, reference materials, notes, and library took several weeks. Going through this difficult process brought back a flood of memories of my long friendship with John going back 27 years. Naturally, some of the most poignant occurred during the early years of our waging up-close and personal war against the Armstrongs, Rader, et al. And the war was very hot indeed.

From the early 1980s, though, the AR was John Trechak. This tireless sacrifice manifested itself not solely on the pages of 72 issues. Much of his labor was quiet, behind-the-scenes counseling provided individually to hundreds of WCG members on their way out. John was very instrumental in my own awakening to the doctrinal and secular corruption rife in the Armstrong cult. This 25 year effort at great personal cost is John's greatest gift to all of us. My life is far richer for having known him.

This chapter is now complete. John's research, publications, and personal library will be utilized in a future book dealing with alternate religions and the role of apostates in changing them. Back issues of all ARs will be available in the near future.

John and I often philosophized about death being "the next great adventure." So many unanswerable questions in this life will hopefully be resolved in the next. Or maybe not. Hence the adventure.

I think John's wish for all in the AR family would be to constantly question, challenge, and grow. Make your own life an adventure. He certainly did.

John Trechak - Publisher, Writer, Musician, Friend

John's death brought Connie and me much sorrow and a deep sense of loss. But at the same time we are so happy that he was a part of our life for so long. Connie and I met John more than 30 years ago when we transferred to the Bricket Wood, England, campus of Ambassador College. Music was one of the passions in his life, and we were lucky to have had him play the piano at our wedding in 1972. John met his longtime companion and the love of his life, Mary Jones, at our home in January, 1976 - and they went on to share life for the next 23 years.

John and Mary not only babysat our two sons, Ted and Fred, from time to time, but our boys cannot remember a time without John as a close family friend. Not only did he keep them challenged with stimulating literature, both fiction and nonfiction (they were always eager to tear into his Christmas gifts), but he and Mary attended their Eagle Scout ceremonies, school plays, high school graduations, and even made it up to Berkeley for Fred's college graduation. And perhaps most important, more than once John served as a non-parental sounding board for our boys as they grew and matured through their school years.

I consider myself fortunate indeed to have had the privilege of being one of those in a supporting role to John as he created and shaped Ambassador Report in its early years. As he and Mary "went it alone" with the AR, he perfected his investigative reporting techniques while regularly delivering an interesting, fastmoving, hard-hitting newsletter. The handwritten thank you's of ex-Worldwidiers whose minds and lives were freed numbered in the multiple thousands during the nearly two and a half decades that he spearheaded this crusade.

On September 2, 1999, the AR died with John, and that is as it should be... but its legacy lives on. It was his life's work, and it showcased his talent, tenacity, and dedication. He was no stranger to controversy, and in fact felt quite at home in its presence. He was as uncompromising in his pursuit of truth as he was unapologetic about revealing the secrets which the pursuit of truth often uncovered. A man of conviction, he was fearless and relentless - against all odds, confronting the powerful and well-funded Ambassador College and Worldwide Church of God, he never blinked, and he never quit.

Why did the AR succeed and why did it succeed for so long? I think John's professionalism and commitment to detail were the foundation of his editorial success, but his writing style, his zeal for the written word, made each issue eagerly anticipated by his readers and exciting to read.

A "social" evening with John was seldom "laid back," he was always intense, thoughtful and thought provoking; he challenged and stimulated our minds as much in person as in writing. We (Mary, Len, Marg, Bill, Connie, myself) worked on the AR with John, partied with him, argued politics, philosophized, and pondered the meaning of life with John, and all for nearly a quarter of a century... and we really miss him.

The lives of Connie, my sons, and I were enriched for having known John. I am proud of the positive and lasting impact he had on so many lives, and I am honored to have been one of his Ambassador Report co-publishers. Rest in peace, my friend - you earned it.
